

EUREKA: AN EXPOSITION
OF THE APOCALYPSE

IN HARMONY WITH “THE THINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF THE DEITY, AND
THE NAME OF JESUS THE ANOINTED.”

BY JOHN THOMAS
AUTHOR OF “ELPIS ISRAEL,” AND OTHER WORKS.

“BLESSED he that knows accurately, and they who give heed to the words of the prophecy, and narrowly observe the things which have been written in it; for the time is near.”—APOC. 1:3.

“IF any man speak, let him speak according to the Oracles of the Deity.”—PETER.

“WE have more established the prophetic word, to which ye do well giving heed as to light shining in a dark place while day may have shone, and a light-bearer have arisen in your hearts”—PETER.

Table of Contents

VOLUME ONE

PREFACE

CHAPTER 1.

CHAPTER 2.

CHAPTER 3.

VOLUME TWO

PREFACE

CHAPTER 4

CHAPTER 5

CHAPTER 6

CHAPTER 7

CHAPTER 8

VOLUME THREE

FOREWORD TO VOLUME THREE

CHAPTER 8

CHAPTER 9

CHAPTER 10

CHAPTER 11

VOLUME FOUR

PREFACE

CHAPTER 12

CHAPTER 13

VOLUME FIVE

FOREWORD TO VOLUME FIVE

CHAPTER 14

CHAPTER 15

CHAPTER 16

CHAPTER 17

CHAPTER 18

CHAPTER 19
CHAPTER 20
CHAPTER 21
CHAPTER 22

VOLUME 1

PREFACE

The most celebrated commentary upon the remarkable prophecy transmitted from unapproachable light, now commonly known as THE APOCALYPSE, is that of the Horoe Apocalypticoe, by the Rev. E. B. Elliott, A.M., late Vicar of Tuxford, and Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, England. It consists of four volumes octavo, containing altogether, exclusive of the Index, 2,415 pages. The second chapter of the first volume is devoted to what he terms “the Primary Apostolic Vision,” or the things set forth in the first three chapters of the prophecy, and styled by the Spirit “the things which are.” Of these he says, “It is not my purpose to enter at all fully into the particulars of this primary vision, and of the epistles therein dictated by the Lord Jesus to the Seven Churches of Asia. The subject is one rather for the minister, or the theologian, than the prophetic expositor; and OF MATTER SUFFICIENT IN ITSELF TO CONSTITUTE A VOLUME.” Hence, to this primary vision this learned divine has devoted only six pages; and to what he calls “The Opening Vision” of the fourth and fifth chapters, about thirteen pages.

But Mr. Elliott errs in supposing that the primary vision does not come within the scope of the prophetic expositor. The distinction he makes between a minister, theologian, and prophetic expositor, in relation to the interpreter of the Apocalypse, is artificial and unscriptural. No such distinction can be admitted. The book has its beginning in theology, and requires to be theologically interpreted throughout; and the expositor who cannot exhibit the meaning of the primary vision and the epistles, and does not make them the basis of his exposition of what remains, or “the things which shall be after these,” is incompetent to a correct explanation of the parts of this wonderful book which have become historical.

Mr. Elliott, however, is correct in saying that “the subject is of matter sufficient in itself to constitute a volume.” I have verified this in the production of the volume now in the reader’s possession. I commenced it about four winters since; and after many interruptions, and much other writing to compose, besides frequent and extensive journeys, have been able to complete it. It is larger than at first proposed; a little over three hundred pages having been estimated as its fullest extent. But instead of being limited to this, it has increased to about four hundred and seventy, which, it is presumed, will not be objected to by the reader.

It was originally intended to comprise an exposition of the first four chapters in this volume. But it has been deemed a better division of the work to begin the second volume with the interpretation of the fourth chapter; inasmuch as it is the consummation of the full and entire development of the Seals, which begin to be opened in the sixth chapter. It ought, therefore, not to be separated from the volume of their interpretation. The deficiency of this chapter in the first volume has been offset by a summary of the things taught in the prophets, which occupies forty-five pages of the work. I did not intend to give this originally; but have been induced to do so from the consideration of the universal ignorance prevailing of the prophetic writings. It seemed to me that unless I did this, my interpretation would not be appreciated, seeing that the Apocalypse is the Old Testament prophecies symbolographically represented upon New Testament principles.

The Apocalypse has now been before the world, and in the hands of “the Servants of the Deity,” for upwards of seventeen hundred and sixty years. Ignatius, one of the overseers of the christian society in Antioch, nearly thirty years contemporary with the apostle John, and who suffered death for the faith, in writing to the brethren in Rome, at the end of his letter quotes the words en ipomoni lesous Christou, in the patient waiting of Jesus Anointed, which occur in Apoc. 1:9; and in that precise form, only there in all the New Testament; showing that Ignatius was acquainted with the book, and that, consequently, its origin was anterior to his martyrdom A.D. 107.

Polycarp was also contemporary with John; and Irenaeus, a presbyter of the ecclesia at Lyons, in France, had often listened to Polycarp’s expositions of the word. The same Irenaeus often speaks of the Apocalypse in his writings, and quotes from it also. Thus, in speaking of the name and number of the Beast of the Apocalypse, he says, that had this been a matter then to be known, it would have been disclosed by him who saw the Apocalypse; “for it was seen no very long time ago, but almost in our age, towards the end of the reign of Domitian.” That is, about A.D. 96. Irenaeus wrote this in or before A.D. 180.

But though this remarkable prophecy has been so long extant, no scriptural, logical, and consistent exposition of it has any existence in the world. “The servants of the Deity,” for whose information and use it was revealed, have, doubtless, understood its teaching. They would not search for the things it represents in “kingdoms beyond the skies”; for they have been well aware in all ages that it relates to things to be transacted upon the earth, and in that region of it subject to the Dominion of Daniel’s four beasts. They could not, however, demonstrate its historically, of course, except as its predictions were gradually developed. But of their intelligence in the matter we have no means of judging, inasmuch as no writings of a reliable character have reached us.

“The learned,” however, have frequently presented society with the result of their apocalyptic lucubrations; but with the general result of discrediting the prophecy, and of causing men to deny its genuineness and apostolical origin. “The learned,” by which is meant “the wise and prudent,” skilled in dead languages, heathen mythology, and the “theologies” of Rome, Wittemburg, and Geneva, with all this ammunition have found the Apocalypse too hard for them. The riper their scholarship, the darker is the Apocalypse to the eyes of their understanding. It is of necessity a sealed book to them, and was never written with the expectation that their learning would enable them to read it. It is above their comprehension, because, with all their lore, they are not learned in “the truth as it is in Jesus.” It is as true of the Apocalypse as of the book of Daniel, that “the wicked shall not understand”; and they are “the wicked” who, how pious soever they may be, are yet, when weighed in the scales of divine truth, found wanting. However loaded down with the learned lumber of the natural man, they are light weights compared with one of the poor, unlettered servants of the Deity, who are “all taught of God.” These are “the wise,” or “the instructed,” of whom it is written, “the wise shall understand.” The spiritual guides of the people, though learned and righteous overmuch, are not “the wise.” They cannot, therefore, by any possibility expound Daniel and the Apocalypse; and this is measurably evinced by the fact that but few of them venture upon their exposition, and that those of them who have, have signally and miserably failed.

The Apocalypse is “the things concerning the kingdom of the Deity and the name of Jesus Anointed,” with the times and the seasons, symbolically and dramatically exhibited: in other words, “the Mystery of the Deity as he hath declared the glad tidings to his servants the prophets”—ch. 10:7. The gospel must, therefore, be understood as an indispensable prerequisite to the true and correct exposition of the book. The people’s spiritual guides do not understand this gospel, and therefore the Apocalypse is hid from their eyes. This is the grand secret of the failure of all their attempts at interpretation. Their speculations wander and are lost in the labyrinths of the unknown; while the Apocalypse treats of the kingdom and glory covenanted to Abraham, David, and their seed, to which the saints are invited in the gospel; and of their present and future relations to the nations and governments upon earth. The speculations of the schools have nothing to do with the mystery of the Deity prophetically revealed; how is it possible, then, that men indoctrinated with their traditions can expound it? Their efforts, some of which have been exceedingly labored, have all hitherto, must, and will ever terminate in failure.

With these convictions, an exposition of the Apocalypse was, in my estimation, at least, still a desideratum. It was “indicated by sign” to “the servants of the Deity”; and as the Apostasy of which it treats has developed into the maturity of “the things which are,” interpretation of the symbols and their descriptive writings is required, to enable those who are unskilful in the word, and the history of the past and present, to understand. I believe that this volume, as far as it goes, will accomplish this; and enable the reader to discern the true character of his surroundings; and to prepare himself for the appearing of Christ, who is to come upon a heedless, blind, and self-sufficient generation, “as a thief in the night.”

I have named this exposition “EUREKA” I have done this in conformity with the examples presented in the Bible, where several of the books of which it is composed are designed by Greek names, expressive of some relevant characteristic: such as GENESIS, or Birth; EXODUS, or Departure; DEUTERONOMY, or Second Law; ECCLESIASTES, or Preacher; and so forth. It is convenient to designate a book by a single word or phrase. It is a substitute for the whole title, which, if long, is inconvenient to remember and repeat when reference is made to the book. But I have chosen the word “EUREKA,” without the aspirate, as expressive of a fact which, I think, the reader will be able to verify. It is the word shouted forth by Archimedes while running through the streets of Syracuse, upon his discovery of the hydrostatic principle, by which he could detect the imposition practised upon Hiero II. by the goldsmith who fabricated his crown. It is of the perfect tense of the verb Heurisko, and signifies I have found. If the reader inquire of me, “What?” I answer, “An exposition of the Apocalypse in harmony with ‘the things of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Anointed’,” which completes the title.

In conclusion, then, we commend this volume to the candid attention of the reader, in hope that it may aid him in the comprehension of a subject “at once so important, so difficult, and so controverted.” “Blessed is he that knows accurately, and they who give heed to the words of the prophecy, and observe narrowly the things which have been written in it; for the time is near.”—Rev. 1:3.

WEST HOBOKEN, HUDSON Co., N.J. Feb. 11, 1861.

CHRIST’S LAST MESSAGE TO HIS FRIENDS

Most people claim that The Apocalypse is too deep and enigmatical to be understood. But it’s style constitutes a challenge to faith. In delivering it to John for the benefit of “his servants”, the Lord treated them as “his friends”. He declared: “Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you” (John 15:15). The Apocalypse needs to be treated in that fashion. If we value the friendship of Christ we will not be deterred by its problems, but will prayerfully and conscientiously seek to understand it. “Blessed is he that readeth,” declared Christ. Christ does not mock us by inviting us to engage in a vain study. The Apocalypse is not sealed: “Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book” (Rev. 22:10). That this book is understandable, the volumes of Eureka are a witness. With them before him, let no reader foster the idea that The Apocalypse is a book beyond comprehension. Under God, through the labours of its author, the basic principles of the Truth have been clearly set forth: and similarly, in Eureka, the deeper revelation of the divine purpose has been expounded. And in a manner that the simplest mind can grasp with a prayerful effort. Let the reader gratefully accept the providential help of Eureka. By its means he can read himself rich unto life eternal.

A messenger from John in exile in Patmos would have crossed to Ephesus and then taken a circular route. The seven ecclesias are listed in the order he would have visited them.

A NEW TRANSLATION

OF

THE FIRST FIVE CHAPTERS

OF THE

APOCALYPSE

CHAP. 1:1. A REVELATION of Jesus Anointed which the Deity committed to him to exhibit to his servants things which must be speedily accomplished; and he indicated them by sign having sent by his messenger to his servant John, 2. Who testified the word of the Deity and the testimony of Jesus Anointed, and whatsoever things he saw 3. Blessed he that knows accurately, and they who give heed to the words of the prophecy, and observe narrowly the things which have been written in it; for the time is near.

THE SALUTATION

4. JOHN TO THE SEVEN ECCLESIAS WHICH ARE IN THE ASIA JOY TO YOU AND PEACE FROM THE WHO IS AND WHO WAS AND WHO IS COMING; AND FROM THE SEVEN SPIRITS WHICH IS(ha estin) BEFORE HIS THRONE; 5. AND FROM JESUS ANOINTED, THE FAITHFUL WITNESS, THE CHIEF BORN FROM AMONG THE DEAD, AND THE PRINCE OF

THE KINGS OF THE EARTH: TO HIM HAVING LOVED US AND WASHED US FROM OUR SINS IN HIS BLOOD, 6. AND MADE US KINGS AND PRIESTS FOR THE DEITY EVEN OUR FATHER: TO HIM BE THE GLORY AND THE SUPREMACY DURING THE AIONS OF THE AIONS. AMEN.

Vision of the Son of Man in the Lord's Day

7. BEHOLD he is coming with the Clouds, and every eye shall see him, and whosoever pierced him; and all the tribes of the earth shall wail before him. Yea verily; so let it be.

8. I am the Alpha and the Omega, beginning and ending, saith the Lord, Who Is and Who Was and Who is Coming, the Omnipotent.

9. I, John, both your brother and joint partaker in the tribulation, and in the kingdom and waiting for Jesus Anointed, was in the isle called Patmos on account of the word of the Deity, and on account of the testimony of Jesus Anointed.

10. I was in spirit in the Lord's Day; and I heard behind me a loud voice as of a trumpet, 11. Saying, I am the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last; and what thou beholdest write for a scroll, and send it to the Seven Ecclesias which are in Asia—to Ephesus, and to Smyrna, and to Pergamos, and to Thyatira, and to Sardis, and to Philadelphia, and to Laodicea.

12. And I turned to see the voice which spake with me; and having turned I saw Seven Golden Lightstands, 13. And in the midst of the seven lightstands I saw like to a Son of man invested to the feet, and compassed about the breast with a Golden Zone; 14. And his head and the hairs white as it were wool, white as snow: and his eyes as a flame of fire; 15. And his feet like to incandescent brass, as if they had been glowing in a furnace: and his voice as a sound of many waters; 16. And having in his right hand Seven Stars; and out of his mouth a sharp double-edged longsword proceedeth and his aspect as the sun shineth in his strength.

17. And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying, to me, Fear not! I am the First and the Last 18. And the Living One: and I was dead, and behold I am living for the Aions of the Aions; Amen: and I have the keys of the Invisible and of Death. 19. Write the things thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall come to pass after these.

20. The mystery of the Seven Stars which thou sawest at my right hand, and the Seven Lightstands which are golden, is this: the Seven Stars are the Angels of the Seven Ecclesias; and the Seven Lightstands which thou sawest are Seven Ecclesias.

EPISTLES TO THE ECCLESIAS

1. THE EPHESIAN

CHAP. 2:1. To the Angel of the Ephesian ecclesia write; These things saith he who holds the Seven Stars in his right hand walking in the midst of the seven lightstands which are golden. 2. I have known thy works, and thy labor, and thine awaiting, and that thou art not able to endure wicked men; and hast tried them who assert that they are Apostles, but are not, and has found them liars; 3. And thou hast suffered, and hast patient endurance, and thou hast labored on account of my Name, and hast not tired out.

4. But I have against thee that thou hast forsaken thy first love. 5. Remember then from whence thou hast fallen, and change thy mind, and do the first works; but if not, I come to thee speedily, and I will remove thy lightstand out of its place, except thou change thy mind.

6. But thou hast this, that thou hatest the works of the Nikolaitans, which I also hate. 7. He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias. To him that overcomes, to him I will give to eat of the Wood of the Life which is in the midst of the Paradise of the Deity.

2. To the Smyrnean

8. AND to the Angel of the ecclesia of the Smyrneans write; These things saith the First and the Last, who was dead and lived; 9. I have known thy works, and the tribulation and the poverty; though thou art rich and the blasphemy of those who say that they themselves are Jews, and are not, but a Synagogue of the Satan.

10. Fear not the things which thou shalt suffer. Behold the Diabolos will cast of you into prison that ye may be tempted; and ye will have a tribulation of ten days. Be faithful until death, and I will give to thee the coronal wreath of the life.

11. He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias: he who overcomes shall not be injured by the Second death.

3. To the Pergamian

12. AND to the Angel of the ecclesia in Pergamos write; These things saith he having the sharp double-edged longsword; 13. I have observed thy works and where thou dwellest, in which place is the throne of the Satan; but thou holdest fast my name, and deniedst not my faith even in the days in which Antipas was my faithful witness, who was put to death with you where the Satan sojourns.

14. But I have against thee a few things; that thou hast there men holding the teaching of Balaam, who instructed Balak to cast a stumblingblock before the sons of Israel, to eat idol-sacrifices and to fornicate. 15. So hast thou also men holding the teaching of the Nikolaitans, which thing I hate.

16. Change thy mind, but if not, I come to thee speedily, and I will fight against them with the longsword of my mouth.

17. He having an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias. To him that overcometh, I will give to him to eat of the manna that hath been hidden; and I will give to him a white pebble, and upon the pebble a New Name that hath been engraved, which no one knew except the receiver.

4. To the Thyatiran

18. AND to the Angel of the ecclesia among Thyatirans write; These things saith the Son of the Deity, having his eyes like a flame of fire, and his feet like to incandescent brass;

19. I have known thy works, and thy love, and service, and faith, and endurance; and that thy works, even the last, are more than the first.

20. But I have a few things against thee, because thou permittest the woman Jezebel, who calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to fornicate, and to eat idol-sacrifices. 21. And I gave her time that she might heartily turn from her prostitution; but she turned not. 22. Behold I cast her into a bed, and them committing adultery with her into great tribulation, unless they may have heartily turned from their works. 23. And I will slay her children with death; and all the ecclesias shall know that I am he that searcheth reins and hearts; and I will give to you, to each one, according to your works.

24. But I say to you, and to the rest among the Thyatirans, as many as do not hold this teaching, and who acknowledged not the depths of the Satan as they speak; I will cast upon you no other burden.

25. Moreover that which ye have, hold fast to the time that I may have come. 26. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my appointments to an end, I will give to him dominion over the nations; 27.

And he shall govern them with an iron sceptre: (as the potter's clay-vessels it is breaking to pieces) as also I have received from my Father. 28. And I will give to him the Morning Star. 29. He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias.

5. To the Sardian

1. ALSO to the Angel of the ecclesia in Sardis write: These things saith he having the Seven Spirits of the Deity and the Seven Stars: I have known thy works, that thou hast the name that thou livest, but thou art dead. 2. Become thou vigilant, and strengthen the things remaining which are about to die: for I have not found thy works perfected in the sight of the Deity.

3. Be mindful therefore what thou hast received and heard, and strictly keep it, and be changed. If then thou have not been vigilant, I shall be come upon thee as a thief, and thou mayest not at all have known at what hour I shall be come upon thee.

4. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments: and they shall walk with me in white robes, because they are worthy.

5. The victor, he shall be clothed in white garments; and I will not at all obliterate his name from the scroll of the life, and I will openly confess his name in the presence of my Father, and in the presence of his angels.

6. He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias.

6. To the Philadelphian

7. ALSO to the Angel of the ecclesia in Philadelphia write; These things saith the Holy One, the True One, he having the key of David, opening and no one shutteth, and he shuts and no one openeth. 8. I have observed thy works; behold I have placed before thee a door, which has been opened, and no one is able to shut it; because thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

9. Behold I give up out of the Synagogue of the Satan them who say that they are Jews, yet are not, but do lie; behold I will cause them that they come and have prostrated themselves before thy feet, and that they may have known that I have loved thee.

10. Seeing that thou hast kept the word of my awaiting, I also will keep thee from the hour of the trial being about to come upon the whole habitable to prove them who dwell upon the earth.

11. Behold I come quickly; hold fast what thou hast that no one may have seized upon thy coronal wreath.

12. The victor, I will make him a pillar in the temple of my Deity, and he shall not at all go away out more; and I will write upon him the name of my Deity, and the name of the City of my Deity, the New Jerusalem, which descendeth out of the heaven from my Deity, even my New Name.

13. He having an ear to hear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias.

7. To the Laodicean

14. ALSO to the Angel of the ecclesia of Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the Witness faithful and true, the Beginning of the creation of the Deity. 15. I have known thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot. Would that thou wert cold or hot! 16. Thus because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I am about to vomit thee out of my mouth.

17. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and have abounded in wealth, and have need of nothing, and hast not known that thou art the wretched, and pitiable, and poor, and blind, and naked one. 18. I counsel thee to buy from me gold which has been refined by fire that thou mayest be rich; and white garments that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness may not be apparent; and anoint thine eyes with salve that thou mayest see. 19. Whomsoever I love I discipline and admonish; be zealous therefore, and change.

20. Behold I have stood at the door, and I knock; if any one may hear my voice, and open the door, I will enter in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

21. The victor, I will give to him to sit with me in my throne as I also vanquished, and sat with my Father in his throne.

22. He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias.

Vision of the Thrones, the Elders, and the Living Ones

CHAP. 4:1. AFTER these things I looked, and behold a door opened in the heaven, and that first voice which I heard as of a trumpet speaking with me, saying, "Ascend hither, and I will exhibit to thee things which must come to pass after these."

2. And immediately I was in spirit: and behold a THRONE was established in the heaven, and upon the throne one sitting. 3. And the one sitting was in appearance like to a jasper and sardine stone: and a rainbow circled about the throne in appearance like to an emerald.

4. And circling about the throne were twenty-four thrones: and upon the thrones I saw the twenty and four Elders sitting, having been invested with white garments; and they had upon their heads golden coronets.

5. And out of the throne proceed lightnings and thunders and voices: and seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the Seven Spirits of the Deity.

6. And before the throne a translucent sea, like to crystal. And in the midst of the throne and in the circle of the throne four Living Ones being full of eyes before and behind.

7. And the first living one was like to a lion; and the second living one like to a calf; and the third living one having the face like to a man; and the fourth living one like to an eagle flying. 8. And the four living ones, one by itself, had each six wings circling about it; and within they were full of eyes, and they have no intermission day and night, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord, the Omnipotent Deity, who was and who is, and who is coming.

9. And when the living ones shall give glory, and honor, and thanks to the one sitting upon the throne, who liveth for the Aions of the Aions, 10. The twenty and four Elders fall before the one sitting upon the throne, and they do homage to him who liveth for the Aions of the Aions, and they cast their coronets before the throne saying, 11. Worthy art thou, O Lord, to receive the glory, and the honor and the power; because thou createdst all things, and on account of thy will they exist, and were created.

The Lamb, the Elders, and the Living Ones Indicated

CHAP. 5:1. AND I saw at the right of him sitting upon the throne a SCROLL, which had been written within and on the back, sealed up with SEVEN SEALS.

2. And I saw a mighty angel heralding with a loud voice, "Who is worthy to unroll the scroll, and to loose the seals thereof?" 3. But no one in the heaven, nor upon the earth, nor under the earth, was able to unroll the scroll, nor to see it. 4. And I shed many tears, because no one was found worthy to unroll and read the scroll, nor to see it.

5. But one of the elders saith to me, Weep not; behold the LION who is of the Tribe of Judah, THE ROOT OF DAVID, hath prevailed to unroll the scroll, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

6. And I saw, and behold in the midst of the throne, and of the four living ones, and in the midst of the elders, a LAMB standing as if it had been slain, having Seven Horns and Seven Eyes, which are the SEVEN SPIRITS of the Deity sent forth into all the earth. 7. And he went and received the scroll from the right of him sitting upon the throne.

8. And when he received the scroll, the four Living Ones and the twentyfour Elders cast themselves down before the Lamb, having each one harps, and golden censers full of perfumes, which are the prayers of THE SAINTS

9. And they sing a NEW SONG, saying,

“Thou’rt worthy to receive the scroll,
and to undo the seals thereof;
For thou wast slain, and with thy blood,
The price, hast purchased us for God
From ev’ry people, tribe, race, tongue,
And mad’st us kings and priests t’ our God.
And we shall reign the earth upon.”

11. And I beheld, and heard a voice of many angels circled about the throne, and of the living ones, and of the elders: and the number of them was ten thousands of ten thousands and thousands of thousands, 12. Saying with a loud voice,

“The Lamb that hath been put to death,
The power, riches, wisdom, strength
And honor, glory, blessing too
Is worthy to receive.”

13. And every created thing that is in the heaven, and things which are in the earth, and underneath the earth, and upon the sea, even all the things in them, I heard saying,

“To him that sitteth on the throne
And to the Lamb the blessing be,
The honor, glory and the pow’r,
The Aions of the Aions for!”

14. And the four living ones said, “So let it be:” and the twenty four elders cast themselves down, and did homage to him that liveth for the Aions of the Aions.

CHAPTER I.

THE SOURCE FROM WHICH THE APOCALYPSE EMANATED; ITS PURPOSE; THE SYMBOLIZATION OF THE MYSTERY OF GODLINESS; THE MANNER OF THE COMING OF THE SPIRIT-MAN PROCLAIMED, SYMBOLIC VISION OF THE MAN, AND THE MYSTERY OF THE SEVEN STARS AND LIGHT-STANDS REVEALED.

SECTION I.

1. THE TITLE

“A revelation of Jesus Anointed which the Deity committed to him to exhibit to his servants things which must be speedily accomplished.”—Apoc. 1:1

ΑΠΟΚΑΛΥΨΙΣ, apokalupsis, is the first word of the last book of the New Testament in Greek. The book is, therefore, in that language styled, Apokalupsis. But this name is not restricted to the original. It is very often employed in speaking and writing as the title, or name, of the book in the English; although it is not so designated in the common Version. It is styled in this “The Revelation,” which, indeed, expresses the truth; for the book is a revelation, and one specially imparted: but still, the name is objectionable, inasmuch as it is only a very small part of revelation; nevertheless small as it is, a most important, and highly interesting, portion thereof. To distinguish it, therefore, from revelation in general, many are accustomed to anglicize the Greek name, and to style it THE APOCALYPSE. For this reason, which appears sufficient, I have concluded to adopt it also; so that the reader of this volume will understand, that when “the Apocalypse” is named, that book of scripture is meant, which in the English Version is called “The Revelation of St. John the Divine.”

Though published by “special command of the Most High and Mighty Prince, James, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland; and Defender of the Faith,” and “appointed to be read in Churches”—the reader must not suppose that the words “The Revelation of Saint John the Divine,” are the divinely authorized inscription. The Holy Spirit does not speak in this style, even of an apostle. It is only The Apostasy, so conspicuously exhibited in The Apocalypse, that confers titles upon the Fishermen of Galilee, and their brethren, to give them sanctity and respectability in the estimation of the kings and princes of the world. The Apostasy uses the words “saint” and “divine” as applicable only to “Christians,” who have attained sanctimonious preeminence among their fellows; and who are skilled in “divinity,” and have received ordination, and a license to preach. But these words are not so used in scripture. Saint is there applied to all that are separated, or made holy, by the blood of the covenant; as it is written, “Gather my saints together unto me: those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice”—Psal. 50:5: “having their hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience (by the blood of sprinkling, Heb. 12:24) and their bodies washed with pure water”—Heb. 10:22. The sprinkling of heart, and the washing of body, are common to all in Christ, whether apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, or private persons. In apostolic times, these were all saints, or “the faithful in Christ Jesus”—1 Cor. 1:2; Col. 1:2. There was then no canonization of obedient believing men and women into saints: all who believed and obeyed “the truth as it is in Jesus,” in that obedience became saints and children of the Most High.

The apostle John had no titles. He was neither “Saint John” nor “John the Divine.” He was one of the saints in Christ Jesus; but not “Saint,” as an ecclesiastical title of honor and distinction. He might as well have been styled King John or Priest John; for he was not only a saint, but a king and a priest for God. Ecclesiastical titles are of the pride of life, and not of God. They are assumptions of lordship over the saints; and strictly forbidden by their Prince. “Ye are all brethren; and the greater of you shall be servant”—Matt. 23:8, 11. This is the spirit of Christ, who, although the Teacher, and Lord, was as one who served. The reverse of this is the spirit of Antichrist. Wherever, therefore, men professing to be Christians, exalt themselves, or allow themselves to be exalted, to high ecclesiastical estate, there is “the mark of the beast,” and there “the number of his name.” All this sort of thing was repudiated with contempt by the apostles, after they were converted and became as little children—Matt. 18:3. “Be of the same mind towards one another; not minding high things, but being conducted with the despised”—Rom. 12:16. This was the doctrine they inculcated, and practised; and in so doing, though dead, still speak reprehending the unhallowed ambition of those who pretend to have succeeded them in all but their penury and woe—1 Cor. 15:19; 2; 2 Ep. 11:21–28.

The apostle John is the only one upon whom The Apostasy has conferred the title of “the Divine.”

Paul, James, Peter, and Jude are termed simply apostles, or messengers; while the messenger John is, as an especial honor, erected into ho theologos, the Theologian, or “Divine!” Was it imagined that he was Professor of Divinity in a Theological Seminary at Jerusalem; or, was it because he has narrated the discourses of Jesus on the relations of the Father and the Son, which are not found in the other testimonies? Whatever may have been the reason, it must of necessity be infinitely puerile. None of the apostles had any thing to do with what King James’s flatterers and courtiers call “divinity,” or “theology,” but to condemn it as a corruption of “the faith once delivered to the saints.” They denounced it as “profane, and old wives’ fables;” and its professors as “seducing spirits” and “demons,” “unruly and vain talkers, and deceivers.” Paul the Divine, Peter the Divine, or John the Divine, are epithets that desecrate the renown of the noble men whose names are thus entitled. John had no divine pretensions over Peter and Paul. James, Peter, and John were “pillars,” and Paul was not a whit behind them; for He that wrought effectually in Peter, was also mighty in him. They made no ostentatious display of their names; and in themselves claimed to be no more than weak earthen vessels, in whose feebleness and frailty the glory and power of God became more strikingly manifest. The Holy Spirit was the holy oil of their earthen lamps. By it they were guided into all the truth; and the light which shone around them was of that anointing, not of them.

“The Revelation of Saint John the Divine” is a spurious title. The real inscription is contained in the first words of the book—Apokalupsis Iesou Christou, REVELATION OF JESUS ANOINTED. The contents of the book did not come to John direct from God. They emanated from Him “who dwells in light,” who had hitherto reserved them in his own power—Acts 1:7. Till this emanation they were sealed up, and “known to no man, no not the angels in heaven, NOR THE SON, but the Father”—Mark 13:32. Jesus affirmed this want of knowledge with reference to his apocalypse. “Watch ye therefore,” he continued; “for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning; lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping.”

This universal ignorance of “the Times and Seasons” is the subject of one of the scenes of this book. In chap. 5:1 The Apocalypse is represented as a book in the right hand of God completely sealed up. When John saw the book, he heard a loud voice inquiring, “Who is worthy to unroll the scroll, and to loose its seals?” But no man or angel came forward. “And no man,” says John, “in the heaven, nor upon the earth, nor under the earth, was able to unroll the scroll, nor to see it.” John was exceedingly distressed at this. The words and the book that Daniel had been commanded to shut up and seal (ch. 12:4, 9) no man in the heaven, earth, or grave, was found worthy or able to open. Therefore John wept exceedingly. “I wept much,” says he, “because no man was found worthy to unroll and read the scroll, nor to see it.”

The book remained thus concealed with God until the time of John’s residence in the Isle of Patmos. He was there, he tells us, “on account of the word of God, and the testimony of Jesus Christ.” He was in tribulation, and doubtless “wept much,” both on account of his sufferings, and his inability to say “how long to the end of the times”—Dan. 12:6, 8; when the Lord Jesus should appear in his kingdom—1:9. But, at this crisis, a Messenger reached his place of exile, whom he styles “one of the elders,” a constituent of the symbolic twenty-four, ch. 4:4; 5:8, 9—and said to him, “Weep not: Behold, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, the Root of David, hath prevailed to unroll the scroll, and to loose its seals”—5:5. Thus “Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews,” is brought before the reader as the only personage from among the dead, or among the living, who could open the words and unseal the mystery of God, as he hath declared the glad tidings to his servants the prophets—10:7. That mystery required the cutting asunder a covenant for the covering of iniquity; and for causing to come in a righteousness of Aions—Dan. 9:24. In other words, “Messiah the Prince” had to be cut off; and so to be made a covenant of, according to the saying, “I will give thee for a covenant of the people”—Isai. 42:6; 49:8. Until this were accomplished no practical solution could be given of the end. Had the Second Adam failed to establish his worthiness, like the first, John's weeping would never have been assuaged. But Jesus did "prevail:" for, though in all points tempted as we are, according to the likeness of his nature to ours, yet he did not sin. Though a Son, he learned obedience by the things which he suffered. He was made perfect through sufferings, having been obedient unto death. He kept his body under, triumphing over its lusts; and, though sorely tried, he yielded not, but evolved a character that was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners—Heb. 2:10, 14, 16; 4:15; 5:2, 7–9; 7:26. When he died, he was delivered from death, and now lives for evermore. Death hath no more dominion over him. For he had power to lay down his life, and to take it up again; a commandment which he had received of the Father. This he did; and in so doing, abolished the power of death, having led captivity captive, and brought to light the life and incorruptibility of the gospel of the kingdom—Psal. 68:18, Eph. 4:8; 2 Tim. 1:10.

Having established his worthiness in this moral conflict with the world and the flesh, God accepted him as the most excellent of all the intelligences of his universe; and in consequence gave to him what no one else possessed, namely, power to unroll the scroll and to loose its seals. The Apocalypse is therefore styled, "A Revelation of Jesus Anointed which the Deity committed to him." Now, Jesus Anointed is Power, or Spirit, manifested in flesh, and justified in Spirit—1 Tim. 3:16: or, "Made of the seed of David according to flesh; and constituted Son of God in power, according to spirit of holiness, out of a resurrection of dead ones"—Rom. 1:3, 4: and therefore styled "the Lord the Spirit," or "a life-imparting Spirit"—1 Cor. 15:45; 2 Cor. 3:17, 18. Here are Spirit and Flesh. The Spirit is Theos, or Deity; the Flesh was the Son of Mary, and named Jesus; and when anointed with Spirit again at his resurrection, became Jesus Christ, or the Anointed Jesus. This anointing was his begetting of spirit by which he became Spirit; as he said to Nicodemus, "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit"—John 3:6. The Eternal Spirit, then, imparted to Jesus, after his glorification, the times, and seasons, and mode, and circumstances of his reappearance upon earth; all of which constituted a revelation such as he had not yet been the subject of. It is a revelation of Jesus Christ very unlike the revelation of the man of sorrows acquainted with grief. This was a revelation of the Son promised to Israel and David's house, as a helpless babe, born in a stable and cradled in a manger; as a fugitive in the earth, escaping from the sword of power; as a mechanic, laboring at the bench for his daily bread; as a preacher of righteousness, denouncing the hypocrisy and blasphemy of the clergy; and calling upon the people to renounce the traditions of their blind guides; and to become enlightened in the wisdom from above; as a man persecuted for righteousness' sake by the pious and the powerful of the Church and State; as a man accused of blasphemy, sorcery, and perversion of the people; as an alleged enemy to God, and a traitor to kings reigning by his grace; as a man, in fine, adjudged "guilty of death," and worthy only of being "numbered with transgressors," and ignominiously executed with thieves. Such was the revelation of "Messiah the Prince" in Heaven's gift of him "for a Covenant of the People," which has now for many centuries been presented to the nations in New Testament history, and memorialized in the ecclesiasticism of the Beast.

"Messiah the Prince," or High Priest, was "cut off," or covenanted, as the spirit had revealed to Daniel. But before he died, he cried with a loud voice, in the words of Psal. 22:1., saying, Aili, Aili, "My strength, my strength, why hast thou forsaken me!" Before he had uttered this exclamation, the Holy Spirit, which had descended upon him from the Habitation of Light and Power, in the form of a dove, and rested upon him, from the time of his immersion in the Jordan, had been withdrawn. The Father-Spirit had evacuated the son of David's daughter, who is styled, in the Songs of Zion, "the Handmaid of Jehovah," Psal. 116:16. The Son was, therefore, left without strength or power, and consequently without God. Still he was suspended to the tree a living man; a man crucified through weakness (2 Cor. 13:4), and dying of his own volition in obedience to God. But after the God-Power had forsaken him, and before he committed his life to the Father in breathing his last, there was an interval in which, after the example of Abraham at the typical confirmation of the covenant, “a horror of great darkness fell upon him” (Gen. 15:12); “for there was darkness over all the land until the ninth hour.” In this darkness he cried aloud; and drank the bitterness of gall and vinegar; and again cried with a loud voice; and the deep sleep fell upon him from which he did not awake until the early dawn of the third day.

In this death-state the Son of David was prevailed against by the Little Horn of Daniel’s Fourth Beast; and a prisoner of captivity. In this crisis he was neither God nor Spirit: but as testified concerning him in Psal. 22:6, “A worm and no man;” poured out like water; bones all out of joint; heart like wax, melted in the midst of the bowels. Strength dried up like a potsherd; tongue cleaving to the jaws; lying in the dust of death—vers. 14, 15. But things were only to remain thus for a short space. The man Jesus, who had left behind him a character which the Father-Spirit acknowledged as His own, had been too excellent and admirable a person to be abandoned to the power of the enemy. The corpse rested, waiting to become the basis, or hypostasis, of a new revelation—a new, or further, revelation of Spirit. The Father-Spirit had been manifesting himself for three years and a half, terminating at the crucifixion, in word and deed; teaching great truths, and working mighty wonders and signs which Omnipotence alone could operate; this was Spirit-revelation through Mary’s Son—“Power manifested in flesh.” but a Spirit-revelation was to be given to the BODY REPAIRED (σωσα κατηρητισω μοι, a body thou repairedst for me—Heb. 10:5. A breach had been made in it. Its “loins were filled with a loathsome disease: and there was no soundness in its flesh”—Psal. 38:7. This was its condition while prostrate and hidden in the noisome pit (Ps. 40:2) beneath the turf. But though sealed up in Joseph’s cave, it was not concealed from the Father-Spirit, who had so recently forsaken it. Walls, and seals, and soldiers, could not bar out the Spirit from the Body he was about to repair for future manifestations. Hence the Spirit in David represents the Son as saying, “My body was not concealed from thee when I was made in the secret place; I was embroidered in the under parts of the earth. Thine eyes saw my imperfect substance; and in thy book all of them were written as to the days they were fashioned, when there was not one among them,” Psal. 139:15.

The body was repaired, and in its being freed from the loathsomeness of death, it was created a Spiritual Body with all the embroidery of spirit. “It was sown in corruption,” though “not permitted to see corruption;” it was raised in incorruptibility: it was sown in dishonor, it was raised in glory; it was sown in weakness, it was raised in power; it was sown a soul-body, it was raised a spirit-body,” incorruptible, glorious, and powerful: egeneto ho eschatos Adam eis pneuma, the last Adam was made into spirit; he was freed from all those qualities of body which make our human nature inferior to the nature of angels; and acquired new ones, by which the nature he now rejoices in is so intimately combined with the Father-Spirit, that what is affirmed of the one is true also of the other, according to what is written in John 10:30, 38, “I AND THE FATHER ARE ONE;” the Father is in me, and I in him.” “This is the true Theos, and the Aion-Life,” 1 John 5:20, and therefore he is styled by Paul, “the Lord, the Spirit,” imparting life. 1 Cor 15:42–45.

Now, though the world has witnessed the revelation which Light and Power gave to David’s Son in the days of his psychical, or soul-body, commonly styled “his flesh;” it has never seen the apocalypse predetermined and recorded for manifestation through the pneumatical or spirit-body, begotten from among the dead. This revelation has been imparted to the glorified Jesus, to the once-dead body now anointed with spirit with which the Deity has sealed him.” John 6:27. “A revelation of Jesus anointed which God gave to him;” not to be held as a secret with himself, which no other intelligences should know, until the things revealed should burst upon the world, and take even the saints at unawares. This was not the purpose for which it was given to him; simply, as it were, to make the Son equal in knowledge with the Father, and more intelligent than the angels in heaven. It was given to him as “The Head of the Body the Ecclesia; the Beginning, the first begotten from among the dead, that he might be among all preeminent; for it pleased that in him all the fulness should dwell." Col. 1:18. He was to be the depository of wisdom, knowledge, and power for the heirs of the world. The apocalypse of his future was given to him for their benefit, that they might know the things which must be accomplished speedily. The inscription therefore reads, "A Revelation of Jesus anointed which God gave to him to show to his servants things which must come to pass speedily." The revelation was only intended for these. It was not communicated for the information of the wicked; for it had long before been noted in the scriptures of truth that "None of the wicked should understand." Dan. 12:10. "To the wicked, God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth? Seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee." Psal. 50:16, 17.

2. Who are the Servants of God

From this testimony we learn that "the wicked" are a larger class than is generally supposed. They are not restricted to murderers, drunkards, thieves, and the licentious. The wicked are to a great extent very pious and religious people. They have "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." Being ignorant of God's righteousness, they go about with great diligence and at enormous cost, to establish their own righteousness, not having submitted to God's. They compass sea and land to make proselytes; they make long prayers; sing with sweetest music the praises of him they profess to worship. The world is full of their piety; for it is fashionable to be religious, or rather to "profess religion;" so that Christianity is thought to be habited in "fine linen, purple, silk, and scarlet;" to walk in silver sandals; and to be "adorned with pearls and precious stones." Apoc. 18:12. But, be this as it may, there is a characteristic of wickedness which no sect, party, name, or denomination, regarded as "orthodox," can repudiate as inapplicable to itself. That characteristic is, "THOU CASTEST MY WORDS BEHIND THEE," saith God. No man, sect, or party, can offer a greater insult to Jehovah than this; for it is testified, that He hath magnified his word above all the attributes of his name; Psal. 138:2; and it was foretold in commendation of Messiah, that when he should be revealed, he would "magnify the law and make it honorable." Isai. 42:21. "I came not," said he, "to destroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfil; for the heaven and earth may pass away, but not one jot or tittle shall pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." He continually impressed upon his hearers the necessity of believing the words of God, and of doing his commands: and never ceased to make the "obedience of faith" the test of men's devotion and affection for him. "If ye love me," saith he, "keep my commandments;" and "ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you;" for "love is the fulfilling of the law."

Now these are principles which no sophistry or reasoning can set aside. They are as true to-day as when they fell from the lips of him who gave utterance to the words of God." "My words," saith he, "are spirit and life;" and Moses has testified, saying, that whosoever would not hearken unto Jehovah's words which he should speak in his name, He would require it of him." Deut. 18:15-19. The reader may profess to believe that Jesus of Nazareth is he to whom Moses referred; for, Jesus said, "He wrote concerning me." But does the reader know what the Father commanded the prophet like unto Moses to speak in his name? If he know it, does he believe it? And if he believe the things spoken, has he obeyed them? To believe and do is the only evidence a man can give that he does not cast Jehovah's words behind him. "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Hear this, ye bishops, priests, and ministers! Hear this, all ye eloquent "divines," and leaders of the people! All ye scribes, Pharisees, and hypocrites, whose garb, grimace, and tone, are the counterfeit of wool to disguise the ravening wolf! Hear this, all ye zealots of the world religious; this question is for you who call Jesus, Lord, and do not the things which he says! Deny not the truth of the indictment; for your "names and denominations," in their creeds, institutions, and practices, are standing memorials of your guilt. Do ye know what the glad tidings were Jesus was anointed to preach to the poor? Do ye know what that kingdom was whose gospel he announced? What was that acceptable year of Jehovah he proclaimed? Can ye define that righteousness of God attested by the law and the prophets, he exhorted men to seek with the kingdom? Do ye consent to his words, appointing men to believe the gospel he preached, and to be immersed, that they may be saved? Do ye not rather make void all this by your traditions, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men? To believe and do, ye practically repudiate, in affirming the salvation of those who neither know, believe, nor obey. Now He whom ye call Lord, testifies against you, saying, "He that receiveth not my words, the word that I have spoken, the same shall condemn him in the last day." "The gospel of the kingdom" is "the word of the kingdom," which he sowed in his field. By faith in this word men will be justified; without it, they will be condemned; for the words of Jesus are, "He that believeth not shall be condemned."

Now, it is notorious, O ye clergy of all orders and degrees, that ye do not consent to "the truth as it is in Jesus;" but that ye substitute all sorts of foolishness in its place. Ye blaspheme "the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," by invoking it in the rantism of babes, who, you teach, are by that absurdity engrafted into the body of Christ. This is taking the name, "the Glorious and Fearful Name," Jehovah-Elohim, in vain. That name is holy and reverend, and He hath commanded, saying, "Thou shalt not take the name of Jehovah thine Elohim in vain; for Jehovah will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain"—Exod. 20:7. And surely it is an egregious vanity, in view of the testimony, "that without faith it is impossible to please God; for he that cometh to him, must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him"—to bring a puling babe to a pint basin, incapable of faith, ignorant of any thing called God, and a diligent seeker only of its mother's breast! And this ye do, and many other abominations too, O ye Destroyers of the people. Hear, then, what Paul, whom ye style "the Great Apostle to the Gentiles," hath declared to your confusion. In 1 Tim. 6:3, he says, "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the teaching which is according to godliness; he has been besmoked, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself."

It is manifest, then, from these premises, that the pious zealots of the names and denominations of Gentile Christianity, together with their professional guides, are all of the same category. Though very respectable and orderly members of society, they are besmoked know-nothings, and wicked, not consenting to the words of Jesus, but casting his words behind them, and denouncing them as "heresy." The revelation before us, "which the Deity gave to him," was not for them. It was for "his servants;" and the "spiritual guides" of the people are not his servants. This is the reason why there is no interpretation of THE APOCALYPSE extant, written by "a theologian" or "divine," that has any claim to consideration or respect as a scriptural exegesis of the book. Though learned in mythology and the dead languages, in history ancient and modern, in general literature and science, they are not learned in Moses and the Prophets, and the teaching of Jesus and the Apostles. "The fear of Jehovah," as taught by these, "is the beginning of wisdom;" and this commencement they have not made. No man can interpret the Apocalypse in harmony with the prophetic writings, who believes that Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and David, are now inheriting the promises covenanted to them; or that the inheritance covenanted is beyond the skies. An occupant of an episcopal throne in the State Church of any nation, cannot interpret the book, not being able to see that his own church is one of the daughters of the Mother of Harlots, and that he himself is one of "the merchants of the earth," whose merchandise is of tithes, bodies, and the souls of men. He that denies the personal reappearance of Jesus Christ upon Mount Olivet, who affirms that he is now sitting upon the throne of David; and that consequently there will be no rebuilding of David's dwelling-place, or reestablishment of his throne in Zion: he that denies the restoration of the twelve tribes of Israel to their native land; maintains that they are for ever outcasts; and that no kingdom will be restored to them—cannot “read the book, nor see it.” Believers in a “past millennium” are literally shut up and sealed, and totally destitute of all spiritual perception. In short, the grand prerequisite for an expositor of this wonderful little book is, that he understand the gospel of the kingdom as exhibited in the prophets; the preaching of Jesus as the Christ; and the revelation of the mystery as set forth by the apostles. He must have a comprehensive understanding of the Scriptures from Genesis to Jude; for the light shining from all these testimonies converges upon the apocalyptic page, whose crises, as a mirror, reflect the kingdom promised to the saints.

“The Apocalypse of Jesus Christ” is then for the servants of God:—for those who believe the Gospel of the Kingdom it exhibits; and have been “washed from their sins in his blood,” in being baptized into his name. “Know ye not,” says Paul, “that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of SIN unto death, or of OBEDIENCE unto righteousness?” Here are two masters; the first, the Lord of the world, the last, the ruling principle of Jehovah’s people. “Sin is the transgression of law;” and because this is the natural tendency of our nature, “sin” is sometimes used for “the flesh.” He, therefore, that serves his own lusts, “the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life,” which not only constitute the man, but the world, or aggregate of such, is Sin’s servant or slave. Such a man, be he “priest,” “clergyman,” “minister,” or “layman,” serves sin unto death. Being of the world he speaks of the world, and the world hears him—1 John 4:5. He is essentially a man-pleaser, who holds men’s persons in admiration for the sake of advantage; and therefore cannot be the servant of Christ—Gal. 1:10; Jude 16. The thinking that characterizes such is termed “the thinking of the flesh.” What they think and give expression to is palatable to those who do not know the Scriptures, which is a great cause of error in the world. Their thoughts and reasonings are at issue with the thoughts and ways of God; and therefore, the thinking of the flesh is said to be at enmity with God, not subject to his law, neither indeed can be—Rom. 8:7. When a clergyman or layman thinks on God and his purposes; on what would be pleasing to him; on his own destiny or that of nations and the earth; and judges of these, not according to what is written in the Bible, but according to what appears to him to be “the fitness of things,” and according to the institutes of theological schools and seminaries; such thinking and judgment is the thinking of Sin, and inevitably at variance with the mind of Christ. Sin reigns in his thoughts, in his flesh, and in his ways. He is Sin’s servant, and though a slave, being free from righteousness, he serves him with delight.

Paul reminds the Saints in Rome that they were all the servants of sin once; but thanks God in their behalf, that they had been freed from sin, and were now the servants of righteousness, “having obeyed from the heart A FORM OF TEACHING, τυπον διδασχηῶν, tupon didaches, into which they were delivered”—Rom. 6:17. They obeyed a form of teaching which emancipated, liberated, or set them free, from the lordship of Sin. This was Paul’s mission—to invite men to a change of masters. He addressed himself to free men and slaves, all of whom, whatever their political or social position, were in bondage to the devil or sin. He did not invite slaves to abscond from their fleshly owners; on the contrary, he told men to remain in the several callings of life in which they were when they first heard the truth. “Let every man,” says he, “abide in the same calling wherein he was called. Art thou called, being a slave? Care not for it; but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather.” As if he had said, “Social or political liberty is a small matter in view of what men are called, or invited to, by the gospel of the kingdom. My mission is to “open men’s eyes, to turn them from darkness [of mind] to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among the sanctified by faith [which leads] into Jesus”—Acts 26:18. He invited Sin’s servants to become Jehovah’s servants upon the principle of purchase; so that, in addressing those who had abandoned the synagogue and temple for the house of Christ, he says to them, “Ye are bought with a price. They were “not their own,” being bought bodily and spiritually; “therefore,” said he, “glorify God with your body and with your spirit, which are God’s—1 Cor. 7:23; 6:19, 20. When a man’s body and spirit become another’s property, all property in himself is surrendered to the purchaser. All that he used to call his before he was sold, is transferred to his owner; and, if allowed to retain it, he must use it as the steward of his lord.

Redemption is release for a ransom. All who become God’s servants are therefore released from a former lord by purchase. The purchaser is Jehovah; and the price, or ransom, paid, the precious blood of the flesh through which the Anointing Spirit was manifested. It is therefore styled, “the precious blood of Christ:” as it is written in the words of Peter to his brethren, saying, “Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conduct paternally delivered; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without spot and without blemish”—1 Epist. 1:18. If this Christ-Lamb had not been slain, the fifth and sixth verses of the first chapter of the Apocalypse could not have been written; the “New Song” of chap. 5:9, 10, could never have been sung; the 144,000 could never have been sealed, the robes of the saints, the palm-bearers of ch. 7:9–14, could never have been washed white in blood; there would have been no Altar, no worshippers thereat, nor souls underneath it in death—ch. 11:1; 6:9; and there would have been no “fine linen, clean and white,” to clothe the body guards of “the King of kings”—ch. 19:8, 14. All these parts of the Apocalypse are based on the slaying of the Christ-Lamb as the redemption price of the servants of God.

SATAN took the price of release. In the day of his power he valued the blood at thirty pieces of silver. In this was fulfilled the saying of the prophet, “They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver: and cast it unto the potter: a goodly price that I was prized at of them”—Zech. 11:12, 13. The life being purchased for this amount of blood-money, Satan nailed the Christ-Lamb to the tree; and poured out his life with a spear. Jesus entered no protest against the arrangement. On the contrary, he lovingly laid down his life for the sake of those who had died under the law of Moses, walking in the steps of Abraham’s faith; and for them also, who should afterwards become Abraham’s children by adoption through himself. With the first class, as a man, he had no personal acquaintance; with the last, comprehending multitudes of his contemporaries, his acquaintance cost him his life. Unknown by the one, and condemned and persecuted by the other, he nevertheless laid down his life to purchase their release from the bondage of Sin and Death. “I am,” said he, “the good shepherd. The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep; and I lay down my life for them of myself. No man taketh it from me. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again”—Jno. 10. He regarded this as the greatest evidence of love; for, as Paul reasons, “Scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet perhaps for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.” Well, therefore, may it be said, “Unto him that loved us, to him be glory and dominion for the Aions of the Aions”—ch. 1:5, 6.

The “servants of God, sealed in their foreheads,” are represented by the square of 12; so that their measurement is 144 cubits, and their numerical representation 144,000—Apoc. 7:3, 4; 14:1; 21:17. This square is the sum of all released from bondage to Satan, consequent upon their “obeying the form of teaching delivered unto them.” The releasing them, of course, is an affair of the ages, seeing that the redeemed do not belong to one and the same nation and generation. Jesus died and rose again for the release of these—his sheep scattered among the nations and generations of centuries. In the providence of God, “the Form of Teaching” is brought before them; and being of his sheep, they discern in the teaching the Great Shepherd’s voice, and follow it—John 10:26, 27: and as he said to Paul at Corinth, “Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace; for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city”—Acts 18:10. After this encouraging admonition, Paul continued speaking in Corinth a year and six months, for the manifestation of this people. They heard; they believed; and they were baptized. They believed “the teaching,” and “obeyed the form.” The teaching was the Gospel of the Apocalypse of the Lord Jesus Christ. He tells us that “Christ sent him to preach the gospel; which is the power of God for salvation to every one believing; for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith”—1 Cor. 1:17; Rom. 1:16, 17. In preaching this, he says, “I came declaring the testimony of God;” and “speaking the hidden wisdom of God in a mystery, which had been hid from the Aions and the Generations, but NOW is made manifest to his Saints: to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory”—1 Cor. 2:1, 7; Col. 1:26, 27.

In the teaching, he taught them “the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ;” so that, as the result of his instruction, they came to be “washed, sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and in the Spirit of God”—1 Cor. 6:11: and to wait for his Apocalypse—ch. 1:7. Here was a form of teaching or doctrine presented to them in the formula of the name. He told them about the kingdom and glory to be apocalypsed when the hour should arrive for Jesus Christ to hurl Satan, their master, like lightning from the heaven. His testimony to this effect was confirmed among them by “the demonstration of Spirit and power, that their faith might stand in the power of God”—1 Cor. 1:6; 2:4, 5. Having convinced them of this, he invited them to a cooperation with Jesus in the overthrow of Satan, and in the government of the nations when Satan should be cast into the abyss, and shut up, and sealed, so that he could deceive them no more—Apoc. 20:2, 3. But, at the same time, he taught them that that government which was to succeed Satan’s, was to be a pure, indestructible, divine, and righteous dominion, and that consequently, flesh and blood, or mortals, and the unrighteous, could not possibly have any share in it—1 Cor. 6:9; 15:50. This declaration, attested by the Spirit, brought up the inquiry, What does God require a believer of his promises to do that he may become righteous, and capable of inheriting them? In other words, What must he do to become the subject of the righteousness of God? Of that righteousness, which Paul says is “witnessed by the law and the prophets?” The answer to all who believe the promises, and that Jesus is the Anointed Son of Jehovah, in whose crucified flesh sin was condemned; and that he rose from the dead for the justification of all given to him for brethren by the Father: the answer to such is, Do what Peter commanded the same class to do in Acts 2:38. Do what is prescribed in Acts 3:19. Do what the Samaritans did in Acts 8:12, 16. Do what the Cushite officer did in Acts 8:38, 39. Do what Paul himself did in Acts 9:18; 22:16. Do what Peter commanded the devout Gentiles to do in Acts 10:48. Do what was prescribed to the Philippian household in Acts 16:33. Do what the Corinthians did in Acts 18:8 :—for they all did the same thing. They believed the same teaching, and “obeyed the” same “form,” in conformity with the command to “be baptized into the name of Jehovah.”

In becoming thus enlightened and obedient they became “the servants of God,” purchased from Satan at the price of blood sold to him for thirty pieces of silver. By right of purchase, God calls upon all the purchased in Satan’s household to leave his service, and come over to him. “The Lord knoweth them that are his.” This is the seal of his foundation—2 Tim. 2:19; and he sent out his trumpeters to make proclamation, and to invite his own to present heirship of the kingdom and eternal glory, for which he has purchased them of the enemy—1 Thess. 2:12; 2 Epist. 1:5; James 2:5. “He that receiveth the testimony of Jesus hath set to his seal that God is true”—Jno. 3:33. He endorses understandingly all that God hath done. He rejoices in the purchase, or redemption, refuses any longer to serve sin, and sings, “Unto him that loved us, and redeemed us to God by his blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and washed us therein from our sins, and hath made us kings and priests for God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for the Aions of the Aions”—Apoc. 1:5, 6; 5:9.

These immersed believers of the exceeding great and precious promises covenanted to the fathers, and confirmed in Jesus, the Minister of the Circumcision (Rom. 15:8) by obeying the form of teaching were brought into a patient waiting for what they believed in and hoped for. In writing to some of them at Corinth, Paul says, that they came behind in no gift, “waiting for the coming of the Lord, the Anointed Jesus”—1 Cor. 1:7. Thus it reads in the English Version; but in the original “the coming” is expressed by την αποκαλυψιν, THE APOCALYPSE. They waited for the Apocalypse of Jehovah, the Anointed Jesus. For the information of the mere English reader we may remark that apocalupsis is derived from a verb which signifies “to uncover, bring to light what was hidden.” The noun, therefore, signifies a disclosure, a revelation. The subject of the disclosure may be ideas, persons, or events. In the sense of new ideas being put into the mind with enlightening effect, apokalupsis is used in Luke 2:32, where Simeon, speaking by the Holy Spirit of the future of the child Jesus he then held in his arms, styled him “A light for an apocalypse of nations, and a glory of Jehovah’s people Israel.” In this text, it clearly signifies illumination. That is, that at some period of the history of the nations, Jesus would be, at one and the same time, a light and a glory to them and Israel. Moses says by the Spirit הרנינו גוים עבוד harninu, goyim, ammo, “Rejoice, ye nations, his people;” but Paul, quoting from the Septuagint, says “with his people.” Either way answers to the truth; for when the nations are caused to rejoice, they will have previously become Jehovah’s people (Zech. 2:11) and will also rejoice with Israel and the Saints. Now, when this shall be the order of the day, the nations will have been apocalypted by him who will be “the glory of Israel.” He will be a light in Zion in the midst of the nations, confounding the moon, and putting the sun of the former heavens to shame.

, harninu, goyim, ammo, “Rejoice, ye nations, his people;” but Paul, quoting from the Septuagint, says “with his people.” Either way answers to the truth; for when the nations are caused to rejoice, they will have previously become Jehovah’s people (Zech. 2:11) and will also rejoice with Israel and the Saints. Now, when this shall be the order of the day, the nations will have been apocalypted by him who will be “the glory of Israel.” He will be a light in Zion in the midst of the nations, confounding the moon, and putting the sun of the former heavens to shame.

He will be “a light for an apocalypse of nations.” The nature of this apocalypse may be discerned from a few testimonies of the prophets “In Zion,” says Isaiah, “shall Jehovah of armies make unto all people a feast. And in this mountain he will destroy the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and Jehovah Elohim will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for Jehovah hath spoken it”—25:6. The veil or covering the prophet speaks of here, is that “strong delusion” to which Paul alludes in 2 Thes. 2:11, where he predicted the present moral condition of the nations under the Man of Sin, or Satan of the Apocalypse, 12; 20. The nations of “Christendom” are all under the veil. God sent the truth among them; but Paul says, “they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause,” he continues, “God shall send them STRONG DELUSION, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be condemned who believe not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness.” Here is their sin and punishment. They corrupted the truth, and the corruption waxed strong in them; and deluded them into the belief of A LIE, or system of falsehood. By this the nations of “Christendom” are overspread as by a covering No nation is exempt from the delusion. The most enlightened believe “the Lie” in common with the least. Greekism, Romanism, and Protestantism, in all their “NAMES AND DENOMINATIONS,” are elements of the Strong Delusion. They all pretend to be Christianity; while in reality they are only abominable, and badly executed counterfeits.

Delusion and delirium have a near and intimate relationship; and the stronger the delusion the more intense the delirium. In the Apocalypse, therefore, when the “strong delusion,” in its effects upon the nations of “Christendom,” comes to be “signified” or represented, they are described as having been “made drunk,” and as being drunk. “The inhabitants of the earth,” said the Angel to John, “have been made drunk with the wine of the Great Harlot’s fornication”—Apoc. 17:2; 18:3. The last text declares that “all nations” are intoxicated. The drunkenness is, therefore, not restricted to the Greek and Latin communions; but comprehends all Protestant nations as well. They are all deceived by Satan, by whose energy, and deceivableness of unrighteousness, the soul-merchants of the earth have been able to establish themselves as the spiritual guides of the people. Blind, intensely blind and intoxicated, they are leading the blind and reeling multitudes into an unfathomable abyss; and they themselves are rapidly approaching that universal bankruptcy, when their commerce in souls will be extinguished, “and no man will buy their merchandise any more.” The days of the schools, colleges, seminaries, and ecclesiastical establishments of the nations are numbered; and the end of their theological craft decreed. They are weighed in the balances and found wanting—wanting in the knowledge of “the truth as it is in Jesus.” Though they boast of the light and glory of our century; and are upon such admirable terms with themselves as the people of the Lord, basking in the sunshine of his favor and delight; the Scriptures denounce their pretensions, and resolve them into the grossest darkness, sensuality, and wickedness. And this is unquestionably true. No other conclusion can be come to in view of what the Spirit saith. Speaking by Isaiah he declares that if any one do not speak according to Moses and the Prophets he is a dark body—ch. 8:20. “There is no light in him.” Now it is notorious, that the professors of the theological institutions of all sects, and the clerical, or ministerial, orders of all denominations, are grossly ignorant of the Old Testament writings. In presuming, therefore, to preach from, or to explain the New, it is utterly impossible for them to speak according to Moses and the Prophets. A man cannot speak in accordance with what he knows little or nothing about. The testimony, therefore, convicts them of utter incompetency. It declares them to be utterly without light: which is equivalent to saying that they are in gross darkness. And, this being the condition of the ecclesiastics, how awfully dark must the people they call the “laity” be! “Like priest, like people,”—darkness added to darkness until it becomes Egyptian, or darkness to be felt.

If the nations were enlightened the Apocalypse of the Anointed Jesus would be unnecessary. He comes because of the darkness of the world. He comes as a light, as the Day Star, to illuminate the nations. He does not come because they are enlightened. If his coming be postponed to this, he never will come; for instead of a knowledge of the truth increasing among them, the darkness is intensifying day by day.

Now that the Lord comes while darkness reigns, is manifest from the following testimony:—Isaiah informs us, that “the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob;” and that then she shall “arise and shine; because her Light is come, and the glory of Jehovah is risen upon her.” He then tells us the reason why Jehovah, or the Anointed One, comes to shine upon her; and the following is the reason: “Because darkness shall cover the earth and gross darkness the people.” This is the mental, or intellectual and moral, condition of clergy and people, Gentiles and Jews, at the epoch when Christ comes as “A Light for their apocalypse.”

Such is, and such will continue to be, the spiritual condition of the world until then. But when they have been apocalypted, or illuminated, the change will be glorious. “The earth” will then “be full of the knowledge of Jehovah as the waters cover the sea,” even as God had sworn to Moses—Numb. 14:21; Isaiah 11:9; Hab. 2:14. Then “Many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain (or kingdom) of Jehovah, and to the house of the Elohim of Jacob: and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem. And he shall rule among the nations, and he shall punish many peoples; and” in consequence of that rebuke, “they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.” Having spoken peace to the nations, and being established in his glory, the day of Jehovah’s exaltation will have been apocalypted, or revealed—that day in which, it is testified, “Jehovah alone shall be exalted”—Isaiah 2:10, 11, 16, 17. “At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of Jehovah; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to THE NAME OF JEHOVAH, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart”—Jer. 3:17. This is a very plain testimony. Jerusalem is to become the throne of a government which is to have universal dominion; and that when it exists, the nations will have abandoned the strong delusion, or “imagination,” by which they are now deceived. The occupation of the “Reverend Divines” of “Christendom” will then be gone. All names and denominations of blasphemy ending in ism will then be abolished; and they will be all as clean swept away as was the old world by the flood. What a glorious riddance for the world! The “seducing spirits,” “the demons,” “the captivators of silly women laden with sins,” the “transformed ministers of Satan,” teachers heaped up to themselves after their own lusts to tickle their itching ears: men of corrupt minds, who speak lies in hypocrisy; unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness—these, with all their old wives’ fables and traditions, will all have been precipitated as Satan, with lightning volocity from the heavens, into the promiscuous confusion of the bottomless abyss. No clergyman will then venture to lift up his voice to sermonize the people; for “It shall come to pass that when any shall yet prophesy (or preach), then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou speakest lies in the name of Jehovah; and they shall thrust him through when he prophesieth. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets (or preachers) shall be ashamed every one of his vision when he hath prophesied; neither shall they wear hair garments to deceive”—Zech. 13:3, 4. If the ecclesiastics were to be dealt with upon this principle at the present time, not a soul of them would escape death upon the spot; for it is their craft to “speak lies in the name of Jehovah,” and to wear peculiar garments for professional deceit. The world that now fawns upon and flatters their vanity, and glorifies their foolishness, will then curse their memorial. In that day of affliction to the Apostasy, it is testified, that “the Gentiles shall come unto Jehovah from the ends of the earth, and shall say: Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit”—Jer. 16:19. This is what they will say of Episcopalianism, Presbyterianism, Lutheranism, Methodism, Congregationalism, Universalism, Mormonism, Millerism, Campbellism, Romanism, Greekism, &c., &c., &c.—all false, vain, and unprofitable. This is their true character; for they make up the ecclesiasticism of the nations; and how is it possible for drunken nations, overspread with strong delusion as a thick veil, to hew out for themselves cisterns capable of holding water from the fountain of life?

3. The New Testament Use of the Word Apocalypse

The word apokalupsis is used eighteen times in the New Testament. The first place where it occurs is that we have just been considering; the last is in Rev. 1:1; as the Apocalypse of Jesus Christ which the Deity committed to him to show to his servants things which must come to pass speedily”. Here the apocalypse is an exhibition of things to be transacted subsequently to the communication of it; and when we look into it we find its signs, scenes, and so forth, all tending to, or terminating in, the personal manifestation of Jesus Christ before the nations, the overthrow of their dominions, and the victory of his Brethren, the Saints, over the grave, and over the Satanism of “Christendom” in Church and State in whatever form they may be found. Hence the Apocalypse exhibits what the testimonies already adduced predict without a symbol, God has determined shall come to pass in the Anointed Jesus shining as “a Light for an apocalypse of nations.”

The apostle Paul uses the noun apokalupsis thirteen times in his writings; and the verb apocalupto also thirteen. In Rom. 2:5, he uses it in relation to a manifestation of judgment, “in a day of wrath and apocalypse of God’s righteous judgment.” This is a day yet future; because in it, Paul says, the glory, honor, incorruptibility, and life of the Aion will be rendered to the righteous; and indignation and wrath to “those who obey not the truth.” It is “a Day of Wrath and Apocalypse”: hence, whatever constitutes the apocalypse, is to be looked for in “a time of trouble,” as Daniel terms it; or “a day of affliction,” in the words of Jeremiah. They may cry “Peace and Safety;” but there will be neither in the Day of Apocalypse; but rather “sudden destruction as travail upon a woman with child”—1 Thess. 5:3.

In Rom. 8:19, he uses the noun in reference to the disclosure of the Sons of God to the view of the nations, from which they are at present concealed. The Sons of God are to be apocalypsed, and glory is to be apocalypsed in them, as well as Jesus, their Elder Brother. "I reckon," says Paul, "that the sufferings of the present time are not comparable with the future glory to be apocalypsed in us. For the earnest hope of the creature is looking for the Apocalypse of the Sons of God." In the English version this is rendered by "the manifestation of the sons of God." The meaning is this: Mankind are divided by Scripture into Two Classes—the Serpent and his seed; and the Woman and her seed—Gen. 3:15. As early as the times before the flood, the former were styled simply "men;" the latter, "the sons of God"—Gen. 6:12. By the flood, "men" were swept from the earth which they had filled with violence; and their apostasy was extinguished with them: that is, "the earth was corrupt; FOR all flesh had corrupted GOD'S WAY upon the earth"—Gen. 6:11, 12. They had set up a corrupted way of worshipping God, which constituted an apostasy, or departure from the Original Way instituted in Eden. This did not suit their evil nature; therefore they altered it to please; and under its inspiration filled the habitable with their abominations. Only one small family protested against this apostasy; a family of eight persons, all that were left on earth of the Sons of God among the living. These were saved by the earth's baptism; while the apostasy, in all its ecclesiastical, civil, and social relations, was torn up by the roots, and swept away.

Sons of God is a title conferred upon certain descendants of Adam, which places them in the same class of intelligences as the Angels. These are also styled "Sons of God" and Stars of the Dawn," or "Morning Stars"—Job 28:7. We do not mean to say that the Sons of God, called in Scripture angels, or messengers, and Gods, are now mortal and corruptible, and weak of mind and body as we are; they have passed through this state, and now occupy a state beyond it, in which they are incorruptible, immortal, glorious, powerful, wise, and of spirit-corporeality. In their former state they were Sons of God subject to evil as we; in their present, they are sons subject only to good. Men are invited to the same destiny. They are invited now to enter Jehovah's family, and to become his sons and daughters, with the promise of hereafter being promoted to a physical equality with the angels. Thus it is written, in 2 Cor. 6:17, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith Jehovah, and touch not the unclean; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my Sons and Daughters, saith Jehovah Ail-Shaddai."

But he not only gives men invitation to become his children, but he gives them power also. Thus the Jehovah-Spirit came to his own land (ta idia) but his own people (hoi idioi) the Jews, received him not. Nevertheless, as many as received him, to them gave he power to become children of God, to them believing into his name, who are born not of bloods, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God"—Jno. 1:11–13. Here the fleshly principle is repudiated. "The flesh profits nothing." No man is a Son of God, because he is descended from "Adam Son of God"—Luke 3:38; but Adam's sons become Sons of God by adoption through His Name. They must believe the promises covenanted; believe in Jesus, as the Jehovah-Spirit manifested in flesh, made a sin-offering, justified in spirit, for the justification of believers; and be immersed into the Name, that they may be the subject of the repentance and the remission of sins which are offered in that name; and communicable only to such in putting on the name according to divine prescription. The power of becoming a son of God consists in obeying the form of teaching apostolically delivered. In putting on Christ the Son of God by eminence, a man becomes a son of God. Addressing the sons of God in Galatia, Paul says: "In Jesus anointed ye are all sons of God through the faith: for as many of you as were immersed into the Anointed have put on the Anointed. And if ye be the Anointed's, then ye are the seed of Abraham, and Heirs according to the promise"—ch. 3:26–29. When a son of Adam is thus adopted into Abraham's family, he is a son of Abraham because he is in Jesus who was his descendant according to the flesh. He is in God the Father,—and in the Son, by constitution; and Christ dwells in him by faith that works by love, and purifies the heart”—Eph. 3:17; 1 Thess. 1:1. This step being assured, what follows is of course. “If children,” says Paul, “then heirs, HEIRS OF GOD, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may also be GLORIFIED TOGETHER.”

This contemporary glorification of Jesus and his brethren of the Abrahamic Family is the subject matter of their apocalypse; and points to their development as sons of God. This occurs “in the resurrection,” an Aion-period in which the sons of God obtain their new nature, or materiality. Mentally, that is, as to mind, disposition, and character, or as we might say, spiritually, and constitutionally, they are sons of God; but as to the flesh, they are, on this side the resurrection, still the children of Adam. They are flesh and blood, but they do not walk after, or according to, its impulses; living a life of self denial, being led by the spirit, in being led by the truth understood, believed, and affectionately obeyed, as it is written: “As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.” But, to be sons of God in the full import of the title, they must put off the Old Adam, in respect to body as well as to conduct and intelligence. They must become sons of God bodily as well as spiritually. They are waiting for this namely, “for the adoption, the redemption of their body.” Jesus referred to this in his argument with the Sadducees, saying: “They who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that Aion, and the resurrection which is from among the dead, cannot die any more; for they are equal to angels, and are sons of God, being sons of the resurrection”—Luke 20:35, 36.

Now hear what John says upon this subject in 1 Epis. 3:1, 2. “Behold,” says he, “what great love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be styled sons of God! Because the world does not know him, therefore it does not know us. Beloved, we are now sons of God, though it doth not yet appear what we shall be: nevertheless we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every one having this hope in him purifies himself as he is pure.”

From this testimony, then, it is clear, that the Sons of God are not yet apocalypsed, or manifested. Therefore, the world does not know them, though, if it have an opinion in the matter, and were invited to point them out, it would certainly judge, that if God had any sons among men, they were those whom it recognizes as the “Ambassadors of Jesus Christ,” and the “successors of the Apostles,” together with the pious of their flocks. By the world, we mean what is called, or what rather is self-styled, “the Religious World,” made up of all members and supporters of the ecclesiasticism of what they call “Christendom.” But this world knows not the Father, how therefore can it know the sons. Neither can it know them before their apocalypse; for the testimonies by which they are defined they will not trouble themselves to understand. No man is led by the Spirit of God who is not led by an intelligent belief of the truth. This truth the world and its soul-merchants do not know. They are therefore not led by it; and are consequently according to Paul, not the Sons of God. “They are of the world; therefore speak they of the world; and the world heareth them.” By this rule it is easy to perceive that the world’s judgment is wrong. They whom the world hears are not of God. He never sent them, nor were they ever adopted into his Abrahamic Family. If they were God’s sons the world would not listen to them; but would hate and persecute them. They profess to admit that the apostles were of God; but they pay no regard to what they teach. Their whole ministry is spent in falsifying and destroying their doctrine. “Be mindful,” says Peter, “of the words which were spoken before by the Holy Prophets, and of the commandments of us the Apostles of the Lord and Saviour”—2 Pet. 3:2. But Peter may as well speak to a post as to the ecclesiastics of the world. They only care for him and his words so far as they can turn them into cash, or make them available for the preservation of vested interests. They have long ceased to hear both prophets and apostles, as any one may know who will take the trouble to compare their traditions and practices with the commandments and testimonies of God. “He that knoweth God heareth us,” says John; “he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the Spirit of the Truth, and the Spirit of the Delusion.”

After so plain a declaration as the foregoing, is it possible to admit that the Religious World and its rulers are of God; and worship him in spirit and in truth? That the Spirit of the Truth is formative of their systems? Or that its worshippers are his sons? Nay, verily, its formative spirit is that of Antichrist, which is discerned in their “love of the world, and of the things which are in the world;” a love, which is earnestly deprecated by the apostles of Christ. “If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him;” but are not the people’s spiritual guides devoted to the world? Are they not the world’s hired servants? Are they not them whom the world delights to honor? Are not their flocks perfect incarnations of “all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life?” All of which the apostle testifies “is not of the Father, but is of the world”—1 Jno. 2:15, 16. The affirmative to these inquiries is alone admissible; and the apostolic principles clearly determine that the ecclesiastical system, in its totality of names, denominations, churches, reverend orders, institutions, and worshippers, is of the Devil, and not of God. We therefore verily believe, that when the reality of things is vindicated in the apocalypse of the Sons of God; when his glory shall be apocalypsed in them; and when the Captain of their salvation as “a Light for an apocalypse of nations,” shall appear—we believe that when this shall come to pass, He will say to the flocks and shepherds of the religious world, as he said to the same class in Judea, “Ye are of your father the Devil, and the lusts of your father ye will to do. He was a manslayer from the beginning, and stood not in the truth, because truth is not in him. When he speaks a lie, he speaks of his own things; for he is a liar and the father of it.” “He that is of God heareth God’s words; but because ye are not of God, therefore ye hear them not.” If we are to judge a tree by its fruits, what other conclusion is it possible to come to? The pious of the world are adepts in all the lusts of the flesh; they do not stand in the truth, which is an offence to them; when they speak, they lie against the truth, and speak of their own conceits; they do not hear, or believe and obey, the words of God; and therefore the conclusion is inevitable that they are not of God; and therefore of necessity of the Devil.

This is also manifest from another consideration. If the ecclesiasticism of Christendom were the worship of God in spirit and in truth, the poor in this world, rich in faith, would be the notables, revered and beloved by the rich; who would rejoice in emptying themselves of their glory and honor, that they might be exalted in due time. But the reverse of this is the fact. Mammon reigns in Church as well as State; and the members of the one are the ambitious and brawling politicians of the other. All this is of the flesh, or Sin Incarnate, which is the Devil. Now the mission of Jesus is to destroy the Devil, and the works of the Devil—Heb. 2:14; 1 Jno. 3:8: and we have already seen, that the Gentiles are to come to him after his apocalypse, and to confess that what they now cherish is only lies, vanity, and unprofitable. They will then acknowledge that their denominations are works of the Devil; and as such they will rejoice in their abolition, and glorify their destroyer. The whole system now existing is a monster iniquity, which only awaits the “apocalypse of the Sons of God” for its disruption, and utter annihilation. Another place in Paul’s writings where he uses this noun in a notable manner is in 2 Thes. 1:7. He there tells his persecuted brethren that God will recompense to them “a rest with us (Paul, Sylvanus, and Timothy) in the apocalypse of the Lord Jesus from heaven, with angels of his power, in fire of flame, inflicting vengeance on those who know not God, and who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Anointed; who shall suffer punishment, Aion-destruction, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his might, when he shall come to be glorified with his Saints, and to be admired with all the believers in that day.”

In the next chapter, ver. 8, he informs the reader that a certain power would exist, contemporary with the apocalypse of that day, which should be wasted and destroyed. He styled it THE LAWLESS ONE, “whom,” says he, “the Lord shall consume by the spirit of his mouth, and destroy by the manifestation of his presence.”

In writing to the faithful, Peter also directs their attention to “the Apocalypse of Jesus Christ” as the time when their faith should be “found unto praise and honor and glory.” He exhorts them to “hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought in the apocalypse of Jesus Christ,” and in a third place of the same epistle he says, “Rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ’s sufferings; that in the apocalypse of his glory, ye may be glad also, leaping for joy”—1 Pet. 1:7, 1; 4:13.

It must be evident, then, to all who have examined the testimonies adduced, that apocalypse, in the New Testament use of the word, is not used indefinitely or vaguely, importing merely a disclosure or uncovering of ideas previously concealed: but that it has a special and appropriated signification—a doctrinal meaning peculiar to itself: teaching,

1. The introduction of A DAY, styled the Day of Apocalypse;
2. The manifestation in that day of A LIGHT for the Apocalypse of Nations;
3. The inflicting of vengeance and punishment on the lawless and disobedient in that day;
4. The personal appearance of Jesus Christ, as the Light of the Day of Wrath and Apocalypse;
5. The manifestations of the Sons of God by resurrection from among the dead, and glorification with Jesus Christ—the Apocalypse of Salvation in the last time.

For the things indicated in these points, the believers who received their enlightenment through the personal labors of the apostles, waited and earnestly longed; as they have also, who in succeeding ages and generations have been instructed in the truth by their writings in connexion with those of Moses and the Prophets. With believers of this class the question uppermost in their minds has ever been, “O Lord, how long? How long, O Elohim, shall the adversary reproach? Shall the enemy despise thy name for ever?” “How long, O Jehovah; wilt thou hide thyself for ever?” “Return, O Jehovah, how long? How long are thy servants to wait for thy return?” “How long, O Jehovah, how long shall the wicked exult?”—Psal. 74:10; 89:46; 90:13; 94:3.

Isaiah had a vision of the Adon, the I SHALL BE of armies, sitting upon his throne, at a time when the whole earth shall be full of his glory. “Mine eyes,” says he, “have seen the King, the Jehovah of armies!” At the same time he heard a declaration announcing a punishment to be inflicted upon the tribes of Israel, because they would not understand and perceive the truth in the day of the King’s visitation. Fatness of heart, heaviness of ears, and blindness were to come upon them, as at this day. So long as it continued, the earth’s fulness of glory would be deferred. The prophet was greatly afflicted at this, and exclaimed, “Woe is me! For I am cut off; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips.” Then, said I, Adon, how long?—Chap. 6.

Over 200 years afterwards the same inquiry was made in the hearing of Daniel, and in effect by Daniel himself. The long night of Israel’s darkness foreseen by Isaiah to come upon them after the rejection of Jehovah’s Messenger, who was to go and say to them, “Ye hear in hearing, but do not understand; and ye see in seeing, but do not perceive”—Mat. 13:13—is characterized in Daniel by the absence of sacrifice, the desolation of the land, and the dispersion and oppression of the nation—ch. 8:11–13, 24; 9:26, 27; 12:7. It had been revealed to Daniel, that a powerful and indestructible kingdom should be set up by the God of heaven, which should consume and destroy every thing that stood up against it; that the Son of man and the Saints should possess it, with dominion over the whole earth; and that then power should be restored to the Hebrew nation, which should never again be broken: but before all this could begin to come to pass, he saw a long period of affliction would obtain. It was therefore desired to know when it should terminate; as terminate it must before the glory can be apocalypsed or revealed. “How long,” then it was asked, “shall the Little Horn of the Goat practise and prosper against the Holy Land and the Host of Israel?” for this is in effect the question of the thirteenth verse. How long till the arrival of the period when the Holy shall be avenged—nitzdaik kodesh?

The answer to this question only bringing the inquirer to the period in which the vengeance is to be developed, it was still desired to know further “How long to the end of the wonders” to be developed in “the time of the end?” The answer was by the specification of a period, and an event. “For a time, times, and a half.” This is the duration of the period, constituting the latter portion of what Jesus Christ terms “the Times of the Gentiles,” during which Jerusalem and the Saints were to be trodden under foot—Luke 21:24: and symbolized in the Apocalypse by “the Court which is without the Temple, given to the Gentiles for forty and two months”—ch. 11:2. The event that marks the end of the period is THE RESTORATION OF ISRAEL, which is thus expressed, “When he (Michael the Great Prince that liveth for the Aion) shall have finished the scattering of the power of the Holy People, all these times shall be finished.”

But still the question admitted of repetition. True, in the time of the end, and at that crisis of it, when the King of the North, as the Imperial Horn of the Grecian Goat, shall be broken with an end of power, by Michael in standing up to deliver Israel, “the time, times, and a half” shall conclude: but then, “How long,” said Daniel, “to the end of these?” They shall end at the delivering of Israel; but how many years from Daniel’s time shall it be to that redemption?

The rejoinder which Daniel received to the question, “How long to the end of these?” is remarkable. He was not informed how long. He was told instead to “go:” and the reason given for telling him to depart in ignorance of the end of the times, was that “the words were sealed up and closed till the time of the end.” The words of a book sealed up and closed could not be read. Daniel declares that he did not understand. He did not understand the times of the winding up of the visions he had seen. He did not understand when the Stone would smite Nebuchadnezzar’s Image; nor when the Saints would break the power of the Little Horn, and take the dominion under the whole heaven; he did not understand when, or in what year of the world’s age, Michael should deliver Israel, and raise the dead. “I heard,” says he, “but I understood not:” the answer to the question, “How long?” was still deferred. Daniel, however, did not depart in despair. He was told that the Daily Sacrifice should be taken away to make room for a desolating abomination, or power, which should prosper for 1290 years; and that 45 years after that period should close, “many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth should awake to the life of the Olahm or Aion;” and that then he should arise to his inheritance.

The Apocalypse revives this ancient question in ch. 6:10. In this place, those in Christ slain for the word of God, and for the testimony they held, being many, are represented as crying with a loud voice, saying, “How long, O Despot, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell upon the earth?” In answer to this appeal, they were told that they must rest yet a little while,” and in the eighteenth chapter we find the little while, in its allegorical allusion, fulfilled in the avenging of the Saints upon the Apostasy in the judgment of the Great Harlot by whom all the nations have been intoxicated and deceived.

From what has been hitherto presented, we presume that the reader will have discerned that the great question generated in the minds of those who believed the gospel preached by the apostles, was, “What are the times and the seasons; and what the signs indicative of the appearing of Jesus Christ in his kingdom and glory?” The Apocalypse, we would remark, was communicated for the purpose of imparting information to the servants of God in relation to the times, seasons, and signs, which till then were reserved with the Father. Being herein revealed, they are expected to study it, that they may be able to discern the signs of the times as they arrive, that when the great crisis comes, they may not be taken by surprise. To assist them in this is the object of this volume, which we commend to their Scriptural and critical examination as we proceed.

4. When the Apocalypse was written.

CONCERNING the time when the Apocalypse was written there have been various opinions among the learned. Irenaeus, who flourished ecclesiastically A.D. 169, that is, about seventy years after the death of the apostle John, is said to have introduced an opinion that the Apocalypse was written in the reign of the Roman emperor Domitian, brother to Titus who destroyed Jerusalem, and who occupied the throne of the Caesars from A.D. 80 to A.D. 96, when he was assassinated. John being the only apostle living at the time Irenaeus supposes it to have been written, of course makes the Apocalypse the last of the sacred writings. Sir Isaac Newton does not fall in with Irenaeus' opinion. He says that he might perhaps have heard from Polycarp, who, in ecclesiastical style is called "his master," that he had received the Apocalypse from John, with whom it is said he was personally acquainted, about the time of Domitian's death: or that "John might himself at that time have made a new publication of it, from whence Irenaeus might imagine it was then newly written." But as John had no copyright in the Apocalypse, this supposition is not to be entertained. When he received it, he sent it to the Seven Ecclesias of Asia Minor, which would multiply copies to the fullest extent without any further cooperation of the apostle in the publication. Eusebius in his Chronicle and Ecclesiastical History adopts the opinion of Irenaeus. This may strengthen it. Not that Eusebius is any personal authority in the matter, having lived remoter from John's day than Irenaeus, (he "flourished" in the latter part of the third, and beginning of the fourth centuries,) but, being a historian of his own and preceding times, he would, it is presumable, adopt the opinion most generally received among the Christians of his own day. But he is thought to have invalidated the truth of it by conjoining the banishment of John into Patmos with the deaths of Peter and Paul, in his Evangelical Demonstrations. Paul is said to have been beheaded at Rome A.D. 65; others say A.D. 67. From his own writings, we may conclude that he was alive on the eve of the destruction of Jerusalem; but there is no indisputable evidence in them that he was really contemporary with that calamity and succeeding times. Speaking of the approaching abolition of the Mosaic constitution of things; the casting down of the host of heaven, of the stars, and of the truth to the ground; and the suppression of the daily sacrifice by the Little Horn of the Goat; he says in Heb. 8:13, that having been made out of date, or antiquated, by the confirmation of the New Covenant promised in Jeremiah, it was eggus aphanismou, nigh of vanishing away. He was therefore living nigh the time of the great destruction, when he wrote the letter to the Hebrews. But from 1 Thess. 2:16, we may conclude that he lived so nigh to it as to witness its beginning, and perhaps its end. In writing to the faithful in Thessalonica, he says concerning the Jews, "who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and chased us out (ekdioxanton from dioken to pursue, or chase, and ek out of, or from) and please not God, and are hostile to all men, forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they may be saved, to the filling up of their sins continually:" he says of them, "But the wrath came (aoristically) upon them to the end," ephthase eis telos. If this be accepted as the true rendering, it would indicate that the Jewish State had been destroyed; and that Paul was living after the destruction, contrary to the traditions of ecclesiastical writers. But if the aorist is taken indefinitely, it may be read "comes upon." The Jews had chased the surviving apostles out of Judea, by which they escaped the terrible calamities that were about to fall upon Jerusalem, where they generally resided—Acts 8:1. John and Paul were no more to be found in Judea; and Peter writes from Babylon 1 Pet. 5:13; but died before the siege. How long Paul may have lived after THE END, there is no reliable testimony to determine. Eusebius says that John was sent to Patmos at the time of Peter and Paul's death. It may have been so; and John may have been an exile in Patmos for many years after being sent thither. There is no evidence to show how long he was an exile; or in what year of his sojourn in Patmos the Apocalypse was "indicated by sign" to him. Tradition says he was there in the reign of Domitian; and his own testimony, that while there, he saw and heard in vision what is related.

Tertullian, who is contemporary with Irenaeus, and Pseudo-Prochorus, say that John was banished by Nero to Patmos. Arethas, in the beginning of his commentary, quotes the opinion of Irenaeus from Eusebius, but does not follow it; but afterwards affirms that the Apocalypse was written before the destruction of Jerusalem; and that former commentators had expounded the Sixth Seal of that destruction! Upon this we may remark, that he who would make such an exposition can have no opinion worthy of any regard.

The tradition of the Syrian Christians preserved in the title of the Syriac Version, is thought to agree with the opinion that the Apocalypse was written before the destruction of Jerusalem. The title is this. "The Revelation which was made to John the Evangelist by God in the island Patmos, into which he was banished by Nero the Caesar." Nero reigned before the fall of the city. He succeeded to Claudius in A.D. 54, or A.C. 57, which are equivalent; and continued to A.D. 68, or A.C. 71, a reign of 14 years, The temple was demolished A.D. 71, or A.C. 74. The Syriac title only testifies to the banishment of John; the Apocalypse may not have been written for several years after.

It may be objected in relation to the text in Thessalonians, that a different rendering may be put upon it without constraint, which would leave it undetermined whether Paul lived after the destruction or not. The words may be translated, "The wrath has come upon them for an end;" or came upon them to, or unto, an end. The verb efthase is the first aorist, and may be rendered by the past or by the indefinite present, which partakes both of the now and the hereafter. "The wrath cometh upon them to an end," predicted by the prophets, Jesus in Matt. 24:14, and the apostles. But as they were "hostile to all men," it is likely that the wrath was outpouring, and that the Jews and Romans were in actual war; and that "the ending" so often proclaimed in their discourses, was witnessed by some of the apostles. There is a little presumptive evidence in the Apocalypse itself that it was written after the death of perhaps all the apostles except John. The apostles, who were also prophets and saints, are invited to rejoice over the subversion of Rome and its institutions and dominion, in the judgment; because in her their blood was found. That is, Rome had put to death apostles and prophets, as well as Jerusalem, which was destroyed for the same offence. There would have been something incongruous in the view of John's contemporaries who received the Apocalypse, to have read in ch. 18:20, 24, a charge of murdering apostles, if all the apostles slain had been put to death by the Jewish Power which the Romans were employed to destroy.

But some commentators are tenacious of the opinion that the Apocalypse was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, because, as it would seem, they desire to dispose of its difficulties more summarily than can be effected upon a contrary supposition. If it were not written till after Jerusalem was destroyed, what is to be done with the sealing of the thousands of Israel, in the seventh chapter; with the predicted treading of the Holy City under foot of the Gentiles, of the eleventh chapter; with that temple and altar mentioned in the first verse of the same? It is found most convenient to cast all these things into the fiery furnace of that destruction, and so to consume them out of the way. But it really matters not whether it be assumed to be written before, or after that event. The interpretation is in no way affected. The destruction of Jerusalem with its times and circumstances cannot be accommodated so as to interpret what is written in the Apocalypse about a "holy city," a "temple" and "altar," a "court," a "Jerusalem," and so forth. These are symbols, and represent something else than what the words stand for in common, or historical discourse.

The result of Sir Isaac Newton's investigation in relation to the time when the Apocalypse was written may not be unacceptable to the reader; we shall quote it, therefore, from his Observations. "Seeing that Peter and John," says he, "were apostles of the circumcision, it seems to me that they stayed with their churches in Judea and Syria till the Romans made war upon their nation, that is, till the twelfth year of Nero; that they then followed the main body of their flying churches into Asia, and that Peter went thence by Corinth to Rome; that the Roman empire looked upon those churches as enemies, because Jews by birth; and therefore, to prevent insurrections, secured their leaders, and banished John into Patmos. It seems also probable to me that the Apocalypse was there composed, and that soon after the Epistle to the Hebrews, and those of Peter, were written to these churches, with reference to this prophecy as what they were particularly concerned in. For it appears by these epistles that they were written in times of general affliction and tribulation under the heathens, and by consequence when the Empire made war upon the Jews; for till then the heathens were at peace with the Christian Jews, as well as with the rest. The Epistle to the Hebrews, since it mentions Timothy as related to those Hebrews, must have been written to them after their flight into Asia, where Timothy was a bishop; and by consequence after the war began, the Hebrews in Judea being strangers to Timothy. Peter seems also to call Rome, Babylon, as well with respect to the war made upon Judea, and the approaching captivity, like that under old Babylon, as with respect to that name in the Apocalypse; and in writing to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, he seems to intimate that they were the strangers newly scattered by the Roman wars; for those were the only strangers there belonging to his care.”

He thinks that this account of things agrees best with history duly rectified. We do not think, however, that a rectification is possible. The Ecclesiastical Writers of the period succeeding the times of the New Testament, are not reliable. They all belonged to that class of men who set up for successors of the apostles with clerical authority; and where facts were wanting, did not hesitate to substitute conjecture. For our own part, we rely upon nothing ecclesiastical outside the Old and New Testaments. What they testify we believe; but whereon they are silent, we have no faith. Peter may refer to Rome in using Babylon; but there is no evidence that he certainly does. If by Babylon he do indeed mean Rome, it favors the supposition that the Apocalypse was written before his decease; because this is the only Scripture extant in which Rome is certainly comprehended in the name. Chrysostom’s testimony somewhat confirms my view of the passage in Thessalonians. He says “that the apostles continued long in Judea, and that then, being driven out by the Jews, they went to the Gentiles. This dispersion was in the first year of the Jewish war, when the Jews, as Josephus tells us, began to be tumultuous and violent in all places. For all agree that the apostles were dispersed into several regions at once; and Origen has set down the time, telling us that in the beginning of the Judaic war the apostles and disciples were scattered into all nations.”

In conclusion, then, upon this point, I remark that, though the strongest evidence is for A.D. 96, yet it cannot be said with certainty in what year the Apocalypse was written. Irenaeus says it was written towards the end of Domitian’s reign. It testifies for itself that it was written at some time during John’s sojourn in Patmos; but owing to the unreliable character of the testimony of the post-apostolic writers as it has come down to us through the polluted and corrupting channels of Greek and Latin Orthodoxies, we cannot say when John’s banishment occurred, how many years it continued, whether it began at the death of Peter and Paul, or before it, or during the Judaic war, or after the destruction of Jerusalem, or shortly before the assassination of Domitian. It may have been at any one of these times, and it may not. It would, indeed, satisfy curiosity to know, but that is all. The knowledge of these particular times does not at all affect the interpretation. This is independent of the Anno Domini of John’s exile. It was communicated to him after his removal from Judea from some cause; and subsequently to his going to Patmos on account of the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ, where also he sojourned in tribulation and endurance. This is all he considered necessary for the reader to know, and therefore with this scanty information we shall endeavor to be satisfied.

5. Apocalypse Rooted in the Prophets.

In treating of the causes which operated the rapid progress of the gospel in the first two hundred years of our era, the historian of the “Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire” thus expresses himself with reference to the great subject matter of the Apocalypse. “The ancient and popular doctrine of the Millennium,” says Gibbon, “was intimately connected with the second coming of Christ. As the works of creation had been finished in six days, their duration, in their present state, according to a tradition which was attributed to the prophet Elijah, was fixed to six thousand years. By the same analogy it was inferred that this long period of labor and contention, which was now almost elapsed (as they supposed), would be succeeded by a joyful Sabbath of a thousand years; and that Christ, with the triumphant band of the Saints and the elect who had escaped death, or who had been miraculously revived, would reign upon earth till the time appointed for the last and general resurrection. So pleasing was this hope to the minds of believers, that the New Jerusalem, the seat of this blissful kingdom, was quickly adorned with all the gayest colors of the imagination. A felicity consisting only of pure and spiritual pleasure would have appeared too refined for its inhabitants, who were still supposed to possess their human nature and senses. A garden of Eden with the amusements of pastoral life, was no longer suited to the advanced state of society which prevailed under the Roman Empire. A city was therefore erected, of gold and precious stones, and a supernatural plenty of corn and wine was bestowed on the adjacent territory; in the free enjoyment of whose spontaneous productions, the happy and benevolent people was never to be restrained by any jealous laws of exclusive property. The assurance of such a millennium was carefully inculcated by a succession of fathers, from Justin Martyr and Irenaeus, who conversed with the immediate disciples of the apostles, down to Lactantius, who was preceptor to the son of Constantine. Though it might not be universally received, it appears to have been the reigning sentiment of the orthodox believers; and it seems so well adapted to the desires and apprehensions of mankind, that it must have contributed in a very considerable degree to the progress of the Christian faith. But when the edifice of the church was almost completed, the temporary support was laid aside. The doctrine of Christ’s reign upon earth was at first treated as a profound allegory, was considered by degrees as a doubtful and useless opinion, and was at length rejected as the absurd invention of heresy and fanaticism. A mysterious prophecy (the Apocalypse) which still forms a part of the sacred canon, but which was thought to favor the exploded sentiment, has very narrowly escaped the proscription of THE CHURCH.”

This is the impartial testimony of a man who was well acquainted with the literature of the times contemporary with, and immediately succeeding, those of the apostles; and who conceived that the propagators of Christianity were deceived, and of such low morality that they did not hesitate to invent and promulgate lies to gain their ends. This was doubtless the case with the Babel builders of what Gibbon calls “the church;” but it is a gross calumny when insinuated against those “servants of God” to whom the Apocalypse was “sent.” Gibbon’s testimony, however, is important and useful in this:

1. That it proves that the nearer we approach to the times of the Apostles, the stronger and more universal was the belief of the Apocalyptic teaching concerning the Millennium, and reign of Christ and the Saints upon the earth;
2. That it was well adapted to the desires and apprehensions of mankind;
3. That so long as it continued the reigning sentiment, the faith rapidly progressed;
4. That when the edifice erecting by the Sons of Balaam and Jezebel was almost completed, the doctrine of Christ’s reign began to be abandoned;
5. That when they had completed the Apostasy, the doctrine was repudiated as heresy and fanaticism; and
6. That the Apocalypse itself had a narrow escape of being expelled from the canon of inspiration.

But here we beg leave to remark, that the doctrine of Messiah's reign with the Saints on earth for a long season did not originate with the Apocalypse. It is the burden of all the prophets from Moses to Malachi. Moses teaches that the seed of Abraham shall be a great nation; that that nation with Abraham and his Seed, the prophet like to him, shall possess the Holy Land for ever; that all nations shall be blessed in them; and that then the whole earth shall be full of Jehovah's glory. This is the future state which Moses preached as the gospel to Israel. Nor was the preaching confined to him. The proclamation was amplified in all the prophets. The "Songs of Jehovah" are full of it. Isaiah announced it in glowing terms, and tells us that in vision he saw the King upon his throne, who is to reign in righteousness, on Mount Sion and in Jerusalem gloriously in the presence of his Ancients, or Saints, whose death shall be swallowed up in victory—ch. 6:1–5; 32:1; 24:23; 25:8. Jeremiah testifies to the same effect, telling us that Jehovah will raise up to David a Righteous Branch; that this man shall be King of Israel, reigning and prospering, and executing judgment and justice in the earth; that in his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; that He shall be for the righteousness of the nation; that then Jerusalem shall be called the Throne of Jehovah, that all nations shall be concentrated to it as the throne of empire; and that they shall all be enlightened, and blessed in their king, who shall be called "The God of the Whole Earth"—ch. 3:17; 23:5, 6; 33:5; Isai. 54:5.

The Apocalypse in Ezekiel.

EZEKIEL prophesies that the Dry Tree of Israel, which now bears no fruit, shall be made to flourish in the mountain of the heights of Israel; where it shall shoot forth boughs, and bear fruit; and that under its branching foliage shall dwell all fowl of every wing—ch. 17:22–24. He tells us concerning that epoch, that the kingdom of Israel shall be given to a man of low station whose right it is; that he shall be a Plant of Renown; that he shall be a David; that he shall be Prince, or High Priest of Israel for an Aion; that he shall be immortal; that the Holy Land shall be as the Garden of Eden, or Paradise; that the twelve tribes of Israel shall be a united nation, and form one kingdom in the land; that a magnificent temple shall be built in Jerusalem differing from that of Solomon; that the Dead Sea shall be healed, and become as productive of fish as the Mediterranean; and that from the time of the establishment of these things, the old name of the city shall be abolished—that it shall no longer be Jeru, "they shall see," shalaim, "peace;" but Yahweh-shammah, HE WHO SHALL BE IS THERE—ch. 21:26, 27; 34:29, 23; 37:25, 22; 36:35; 47:8–10; 48:35.

The Apocalypse in Daniel.

DANIEL foretold the establishment of a kingdom which shall be a great military power in its beginning, and of perpetual continuance: that it should conquer all kingdoms extant in the Latter Days; that until then "the Kingdom of Men" would bear rule over all the earth—until seven times, 2520 years, should be completed; which is the age of Nebuchadnezzar's Image from the first year of his reign, B.C. 608. That these two kingdoms, the Kingdom of God and the Kingdom of Men, should be antagonist kingdoms in all their elements and principles; that till the end of a period of 1260 years, the Kingdom of Men should "prevail against the Saints," or Heirs of the Kingdom of God; that it should also destroy the power of the Jews, and rule over Palestine to the end of that period; that when this end should arrive, the power of God should be Apocalypsed, or revealed, in the person of Michael, the Prince of princes, who shall appear to deliver Israel, and awake the dead; that in effecting this deliverance, the thrones, or kingdoms of this world, shall be cast down, and the Kingdom of Men transferred to the Saints, who shall possess it under the whole heaven ad-ahlmah, "during an Aion," or Millennium, we-ad ahlam ahlmayah "even for the Aion of the Aions,” or “a season and a time”—ch. 2:44; 4:15, 16; 8:24; 7:21, 22, 25; 12:1, 2, ; 7:9, 18, 27, 12.

The Apocalypse in Hosea.

HOSEA declares that Judah shall be saved by Jehovah their Elohim; that is, by Messiah; that in the countries where it is now said to them, “Ye are not the people of Jehovah,” there they shall be called, “The sons of the living God.” He says also, that at that time Judah and Israel shall become a united nation, and agree to place themselves under One Chief; that he shall betroth the nation to himself for the Aion; that they shall hear Jezreel; that he shall be a David; and that this shall come to pass in the Latter Days; and that these, the days of their national resurrection, shall be “in the third day” after their being rent, and removed out of his sight. This can only mean during a third period of a thousand years. The present year of Ephraim’s rending and dispersion is 2588, which is synchronical with that of our era 1861—ch. 1:7, 10, 11; 2:19, 22; 3:4, 5; 5:14, 15; 6:2.

The Apocalypse in Joel.

JOEL, though brief, is very explicit, and coincident with the above. After predicting terrible calamities upon Israel and their country by the lions of Assyria, and others, he consoles the nation with the assurance that after the Gentiles had filled up the measure of their abominations, Jehovah will be jealous for his land and will pity his people; and that they shall no more be made a reproach among the nations. He predicted that Jehovah will do great things, at which the children of Zion shall be glad, and that they shall rejoice in Jehovah, their Elohim, or Christ: that he would give them the latter rain of the Spirit, as on Pentecost, of the first month; and the former rain litzdahkah, on account of righteousness, in the seventh month, which is also the first of the civil year. That in this period there shall be restoration, and that henceforth Jehovah’s people shall never be ashamed. He foretold that between the two Spirit-Rain periods, Zion’s Sun should be turned into darkness, and the Moon of her ecclesiastical heavens into blood, before the great and terrible Day of Jehovah should be apocalypsed, or revealed, upon Israel’s enemies; whose destruction shall proceed from Mount Zion and Jerusalem, in which shall be deliverance for the remnant whom Jehovah shall call. He further makes known, that in the days of the Restoration of Judah and Jerusalem, Jehovah will gather all national armies into the valley of Jehoshaphat or Armageddon; and there contend with them in battle for the possession of the Holy Land: that on the eve of this contest a proclamation shall be made among the nations, stirring them up to the war, which in the Apocalypse is styled “the war of that great day of God Almighty:” that, at this epoch of restoration, Jehovah shall lead down his warriors to the conflict in the valley of judgment; that the harvest-sickle, and the vintage press, shall then do their work; that Jehovah, as the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem, and shake the heavens and the earth of the non-Jewish world, whose Sun and Moon shall be darkened, and the shining of their stars shall be destroyed; that when this is consummated, Jerusalem shall be holy; and no strangers, or enemies, shall henceforth pass through her any more; that the land shall be as Paradise, flowing with wine and milk, being so rich in vines and pasturage, fountains and running streams; and to crown the whole, Joel testifies with Ezekiel, Jeremiah, and Isaiah, that Jehovah then dwells in Zion, the place of rest, and city of the Great King—ch. 1:6; 2:18, 19, 23, 24, 26, 31, 32; 3:1, 2, 9, 11–18, 20, 21.

The Apocalypse in Amos.

AMOS, who was contemporary with Isaiah, adds his testimony to a like effect. He says that Jehovah will roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; but that he will do nothing without first revealing it unto his servants the prophets. He predicted that the ten tribes of Israel should be carried into captivity beyond Damascus; that there should come a famine of hearing the words of Jehovah, and that Israel should run to and fro to seek the word, but should not find it, as it has come to pass for the past eighteen hundred years. He foretold the desolation of the kingdom in all its elements, but also that Jehovah will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob; but that he would sift them among all nations as grain is sifted in a sieve, yet that not one good seed should fall to the earth to rise no more: for that when the indignation shall be completed, Jehovah will raise up the dwelling-place of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; he will raise up David's ruins, and build the kingdom AS IN THE DAYS OF OLD; that they who shall inherit it, may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the nations when Jehovah's name shall be proclaimed to them: then Israel shall be planted upon their land, and rooted up no more from thence, saith Jehovah Elohim, who hath given it to them, and not to the Gentiles ch. 1:2; 3:7; 5: 27; 9:8, 11-15.

The Apocalypse in Obadiah.

Edom, in the prophecies concerning the restoration of Israel's kingdom in "the latter days," is representative of the enemies of Jacob, banded together under the guardianship of Gog, who is then the Chief of the House of Esau. OBADIAH had a vision of this Confederacy, occupying a similar relationship to Israel hereafter, that Edom did in the typical times of the prophet. Obadiah has placed on record the sentence that "Every one of the Mount of Esau shall be cut off by slaughter for ever, and shame shall cover them, because of their violence against Jacob;" that as Edom has drunk upon Jehovah's holy mountain, (where also they revel to this day), so shall all the nations drink, and they shall be as though they had not been: for that upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and it shall be holy; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions; and the house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, (or as Paul styles it, "a fire of flame" in 2 Thess. 1:8,) and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them and devour them; and there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau; and that at the time appointed for this, deliverers shall come up in Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau; and the kingdom thus obtained shall be Jehovah's—verses 9, 10, 16-18, 21.

The Apocalypse in Micah.

MICAH was contemporary with the times of Amos and Isaiah. He opens his prophecy apocalyptically by saying, "Behold Jehovah cometh forth out of his place, and will come down, and tread upon the high places of the earth." He predicted that because of the iniquity of the Israelites and their rulers, Zion should be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem should become heaps, and the mountain on which the temple stood as the high places of the forest. But, he goes on to say, that Zion, Moriah, and Jerusalem, although thus trodden under foot of destroyers, should not always be abased. He coincides with Isaiah, and testifies in the same words, that in the latter days yet future, the kingdom of Jehovah, which he terms "The mountain of the house of Jehovah," shall have the sovereignty over the empires and kingdoms of the earth, and that all nations shall concentrate around its throne: that Jehovah the Elohim of Jacob will enlighten, or apocalypse them, and that they will in consequence walk in his ways: that a law and a word will be promulgated from Zion and Jerusalem, and be universally obeyed: that war will then be abolished, peace be established as the order of the day, and good-will everywhere prevail. He further testifies, that Israel shall then be a strong nation, with Jehovah (Christ) reigning over them in Mount Zion from thenceforth, and for the Olahm, or Millennium—the First Dominion shall come to Zion; and the kingdom to the daughter of Jerusalem. But he also testifies, that before this exaltation to dominion, Zion's daughter should dwell in Babylon, in the ten streets of which she is a wanderer to this day: that in Babylon she shall be delivered: in Babylon Jehovah shall redeem her from the hand or power of her enemies, the Gentiles. He testifies that when the time of this deliverance shall arrive, the Daughter of Zion (which is constituted of the twelve tribes of Israel, and the Saints) shall arise and thresh with horn of iron and hoof of brass, and beat in pieces many people, whose spoil shall be consecrated to Jehovah the Judge of Israel, and the Adon or Sovereign Ruler of the whole earth; who, in the days of his humanity, should be smitten with a rod upon the cheek by the rebellious.

Isaiah had foretold that the Judge of Israel should come of the house of David (Isai. 9:6, 7); and Micah predicted he should be born in Bethlehem Ephratah. But, because of the unworthy treatment he should experience at their hands, he should abandon the nation to its calamities, until the time of Zion's travail, when he shall be apocalypsed as a thief in the night; and then the remnant of his brethren shall return on account of the children of Israel.

He goes on furthermore to say, that in this day of apocalypse, the Judge of Israel shall stand and rule in the strength of Jehovah, in the majesty of the name of Jehovah his Eloah; that Israel shall then abide, or dwell safely in the Holy Land, because their Divine King shall be great to the ends of the earth. That when he is apocalypsed in the day of Zion's travail, writhing in pain under Gentile oppression, the Bethlehem-born Judge of Israel shall be the nation's peace; because He and his brethren princes shall expel the Assyrian from Judea, and, carrying the war into the land of Nimrod, shall reduce the enemy to the necessity of suing for peace, which will be granted with the loss of dominion and independence. That the remnant of Jacob in more distant nations of the earth shall be as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among a flock of sheep; who, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

But though Israel is to do valiantly in the latter days, he showed that they should previously suffer much because of iniquity, transgression, and sin. That they would be not only nationally corrupt, but socially treacherous and cruel, so that a man's enemies would be those of his own house. That, though they should cause the fall of One, he should rise again; and though they should cause him to sit in the darkness of death, Jehovah should become to him a light. That after this cruel treachery, Jerusalem, his enemy, should be covered with shame, and trodden down as mire in the streets; and that when the day of her rebuilding should arrive, the decree authorizing it should come from afar.

Micah, perceiving that there was hope in Israel's end, petitions Jehovah in their behalf. He prays that they may be fed in Bashan and Gilead "AS IN THE DAYS OF OLD." His supplication is heard, and he is informed by Jehovah that their Exodus from Babylon should be after the type and duration of that from Egypt into Canaan: that in this exodus from Babylon the nations shall be confounded when they shall behold the prowess of the Jews; that they shall lick the dust like a serpent, and be afraid of Jehovah our Elohim (Christ), for he will execute vengeance in anger and fury upon the nations, such as they have not heard.

But concerning Israel the prophet testifies, that the Conqueror of the nations will pass by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage that he will have compassion on them; that he will subdue their iniquities, and cast all their sins into the depth of the sea; that he will perform the truth to Jacob, the mercy to Abraham, which he has sworn to Israel's fathers from the days of old—ch. 1:3; 2:12, 13; 3:12; 4:1–4, 7, 8, 10, 13; 5:1–8, 15; 7:6, 8, 10, 11, 14–20.

The Apocalypse in Nahum.

NAHUM saw Israel oppressed by Nineveh; and predicted its overthrow, because its monarch was wicked, and imagined evil against Jehovah. But Israel's deliverance from the Assyrian by the fall of Nineveh was only the type of a greater deliverance at the apocalypse of Messiah. The prophet, therefore, looking forward to this, concerning which Micah's testimony is already before the reader, says, "Behold upon the mountains the feet of HIM that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace! O Judah, keep thy solemn feasts, perform thy vows; for the wicked shall no more pass through thee; he is utterly cut off”—ch. 1:15. This must be future, because the wicked are not yet cut off, but are in possession of the Holy Land.

The Apocalypse in Habakkuk.

Now while Nahum looked at the latter day deliverance of Israel through the fall of Nineveh, HABAKKUK contemplated the same consummation through the typical fall of Nebuchadnezzar's Dynasty. He saw Babylon in the plenitude of its power. Success would intoxicate the Golden Head, whose spirit would change, and he would transgress and offend by imputing his power to his own strength. And while Babylon triumphed, he saw that Israel and the nations were enclosed in its net, being subjected thereby to spoliation and great distress. He was desirous to know what all this would result in. He therefore besought Jehovah to reveal to him what the end would be. His petition was granted, and the consummation was represented to him in a vision, which is to speak "at the end." He saw in that epoch, which is termed "the Day of Trouble," a chief of nations, proud, covetous, rapacious, and impious, as Belshazzar; who will not confine himself to his own territories, but will enlarge his desire as the grave, and will be as death, which cannot be satisfied, but will gather to his throne all nations, and laden himself with all people as with thick clay. He saw this Power in vision execrated in its time as the spoiler of the nations, and the violator of the land of Israel, Jerusalem, and its inhabitants. This is the Gog of Ezekiel, the Assyrian of Isaiah and Micah, the King of the North of Daniel, the Lawless One of Paul, and the Dragon of Apoc. 20. Habakkuk saw that "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of Jehovah as the waters cover the sea;" but he saw also that this could not be the character of the times until this CLAY-POWER should be removed out of the way. It was accordingly shown to him that the power should be broken by certain who should "rise up suddenly" and "awake;" and that the sleepers who shall awake to life and stand upon their feet for action, shall bite, and vex, and spoil him. These are the Saints he saw in vision, in whose midst is the STONE OF THE WALL, which shall cry out against him.

After the prophet had seen the vision, and heard the speech accompanying it, in his hymn to Jehovah he recounts the glorious apocalypse he beheld. He saw Israel in extremity, and the Thick-Clay Power in Egypt in all the confidence of victory. But the Stone out of the Wall makes proclamation against him, which results only in stirring him up to fury; and the prophet sees his hosts in tempestuous motion "coming out as a whirlwind to scatter me, and rejoicing in the prospect of devouring the poor in the lurking-place." The tents of Cushan and Midian, in this "day of Midian"—Isai. 9:4—overspread the wilderness of Mount Paran, the country of Teman, situated between Palestine and Egypt, south of the Mediterranean, and between the Gulph of Suez and the Gulph of Akaba or Elath, north of Mount Sinai. The mistar, or lurking-place of Judah's Lion, the place of his encampment in the vision, is the region of Edom and Moab running down to the Gulph of Elath. After the type of the Exodus from Egypt, Jehovah will rise up from Seir, and shine forth from Mount Paran—Isai. 16:3, 4; Dan. 11:41; Duet. 33:2; Hab. 3:3. This arrangement places the Gulph of Elath, "the Tongue of the Egyptian Sea" (Isai. 11:15), the Elanitic Gulph of the Red Sea; in other words, between the Gogian army of Egypt, and, as the Egyptian forces imagine, the feeble and dispirited outcasts of Moab. But they know not that with these outcasts is the antitypical Joshua, the prophet like unto Moses, and the antitypical Gideon, with the sword of Jehovah and his chosen band, as represented in Apoc. 19:14; 17:14. If the reader keep these geographical relations before his mind, he will discern what Habakkuk testifies in saying, "Thou didst march thine horses into the sea through a heap of great waters;" "was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thy horses, thy chariots of salvation?" No, the prophet saw that the wrath was against the tents of Cushan, and the curtains of the land of Midian, which, when they came to see the water open a way into their encampment for their enemy's cavalry, trembled in dismay. Brightness as the light burst forth upon them; beams of light from his hand, the hiding-place of his power. The prophet saw him march on in indignation, and thresh the heathen in anger. The conqueror's feet were like hind's feet; he overtook the flying enemy, and cut them in pieces with his troops. Israel in Egypt had cried unto Jehovah because of the oppressors, and he sent them "a Saviour, even a Great One," whom Habakkuk beholds from his watch-tower. "Thou wentest forth," says he, "for the salvation of thy people, for salvation with thy Christ (Anointed) thou woundedst the Head of the house of the wicked." Thus Jehovah becomes known to Egypt, and his outcasts in the land of Egypt are redeemed, and the way opened for them to return to the land of promise. The land of Judah now becomes a terror to the land of Egypt, and is terribly smitten from thence; so that every Egyptian that maketh mention thereof shall tremble because of the counsel of Jehovah of armies, which he determines against it. His counsel is this. "I will bring Israel again out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria, and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon, and room shall not be found for them. And he shall pass through the sea in adversity, and he shall smite the waves in the sea, and all the depths of the Nile shall be dried up; and the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt shall depart away"—Zech. 10:10, 11.

But though Jehovah Elohim shall thus "smite Egypt," he will afterwards "heal it." His conquests, however, and its terrible accompaniments will never be forgotten. For "in that day five cities in the land of Egypt shall speak the language of Canaan, and swear allegiance to Jehovah of armies. City of the Destruction shall one be called. In that day there shall be an altar to Jehovah in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to Jehovah: and it shall be for a sign, and for a witness to Jehovah of armies in the land of Egypt. And the Egyptians shall know Jehovah in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall promise a votive offering to Jehovah, and perform. And they shall turn to Jehovah, and he shall be entreated of them, and shall heal them. In that day there shall be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria; and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria; and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the land; whom Jehovah of armies shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance"—Isai. 19:17-25. After the conquest of Egypt, then, Habakkuk, whose position may be supposed to be Jerusalem, sees, in the vision of the end, "Eloah coming out of Teman, and the Holy One (or Christ) from Mount Paran." He has now taken away the dominion of the Lion and the Bear from India to Ethiopia, and possesses for his own Egypt, Israel, and Assyria. "His glory covers the heavens, and the earth is full of his praise." In making these conquests, and those which remain, in relation to the Leopard, and the Fourth Beast of Daniel, "the pestilence goes from before him, and a flame from his feet." What follows is very grand. Viewing the work of conquest to be done, the prophet says, "He stood and surveyed the earth; he beheld, and drove asunder the nations: and the mountains of antiquity (or empires) were scattered, the perpetual hills (or ancient kingdoms) did bow: the ways of antiquity are for him." That is, the kingdoms and empires existing in the hour of the end are for Jehovah's Christ. These "mountains saw him and trembled: the overflowing of the water," their military inundation, "passed by: the deep uttered his voice," the roaring of the bottomless pit of nations; but He, after the type of Joshua, commanded "the Sun and the Moon to stand still in their habitation; and his arrows went in the light, and his glittering spear in the shining." Judah his bow, and Ephraim his arrow, arrest the sun and moon of the Gentile heavens, and go in the light thereof.

The Apocalypse in Zephaniah.

ZEPHANIAH was contemporary with Jeremiah, and prophesied in the reign of Josiah, king of Judah. Jehovah declared by him, that he would utterly consume all things, constituting Judah's commonwealth, from off the Holy Land. This was to come to pass, because Jerusalem "obeyed not the voice; received not correction; trusted not in Jehovah; drew not near to her Elohim. Her princes within her were as roaring lions; her judges as evening wolves; her prophets light and treacherous persons; and her priests had polluted the sanctuary, and done violence to the law." We can look back by the light of history, and see how terrible hath been the indignation of Jehovah and his Christ. The sea coast of Palestine, once so rich and flourishing in the hands of the Philistines, has become, as Zephaniah predicted, "dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks;" and "an afflicted and poor people only is left in the midst of the land." The Philistines, and Moab, and Ammon, and Nineveh, and Khushistan, people all contemporary with the prophet, have all passed away as he foretold; and a despised remnant of his countrymen alone continue, a living monument of woe.

But of this remnant and their country the prophet has recorded great and glorious things. "The sea coast," says he, "shall be for the house of Judah; and they shall feed thereupon: for Jehovah their Elohim shall visit them, and turn away their captivity." "They shall spoil Moab and Ammon; and shall possess them." This change in the fortunes of the poor and afflicted remnant of Israel, the prophet shows, is to occur at a period when Jehovah's wrath is to be let loose against the nations. Jehovah informs us through the prophet, what his determination is with respect to the world at the coming crisis. Addressing the afflicted remnant, Jehovah says "Wait ye for me, until the day that I rise up to the prey"—"the Day of Wrath and Apocalypse" of Paul: "for my determination is to gather the nations, to assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; for with the fire of my jealousy all the earth shall be devoured."

The result of this manifestation and outpouring of wrath will be sevenfold;

1. The Apocalypse of Jehovah, the King of Israel in Jerusalem;
2. The taking away of judgments from Jerusalem;
3. The purification and pardon of the remnant;
4. The exaltation of Israel to fame and praise throughout the world;
5. Their restoration to the Holy Land from all parts of the earth;

6. The abolition of all the "Names and Denominations," and other superstitions of every form, shade, and color, that now bewilder and divide mankind; and which are sustained as elements of the civil and ecclesiastical polity of the nations; and,

7. The establishment of One Religion and One Government for all the world.

In view of these things, the prophet exclaims, "Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem," "the Mother of us all"—Gal. 4:26. Jehovah hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out thine enemy; the King of Israel, Jehovah, is in the midst of thee: THOU SHALT NOT SEE EVIL ANY MORE. Jehovah thine Elohim (that is, the Mystical Christ) in the midst of thee is might: He will save; he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love; he will joy over thee with singing. Behold at that time I will undo all that afflict thee; and I will save her that halteth, and will gather her that was driven out; and I will get them praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame."

It is manifest, however, to every considerate person, that this glorious result for Israel and the Saints (for the one is not redeemed without the other) can only be consequent upon the binding of the Dragon and conquest of the kings of the earth, as represented in the Apocalypse. The governments must be broken as a potter's vessel, or Israel, the Saints, and the nations, cannot attain the blessing promised. The testimony of all the prophets concurs in this; and that when broken, the grand obstacle to the world's blessedness will be removed; and that “then will Jehovah turn to the peoples a pure lip, that they may all call upon the name of Jehovah, to serve him with one consent. For he will famish all the Elohim of the earth, (among whom are the clerical soul-traders of the Apocalypse,) and men shall worship him, every one from his country, all the isles of the nations”—ch. 1:1; 2:6, 7, 9, 11; 3:1–4, 8, 9, 14–19.

The Apocalypse in Haggai

HAGGAI prophesied about a century after Zephaniah; and was contemporary with Zechariah, and the rebuilding of the Temple after the return from Babylon. He stirred the people up to finish it. Zerubbabel, son of David, and ancestor of Joseph the husband of Mary, and of Mary and Jesus, was Governor of Judah under the Persians; and Joshua, the son of Josedech, high priest. These were “men of sign,” that is, men representative of ONE, who shall afterwards himself occupy, at one and the same time, the position of Governor and High Priest of the nation. Zerubbabel and Joshua are so regarded both by Haggai and Zechariah. In reference to the apocalypse of the Holy One they typified, Jehovah says in Haggai, “Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry; and I will shake all nations, and that to be desired of all nations they shall come (נצח bahu, 3 p. plur.), and I will fill this house with glory. And this “yet once more,” says Paul, “signifieth the removing of those things which may be shaken as of things that are constituted, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.” The heavens and earth shaken in the Babylonian desolation, were shaken “once more” in the Roman. But the time approaches when the heavens, earth, sea, and dry land of the Gentile world, are also to be convulsed. Therefore Jehovah commanded Haggai to speak to Zerubbabel, and say, “I will shake the heavens and the earth: and I will overthrow the thrones of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the nations; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother. In that day, saith Jehovah of armies, I will take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, son of Shealtiel, and will make thee as a signet; for I have chosen thee, saith Jehovah of armies”—ch. 2:6, 7, 21–23. Now as these things did not come to pass in the lifetime of Zerubbabel, he was either a representative of his descendant the Son of Mary who shall be the ensign; or he must be raised from the dead if it is to be personally accomplished in him. Whichever alternative may be accepted, this is certain, that Zerubbabel is to be a living man when the shaking of the nations predicted shall come to pass. The prophecy then, relates to our future, and will be found hereafter to have been incorporated in some of the scenes of the Apocalypse.

The Apocalypse in Zechariah.

The next prophet in the order of the Old Testament is ZECHARIAH; a book which, like all the preceding, is intimately connected with the Apocalypse of the Anointed Jesus. Zechariah was contemporary with Zerubbabel, Joshua the High Priest, and Haggai, and prophesied about 520 years before the birth of Jesus.

Like John in Patmos, Zechariah had a Vision of Horses of divers colors—red horses, bay horses, and pale horses, ranged behind a Man upon a red horse, standing among myrtle-trees. The branches of myrtle-trees were used in the construction of booths under which Israel dwelt in celebrating the Feast of Tabernacles. In their rebelliousness the Jews are regarded as briars and thorns; but in restoration, because of righteousness, they are olive-branches, pine-branches, myrtle-branches, and palm-branches. When, therefore, it is prophesied in Isaiah 55:13, “Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree: and it shall be to Jehovah for a name, for an Aion-memorial that shall not be cut off;" and in Ch. 41:19, "I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah-tree, and the myrtle, and the olive-tree: I will set in the desert the fir-tree, the pine, and the box-tree together; that they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of Jehovah hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel (Christ) hath created it:"—when these things are declared, it not only imports that the land previously desolate shall become like Eden, the Garden of Jehovah (Ezek. 36:35), but that all its inhabitants in Messiah's Olahm, the Millennial Aion, shall be trees of righteousness, the planting of Jehovah, that he might be glorified":—Isai. 61:3.

These considerations fix the time of Zechariah's horses at rest,—at the Feast of Tabernacles first ensuing, when the Holy One of Israel, the Man on the Red Horse, shall have completed his conquests, and shall be Prince of Peace in the midst of Israel. He and his cavalry march to and fro through the earth with blood, signified by redness, famine by the bay, and pestilence by the pale or whitish, until the earth is reduced to submission, and obtains rest from these calamities. This vision is reproduced in the Apocalypse, only on a more extended scale; but with the same result.

"Thus saith Jehovah of armies," who, as Moses saith, "is a Man of War" and "a Jealous Power," "I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with great jealousy. And I am very sore displeased with the nations at ease; for I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward the affliction." Now, if this were the state of Jehovah's mind in the days of Zechariah, what must be the intensity of his jealousy for Jerusalem and Zion at this day! The Chaldeans destroyed Jerusalem, and burned the temple, and overturned the kingdom and throne of David; and he punished the Chaldean Babylon with the loss of empire, and a conversion into heaps of ruins as at this day. The Roman nations followed in their steps; and have aggravated the affliction and their own guilt, by great cruelty towards Israel, and slaughters, or rather torments inflicted upon the brethren of Jesus, the Saints. The Little Horn Babylon, therefore, of our times, will be subjected to a more terrible vengeance than hitherto experienced by any power, or confederacy of powers, hostile to the Jews.

The decree of Jehovah concerning Jerusalem and Zion hath gone forth; and he commanded Zechariah to proclaim it, saying, "Thus saith Jehovah of armies, My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and Jehovah shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem." But how shall this come to pass?

In reference to this inquiry the prophet is introduced to another scene—the visions of the Four Horns, and of the Four Carpenters or artificers. He is told that the Horns represent the powers by which Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem are scattered; answering to the Lion, the Bear, the Leopard, and the Fourth Beast of Daniel; whose oppression has so completely scattered the power of Judah, "that no man doth lift up his head." And in this prostrate condition the Jews and Jerusalem must remain until the "Four Carpenters" are apocalypsed or revealed for the work assigned them. This work the prophet says, is to terrify the horns; to make them afraid; to cast out the horns of the nations, which lift up their horn, or power, over the land of Judah to scatter it. No such power, with such a mission, has appeared since the days of the prophet: on the contrary, all the powers that have arisen have been Gentile, and ambitious of exclusive sovereignty over Jerusalem and Judea, as at this day. These "Four Carpenters" are, therefore, not Gentile, but of Jewish nationality; and are yet to be apocalypsed, or revealed. We may here say in passing, that they are the Brethren of the Carpenter's Son; the squadrons of the Man in the midst of the myrtle-trees; the Seraphim of Isaiah; the Four Cherubim of Ezekiel; and the Four Living Ones of the Apocalypse.

These are they by whom the Horns of the Gentiles are to be broken, and the Holy Land and City are to be avenged, and Zion comforted. But the prophet and his friends would, doubtless, delight to know "the times and seasons" when Jerusalem should be exalted to the dignity of "Jehovah's throne"—Jer. 3:17. Might this happen in Zechariah's day; or when Ezekiel's 430 years were expired during which Judah and Israel were to eat defiled bread among the Gentiles (4:4–6, 13); or were there any times measured off that must expire before the work of the Four Carpenters could be commenced?

To afford them some idea of the fact in relation to this matter, another vision was granted to the prophet. He saw a man with a measuring line in his hand, who told him he was going to measure the length and breadth of Jerusalem. He saw by this that there were measurements, and that the fortunes of the city were not abandoned to accident or caprice. He was told what the line of Jerusalem's humiliation extended to; but he was not informed of the number of the years that humiliation should continue. He could not discern from what he saw, whether the treading of Jerusalem under foot by the Gentiles should terminate in A.D. 35, when the apostles inquired if the kingdom should then be restored again to Israel; or in A.D. 1864–8, to which we look with earnest expectation. Zechariah was told what the line was for, but he was not informed of the details of the measurements. These details were reserved by the Father, to be communicated afterwards to the Anointed Jesus, that he might send and "indicate them by sign," represent them symbolically, to his servant John. The apocalypse, however, to which the "measuring line" extended, was communicated to Zechariah. He was told these words, "Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls, for the multitude of men and cattle therein:" and the reason given why it should be so secure in such a country was, "Because, saith Jehovah, I will be unto her a Wall of Fire (the Jasper-wall of Apoc. 21:12, 14, 18) round about her, and will be the Glory (the Jasperstone, clear as crystal—ver. 11) in the midst of her."

He perceived from this, as we may also perceive, that Jehovah would appear in Jerusalem at the end of the measuring line. He found also, by attending to the words spoken, that when he should be therein apocalypsed or unveiled, he will make a proclamation to the Israelites dwelling in the countries north of Jerusalem, called "the Land of the North," the territory under the dominion of Gog, the then Head of the Little Horn Babylon of our future. The Israelites dwelling in this Babylon-Confederacy of Greeks and Latins are thus addressed in the proclamation stirring them up to war, "Ho! ho! Come forth and escape from the land of the north, saith Jehovah; for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heavens. Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon." Here is a call upon the Jews to rise against the governments of the nations, and doubtless because those governments will not regard the proclamation of the Apoc. 14:6, 7. Zion, thus appealed to, will respond to the invitation; and in concert with the Four Carpenters (the resurrected saints and the true believers living at the time of the proclamation) proceed to break in pieces and consume the power of the nations. These are to be spoiled and subjugated by their servants, the Jews; and after that the glory will be apocalypsed. Things will proceed very much upon ordinary principles before the public; only those who carry on the insurrection, or revolution, will know the reality of things. This is the import of the words spoken to Zechariah in connection with the call upon Zion to "arise and thresh the nations"—Mic. 4:13. "After the glory he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you; for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of Jehovah's eye." "For, behold, I will shake my hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants; and ye shall know that Jehovah of armies hath sent me," the Christ. "After the glory" is apocalypsed in Jerusalem, in other words, after Messiah effects his entrance into Jerusalem, the work begins that is to result in removing the veil from the mind of Israel with respect to Jesus; in their restoration to Palestine; in the subjugation of the nations; and their subsequent enlightenment.

When this work is accomplished the apocalyptic millenary is introduced, in which the things expressed in the following words of Zechariah became the order of the times: "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for, lo! I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith Jehovah; and many nations shall be joined to Jehovah in that day (the Day of Christ), and shall be my people; and I will dwell in the midst of thee; and thou shalt know that Jehovah of armies sent me (Jesus) unto thee. And Jehovah shall inherit Judah, his portion in the Holy Land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Be at rest, O all flesh, from before Jehovah; for he is risen up from the habitation of his holiness”—ch. 2:13.

The mind of the prophet having been thus fixed upon Him who is to deliver Israel, and to rule over them in Jerusalem, becomes the subject of a vision in which is brought before him the Apocalyptic Stone, the Jasper and Sardine Stone, with Seven Eyes, the Head Stone, whose graying is of Jehovah; and which being laid before Joshua and Zerubbabel, men of sign, is representative of the Divine Governor and High Priest of the house of David. He sees Joshua, the High Priest of the Restoration, angelized, and clothed in filthy garments. That is, he represents the Christ, in the capacity of Jehovah's Messenger, "the Angel of the Covenant," clothed with "the flesh of sin," in which, Paul tells us, "dwells no good thing." While Joshua was in these filthy garments, Zechariah sees the Adversary at his right-hand; that is, in power, standing to resist him. This represents the resistance of power that would be brought to bear against the Christ in the days of his flesh. But that the Adversary should not finally prevail is indicated by the words of Jehovah to the Adversary, saying, "Jehovah shall restrain thee, O Satan; even Jehovah that hath chosen Jerusalem shall restrain thee: Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?" That is, that although the Adversary that possessed Jerusalem might resist the, and wound him in the heel, He shall, nevertheless, wrest Jerusalem from his grasp, and restrain, or bind him, as is apocalyptically represented in ch. 20:1–3.

While Zechariah was beholding, he saw the garments of Joshua, the High Priest, changed; and was instructed that the action represented the putting away of iniquity which the priest is supposed to bear. In this we see, by the light of New Testament, the change of nature, or body, in relation to the Christ, "whom," says Paul, "we know henceforth no more after the flesh." He was crucified in "flesh of sin;" and then sin was "condemned in the flesh." But when he rose again he became spirit-body, called by Paul pneuma hagiosunes, spirit of holiness—Rom. 1:4. He is now the Angel-High Priest of Jehovah, no longer oppressed with our filthy nature, but "clothed in a garment white as snow" (Dan. 7:9) reaching to the foot (Apoc. 1:13): and the words of Jehovah are now addressed to him, saying, "If thou wilt walk in my ways, and if thou wilt keep my charge, then thou shalt also judge my house (rule my kingdom), and shalt also keep my courts (be High Priest of Israel), and I will give thee places to walk among those that stand by," the Angel Princes, or Elohim, we read of in Daniel.

The Stone and the Mountain.

But there was yet another incident beheld by Zechariah. He saw Joshua and his associate priests, whom he styles "men of sign," as were Isaiah and the children Jehovah had given him—8:18; Heb. 2:13. HE saw A STONE laid before Joshua, upon which were Seven Eyes, which are declared to be the Eyes of Jehovah; therefore that Stone represented Jehovah the High Priest; the servant of his Father Jehovah, and named the BRANCH. Concerning this Stone, the reader can consult the following texts:—Ps. 118:22; Isai. 28:16; 8:14; Gen. 49:24, Dan. 2:34. This Stone is Jehovah's signet, the inscription upon which is "HOLINESS TO JEHOVAH," an engraving inwrought by the workmanship of Jehovah himself, as Zechariah was informed; and through which he will remove the iniquity of the land of Israel in one day; upon which every man therein shall call to his neighbor under the vine and under the fig-tree, emblems of the kingdom of the heavens.

But the mission of the Stone is not exclusively to take away the iniquity of Israel. He has to level the "Great Mountain," which, at his apocalypse, will be found "destroying the earth." The Chaldean Babylonish empire is styled by Jeremiah "the destroying mountain which destroyed all the earth"—51:25. Zerubbabel was contemporary with it, but it did not become a plain before him; he died without witnessing such a result. Nevertheless, it is written, "Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain; and he shall bring forth the Head Stone with shoutings of Grace, grace unto it." Here, then, is a work still to be accomplished. A great mountain to be levelled in the presence of Zerubbabel; and consequently, to be levelled after his resurrection, when he shall have awakened out of his sleep: for then, as we have seen in Haggai, “Jehovah will shake the heavens and the earth, and overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the nations.” These make up the great mountains to be levelled, or abolished, as symbolized in Apoc. 16:20. The Four Carpenters, of which Zerubbabel is an element, are “to cast out the horns of the Gentiles;” and are therefore to level this great political mountain. Now the resurrection of the dead is as necessary for their development as for his. This being so, their resurrection is dramatically foreshadowed by Zechariah, another constituent of the Four, being awaked by the Angel. He says, “The angel that talked with me came again, and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep”—c. 4:1. This is the resurrection of the prophet; so that what he saw after he awoke is to be referred to the time after the resurrection for its accomplishment.

The Seven-Branched Lampstand and Olive-Trees.

Now being awake, he saw a Seven-Branched Lampstand of gold, standing between Two Olive-Trees, a branch from each tree connected with the lampstand by a golden pipe, making Two Branches and Two Golden Pipes, through which pipes the golden oil was transmitted from the Branches to the bowl of the Lampstand for the supply of the Seven Lamps. The prophet was told, that “these Seven” are the Eyes of Jehovah, which run to and fro through the whole earth, as the horsemen in the myrtle grove are said to do: and that the Olive Branches are the Two Anointed Ones that stand beside the Adon, or Lord, of the whole earth.

By the light of the New Testament we are able to arrive at an understanding of this enigma, which symbolically represents the nature and character of the power destined to “establish and make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.” The symbol as a whole is an apparatus of brightness; and the Golden Oil in combustion upon the seven burners, styled in the Apoc. 4:5, “Seven lamps of fire burning before the throne,” is the Spirit of God, which, in its sevenfold distribution, is styled in Apoc. 5:6, “Seven Eyes, which are the Seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.” Hence, what is accomplished “in all the earth,” namely, the levelling of the great Babylonish mountain, and the bringing forth the Head Stone to lordship over the whole earth, as the word of Jehovah says to Zerubbabel, is “Not by army, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith Jehovah of armies;” that is, the effectuation of these results by such means alone as one nation employs to overturn the power of another, in which it’s success depends upon numbers, discipline, artillery, and so forth, courageously and scientifically applied, is impossible. Jerusalem will never attain to her destined exaltation as Jehovah’s throne, by the mere prowess and strategy of an Alexander or a Napoleon. It is to be accomplished by “Zerubbabel”, in whose hand is the plumb line, which distinguishes him as the Builder of David’s tabernacle—of “the City which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God”—Heb. 11:10. “By my Spirit,” saith Jehovah, “it shall be done, even by those Seven Eye-Lamps of Jehovah.

But shall this post-resurrectional work be performed by Jehovah’s Spirit unclothed; by pure naked spirit, as a psychologist would prevail over a subject—by afflation, and a simple exercise of will? The answer from the testimony before us is, by no means. “That which is born of the Spirit is Spirit”—Jno. 3:6. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joshua the High Priest, Zerubbabel, and all the prophets, which includes Jesus and the Apostles, together with many from the east, west north, and south (Luke 13:28–30) will be born of the Spirit in the resurrection, and will therefore be “Spirit”—pneuma hagiosunes, as Jesus is now, isaggeloi, as angels, “walking among those that stand by:” “when He (Jesus) shall appear,” says John, “we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is”—1 Ep. 3:2. By Spirit in organic manifestation the face of the world shall be changed, and Jerusalem shall be made to shine; for “Her Righteousness (Jer. 23:5, 6; 33:15–17) shall go forth as Brightness; and her Salvation (that which effects her deliverance) as a Lamp that burneth”—Isai. 62:1.

Now the Organic Manifestation is represented by the Lampstand, with its Bowl on the top, and Seven Pipes projecting from it, and terminating in Seven Burners; by the Two Olive-Trees, Two Branches of the same, and Two Golden Pipes passing from the branches to the Bowl. We are told that the Seven Burnings are the Eyes of Jehovah, which leads to the conclusion that the Lampstand, with its Bowl and Pipes, is representative of Jehovah as manifested in David's Son and his brethren. This conclusion is ratified by Psal. 132:17, "There (in Zion, ver. 13) I will make to spring a Horn for David; I have prepared A LAMP for my anointed." David was Jehovah's anointed; and David's Son and Lord, JESUS, is the Lamp Stem, and the Lamp Bowl, or Reservoir, of the Anointing Spirit, which is thence distributed to the Seven Burners.

"Ye are the Branches," said Jesus to his disciples; "and severed from me ye can do nothing." This is true, whether Jesus be regarded as a Vine, or as a Seven-Branded Lampstand. The branches of the Olive-Trees are connected with the Bowl by the two golden tubes, which makes them thus Branches of the Lamp. The Olive-Trees represent Israel after the flesh, and Israel after the Spirit, in their postresurrectional relation to the Lamp of David's house. "The iniquity of that land being taken away in one day" (Zech. 3:9) then, says Jehovah, "I will be as the dew unto Israel; he shall blossom as the lily, and strike forth his roots as Lebanon. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the Olive-Tree, and his smell as Lebanon. They that dwell under His shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and blossom as the vine; the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? I have heard, and observed him; I am like a green fir-tree. From me (O Ephraim) is thy fruit found. Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? Prudent, and he shall know them? For the ways of Jehovah are right, and the just shall walk in them; but the transgressors shall fall therein"—Hosea 14:5–9. Here, then, is one olive-tree Israel in post-resurrectional relation to the Lamp of David's house; the other olive-tree is the Wild Olive-Tree also in its post-resurrectional relation to the same. In Rom. 11:17, Paul tells us that the Gentiles are represented by this tree. Thus we are left without doubt as to the two olive-trees.

But Zechariah saw something more in detail than the Two Trees and Lamp. He saw also "two olive-branches," and "two golden tubes." By these branches and tubes a connection was established between the Lamp-bowl and the two trees. The golden colored olive-oil is exuded from the two branches through the golden tubes into the Lamp-bowl, from which it is combusted through the Seven Burners, for the illumination of all the nations of the earth, then "blessed in Abraham and his Mystical Seed," which is the Christ and all in Him.

Zechariah was told that these two branches represented the Anointed Ones, or Sons of Oil, standing before the RULER (Adon) of all the earth. In other words, these two branches represent the Saints, who are separated, first, from the Israelitish Olive-Tree; and secondly, from the Gentile Olive-Tree, by nature wild. The Two Branches are not to be confounded with the Two Trees. These are not the Anointed Ones, but only the nationalities whence the Two Branches are developed. These two branches stand before the Ruler of all the earth. They rule with him as Kings and Priests, being all anointed with the Holy Spirit from the throne of the Invisible Father. They are his eyes, hands, body, and feet, in the subjugation and government of the world. He fills them with his spirit; in fact, they are His spirit corporealized—condensed, if we may so speak, into a multitude of living, incorruptible, and intelligent personages: "That which is born of the Spirit IS SPIRIT"—the multitudinous Spirit-Man.

These symbols, then, seen by Zechariah after he was waked up by the angel out of his typical sleep, are representative of the Spirit of Jehovah; that is, of that Spirit's manifestation in the resurrected Sons of God, who are spirits. Let me simplify this idea, if possible, yet more. When a true believer dies, he falls asleep in Christ. He corrupts; and when the process of decomposition is complete, he is reduced to dust, which is all that remains of his former self. Nevertheless, he reappears, his restored consciousness claims his former self as his. The dust to which he is reduced is at once the debris of his former, and the nucleus of his future, self. In reference to this nucleus, or detritus of the animal body sown into the grave, Paul says in 1 Cor. 15:53, "It is necessary that this corruptible put on incorruptibility, and this mortal put on deathlessness." This putting on, he tells us in Rom. 8:11, is effected by the Spirit of Him who raised up Jesus from among the dead. The Spirit operates upon the dust of the former man, and fashions it into a new man, after the image of Jesus as he now is. Being formed, the formation is caused to live. In commencing life again at this epoch, this renewed man is said to be "waked as a man that is wakened out of his sleep." At this awaking, he is as Adam was before he fell; because, having been pardoned, or justified from all sin by an obedient faith, perfect in kind and degree, in his former lifetime; and after that, "walked worthy of God" to the end thereof; in the resurrection he is awakened as a man without sin. Being thus renewed, he is still in the image of the earthy Adam, but before he fell. But he is not always to continue in this image; for Paul says, "As we bear (ephoresamen, 1 aor.) the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." A change must, therefore, take place; as a change must have been operated upon the first Adam in order to transform him from "a living soul" or animal, into an incorruptible and deathless creature, or SPIRIT. In his case, this would have resulted from eating of the Tree of the Lives in Paradise, if he had been permitted. Through that appointed medium, the Eternal Spirit, self-named Jehovah, would have changed the body of his lower estate, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," into a like form with that which Jesus now possesses, and the Saints are hereafter to possess. But transgression prevented this, and postponed the spiritualization of the Adamic Nature until the resurrection era, in which, instead of two persons only becoming spirits, a multitude of their descendants, numerous as the stars of heaven, will bear the image of the heavenly, who is "the Lord the Spirit."

The dead saints being awakened to renewed bodily existence, they are prepared for bodily change. "This corruptible must put on incorruptibility; and this mortal, immortality;" but at what precise moment, or point of time, after being brought up out of their graves the saints shall be immortalized, does not appear to be explicitly revealed. This is certain,—those who are among the dead will be awakened first; and afterwards the saints among the living will be, "together with them," exalted to the Aerial, where the Ruler will have appeared. This "together with them" indicates to my mind, that the saints from among the dead and the living will be simultaneously exalted to dominion, and therefore immortalized in the same epoch; the saints among the living must wait for their glorification, till the saints are awaked from among the dead; but how long it will be from the awakening to the immortalization of the whole body, does not distinctly appear. I say, exaltation to dominion, and therefore immortalization, because "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Now, the "meeting the Lord in the Air," as Paul expresses it, is in the style of Daniel, "the Saints possessing the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven; which they cannot do until immortalized, or flesh and blood be changed into spirit. Neither will this dominion be possessed till it is conquered; for, it is a great mountain, that has to be reduced in the presence of Zerubbabel to a plain. This reduction, I apprehend, occurs before the saints are glorified, and after their resurrection; so that several years may intervene after the awaking from death to the shining as the sun in the kingdom.

This seems to be indicated in Zech. 14:5; there he says, "Jehovah my Elohim, all the saints shall come with thee. And it shall be in that day there shall not be brightness, the splendid ones drawing in. And it shall be one day that shall be made known by Jehovah, neither a day nor a night; but it shall be at the time of evening, there shall be brightness." From this we learn, that the Eternal Spirit, or Jehovah, and the saints will be in the midst of mankind in a period called "the time of evening," or Daniel's "time of the end;" but that when here they will not therefore be in their brightness, after the example of Moses' face, and that of Jesus when transfigured. To shine out thus, would be incompatible with the work to be performed upon the nations, and upon Israel; which is to be conducted on the principle of faith and judgment. This will require that mankind at large should have to deal with the saints as if they were contending against ordinary men. They must “walk by faith and not by sight;” and they must come to know the power of the saints, be feeling the sharpness of the two-edged sword to be placed in their hands for judicial purposes. When the Saints shall have “executed the judgment written,” the “moment” of the Evening Time will have arrived for them to draw themselves in no longer, and “brightness” will be displayed; and thenceforth they will be resplendent in glory as well as immortal.

“In a moment we shall be all changed,” says Paul. The judgments of the last trumpet being exhausted, Jehovah’s changed ones enter into their glory. But the judgments must first be finished; and while these are smoking from the glory of the Eternal Spirit, and from his power, “no man can enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the Seven Angels be finished”—Apoc. 15:8. To enter into that temple is to rest from labor in glory. The epoch comes, then, at the end of the Seventh Seal; at the end of judgment; and consequently, not at the instant of awakening from death.

To be in glory is to have eaten of “the Wood of Life,” when quickened, and to enter into the peaceful and glorious rest of the Millennium. This is the consummation. As the leaves and branches feed upon the sap that circulates through the vessels of the tree; so do the saints, as the Leaves of the Wood, feed upon the Spirit, which will circulate through the Two Branches of the Two Olive-Trees; through the leaves of which branches the spirit will breathe its healing influences upon the nations.

The Lamp and Olive-Trees, then, are an organization of spirit manifested in the Saints and nations of the earth blessed in Abraham and his seed, after the resurrection—the Spirit in full evening tide manifestation. The symbol does not exhibit the details of spiritualization spoken of above, and occurrent between the waking up of the saints, and the establishment of blessedness in all nations consequent upon their enlightenment. The Eternal Spirit, or Jehovah, is to do everything;—but through what organization? By his spirit through the Two Olive-Branches, or Jesus and His Brethren, as represented in the visions of the Apocalypse. If this be understood, the connection between the question and answer in Zech. 4:5, 6, will be readily perceived. The angel asked the prophet, if he knew what the Lamp and Olive-Trees signified? He replied, “No, my Lord.” The angel said no more about them at that time; but proceeded to remark saying, “This is the word of Jehovah unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by power, nor by strength, but BY MY SPIRIT, saith Jehovah of armies.” That is, as indicated in the seventh verse, there will exist contemporary with the resurrection, when Zerubbabel shall stand up again, “a great mountain” in the political world, which is to be reduced to “a plain.” But that this will not result by the power and strength of Israel under any organization they might constitute; for at that crisis their power and strength will have been utterly scattered; but it shall be accomplished by Jehovah’s Spirit, which will raise Zerubbabel and his companions from among the dead, to be the captains of Israel together with the living believers; and will be the strength and power energizing them all to the complete reduction of the Great Political Mountain of the Gentiles to the level of a summer threshing-floor: even to cause to go forth the Head, or Chief Stone, with shoutings of “Grace, grace unto him!”

In the vision we have been considering, the prophet contemplated a great crisis, which may be termed, the fall of GENTILE DOMINION; and the full establishment of THE KINGDOM OF GOD. Such is the future catastrophe of the vision of the Great Mountain, and the Lamp and Olive-Trees. But the vision had not revealed to him any particulars concerning the mountain. Contemporary with his own times, the great Gentile dominion that dominated Jerusalem and Judah, and all the rest of “the Earth” from India to Ethiopia, being one hundred and twenty-seven provinces, under the three presidencies, or “ribs in the mouth, and between the teeth of it” (Dan. 7:5), was that of THE BEAR under the dynasty of Darius the Persian. Zechariah knew from Daniel that this was not the “Great Mountain” to be destroyed before Zerubbabel; but by the Leopard-power that would succeed it. He also knew from Jeremiah, and the history of his own times, that the Lion, standing upon its feet, with a man's heart, was not the constitution of the Mountain Power under which it is to "become a plain before Zerubbabel." This Lion-manifestation of the great mountain had passed away before Zerubbabel had become Governor of Jerusalem. Jehovah had said concerning the Chaldean Babylon that had done evil to Zion in the days of Jeremiah, "Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith Jehovah, which destroyest all the earth; and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a Burnt Mountain. And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be desolations of an Olahm, saith Jehovah"—Jer. 51:25, 26. In this decree was the sentence which has been practically illustrated for the past 2400 years. From the capture of Babylon by Cyrus, the Chaldeans and their city began to decline, until the two have ceased to have any more existence racially, politically, or architecturally, than if they had never been. The site of the old city of Nimrod on the Euphrates is literally "a burnt mountain—a mound of ruins made by fire; and a type of the dominion peculiar to the Chaldee race and dynasty, in all the countries where they formerly ruled in power and great glory. Architecturally, a stone of the ruins has not been taken for the corner and foundations of any new edifices; nor has a Chaldean, by his own prowess, nor by the voice of a people, been made the corner, or foundation stone of a new political institution. This is what has not been for 2400 years; and the prophecy decrees the continuance of the same condition without limit, in saying to the Burnt Mountain, "desolations of an Olahm shalt thou be, saith Jehovah"—an Olahm, which began with the building of Babel, and ended with the fall of Belshazzar, Lucifer Son of the Dawn, who was hurled from the heavens by Jehovah's "sanctified ones," the Medes and Persians, under Cyrus his Anointed Shepherd—Isai. 13; 14; 44:28; 45:1-4.

Many of Zechariah and Haggai's countrymen, who had witnessed the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple of Solomon by the Chaldeans, had lived to see the fall of Nebuchadnezzar's dynasty, and the completion of the new temple, which was finished shortly after Zechariah had the vision of the Lamp and Olive-Trees—Hag. 2:3. They knew that the Burnt Mountain was among the things of the past; and that Zerubbabel had had nothing to do with its burning, and its downfall from the rocks: what, then, could the eternal spirit mean by the "Great Mountain" he apostrophized, as destined to become a plain before Zerubbabel after his resurrection from among the dead? It was not the Chaldean, nor the Bear, nor the Leopard; for they saw by Daniel that all these were removed by conquest in the ordinary way. What else could it be, then, but that fourth Beast dominion which is to be destroyed by the Saints? To this, then, Zechariah's attention was turned. The dominion was "diverse" from all that preceded it. "It spoke great words against the Most High, and wore out the Saints of the Most High Ones, and thought to change times and laws." This was a very peculiar dominion; and it was judged proper to give the prophet, and his readers, some idea of its origin; of the original of its peculiarity. Hence, the prophecy of the "FLYING ROLL" and "THE EPHAH."

The Harlot of the Ephah.

In Zech. 5:1; the prophet tells us that he "turned." In doing this, he occupied an altered position, which caused him to face new objects. The Lamp and Trees were behind him; and on lifting up his eyes, and looking he beheld "a roll twenty cubits long, and ten cubits broad, flying." On this roll a curse was inscribed; it is, therefore, styled "the curse." The flying of the roll indicated its progress, which became coextensive with the whole earth. The angel's words express this. In telling the prophet what it signified, he said, "This is the curse that goeth forth over the face of all the earth:" not of all the globe; but of "all the earth" in the sense of the phrase as it is used in Dan. 2:39; 4:22. In these places, the dominion of Nebuchadnezzar is said to extend "to the end of the earth;" and the brazen kingdom of the Greeks to "bear rule over all the earth:" the extent, however, of these two dominions was unequal; and neither of them included the countries now known as China, Burmah, Central India, Russia, Germany, Italy, Spain, France, Belgium, the British Isles, and other countries. We need not, therefore, look for something coextensive with the globe as the significance of the symbol; but coextensive with that section of it over which the subject of the symbol prevails. This is “all the earth” in relation to it, though of very limited extent in regard to the globe at large.

The roll contained cursing on both sides upon certain criminals designated as thieves and perjurers. These were not common criminals; but “the prophets that steal my words, saith Jehovah, every one from his neighbor, and use their tongues, and say, “He saith”—Jer. 23:30. These prophets were not only thieves, but also swearers—they invoked the name of the Lord falsely. “Both the prophet and the priest were profane; yea, in my house have I found their wickedness, saith Jehovah.” This was the moral condition of the leaders of the Jews who caused them to err, and brought the Chaldean desolation upon them, from which a remnant had just been saved. The roll, therefore, which Zechariah saw, related not to the past, but to the future; when the prophets and priests in Jehovah’s house should become thieves and swearers falsely by his name. In due time the curses of the roll would be brought forth upon them to their utter destruction—“they shall be consumed, together with the timber and stones of their house”—Zech. 5:4.

The resemblance of these ecclesiastical thieves and false invokers of Jehovah’s name, is an “Ephah going forth.” It is the measure of their wickedness, which, when filled up, would cause them to be brought forth from their land, as their fathers were. “This ephah is their resemblance over all the earth.” But their wickedness which filled the measure is personified by a Woman, who is confined within the measure by a leaden weight, indicative of their being destined for the furnace of Jehovah’s anger, which should blow upon them like fire, and melt them as lead—Ezek. 22:18–22. A measure of wickedness subjected to the melting fury of Jehovah inscribed upon the sides of the roll is the signification of the Talent of Lead, the Woman, the Ephah, and the Roll. But, in order to show whose wickedness is contained within the ephah, Ezekiel’s Two Women are attached by the Spirit to the ephah. They were seen by Zechariah “lifting up the ephah, between the earth and the heavens;” that is, exalting wickedness to high places. These women are Aholah, or Samaria, and Aholibah, or Jerusalem—Ezek. 23:4, 5; the two capitals put representatively for the nation. At a future period of their history, Zechariah saw them in vision, “going forth,” and “carrying the ephah,” or measure of their wickedness, with them into the land of the enemy, that rends them with its “great iron teeth”—the land of their captivity, where they build for their wickedness “a house which should be established upon its own foundation;”—a house destined, with its occupants, to be consumed “to the timber and stones thereof.”

The two women are represented with wings, like the wings of a stork. Moses classed the stork with unclean birds; so that for them to have such wings, shows that they were lewd, or unclean, women or communities. The stork is also a bird of passage, migrating from one country to another, at an appointed time; hence the women-bearers of the ephah being storklike in their means of flight, were to migrate at an appointed time from the land of their uncleanness. The last feature of the symbol to be named is that “the wind was in their wings.” Wind is air in motion. When birds fly the air fills their wings, and eddies into them, so as to waft them onwards in the course of flight. The wings of the two women indicate that they were fugitive; and being storklike, as we have said, that they were unclean and migratory. But wings are of no use without air to fill them; and no bird can pass through the air without setting it in motion, or producing wind. A bird could not fly in vacuo. Hence these unclean, and fugitively migratory communities must be propelled by wind. What is “wind” in relation to such? “Terrors,” says Job, “pursue my soul as the wind”—30:15. In Jer. 4:11–13, the coming in of an army swiftly and fiercely, destroying all before them, is expressed by a dry wind, and a full wind. Thus, “It shall be said to this people and to Jerusalem, A dry wind of the high places in the wilderness toward the daughter of my people, not to fan, nor to cleanse: even a full wind from those places shall come unto me. Now also will I give sentence against them. Behold, he (the Destroyer of the Gentiles) shall come up as clouds, and his chariots as a whirlwind: his horses are swifter than eagles. Woe unto us! for we are spoiled.” This was the kind of wind that was in the storklike wings of the two ephah-bearing women. They were borne on the wings of the wind, into the land of the spoiler.

Here, then, in the vision of the Roll Flying, and the Ephah, was a symbolical representation to Zechariah of a captivity of Jerusalem and Samaria, in a period of judgment subsequently to his time. Hence, in searching out the meaning of the vision, we have to consult the history of the Jews posterior to the times of the prophet, and to ask of it this question—What “going forth” or captivity, on account of wickedness, has happened to Judah, since her return from the seventy years in Babylon? The only answer that history gives, and therefore the only answer that can be given, is, the “going forth,” compelled by that dry and full-destroying wind which swept over the land as a whirlwind when the legions of the LITTLE HORN OF THE GOAT came from the eastern frontiers of the empire; and planted their Eagles before the walls of Jerusalem, under VESPASIAN and TITUS. It was the prophecy of Daniel in ch. 8:9–12, 23–25; 9:26, 27, symbolically reproduced before the mind of Zechariah; and embodied by the Lord Jesus in his denunciations of the ecclesiastical thieves and perjurers, who “filled up the measure” or EPHAH “of their fathers” in crucifying him, in rejecting and perverting the glad tidings of Jehovah’s Kingdom and Name; and in imprisoning, banishing, and killing the apostles whom he sent to them: so that upon Jerusalem and Samaria, with all that adhered to their wickedness, personified in the Apocalypse as “that woman, Jezebel, who styles herself a prophetess, teaching and seducing the Lord’s servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols”—ch. 2:20 :—upon her came all the righteous blood shed upon the land, from the blood of righteous Abel even to the blood of Zechariah, son of Barachus, whom they slew in the siege between the temple and the altar all came upon this generation—Matt. 23:32–36.

But the wind in their wings was not to fan nor to cleanse, but to spoil, and send the women and their wickedness of the ephah, forth from the land they had defiled. That “wicked generation” was as a man exorcised of an unclean spirit; but afterwards repossessed of one seven times more wicked. John the Baptist had ministered to all “Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jerusalem,” the immersion of repentance, on the confession of their sins; and many of the Pharisees and Sadducees even came to be baptized—Matt. 3:5–7. This was a great national repentance; a casting out of the unclean spirit—an emptying, sweeping, and garnishing of the house of Judah, which now waited for the manifestation of the King of Israel, whom John proclaimed to be in their midst, though unknown to him and them. But when their attention was directed to Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Mary,—who was claimed by a voice from heaven, and designated by the descending Spirit in dovelike form, as Son of God, they “saw no form nor comeliness; no beauty in him, that they should desire him.” This national feeling of disappointment was aggravated by the rulers, whose hypocrisy he unveiled and denounced. The old spirit of evil, sevenfold increased, effected its entrance into the house of Judah, and dwell there. Under its inspiration, Jesus was despised and rejected; they hid their faces from him, and esteemed him not. They oppressed and afflicted him; and though he had borne their griefs, and carried their sorrows, healing their diseases; yet they scourged, imprisoned, and ignominiously crucified him between thieves—Isai. 53. Thus Jerusalem, that killed the prophets, and stoned those that were sent unto her, when she had added to her crimes the death of Jesus, and the iniquity of the subsequent forty years, had attained to the consummation of transgression; and nothing remained but for “her house to be left to her desolate.” So that, though the first of that generation was bad enough, its last condition was worse. In the green tree they had crucified the Holy and the Just One; in the dry, there was no abomination they eschewed. The ephah was filled, and the lead for the furnace rested upon it, to be melted when the fire should be kindled in Zion.

But before the fire was kindled, Jerusalem and Samaria had received the word of the Lord Acts 8:14: 5:28; 6:7. They did not, however, long continue faithful; but began to steal the words, and to swear falsely by the name of the Lord. They began to teach contrary to the wholesome words of the Lord Jesus; and to assume authority in rivalry of the apostles themselves. They were opposed to the glad tidings of the kingdom being preached to any but Jews; but not being able to prevent it, they contended that all Gentiles ought to be circumcised, and to keep the law of Moses, as well as to believe the gospel and be baptized, or they could not be saved—1 Thess. 2:16; Acts 15:1–5.

These Judaizers were particularly troublesome to the apostles. They commended themselves and gloried after the flesh, saying that they were Hebrews, and Israelites, and the seed of Abraham, and apostles, and ministers of Christ—2 Cor. 10:12; 11:13, 18, 22. But Paul says that they were false apostles, deceitful workers, and ministers of Satan, who perverted the truth, and preached another Jesus, another Spirit, and another Gospel; and that therefore they were accursed—Gal. 1:6–9; 2:4; 4:17; 6:4. These accursed Judaizers were indefatigable in exalting themselves to the exclusion of Paul and the other apostles. Peter, James, John, and Jude are very hot against them in their epistles; and in the letters to the seven ecclesias, they are denounced as pretended apostles, Nicolaitans, the Synagogue of Satan, holders of the doctrine of Balaam, Jezebel the pseudo-prophetess, Satan, liars, and so forth. They were evil men and seducers, deceiving and being deceived; having forsaken the right way; and therefore “cursed children.” These were the “false prophets” that Jesus predicted would arise, and deceive many. The effect of their teaching was to cause the spread of iniquity in all the cities of the land; and because of this the love of the many became cold; and the congregations in Judea became as apostate as the faithless generation whose carcasses fell in the wilderness. Jerusalem and Samaria had again earned for themselves the character of Ezekiel’s Aholah and Aholibah, two women of lewd and treacherous demeanor. The Judaizers had corrupted them, and nothing remained but for them to be brought forth from the land with judgment, according “to the curse,” or Roll in flight.

When the Apostasy in Judea was fully matured, the Ephah contained the Woman under the Talent of Lead; and when the Mosaic Law and institutions had vanished away as the result of the desolation of the Temple, all that were not slain or imprisoned, became sojourners in the lands of the Little Horn of the Goat. This national dispersion of the Jews was the flight of the two women into the countries of the Fourth Beast dominion, then pagan. In their flight, the Judaic Apostasy from the Christian Faith was not left in Judea, to grow up into a papacy there. But having been formed and organized in that country, and propagated from that centre, it was expelled from thence, and driven by the national calamity, the wind in the storklike wings of the two women, out of Canaan, that “they might build for her a house in the land of Shinar.”

This saying connects the Judaic Apostasy with the Babylon of the Apocalypse—that “they,” the Harlot-Judaizers of Judea and Samaria, “might build for her,” the Wickedness, or Falsehood, יִשְׁעָה rishah, systematized by them, and symbolized by the Ephah, Woman, and Lead, they bore with them in their flight, “a house,” or kingdom, “in the land of Shinar,” into which they were expelled. The house of Judah, in which Christianity was born and nourished, and transformed by “false brethren” into a system of falsehood, had been demolished. If this had not come to pass, they would, doubtless, in process of time, have got the upper hand in the Jewish State; and have built for their Harlot of the Ephah a kingdom in the native land of Christianity. But the demolition of Judah’s Commonwealth, and the dispersion of all Jewish communities from Judea and Samaria, compelled the adherents of the Harlot of the Ephah, or Jezebel the Prophetess, to build for her a house in some other region than the Holy Land. This other region is styled in Zech. 5:11, אֶרֶץ שִׁנְעָר eretz Shinar. This phrase is as symbolical, or representative, as the ephah, the woman, the lead, and so forth; and consequently is no more to be interpreted of the Shinar where Nimrod flourished, and his contemporaries built the Tower of Babel, than that “Ephah” is to be interpreted of three pecks and three pints; or the woman therein, of a literal woman shut up in a three-peck measure under a cover of lead. The literal and typical land of Shinar was that country into which Aholah and Aholibah had gone forth, because of profanity and falsehood against the Mosaic Law; and from which they had returned before Zechariah saw the vision of the Harlot of the Ephah. That was the Shinar of the past—the Shinar of the Chaldeo-Babylonian Olahm, beginning with Nimrod and ending with Belshazzar. The Chaldeans, the rod of chastisement in Jehovah’s hand, had blindly punished Judah and her companions for their apostasy from Moses; and had afterwards been punished in turn for their own crimes by the Medes and Persians. Thus, the Chaldeans being set aside, Judah and the nations entered upon a new cycle. The judgment on Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, and the judgment on Babylon by Cyrus, had avenged the past. A new era was now commenced, as indicated in Jehovah’s words by Haggai, saying, “Consider, now, from this day and forward; from the four and twentieth of the ninth month from the day that the foundation of Jehovah’s temple was laid, consider. Is the seed yet in the barn? As yet the vine, and the fig-tree, and the pomegranate and the olive-tree have not brought forth: from this day will I bless”—ch. 2:19. Judah was thus invited to faithfulness, and consequent blessedness. Nevertheless, Jehovah, foreseeing that, when Messiah should appear among them, and cause that system of truth to be proclaimed, which was the great burden of the Law and the Prophets, they would become more wickedly apostate even by sevenfold than when carried off the land to Babylon,—revealed it to Zechariah in the vision of the Harlot of the Ephah, who should dwell in a future Shinar, antitypical in its relations to Judah and her Apostasy from Jehovah to the Shinar of the past.

The word Shinar is derived from the nouns shain, a tooth, and ar, an enemy; it means, therefore, Enemy’s Tooth; as Shinab signifies Father’s Tooth. Hence the phrase eretz Shinar, means “the Land of the Enemy’s Tooth.” This was a very appropriate appellation for the region into which the Harlot of the Ephah was to be transplanted; and to acquire a house set up upon the foundation of her own wickedness. The Fourth Beast of Daniel’s vision, the beast of the “GREAT IRON TEETH,” had been a wind in the storklike wings of the two women by whom the Harlot of the Ephah was carried forth; and the testimony of the Apocalypse, as we have already seen, reveals her subsequent existence with all the impudence of a harlot and pretended prophetess, in the midst of the Seven Ecclesias of Asia Minor. This was a province of the dominion of the Great Iron Teeth; the enemy of Jews by nature, and of Jews by grace; in other words, the land of the enemy’s tooth, or Shinar’s land, where “Babylon the Great” was to be built up for Jezebel, the Harlot of the Ephah, by those “who say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie, and are of the Synagogue of Satan”—Apoc. 2:9; 3:9—the two women that carry the Ephah.

When John was in Patmos, the Judaic Apostasy as leaven was leavening the whole lump. It was on this account that the seven letters were written to Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea. It was an era of contending elements, from which a new civil and ecclesiastical order of things was to “be established, and set upon her own foundation in the land of the Great Iron Teeth.” At the epoch of the Apocalypse, the Iron Teeth were a pagan power; and ready to rend all that were not pagans. The Jews were divided between the Synagogue and the Church; and though the former boasted in Moses, and the latter in Jesus, the Iron Teeth regarded them all as Jews, and was the enemy of both. But in John’s day, the Jews of the Church were divisible into two classes; first, those who were Jews inwardly without regard to flesh; and secondly, those who said they were Jews, but were liars. The first class were in scriptural fellowship with the apostle, but rapidly falling into the minority; so that in Sardis, for example, only “a few names” remained undefiled. It was the second class of Jews that constituted the great majority of those who passed current by the name of Christian. It was these who labored indefatigably in building a house for the Harlot of the Ephah. They became a powerful political faction in the land of the enemy; and having found a warrior to their mind in Constantine, they placed themselves under his leadership; and in A.D.324, became the sole ruling power “in the land of Shinar” as defined.

The twelfth chapter of the Apocalypse opens with the exhibition of Jezebel the Prophetess, tricked out with the paraphernalia of royalty—not the royalty of the Kingdom of God, but the royalty of “the Twelve Ceasars.” In this chapter, the two classes of Jews are necessarily comprehended in the same symbol until the birth of the Man Child, after which a separation ensues; or rather, is symbolically manifested. Those who are Jews inwardly are represented by the fugitive woman, a persecuted community, defended by “the earth,” and nourished in the wilderness for 1260 years. But the Jezebel faction, commonly styled “Catholic,” and “Holy Catholic Church,” had become the Harlot of the State. Her palace was built in the land of the enemy’s tooth; for the Fourth Beast dominion had become her habitation to dwell in.

But she was not content to be subject to the civil power. She aimed to be THE STATE; and the State she at length became. Her growth was rapid, and her power became supreme over the Kings of the earth. She is brought out in this relation in Apoc. 17 and 18. There she is seen in her house or kingdom, as the Great Harlot, ruling over many peoples, multitudes, nations, and their Kings; drunk with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the witnesses of Jesus; and saying, “I sit queen, and am not bereft, and sorrow can not at all behold.” Such is the Harlot of the Ephah in the apocalyptic manifestation of Zechariah’s vision. She is a ruling element in that “Great Mountain” which is to become a plain before Zerubbabel, according to the vision of the Lamp and Olive Branches—the Anointed Ones that stand before the Ruler of all the earth.

The Four Spirits of the Heavens

Having beheld the Harlot of the Ephah keeping house in the land of Shinar, the prophet again informs us, in chap. 6:1, that he “turned”—“I turned,” says he, “and lifted up mine eyes, and looked.” This indicates that his attention was directed to new objects, which he describes in the following words:

“I looked, and behold Four Chariots going forth from between two of the mountains; and the mountains were mountains of brass. In the first chariot red horses, and in the second chariot black horses; and in the third chariot white horses; and in the fourth chariot spotted horses, and fleet. Then I responded and said to the angel speaking with me, What are these, my lord? And the angel replied and said to me, These are the Four Spirits of the Heavens going forth from standing by the Ruler of all the earth. The black horses which are in that are going forth to the land of the north, and the white went forth to follow them; and the spotted went forth to the land of the south. And the fleet ones went forth; and they asked to go for to run to and fro through the earth: and he said, Go, run to and fro through the earth! So they ran to and fro in the earth.

“Then he proclaimed to me, and spake unto me saying, Behold, those going forth to the land of the north have caused my Spirit to rest in the land of the north.”

Here is an amplification of the vision of the Two Olive-Branches, or Anointed Ones, that stand by the Ruler of all the earth. The reader will perceive that the Two Branches and the Four Chariots and their Horses, all relate to the same agents, by comparing Zech. 4:14 with ch. 6:5. In these places they are all said to “stand by the Ruler of all the earth.” In both these chapters they are represented as symbols of Jehovah’s Spirit—“These,” the chariots and horses, said the angel, “are the Four Spirits of the Heavens going forth from standing by the Ruler of all the earth.” In the first passage they are in the standing position; in the last, they are in motion from thence, on their appointed mission.

These four chariots are the cherubim of glory, which constitute the Chariot of Jehovah. In speaking of the four-faced figures with wings outstretched over the Mercy Seat of the Ark in the Most Holy Place, David styles them in 1 Chron. 28:18, “the Chariot of the Cherubim.” The Spirit of Jehovah rested in the form of a cloud between and upon their wings, from the dedication of Solomon's temple until the Glory took its departure in the days of Ezekiel, and shortly before its destruction by the Chaldeans. Alluding to this cherubic incumbency of the Spirit, David says in Psal. 80:1, "O Shepherd of Israel inhabiting the Cherubim, shine forth. Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh arouse thy might, and come for salvation to us. O Mighty Ones (Elohim), turn us, and cause to shine thy Faces, and we shall be saved." The Cherubim were the typical throne of Jehovah in Jerusalem, before which the High Priest presented himself on the occasion of the annual covering of the sins of the nation.

In the first and tenth chapters of his prophecy, Ezekiel shows what they typify or represent. Let the reader peruse these chapters in connection with Apoc. 4 and 5; and he will find that the cherubim are representative of the Spirit corporealized and manifested in the Saints, the Elohim of Israel—the One Eternal Spirit in multitudinous manifestation. "Whithersoever the Spirit was to go, they went;" "they ran and returned as a flash of lightning;" "and the noise of their wings like the noise of great waters, as the voice of Mighty Ones in their going, the voice of speech, as the noise of a camp."

Zechariah's Four Chariots are identical with these. They represent the resurrected saints in the execution of the judgment written, Ps. 149. There are "four" of them, because there were four faces to the typical golden cherubim of the Ark of the Covenant in the temple; and "four living creatures" in Ezekiel's vision; and "four living creatures" in the Apocalypse; and the reason why there are four, and not three or five, is because in the military organization of Israel the twelve tribes were set off into four camps; the Camp of Judah, the Camp of Reuben, the Camp of Ephraim, and the Camp of Dan. The standard of Judah's camp of host, was a Lion; that of Reuben, a Man; that of Ephraim, an Ox; and that of Dan, an Eagle; and the faces of these four were united in the Two Cherubim of the Most Holy Place; and become the Elohim-Faces of the Eternal Spirit, self-named Jehovah, which stood by the Ruler of all the earth, while he dwelt in them anterior to the Babylonian captivity.

Now, as the Saints, without regard to the accident of their fleshly descent, are all Israelites by adoption through Christ, their organization is based on that of the twelve tribes; so that they come thereby to be represented by the standards of Israel's camps. In vision, the four camps of the Saints, constituting, nevertheless, one encampment, occupy the position of the four camps of Israel in the wilderness—Judah on the east side; Reuben on the south; Ephraim on the west; and Dan on the north. For this reason, Zechariah's Four Chariots are termed "the Four Winds," or Spirits, "of the Heavens;" and in their New Jerusalem symbolization, the Saints' city is said to "lie four square."

The Two Mountains of Brass.

Zechariah saw the four cherubic chariots going forth from between Two Mountains of Brass. This metal connects these mountains, or dominions, with the brazen part of Nebuchadnezzar's Image, the Body and Thighs; and with the "Claws of Brass" pertaining to the Fourth Beast; and the "Band of Iron and Brass" around the Stump of the Babylonian Tree. The two mountains of brass and the two thighs of brass are identical; and represent the Greek Element of the "Great Mountain that is to become a Plain before Zerubbabel, before the Two Anointed Ones, before the Four Chariots, and their horses,—before Israel and the Saints In the days of the Maccabees the two mountains were the Greek Kingdom of Egypt, and the Greek Kingdom of Syria, including Assyria and other adjacent countries; the former styled in Dan. 11 the King of the South; and the latter, the King of the North. Now, though these countries are and will be in other hands than those of people purely and simply Greeks, they are nevertheless regarded in prophecy as the countries of the Brass Dominion; and so designated, as in the place before us. At the epoch of the Four Chariots, that is, just before they are seen going forth, we learn from Daniel and Ezekiel, that there will be two antagonist dominions, the one occupying Egypt and the other Syria and the adjacent countries. The latter is the King of the North, existing on the political map in the Time of the End; and called Gog by Ezekiel: the other, the Kingdom of Egypt. These two mountains of brass will be in a state of war before the going forth of the cherubic chariots; and as Daniel tells us, the Egyptian province of the South Mountain of Brass will “not escape” subjection to the brass dominion of the north—“the land of Egypt shall not escape,” 11:42. This will be the relative position of the two mountains, with the Holy Land between them, the battleground and bone of contention between the two powers, at the going forth of the chariots. But, we may remark here, that though the rulers of the two mountains, or the dominant race, will not be racially Greek, still the North Mountain of Brass will be Greek in its superstition, or State Ecclesiasticism; and the South Mountain also Greek, in the possession of the Greek islands of the Mediterranean and Aegean Seas: being, therefore, Hellenistic, ecclesiastically or geographically, or both, they are dominions of brass, occupying, in relation to the Holy Land, the same political status as the two kingdoms of the Ptolomies and Seleucidae in the days of the Maccabees, or Era of the Asmoneans, 358 years after Zechariah saw the vision of the chariots; and 167 years before the birth Jesus Christ.

Zechariah saw the Four Chariots of Cherubim “going forth from between” these two mountains of political geography. He must, therefore, have seen them going forth from the Holy Land, which occupies that position. They first stand by the Ruler of all the earth as the Two Anointed Ones of the Four Faces. In this position they are the “Four and Twenty Elders,” and the “Four Living Creatures full of Eyes before and behind,” filled with the Spirit as a lamp is filled with oil; and which in them burns before the throne, as “the Seven Spirits of God;” which, when in motion, “are sent forth into all the earth.” But, before they leave their standing position “to run to and fro,” they sing to the Captain of their salvation, “Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the Seals thereof, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us for our God Kings and Priests: and we SHALL reign on the earth.” When they sing this song they are in the land of Judah—Isai. 26:1. They are there as “the kings which are from a Sun’s risings,” to prepare whose “way” the political Euphrates is “dried up”—Apoc. 16:12; and the two mountains of brass are found temporarily occupying the place of its waters.

But Zechariah saw them “going forth.” The wings of the cherubim are their armies; and the Horses of the chariots are the same. “When they stand,” says Ezekiel, “they let down their wings,” which in motion are “as the noise of great waters,” or a multitude of people. They go forth to conquer for themselves their dominion; or, as Daniel expresses it, “to take the kingdom,” to “slay the Fourth Beast, and to destroy his Body;” to “take away his dominion, to consume, and to destroy unto the end.” They “shall reign upon the earth;” but they must first conquer the nations; for the nations will not accept them for kings and priests without compulsion.

The Saints in their career of conquest are the Stream of Fire flowing and issuing from before the Ancient of Days;” they are “the angels of Christ’s power in a fire of flame;” the tormentors of the worshippers of the Beast, and his Image, and the receivers of the mark of his Name, with fire and brimstone in the presence of the Lamb; and the 144,000 redeemed from the earth: the First fruits; who follow the Lamb whither-soever he goeth. They are the chariot wheels of the Spirit, full of eyes, and a burning fire—Dan. 7:9, 10; Apoc. 14:10, 11, 3, 4; 2 Thess. 1:7, 8; Ezek. 1:18.

The Four Chariots in motion are the “called, and faithful, and chosen,” in company with the King of Kings, in actual conflict with the nations of the earth—Apoc. 17:14; and are seen in chap. 19:14, as “the armies in the heaven following the Word of God upon white horses, who smites the nations with the sword of his mouth, and rules them with a rod of iron. They are the war-chariots of the Spirit in the conflict of “the great day of God the universal Ruler”—pantokrator. They invade the north and the south, and then make their expeditions into all other parts of the earth.

The horses of the chariots represent the forces commanded by the Saints, and the colors of the horses, their operations upon their enemies. The chariot horses are not literal horses; for it is written in Hos. 1:7, "I will have mercy upon the House of Judah, and will save them by Jehovah their Elohim, and will not save them by bow, nor by sword, nor by battle, by horses, nor by horsemen;" but "he will make Judah as his goodly horse in the battle"—Zech. 10:3; and "they shall be as mighty ones who tread down in the mire of the streets in the battle; and they shall fight, because Jehovah is with them, and the riders of homes shall be confounded. And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy upon them; and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am Yahweh their Elohim, and will hear them."

This testimony of the Spirit presents us with the grand result accomplished by the issuing forth of the chariots and their homes; namely, the conquest of the enemies of Israel, and the reengraftment of Abraham's descendants into their own national olive tree. This great result must be kept in view in a scriptural exposition of the Apocalypse; for it is the consummation of the mission of the Chariot-Hosts; and the Apocalypse proposes no other development than that so palpably and luminously predicted in all the prophets.

The four chariots, then, in motion, are the Four Living Ones of the Apocalypse, issuing forth at the head of Judah and Joseph against the Gentile dominions of the north and south, that they may "give up" and "keep" no longer "back."—Isaiah 43:6. The chariot-horses are differently colored; The first are red; the second, black; the third, white; and the fourth, grizzled and powerful. They are the same horses that are seen with the ANGEL OF JEHOVAH in Zech. 1:8–11. This Angel in the Apocalypse is entitled "King of kings and Lord of lords," and is prepared for battle with the Ten Horns, or kings of the earth, and their armies.—Apoc. 17:14; 19:21. Hence, Zechariah sees him "riding upon a red horse," and "followed by red horses, grizzled, and white"—their colors indicating the sanguinary and tormenting character of their mission, ultimating in victory and peace.

The import of these colors is plainly set forth in the symbology of the first four Seals. The first of these horses is white, indicating the victorious career of the power represented; for it is said, "he went forth conquering, and to conquer." This, then, is the signification of white. It symbolizes a conquering power.

The horse of the second seal is red. This indicates a state of sanguinary warfare on the earth contemporary with the operations of the red symbol-power. This is evident from what is said of the red horse's rider; as, "it was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another; and there was given unto him a great sword." This indicates a period of much blood shedding, which is fitly represented by red.

The horse of the third seal is black. This color is indicative of famine, or the injuring of the wheat and barley to such an extent as to cause great scarcity, and consequent starvation, with all its hideous accompaniments. When the word of Jehovah spoke to Jeremiah of the grievous famine, he describes the gates of Judah as "black unto the ground." It represents destitution of water in the wells, the absence of rain, and total want of grass.—Jer. 14:1–6. The connection of black with this calamity is also established by the words of Judah's lamentation, saying, "We got our bread with the peril of our lives, because of the sword of the wilderness. Our skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible famine."—Lam. 5:9, 10.

The horse of the fourth seal is chloros, rendered pale. It answers to Zechariah's "grizzled," the black of which is paled by a mixture of white. The seal-horse was of a corpse-like hue; and symbolical of destruction by pestilence, famine, and sword combined.

This being the import of the colors, we may understand that the four chariot-hosts will conquer the world, and establish the sovereignty of the Saints by the judgments of the Deity poured out upon the nations in war, famine, pestilence, and all their terrible concomitants. The grizzled horses are termed also “powerful.” All the chariots are manifestations of power; but the fourth, and last, is preeminently so, the judgments being intensified, and the catastrophe complete.

These things being understood, we are prepared for the answer to Zechariah’s question, “What are these, my Lord?”—What do these four chariots, thus distinguished by the colors of their horses, represent?” The answer given is that they are “the Four Spirits of the heavens going forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth.” That is, the Saints and their forces in their four encampments, to whom the kingdom under the whole heaven is assigned, in movement against their enemies. Before the movement begins, they are standing with the Lord of the whole earth; as John saw them in Apoc. 14:1. “I looked,” saith he, “and, lo! a Lamb stood on Mount Zion, and with him a hundred and forty and four thousand, having his Father’s Name written on their foreheads.” While in the attitude of standing they are awaiting orders from the throne to march against the enemy. While standing, the political expanse is like the physical firmament before the outburst of the earthquake and storm—“still as dry heat impending lightning, as a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest.” During this sultriness, unfanned by breeze or zephyr, the Lord is in his dwelling-place, as an ensign on the mountains, awaiting the result of his manifesto to the world, according as it is written in Isaiah 18:3: “All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the land, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains, tremble; and when he bloweth a trumpet they shall hear. For thus Jehovah saith unto me, I will be still (yet in my dwelling-place I will be without fear) as dry heat impending lightning, as a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest.” While this electrical quiescence is pervading, the good news of the Millennial Aion is being heralded among the nations, and announcing that “the Hour of the Judgment,” which Daniel had predicted was to “sit” upon the four beasts, had come.—Apoc. 14:6, 7. The Four Spirits of the heavens are restrained, that scope may be afforded to the world to show whether it will “fear the Deity and give glory to him,” in joyfully receiving the good news; or whether the chariots of Jehovah must be sent out against the nations; and by the red, black, white, and grizzled judgments of their mission, compel mankind to lay down the arms of their rebellion, and to “wait for his law.” But the latter alternative will assuredly obtain; for “he shall rebuke strong nations afar off” from Jerusalem. He shall rebuke them with his chariots and horses, the four spirits of the heavens; and as the result of it, “they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.”—Mic. 4:3.

Zechariah saw the Saints, as the four spirits of the heavens, “going forth.” John also, in Apoc. 19:14, saw them in their going, as indicated in these words: “and the hosts in the heaven followed the Word of the Deity, upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.” John saw the Faithful and True Word engaged in war against the nations. He saw him riding “a white horse,” the emblem of conquest; while he himself was clothed with a blood-red garment (in Zechariah he sits upon a red horse among the myrtle trees), indicative of his mission to smite the nations, and to tread them in the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of the Almighty Deity. This is to be the result of his going forth with his hosts of the heaven. He is to conquer the Ten Horns, and utterly to destroy the Beast and False Prophet. Zechariah saw the same consummation; for he tells us that the horses, on their return from their expeditions through all the earth, delivered in their report, saying, “Behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest.”—1:11.

But it would seem, and doubtless is the case, that there is an established order after which the conquest of the nations is to be effected. Zechariah seems to intimate that “the north country” will be first invaded; and then “the south country”—that is, north and south in relation to Jerusalem. The brass-mountain of the north is levelled before Zerubbabel by the operations of the black and white horses—by famine and sword; while the brass-mountain of the south becomes a plain, by the judgments of sword, pestilence, and famine, symbolized by the “grizzled.” The north and south being subdued, the time comes “to fly upon the shoulders of the peoples toward the West, and to spoil the children of the east together.”—Isaiah 11:14. This is indicated by “the powerful horses”—the bay, as they are styled in the C.V.—seeking permission to march to and fro through the earth. The answer to the request is, “Go, march ye about in the earth!” “So they marched to and fro through the earth.”

The work of Jehovah’s hosts being consummated in the north and south countries, brings out the accomplishment of the prediction in Isaiah 19:17: “In that day the land of Judah shall be a terror unto Egypt; every one that maketh mention thereof shall be afraid in himself, because of the counsel of Jehovah of hosts, which he hath determined against it.” The prophet then declares the result of the execution of this terrible counsel, namely, the subjugation of Egypt, the establishment of the true religion there, and the deliverance of that portion of Israel living under the oppression of modern Egypt. Referring to these, the Spirit says, “They shall cry unto Jehovah because of the oppressors, and He shall send them a Saviour, even a mighty one, and he shall deliver them.” And, as the consequence of this operation of the grizzled horns, “Jehovah shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know Jehovah in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto Jehovah, and perform it. And Jehovah shall smite Egypt” with the sword that goes out of the mouth of the Faithful and True One.—Apoc. 19:15: “He shall smite and heal it; and they shall return to Jehovah, and he shall be entreated of them, and shall heal them.”

So much for the south country. In respect of the north country under the operation of the black and white horses, the Spirit saith in Micah 5:4, that the Bethlehem-born Ruler of Israel “shall stand and feed in the strength of Jehovah, in the Majesty of the Name of Jehovah his Elohim; and they shall abide: for now shall he be great to the ends of the earth. And this man shall be the peace when the Assyrian shall come into our land, and when he shall tread in our palaces, then shall we raise up against him seven shepherds and eight princes of the man. And they shall waste the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod in the entrances thereof; thus shall he deliver from the Assyrian when he cometh into our land, and when he treadeth in our borders.”

Thus are beaten in pieces the north and the south by the daughter of Zion, whose horn hath become iron, and her hoofs brass. Her four chariots and horses have finally overthrown her enemies, and “consecrated their commerce to Jehovah, and their wealth to the Ruler of all the earth.” Thus Jehovah’s spirit is quieted, and they are at rest. Assyria, Egypt, and Israel will no more vex and annoy one another. No longer under the dominion of ambitious rivals, seeking to increase the glory of their dynasties by international wars and spoliations, their populations will live in peace and good will; and will circulate freely and safely from land to land. Mohammedanism will have been abandoned, and its former devotees will be blessed in Abraham and his seed, the Elohim of Israel. The prophecy of Isaiah will then be complete; for “in that day there will be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and Assyria—a blessing in the midst of the land; whom Jehovah of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.”—Isaiah 19:23–25.

The Four Carpenters, the Four Chariots, the Four Spirits of the heavens, the Four Cherubim of Ezekiel, and the Four Living Ones of the Apocalypse, are all symbolical of the same class of agents—the Eternal Spirit post-resurrectionally corporealized in Jesus and his Brethren, and constituting in the aggregate

יהוה אלהי

, Yahweh Elohim, “the glorious and fearful name” of Deity.—Deut. 28:58. The manifestation of Deity in the chariots and horses is the last of the symbolical visions granted to Zechariah illustrative of “the time of the end.” They leave him in contemplation of “the man whose name is the Branch,” sitting and ruling upon his throne as a priest, and bearing the glory; in other words, he sees the kingdom of David in glorious manifestation, with his descendant occupying the throne; and constituting what the Apocalypse styles “the Kingdom of the Lord and of his Anointed.” This kingdom is the point of convergence whether we take up our position with Zechariah in Jerusalem or with John in Patmos. The latter does, indeed, tell us a few particulars of what shall transpire at “the end, when the son shall deliver up the kingdom to the Father,” but with these excepted, the grand development of the Apocalypse, in common with all the prophets, is the kingdom of God.

The Apocalypse in Malachi.

The Apocalypse is contained in Malachi as well as in all the rest of the prophets; that is, the same development of the divine purpose is exhibited in Malachi’s predictions as in the Patmian revelation. Malachi informs us that “from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same Jehovah’s name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered to his name, and a pure offering: for his name shall be great among the nations, saith Jehovah of hosts.” John testifies the same thing in saying, “every creature which is in the heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for the Aions of the Aions.”—Apoc. 5:13. This is a universal ascription, which ascends from every place as incense and a pure offering to his name, which is “dreadful among the nations” at that time.

This name is not dreadful now, but a by-word in the lips of the profane. This, however, will not always be. Malachi directs our attention to “the day of the coming of the Messenger of the Covenant” as to a day that few will be able to abide. “Who,” saith he, “may abide the day of his coming? And who shall stand when he appeareth? For he is like a refiner’s fire, and like fuller’s soap.” In this day men will be taught to venerate this name, and not to take it lightly into their lips. The Apocalypse treats of this same great and terrible day of the Lord’s coming, and of its effect upon the wicked: “Behold he comes with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they who pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.”—Apoc. 1:7. And, “behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.”—ch. 16:15. And again, “Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.”—ch. 22:12. And when this coming is manifested, “the Ark of God’s Testament” is seen; and there are “lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.”—Apoc. 11:19. These judgments make the day a dreadful one; and, as Malachi testifies, a day burning as an oven, in which the proud and wicked doers of the epoch shall be destroyed as stubble, and neither root nor branch of them be left behind. This total and utter extirpation of the world-rulers is attributed to the saints both by Malachi and John in their postresurrectional operations. Malachi predicts their resurrection in these words, saying, “Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his beams; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall.” Being thus raised, the work they have to do is expressed in the words, “and ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do, saith Jehovah of hosts.” The Apocalypse teaches the same doctrine. It sets forth the prereginal resurrection of the saints, and their postresurrectional judgment of the world-rulers and their hosts. “Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection * * * they shall be priests of the Deity and of the Anointed; and shall reign with him a thousand years.” Having part in the first resurrection, “they sit upon thrones, and judgment is given to them.” The execution of the judgment appointed puts them in possession of the thrones; and in executing the judgment written, they bind the Dragon, cast the Beast and the False Prophet into a lake of fire, overthrow Babylon, and torment with famine, pestilence, and sword, the worshippers of the beast and his image, and the receivers of his mark in their forehead, or in their hand. Thus apocalyptically

“they tread the wicked as ashes under the soles of their feet,” as foretold by Malachi; and by conquest establish their right to rule all nations as kings of God, seeing that they will have subdued them by his spirit energizing them with the might of omnipotence.

Thus, then, from this summary of the prophets, it must be evident to the reader, I think, that the doctrine of Messiah’s reign on earth for a long season did not originate with the Apocalypse; but is a doctrine of far greater antiquity, being the teaching of the Spirit from the beginning, and consequently, the faith of God’s elect in all ages of the world. When the spirit in the prophets revealed the contents of their writings, he signified in what he inspired them to write, more, or deeper things, than they were able to fathom. They did not see into all that was testified about the sufferings of the Christ, and the glory that should follow those sufferings; nor did they comprehend “what manner of time” it was they noted down in the periods they recorded concerning them. This was unquestionably the truth of the matter from what Peter says in 1 Ep. 1:8, and Paul in Rom. 16:25. These deep things of the Spirit, though written in the prophetic Scriptures, constituted “the wisdom of the Deity in a mystery hidden” from the prophets, and the angels likewise. This mystery pertaining to the sufferings of the Christ, and the glory that should follow, was unfolded by the Spirit in the preaching and writings of the apostles; and constitutes, in its exposition, “the Revelation of the Mystery.” But while the apostles had full comprehension of this mystery, they did not understand “what manner of time” was to divide “the sufferings of Christ” from “the glory that should follow.” They thought the glory and kingdom were immediately to follow the resurrection of Jesus; hence the question they put to him: “Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?” But they were told that “it was not for them to know the periods, or fixed times, which the Father had put in his own power.” With the exception of John, they never did know them. It was reserved to him in Patmos to be made acquainted with them apocalyptically. The “manner of time” hidden from both prophets and apostles is exhibited in the Apocalypse, which embodies both the mystery of the sufferings, the mystery of the glory, and the mystery of the time. These are all exhibited, or indicated, by sign or symbol. the sufferings of the personal and corporate Christ are represented by “a Lamb as it had been slain,” and slain souls under the altar. The glory is symbolized by the four living ones in the midst of the throne, and by the New Jerusalem; and the time during which the sufferings are to continue, antecedent to the manifestation of the glory, are typified by 1260 days, 42 months, “a time, times, and a half,” “three days and a half,” “five months,” “an hour, a day, a month, and a year,” “half an hour,” “a third part of a day,” “a third part of a night,” “an hour.” These are times in miniature, in which the less is representative of the greater, which is the real or true time.

Hence, then, I should define the Apocalypse to be a symbolical revelation of the hidden mystery of the Deity originally declared to the prophets. It was declared to them as an enigma which they could not unravel. The Apocalypse is preeminently the solution of that enigma, especially in regard to the “times and seasons,” which, since it’s communication to John, are no longer reserved by the Father in his own power. By his revelation to John he has put them in the power of his servants, for whose benefit they were specially revealed. These servants have believed the glad tidings, and obeyed the law of the faith, which exhibits to their minds the kingdom and glory of the Deity. How long to the appearing of that kingdom? This is a question in which they are greatly interested, for their redemption from this evil world is dependent upon its judicial manifestation. To this inquiry a testimony from the Apocalypse responds, that “in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall sound, even the MYSTERY of the Deity shall be finished, as he hath declared the glad tidings to his servants the prophets.”—Apoc. 10:7. This seventh and last trumpet will not cease to sound until the things I have summarized from the prophets shall all be accomplished. They are the glad tidings, or, as Paul expresses it, “the gospel of God, which he promised afore by his prophets in the holy scriptures.” Study the prophets, then, for the Apocalypse reveals the mystery they contain, and is therefore enrooted deeply in all the ramifications of their testimony.

SECTION 2.

THE MYSTERY OF GODLINESS APOCALYPSE IN SYMBOL.

"I am the First and the Last, and the Living One; and I was dead, and behold I am living for the Aions of the Aions; Amen."

The Apocalypse being a revelation of the mystery hidden in the prophetic writings, it is to be presumed that it would certainly not omit to exhibit that cardinal element thereof, styled by Paul "the mystery of godliness," which he says is "great." We find it, therefore, introduced to the attention of the reader in such terms and phrases as God, Jesus Christ, "He who is, and who was, and who is coming," "the Seven Spirits which is before his throne," "the Father of Jesus Christ," "the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending, the Lord, who is, and who was, and who is coming, the Almighty," "I am the First and the last, and the living one, and was dead, and behold I am living for the Aions of the Aions." These are very remarkable, and, apart from revelation, very mysterious and impenetrable sayings. There is One who speaks of himself in them as "I;" and he saith of this "I" that he was "the First," "the Alpha," "the Beginning," "the Lord the Almighty." This is intelligible enough, and we readily comprehend that the Deity, the self-existing, and first cause of all things, is meant. We also recognize in the terms the epithets bestowed by the Deity upon himself in the prophets, and with a claim to them as his exclusively. But when we come to read the Apocalypse, we find the same terms applied to one who saith, "I am the First who was dead." This would very naturally suggest the inquiries, "Did the Deity, who is the creator and upholder of the universe, ever die? And while he was dead, how was that universe sustained? And, seeing that death is an utter destitution of all power, how was life restored to the dead creator of all things? These are questions which obtrude themselves upon the thoughtful in view of these apocalyptic sayings. Apart from revelation they are unanswerable, for "the world by wisdom knows not the Deity;" and none by searching can find him out. Philosophy, then, cannot help us; for philosophy is the system of speculation elaborated by the thinking of the flesh, independently of revelation. A brain destitute of God's thoughts is unenlightened, and, of necessity, incapable of thinking, speaking, and writing correctly concerning Deity, either in relation to his essence, mode of existence, system of manifestation, purposes, or requirements. We are compelled, therefore, from very helplessness, to accept God's own account of these things, which is revelation, or to remain in hopeless ignorance of the truth. There is then a mystery in the premises, which, as the apostle saith; "without controversy is great." By "mystery" is meant a secret—a secret which the Deity only could reveal. He has made it known, yet the revealed secret continues to be styled a mystery, in reference to what it was originally. Paul terms it "the Mystery of Godliness." In particularizing it, he shows that by "godliness" he means, a visible manifestation of Deity, testified and believed by men. In specifying it, he saith of the mystery, that it consisted, when revealed, of "Deity manifested in flesh, perfected in spirit, seen of messengers, preached unto the nations, believed on in the world, received up in glory."—1 Tim. 3:16. Here is Deity set forth by implication in two states—Deity before manifestation, and Deity in manifestation. Does the fact of manifestation transform Deity into that which is not Deity? Certainly not. Or, is not Deity in manifestation as much Deity as before he made himself visible? Certainly he is. The nature of the medium through which the manifestation is made does not change the nature of that which is manifested. Deity is Deity though he manifest his wisdom and power through mortal flesh. The mortality of the flesh does not necessitate nor imply the mortality of the Deity; nevertheless, Deity becoming flesh, and constituting a manifested individual, if that individual die, and be raised again to life, and Deity again enter into combination with the resurrected body, so as to transform it into substance like the divine essence; in other words, to make that spirit which was before flesh, and so exalt it to the Father, Deity may say, with the strictest propriety, “I am the First who was dead;” and yet, abstractly from the medium of manifestation, did never die.

The mystery of godliness is practically exhibited in the incarnation of the Word in the conception and anointing of Jesus; in the perfecting of his body at its resurrection, when Deity in Spirit was as visible to the apostles as Deity in Flesh had been to them before the crucifixion. They preached Deity in Spirit seen of men as a testimony to be believed: it was believed, and that extensively, producing, through the teaching predicated upon it, the most remarkable moral effects “Believed on in the world,” saith Paul, “received up in glory.” Deity in Spirit having sojourned on earth with the sons of men for forty days, “received up in glory,” where he has been, for the past eighteen hundred years, awaiting the appointed time to reappear in the world, not as Deity in Spirit manifested in one man only, but in “a multitude which no man can number”—a multitude, whose symbol is exhibited in the Son of man in the midst of the Seven Lightstands, the Head of whom is Jesus.—Apoc. 1:11–18.

The Apocalypse, like the prophecy of Ezekiel contains mareoth Elohim, “VISIONS OF Elohim:” that is, of Deity in Spirit multitudinously manifested. Ezekiel saw this in symbol, but did not understand the mystery of their development from the sons of Adam; for the great exemplar, Jesus, had not then solved the problem in his own person. The revelation of the mystery through him and the apostles has explained the principles, and shown how flesh may become spirit, or how a dark-minded pagan may be transformed into a manifestation of Deity in spirit. These principles in manifestation are individualized; and being so exhibited, they are symbolized, or indicated by signs, and graphically described in the imagery and writing of the Apocalypse. Hence, the mystery of godliness being so intimately blended with the visions of John, its signs and descriptions can not be intelligibly expounded apart from, or independently of, the scripture teaching concerning Deity. I shall therefore devote this section of my exposition to such an explanation as will, I think, enable the reader to comprehend the remarkable terms and phrases of the Apocalypse chosen by the Spirit for the communication of his ideas upon this deeply interesting and highly important subject. First, then, I propose to consider it under the aspect of

1. Deity before manifestation in Flesh;
2. Deity manifested in Flesh; and,
3. Deity manifested in Spirit.

1. Of Deity before Manifestation in Flesh.

The apostle who had the honor of receiving the Apocalypse for transmission to the servants of the Deity, has called our attention to the consideration of the fountain and origin of life and power in what is commonly called the gospel according to John. He there points us to a certain commencement, and saith, “In the beginning was ho logos, and the Logos was with the Theos, and Theos was the Logos.” In the Common Version this reads, “In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.” We may see from this the propriety of God styling himself “the First,” “the Beginning,” and “he who is and who was.” He was from the beginning, whether that beginning be referred to the creation narrated by Moses, or a remoter beginning before ever the earth was; and none but a fool, the Spirit saith, would affirm that God is not.

Though John introduces two words into the text, he is careful to inform us that they are not representative of two Gods contemporary with the beginning, but of one only; for he expressly says that

“Theos was the Logos.”

In this text, then, there is ONE DEITY, and he is styled THE Logos. This word signifies, “the outward form by which the inward thought is expressed and made known; also, the inward thought or reason itself. So that the word comprehends both the ideas of reason and speech.” Hence, by John styling Him the Logos, it was equivalent to affirming that he was a reasoner and a revelator: or, as Daniel declared to Nebuchadnezzar, that “the Elahh, in the heavens revealed secrets,” even “the deep and secret things.” But was the Deity reason and speech only? In other words, an abstraction independent of substance; or, as some affirm, “without body or parts?” To preserve us from such a supposition, John informs us that “the Logos was with the Theos.” Here was companionship and identity—“the Logos was with the Theos, and Theos was the Logos.” Never was there a conceivable point of time, or eternity, when the one existed without the other. “Jehovah possessed me,” saith the Logos, “in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up from olahm (the hidden period) from the beginning, or ever the earth was. When there were no depths I was brought forth; when there were no fountains abounding with water. Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth: while as yet he had not made the earth, nor the open places, nor the highest part of the dust of the world. When he prepared the heavens I was there; when he set a compass upon the face of the deep; when he established the clouds above; when he strengthened the fountains of the deep; when he gave to the sea his decree that the waters should not pass his commandment; when he appointed the foundations of the earth: then I was by him as one brought up with him (the Logos was with the Theos): and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him; rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth, and my delights with the sons of men.”—Prov. 8:22.

No Logos, then there would be no Theos; and without Theos, the Logos could have no existence. This may be illustrated by the relation of reason, or intelligence and speech, to brain, as affirmed in the proposition, No brain,—no thought, reason, nor intelligence. Call the brain Theos; and thought, reason, and understanding intelligently expressed, Logos; and the relation and dependence of Theos and Logos, in John’s use of the terms, may readily be conceived. Brain-flesh is substance, or the hypostasis, that underlies thought; so Theos is substance which constitutes the substratum of Logos. Theos is the substance called Spirit; as it is written, “Theos is Spirit,” and he who uttered these words is declared to be himself both substance and spirit.

But why is the Divine Substance called Theos? It is a name reclaimed by the Septuagint translators from the heathen; and from them appropriated by the apostles, who wrote in Greek. The derivations proposed of the word are various. The most probable seems to be that which deduces it from the verb, theo, to place, appoint, constitute, ordain. Phurnutus the Stoic, who wrote in the reign of Nero, says, “It is probable that theoi (the gods) were so called from thesis, position or placing; for the ancients took those for gods or theoi whom they found to move in a certain regular and constant manner, thinking them the causes of the changes in the air, and of the conservation of the universe; these then are theoi or gods, which are the disposers (theteres) and formers of all things.” And long before Phurnutus, Herodotus had written that the Pelasgi, the ancient inhabitants of Greece, “called them theoi, because the gods had disposed or placed in order all things and all countries.”

Theos, then, in the singular, may reasonably be supposed to have been adopted by the sacred writers of the New Testament, as an appropriate designation for the Divine Substance, as the disposer and “former of all things;” especially as he claims to be so in Jer. 10:16. With a softer pronunciation, that is, by changing th into d, and o into u, the Romans borrowed this word from the Greeks, and called it Deus, from which we derive our word Deity. In my translation I have used this word wherever Theos occurs in the original, except in two places in which the word “God” will be found for the sake of the metre—ch. 4:9, 10. Deity, then, declares the Divine Substance to be the Disposer and Former of all things; a truth which the Spirit in the scriptures is careful to place prominently before the minds of men. A few instances will show this. "This people (Israel) I formed for myself. I am Yahweh that maketh all things, that stretcheth forth the heavens ALONE; that spreadeth abroad the earth BY MYSELF. I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I, Yahweh, do all these things. I have made the earth, and created man upon it: I, even my hands, have stretched out the heavens, and all their host have I commanded. Thus saith Yahweh, He the Elohim that formed the earth and made it; He hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: I, Yahweh; and none else"—Isaiah 43:21; 45:7, 12, 18. He is truly "the Former of all things," alone and by himself; hence his title of THE DEITY, which suggests this great truth to all who are acquainted with him.

As to the Anglo-Saxon word "God," it is a term that may be applied to any one of goodness and authority without profanity. God is a contraction of the word Good. Hence, God signifies the Good One; and was perhaps suggested to our ancestors by the saying of Jesus, that "there is none good but the Theos," or Deity. But the Deity has not chosen to designate himself by this term. The idea of goodness is not contained in the word Theos; and therefore I do not use it as its representative.

And here it may be remarked that the seventy Israelites who translated the Hebrew scriptures into Greek for the king of Egypt, used the word Theos as equivalent for Ail, and Elohim; the first a noun singular; and the last, plural. By so doing, the true import of a multitude of passages was obscured. This defect of the Septuagint has been transferred to the English Version by rendering them indiscriminately God, which does not at all express the signification of the Hebrew terms. Theos comes nearer to these than God; for a being might be Good, but far from mighty for the formation of all things; but he could not be theos, the Disposer and Former of all things, without being Ail in the almightiest sense of the word. The Seventy, however, erred in not respecting the Hebrew distinction of singular and plural. In adopting Theos for Ail, they ought to have written theoi for Elohim in the plural. But they did this evil that good might come; at least, so it is said. "The Seventy," says Parkhurst, "have constantly (very few passages excepted) translated the plural name elohim, when used for the true God, by the singular Theos, never by the plural, theoi. In so doing one may at first sight think them blamable. But let it be considered that, at the time the Septuagint translation was made, the Greek idolatry was the fashionable superstition, especially in Egypt under the Ptolemys, and that according to this, their gods were regarded as Demons, that is, intelligent beings totally separate and distinct from each other; and that consequently, had the Greek translators rendered the name Elohim by the plural Theoi, they would thereby have given the grecizing heathen an idea of the true God, inconsistent with the Unity of the Divine Essence, and conformable to their own polytheistic notions; whereas, by translating it Theos in the singular, they inculcated the grand point (with the heathen, I mean) of God's unity, and at the same time did not deny a plurality of agents or persons in the Divine Nature; since the Greeks called the whole substance of their God the Heavens, Theos in the singular, as well as theoi in the plural."

As we have said, the Hebrew representative of Theos is Ail. This is a primitive word, which to the mind of the Hebrew always presented the idea of strength and power. It is applied in the prophets to the Former of all things when contemplating him in his almightiness. The meaning of the word is strength, might, power, and when used of a person, signifies a mighty one, a powerful one, a strong one, a hero. The first place in which it occurs is in Gen. 14:18, where Melchizedec is styled "the priest of the most high Ail." This teaches, by implication, that there are other ailim, but that He whose priest Melchizedec was, was the highest of them all.

The term is used in a multitude of places in the Old Testament, in the greater number of which it is rendered "God." This, however, does not at all express its meaning, for goodness is no element of the word. The Deity informs us through Moses that it is a part of the name he chose for himself in his communications with Abraham. "I appeared," said he, "to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob by the name Ail— Shaddai; but by my name Yahweh (commonly, but erroneously, pronounced Jehovah) was I not known unto them.”—Exod. 6:3. In the English Version, AIL-Shaddai is rendered “God Almighty,” but this does not express the original. Shaddai is indeed rendered almighty, omnipotent, by lexicographers; but their reason for so doing is theological, not etymological. They have invented what they call a pluralis excellentiae, by which a plural noun is applied to a person or thing in the singular, to express its excellency. Hence, to show how excellent the Deity is in power and majesty, they suppose the scriptures speak of him as many powers or many gods, as is implied by Elohim, Shaddai, and so forth. But this is a weak invention, which only reveals the ignorance of the learned respecting the Name of the Deity exhibited in “the Mystery of Godliness.” Their pluralis excellentiae is a mere fiction. It admits plurality in regard to Deity, but has entirely failed in giving a rational and scriptural exposition.

Shaddai is a plural masculine, and derived from the root shahdad, “to be strong, powerful.” Shaddai is the plural of shad, “mighty, powerful,” and therefore signifies the mighty or powerful ones. Three of them appeared to Abraham in the plains of Mamre. Moses informs us that “Yahweh appeared to him there;” and that when he lifted up his eyes to see Yahweh apparent, “he saw three men standing by him.” Hence Yahweh, or Jehovah, was apparent in these three men. Here was One-Three, or Three-One. AIL was the One, Shaddai the Three. These “three men” were mighty, powerful, strong, and therefore they were styled Shaddai. They were harmless, patient, and sociable with Abraham and Lot, but terrible in power to Sodom, Gomorrah, and the cities of the plain. But was their power absolute and independent, or was it derived? Could they say, “Before us there was nothing formed of Ail?” Could they say, “We three are the Divine Nature in Trinity, original, uncreated, underived?” The name by which they were known to Abraham answers these questions in the negative. Their power was not absolute and underived. It was derived from the DIVINE SUBSTANCE John terms THEOS, and which Paul says, “only hath deathlessness (αθανασία), dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see.” But Abraham saw the three men, or Jehovah apparent, therefore they were not the ETERNAL FIRST CAUSE, but a Spirit-Manifestation of Him, whose name was known to Abraham as Ail-Shaddai, the STRENGTH of the Mighty Ones.

Now the Deity was also known to Jacob by the same name, and appeared to him in like manifestation as to Abraham. Jacob saw a host of Shaddai, styled by Moses מלאכי אלהי ~ malachai elohim, “Messengers of Elohim”—Elohim sent of Ail. He wrestled with one of them, and prevailed, and in consequence received the honorable title Isra-ail, “because as a prince hast thou power with Elohim.” “And Jacob called the name of the place (where he wrestled) Pen-ail,” “Faces of Power;” “for,” said he, “I have seen Elohim faces to faces, and my life is preserved.”—Gen. 32:2, 28, 30.

Here was the most high AIL in multitudinous manifestation. Jacob never saw his person, for no man has ever seen that; but he saw persons like him in form and substance; as much so as sons are like their father in these particulars. He saw as much of the Father Ail as men see of an invisible father in his children. They study the father in these in the absence of other data. Their father is in them as a Flesh-Manifestation of their parental original.

The Shaddai are styled Elohim, as expressive of the parental relation subsisting between them and AIL in nature and power. As the Highest and Most Powerful One in the universe, He styles himself the Ail-Elohim—the Power of powers: a truth memorialized by Jacob in the Altar he named Ail-Elohai-Yisra-ail—the Strength of the Powers of Israel.

Elohim אלהי ~

, is a plural noun, which in the singular is written אלה

Eloah. The use of this in Hab. 1:11 shows that the idea of strength or power is the radical meaning of the word אלהו לאלהו יו כהו

, as to this one, his strength is his Eloah, or the one in whom he trusts. Three men who appeared to Abraham were each of them an Eloah, but not each of them Elohim: the three together were Elohim. Eloah occurs fifty-six times in the scriptures, and four of these times only in the Psalms; but in Job forty-one times. The use of Ail and Eloah by Job would indicate that one and the same being is meant. Every member of the heavenly host is an Eloah, but of all the Elohim ONE ONLY is the original and self-existent AIL—the absolute, omnipotent, and independent power of the universe.

Speaking of Himself in his address to the ends of the earth, he says, “Look unto me, for I am AIL, and none else”—Isaiah 45:22; and to Israel he saith, “Ye are my witnesses, and my servant whom I have chosen, that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I, Yahweh, am He; before me Ail or Power, has not been formed, nor after me shall be”—Isaiah 43:10: a testimony that identifies Ail with the Logos and Theos of John, which as ONE POWER, he saith, “made all things; and without him was not any thing made that was made.” From him came the Apocalypse; as it is written, “a revelation which the Theos committed to Jesus Christ.”

Having thus shown the meaning of these several terms applied in the scriptures to Deity, I proceed to offer a few ideas upon the Divine Nature as suggested in the revelation of the mystery.

We learn from the Bible that the Deity it reveals has both body and parts. Paul teaches us this in declaring that the resurrected and anointed Jesus is “the apaugasma, or reflexion of the glory, and charakter or peculiar nature of the hypostasis or substance of the Theos—Heb. 1:3. In other words, he partakes of the Divine Nature; so that what he now is, is what the Deity hath always been. The substance of the Theos is essentially living substance. It could not exist and yet be dead substance, for “the Father hath life in himself,” and that life is his inherent peculiarity. It is underived from any antecedent existence; nor can it forsake the Divine Substance, for in that event the Deity would be mortal. But Paul styles him “the Incorruptible Theos,” and says that “He is the only one having athanasia or deathlessness.” Hence, the essential qualities of the substance, which underlies all that is predicable of him, are incorruptibility and life.

Incorruptible and living substance, then, is the Body of the Deity; and, as the glorified Jesus is “the IMAGE of the Invisible Theos,” he must have “parts.” It is not, therefore, a mere figure of speech to speak, as the scriptures do, of the hand, ear, eye, and so forth, of the Invisible Eternal Power. He has form and parts, as well as body, and is the Great Archetype, or divine original, after which all the Elohim, or immortal intelligences, of his universe are modelled and made. He dwells in unapproachable light, and is “a consuming fire.” Light and heat, then, in their essentiality, with incorruptibility and life, are centred in his substance; for He is the great focal centre of these in all the universe of power. If I might venture a conjecture upon so profound a subject, I would suggest, that the Divine Nature is that wonderful and extraordinary essence observed in that terrible and destructive agent the scriptures term “spirit,” and philosophy, electricity, consolidated and corporealized from the necessity of the thing. This glowing substance is too intensely bright for human vision, therefore Paul not only says, “whom no man hath seen,” but adds, “nor can see.”

Now these suggestions are sustained by “the likeness of the glory of Jehovah” which appeared to Ezekiel. “Above the firmament,” says this prophet, “that was over the heads of the four living ones, was the likeness of a THRONE, as the appearance of a sapphire stone; and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of A MAN above upon it. And I saw as the color of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about; as the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of Yahweh”—ch. 1:26. This was the Deity in symbol, which is brought out again in ch. 8:2, 3. In this place Ezekiel adds, that He whom the likeness represented “put forth the form of a hand, and took me by a lock of my head.” Being thus secured, he says, “the Spirit lifted me up.” This was equivalent to saying, that the likeness represented THE SPIRIT, which Jesus says is Theos of AIL.

All the similitudes in the prophets representative of the Deity are of this bright and burning character. In Daniel he is exhibited as the Ancient of Days sitting upon a throne like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire, with a fiery stream issuing forth from before him—ch. 7:9. And so in the Apocalypse; “out of the throne” He sits upon, “proceed lightnings, and thunderings, and voices; and before the throne seven lamps of fire burning, which are representative of “the Seven Spirits of the Deity”—ch. 4:5.

Light, heat, incorruptibility, and life, concentrated in one Eternal Substance, is the great self-existing and central power of the universe. This substance is Spirit, for “the Deity is Spirit.” All power, life, and light centre in him, so that not a sparrow falls to the ground without his perception thereof. “He upholdeth all things,” and “in him we live, and move, and do exist.” This is by “the SEVEN SPIRITS which is before his throne”—Apoc. 1:4; 3:1; 4:5; 5:6. Though symbolically “seven,” they are complete in one, for saith Paul, “there is ONE SPIRIT”—Eph. 4:4. Seven is the symbol of unity and perfection. Hence, being representative of the one spirit, the substantive verb is expressed in the third person singular, and not in the plural, as the grammar of the sentence requires. “The Seven Spirits which is,” not “which are before the throne.” There is but one spirit there, and this one is the nominative to the verb “is.”

The Father of the spirit is the Divine Substance, for it proceedeth forth from thence; and because it issues thence, He is styled “the Father of glory.” Spirit irradiates the boundless universe from the throne of light, and pervades it in all its space. Thus the spirit is consubstantial with the divine nature, or “free,” radiating from unapproachable light, everywhere, and illimitably, so that wherever spirit is, there is the Deity present; and consequently, as Paul said to the Athenians, “not far from every one of us.” This universality of the divine presence by His “free spirit,” is beautifully and forcibly expressed in Ps. 139:7–12, as, “Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend into the heavens, Thou art there; if I make my bed in Sheol, behold thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee.”

“There is one Deity, the Father, ἐξ οὗ, out of whom are all things”—1 Cor. 8:6. The divinity of the schools gives us an idea contrary to this. By the schoolmen we are told that God created all things out of nothing! Where they got this notion from we know not, save from their own imaginations. The proverb says, “take nothing from nothing and nothing comes;” but they have reversed all this, and taught the world that out of nothing something doth come, and that something the universe of God! But away with this foolishness. Out of Deity all things have proceeded. His free, radiant spirit is the substratum of every existing thing, from the star of the first magnitude to the minutest insect of the air. The all-pervading electricity is the simple undecomposable radiation “out of” the Divine Substance, which, under the fiat of His will, constitutes the atomic nucleus of all bodies, solid, fluid, or aeriform. Thus, “by His spirit he garnished the heavens,” illuminating boundless immensity with orbs of light, teeming with life, and all the wonders of his wisdom and power.

Such, then, was Deity before the appearance of Jesus—Spirit, substantial and radiant: substantial in his own person; radiant thence into all the Elohim of his universe, in whom the radiant matter, by the fiat of the Divine Will, became fixed, organic, corporeal, and consubstantial with the Deity himself. Thus, He is Eloah in chief; and “without me,” he saith, “of Elohim there is none else,” and “without me there are no Elohim,” and therefore it is we find the phrase in Isaiah 45:18, הוֹאֵל הָאֱלֹהִים ~

, hu-hahelohim, “HE the Elohim”—He, the only Deity, by his Spirit, a multitude of mighty ones. Having considered the Deity under the apocalyptic aspect of “Him who was,” of the “Alpha,” of “the First,” and of “the Beginning,” I shall proceed to treat, in the next place, of the same Deity “who is,” in the development of the great mystery.

2. Deity Manifested in Flesh

Until nearly 430 years after the typical confirmation of the covenant made with Abraham, (Gen. 15,) the Deity was known to his servants only by the name of Ail-Shaddai, the Strength of the Mighty Ones. But when the time had come to bring Israel out of Egypt, the Elohim of the Deity were sent to Moses to inform him, among other things, of a new name by which he was pleased to be known to his people. In answer, then, to the question, What is this name? The Deity said to Moses by his Elohim, אֱלֹהִים

אֱלֹהִים

ehyeh asher ehyeh, I WILL BE WHO I WILL BE; and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, אֱלֹהִים

Ehyeh hath sent me unto you. The Elohim said moreover to Moses, Thus shalt thou say to the children of Israel, יְהוָה

Yahweh, Elohim of your fathers, Elohim of Abraham, Elohim of Isaac, and Elohim of Jacob, hath sent me unto you. This is my name, לְעַלְמֵךְ

leolahm for the hidden time, and this is my memorial; לְדֹר וָדֹר ledor dor for a generation of the race.”

In the name and memorial thus revealed at the bush, the Deity declared that he would be a person, or persons, not then manifested. He announced to Moses, that HE was the Mighty Ones who had appeared as “three men” to Abraham, and as “a host” to Jacob: but that at a future period HE would manifest himself in others, even in persons of the Adamic race. Hence, in view of this new manifestation, and to keep it constantly in remembrance, he imposed upon himself the name of Ehyeh, “I will be.” And this name of the Deity was to retain its import in a certain time hidden in the future. The time when it shall no longer be memorial is not yet arrived. It is to continue for the Olahm—for that epoch when “he who is, and who was, and who is coming,” “shall come with the clouds, and every eye shall see him; and all the tribes of the earth shall wail before him”—Apoc. 1:7. When this terrible crisis is passed, the ascription of chap. 16:5, “Thou art righteous, O Lord, who art, and wast and SHALT BE,” will be anachronous, for it will be no longer “shall be” on earth, seeing that he will then be here, and “reigning on Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously”—Isai. 24:23.

The word אֱשֶׁר

asher in the memorial is the relative pronoun who; and is both singular and plural, masculine and feminine. It stands, therefore, for a multitude as much as for one person. Yea, it is clear that a multitude was intended, by reference to the parallel text in Exod. 6:7, where the Deity commanded Moses to say to Israel, “I will take you to me for a people, and I will be to you for Elohim; and ye shall know that I am Yahweh your Elohim.” The Elohim here indicated in the aggregate are “the generation of the race,” in which the Deity will manifest himself by “the Seven Spirits before the throne.”

In regard to this term Ehyeh, etymologically and orthoepally, I may remark here, that it is the first person singular of the future tense of the verb hahyah, “to be, or become.” It does not mean, and never did, what it is made to signify in the English Version, i.e., “I am.” The Deity did not give himself this name; but, on the contrary, said, “My name is I WILL BE; and by this name I was not known to Abraham;” not to any one else till he revealed it at the bush. Yet, it appears in the second chapter of Genesis, and in the history of Abraham; but this happens because of the compiler of those accounts—that is, Moses—being acquainted with this new name, and introducing it wherever it was appropriate. The English versionists have suppressed the name of the Deity wherever in their opinion it was not specially emphatic, and have substituted for it Lord, which does not at all express the sense of the original. Where they have thought the name emphatic they have represented Ehyeh, in its subsequent form, by “Jehovah,” which they have only introduced nine times; though the word YHWH occurs so often, that the citation of the texts occupies seven royal octavo columns of nonpareil.

The form of the name which subsequently prevailed over Ehyeh, is YHWH pronounced Jehovah, according to the Masoretic pointing invented five hundred years after the time of Jesus. But all philologists and theologians are now agreed, that Jehovah is a spurious pronunciation. It was devised by Jewish superstition, which did not permit an Israelite to pronounce this sacred name correctly. They have another word אֲדֹנָי

Adonai, “lord, ruler, sovereign.” From this they took the signs or points, and attached them to YHWH, thereby giving to it the incorrect orthography, “Jehovah.” All critics, however, are now agreed that the true pronunciation of the word is Yahweh, which they predicate on the fact of the word used in Exod. 6:2, 3, being the old form of the third person, future tense. Yah is the same in a contracted form; and is used of the Deity upwards of fifty times; one of which exhorts us to “extol him by his name Yah.”

Yahweh or Yah, as a noun, and signifying “He who will be,” is then the memorial name the Deity chooses to be known by among his people. It reminds them that HE will be manifested in a multitude; and that, in that great multitude which no man can number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, which shall stand before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands (Apoc. 7:9)—in each and every one of them, “He will be the all things in all”—1 Cor. 15:28; or, as it is expressed in Eph. 4:6, “there is one Deity and Father of all, who is upon all, and through all, and in you all.”

The Deity, then, in a multitude, is a conspicuous element of apostolic, as well as of Old Testament teaching. It is not “One God in three Gods,” and “Three Gods in One;” but one Deity in a countless multitude revealed in the memorial name, and expounded in the mystery of godliness. The knowledge of this mystery was lost sight of by the Babel-builders of the third and fourth centuries; who, as a substitute, invented the Athanasian conceit of three persons in the Divine Essence, coeternal and coequal. They bound up the Father, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost, three distinct persons, into one person, or body; and called the fiction “the Triune God.” They did not perceive that the Deity was but one person, and one substance, peculiar to himself. One Deity and not three; that Holy Spirit is an emanation from his substance, intensely radiant and all pervading; and that, when focalized under the fiat of his will, things and persons without limit, as to number or nature, are produced.

This multitudinous manifestation of the one Deity—one in many, and many in one, by his spirit—was proclaimed to the Hebrew nation in the formula of Deut. 6:4, “Hear, O Israel, Yahweh our Elohim is the ONE Yahweh;” that is, “He who shall be our Mighty Ones is the One who shall be.” Certain Mighty Ones are promised to Israel—“pastors according to Yahweh’s heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding”—they will be spirit, because “that which is born of the spirit is spirit.” He, the Spirit, the AIL, or Power of the universe, self-styled Yahweh, is their Divine Father. His nature will be theirs; so that they will be consubstantial with Him, as all children are consubstantial with their parents. The Deity will then be manifested in the Sons of Deity; he in them, and they in him, by the one spirit. And this company of sons, led to glory by the captain of their salvation, is “the ONE who shall be,” or “the ONE Yahweh.”

Of these sons, or Elohim, One is “the Firstborn”—“the child born, and the son given”—Isai. 9:6. He is Eloah in chief, “the Head of the Body;” in whom it pleased the Father that all the fulness should dwell,” that among all he might have the preeminence.

This Eloah is the great theme of prophecy. His manifestation was predicted in the promise of the Woman's Seed (Gen. 3:15); in Isaac (ch. 21:12); of the royal Shiloh from Judah (ch. 49:10); of the sceptred Star out of Jacob (Numb. 24:17); of the Divine Son assured to David (2 Sam. 7:14,) born of a virgin (Isai. 7:14) and to rule upon his throne (Isai. 9:6, 7.) In these testimonies it was revealed, that he should be both Son of man and Son of Deity. How this could be otherwise than is related in the New Testament would be impossible to devise. "Is there an Eloah without me?" saith the Spirit: "Yea, there is no Rock; I know none"—Isai. 44:8. The manifestation therefore, must be by the spirit of the Deity, or not at all. The time of manifestation was appointed and placed on record in Dan. 9:25; and "when the fulness of the time was come, the Deity sent forth his son, made of a woman;" begotten, not of blood, nor the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of the Deity; by holy spirit coming upon her, and power of the Highest enveloping her; therefore also the holy thing she bore was called a Son of Deity, and named JESUS—Luke 1:31, 35.

Thus, "the Logos became flesh, and dwelt among us," says John, "and we beheld his glory, glory as of an only-begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth;" for "the law was given through Moses; the grace and the truth came through Jesus Anointed"—Jno. 1:14, 17. Now, "Theos was the Logos," says John; that is, Deity was the Word; and this Word became flesh in the manner testified. Was the product, therefore, not Deity? Did the union of spirit with flesh annihilate that spirit, and leave only flesh? Was the holy thing born a mere son of Adam? or "the fellow" and "equal" of the Deity?—Zech. 13:7; Jno. 5:18; Phil. 2:2. The latter unquestionably.

After this manner, then, THE ETERNAL POWER, or Yahweh, became flesh; and commenced the initiation of his promise, that He would be to Israel for Elohim. The chief Eloah was now born; and, as the STAR OF JACOB cradled in a manger, received the homage of the wise, and the acclamation of the heavenly host. This babe was the "body made in secret" through which "THE ETERNAL SPIRIT," when it should attain to "the fulness of the times," designed to manifest himself. That time had arrived when "Jesus began to be about thirty years of age." He was now to be "sent forth;" "being made under the law, that them under law he might purchase from it, that we might obtain THE SONSHIP"—Gal. 4:5. His sending forth was subsequently to his immersion, and preceded by his anointing with holy spirit. Though born of "Yahweh's Handmaid" six months after John the Immerser, John said of him, "after me cometh a man who hath been preferred to me; for he was before me." Isaiah styles him Yahweh and Elohim, in his prophecy concerning John as "The Voice" that was to herald his manifestation; saying, "Prepare ye the way of Yahweh, make straight in the desert a highway for our Elohim"—ch. 40:3. The Father was one Eloah, and Jesus was another; so that in this unity were developed two, who, in the Hebrew plural, are termed Elohim. Here, then, was a practical illustration of the phrase, so often occurring in the scriptures of the prophets, "Yahweh Elohim," most incorrectly rendered in the English Version, "LORD God." Based upon this combination of holy spirit and flesh, Jesus said to Nicodemus, "*I say unto thee, WE speak what WE do know, and testify what WE have seen; and ye receive not OUR witness. Here was plural manifestation IN UNITY. This is abundantly evinced in all the New Testament. Hence, on another occasion, Jesus said to the Jews, 'I and the Father are one'—one what? We are, in the words of Moses, 'One Yahweh.' The Jews, who 'judged after the flesh,' were indignant at this, and attempted to stone him for blasphemy; saying that, 'because being a man, he made himself Deity.' But Jesus rebuked the charge of blasphemy with an argumentum ad homines which was unanswerable. 'Is it not written in your law, I said ye are Elohim, and Sons of the Highest, all of you?' Ps. 82:6. If He (the Deity) called them Elohim to whom the word of the Deity came, (that is, to their fathers,) and the scriptures cannot be broken; say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified and sent into the world, 'Thou blasphemest' because I said, I am Son of the Deity? 'Know that the Father is in me, and I in him:'—and that 'he who hath seen me hath seen the Father'—John 10:30; 14:9.*

Such discourse as this was an impenetrable enigma to the Jews. They did not recognise that “the words they heard were spirit”—John 6:63. They judged after the flesh (ch. 8:15), and therefore imagined that his words were flesh; that is, the mere utterances of the thinking of the flesh. But he told them that this was not so; for he said, “My teaching is not mine, but His who sent me;” and John also testified that “he whom the Deity had sent, spake the words of the Deity;” as Moses had predicted in Deut. 18:18, concerning the Christ, saying, “I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall be, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which HE shall speak in my name, I will require it of him.” And so when the Word became flesh, the Word-Flesh recalled attention to what Moses had written and said, “He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words * * * the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day. For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father who sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak”—John 12:47—“the words of eternal life.”

The words, then, that came out of the mouth of Jesus, are to be received as the direct teaching of the Eternal Spirit, and to be interpreted of him. When, therefore, the utterance saluted the ears of the disciples, “He that hath seen me hath seen the Father,” the Eternal Spirit was communing with them from upon the Mercy-Seat, from between two of the Cherubim upon the Ark of the Testimony—Exod. 25:22. He was speaking of himself, and not of the flesh which he had anointed. That flesh was the caphporeth, coverlid, or propitiatory, to be sprinkled with blood, as the result of the condemnation of sin unto death in the flesh—Rom. 8:3. It was the Veil, which, in regard to the Elohim, Jesus and his Brethren, divides their present and future states. It was the veil rent in twain by the stroke of death, in which the ETERNAL ELOAH “forsook” the Eloah Jesus; and they continued “twain” until his postresurrectional ascent to the Father—John 20:17.

Such was “the Faithful Witness,” as he was before he was “perfected” on the third day—Luke 13:32. He came into the world to bear witness to the truth that he is King of Israel; to this he was faithful unto death by crucifixion; in which he bare in his own body the sins of all who through him become the Elohim of Israel, whether by nature Jews or Gentiles—1 Pet. 2:24. When these come to know the Deity, and to believe his promises with honest and goodheartedness, as initiated in Jesus, and to do his commandments, they obtain participation in “THE SONSHIP,” and become, even in this present state, Elohim, or sons of the Deity. In view of this moral manifestation of Deity in flesh, termed by Peter the Divine Nature, one of these Elohim, in writing to others of them, says, “Behold what great love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called children of Deity. Because the world knew him not, therefore it doth not know us. Beloved, we are now children of Deity; but it hath not yet appeared what we shall be: nevertheless, we know that when he may appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every one having this hope in him purifies himself even as he is pure.”—1 John 3:1–3. “We are now children of Deity.” He is manifested in them through the truth affectionately and righteously believed. If “the truth as it is in Jesus” be in men thus, Christ, who is the truth, is in them; the spirit of Christ is in them; for “the spirit is the truth”—1 John 5:6: which comprehends the exceeding great and precious promises given to us, that by these heartily believed, they may be partakers of the DIVINE NATURE.—2 Pet. 1:2–4.

From the premises before us, I presume that the reader will have perceived the development of “A NAME”—a name of Deity. The name is a divine manifestation. The Eternal Increate manifested in Jesus by holy spirit. This manifestation is expressed in the formula of “the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit”—Matt. 28:19. This is the name which is above every name; and embraces everything attributable to the Father and the Son. To become an Eloah, a believer of the right stamp must be immersed into this name. He will then be “in the name;” and, consequently, “in Deity the Father and the Lord Jesus Anointed.” A multitude may be in this name contemporaneously. They in Deity, and Deity in them, by faith and obedience. Thus, the name which comprehended only two in the beginning, becomes “a great multitude which no man can number.” And in reference to these, Jesus, in the days of his flesh, said to his Father, “I have manifested thy Name unto the men (the apostles) which thou gavest me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gavest them me; and they have kept thy word. I have given unto them the words that thou gavest me, and they have received them. I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me. Holy Father, keep them in thy name whom thou hast given me, that they may be ONE even as we. Sanctify them in thy truth; thy word is truth. I pray for them also who shall believe through their word into me; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, in me, and I in thee, that they also may be ONE IN US: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made PERFECT IN ONE”—John 17:6, 23.

In conclusion, then, under this caption the following recapitulation of the points developed in the testimony in regard to this great mystery of godliness, which is the basis of the Apocalypse, may be useful as a remembrancer:

1. There is one ETERNAL UNCREATED SUBSTANCE, which is essentially power, incorruptibility, and life, dwelling invisibly in unapproachable light; and known before the days of Moses by the name of Ail-Shaddai, “the Strength of the Mighty Ones;” and from his interview with the Angel at the Bush, by that of Yawheh, or Yah, “He who will be.”
2. This ETERNAL POWER is the Logos, or Word, which is identical with Theos, or DEITY, glowing in light. SPIRIT substantial and corporeal.
3. From Deity, as the centre of the universe, is intensely radiated spirit or power; which is all-pervading, and fills immensity, and styled “Free Spirit”—the ocean of life, “in which we live, and move, and have being.” So that Deity is not far from every one of his creatures.
4. All things are “out of Deity.” Spirit, by the fiat of His will, becomes substance, both organic and inorganic; and the former, instinctive, or divinely intelligent.
5. The Deity is Wisdom as well as Power. Hence the Divine Nature is a moral nature as well as substantial; so that His moral attributes are constituents of his glory, equally with those of his substance, in its essentiality and power.
6. JESUS OF NAZARETH, in the days of his flesh, was the reflection of the Moral Attributes of the Deity; as likewise are all his brethren who walk in his steps.
7. Since his ascension, he is consubstantial with Deity; i.e., the peculiar nature he now has is identical with the original substance of the Eternal Power, between which and his own this sole difference obtains; namely, that the substance of Jesus as it is, was created by the Deity out of His own free spirit—ek tou pneumatos;—whereas His own substance was derived from no antecedent power or creator.
8. Jesus is the Chief-Begotten Eloah of AIL; and, when sealed with holy spirit at his immersion in Jordan, the Deity manifested himself in him by the truth he spoke and the wonders he performed.
9. In this manifestation the development of the Memorial Name was initiated. The ONE had become Two; and Yahweh Elohim, in relation to the human race, had become a fact. But,
10. The manifestation of the Name is only initiated, not completed, in the person of Jesus Christ. The manifestation of Deity in flesh, by holy spirit or truth, is amplified in the characters of the true believers among men, who are “partakers of the Divine Nature” in its moral constitution, as the earnest of their future participation in the Divine Substance, when they shall be as Jesus is now.
11. All the true believers who have been immersed into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit—not three names, but the One Name of the DIVINE MANIFESTATION—are a manifold unit—One in many, and many in one. They are “the one who shall be”—the Yahweh echad, the One Jehovah, not yet perfected and glorified; but when so, to be “King over all the earth”—Zech. 14:9; Apoc. 5:10.

But, in order to reach these things fully, as they are “indicated by sign” in the Apocalypse, I must request the reader’s particular attention to the third division of this great mystery of godliness, or Deity manifested in spirit.

3. Deity Manifested in Spirit.

However perfect and complete the moral manifestation of the Deity was in Jesus of Nazareth, the divine manifestation was nevertheless imperfect as concerning the substance, or body, of Jesus. This was what we are familiar with as the flesh. It was not angel-flesh, or nature; but that common to the seed of Abraham, styled by Paul sarx hamartias, flesh of sin; “in which,” he says, “dwells no good thing”—Rom. 7:18; 8:3. The anointing spirit-dove, which, as the Divine Form, descended from heaven upon Jesus at his sealing, was holy and complete in all things; the character of Jesus was holy, harmless, undefiled, without spot, or blemish, or any such thing; but his flesh was like our flesh, in all its points,—weak, emotional, and unclean. Had his flesh been like that of Angel-Elohim, which is consubstantial with the Eternal Spirit, it would have been unfit for the purpose of the Deity in his manifestation. Sin, whose wages is death, had to be condemned in the nature that had transgressed; a necessity that could only be accomplished by the Word becoming Adamic-Flesh, and not Elohistical. For this cause, “Jesus was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death; * * * that he, by the grace of the Deity, might taste death for every man.” For this cause, and forasmuch also “as the children (of the Deity) are partakers of flesh and blood, He also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy that having the power of death, that is, the diabolos,” or elements of corruption in our nature, inciting it to transgression, and therefore called “Sin working death in us”—Rom. 7:13; Heb. 2:9, 14. Another reason why the Word assumed a lower nature than the Elohistical was, that a basis of future perfection might be laid in obedience under trial. Jesus has been appointed Captain of Salvation in the bringing of many sons to glory. Now these sons in the accident of birth are all “subject to vanity,” with inveterate propensities and relative enticements, inciting and tempting them to sin. A captain, therefore, whose nature was primarily consubstantial with the Deity, could not be touched with the feeling of their infirmities. He would be essentially holy and impeccable, and of necessity good. But a necessitated holiness and perfection are not the basis of exaltation to the glories of the Apocalypse. These are to be attained only by conquest of self under trial from without, by which “they come out of great tribulation”—Apoc. 7:14. Its promises are to those who overcome, as their captain has overcome, when it can be said his victory is apocalyptically complete”—Apoc. 3:21; 11:15. Hence, then, “it became the Deity to make the captain of the salvation of His many sons perfect through sufferings; and to effect this, he must be of their primary nature, that when the Great Captain and his associates shall rejoice together in the consubstantiality of the Deity, they may all have attained to it upon the principle of voluntary obedience, motivated by faith, and maintained in opposition to incitements within, and enticements and pressure from without. The flesh is, therefore, a necessary basis for this; and making it possible for him to be tempted in all points according to the flesh-likeness, without sin. Hence, though the son of the Deity, and Heir of all things, yet he learned obedience by the things which he suffered; and being MADE PERFECT He became the author of aion-salvation unto all them that obey him”—Heb. 4:15; 5:8.

Perfection of character and substance, then, is the consummation predetermined by the Deity in his manifestation by spirit in Jesus and his brethren. In his wisdom, which is “first pure,” he requires perfection of character first; and as a recompense for this, he confers perfection of substance, or consubstantiality with himself. This was the order of the Divine Manifestation in the son of David’s daughter; who is the great model after which the One Yahweh-Elohistic development is to be apocalypsed. Perfection of character was first manifested in Jesus, who was faultless before the Deity. The character of Jesus was the character of the Deity—a mirror in which was reflected the moral attributes peculiar to him, the Word, before manifestation in flesh. Nevertheless, though Jesus could truly say, “I always do those things which please the Father;” yet he said, “there is none good but the Deity,’ nor am I yet perfect. He testified his own imperfection in declaring that he could of his own self do nothing; that he must die; and that he would be perfected in the third day of his mission. “Behold,” said he, “I cast out demons, and I do cures to-day, and to-morrow, and the third I shall be perfected”—Luke 13:32. In this third, “he was made perfect” ex anastaseos, from, or out of resurrection, when he “ascended to the Father;” and being thus exalted to consubstantiality with him, Paul speaks of him as, “Having been perfected for the Aion”—eis ton aiona teteleiomēnon; or apocalyptically, “I was dead, and behold I am living for the Aions of the Aions”—ch. 1:18.

Jesus, then, like all his brethren, is to be considered in two states, each state having a nature peculiar to it. In the former state, “he was crucified through weakness;” but in the after state wherein he now is, “he liveth by the power of the Deity—2 Cor. 13:4. In the former state, the flesh was “the filthy garments” with which the SPIRIT-WORD was clothed (Zech. 3:3) ; “the iniquity of us all” that was laid upon him; the soul made an offering for sin” (Isa. 53:6, 10) ; but, as He now is, the filthy garments have been taken away; “his iniquity has passed from him,” and he is clothed with “change of raiment.” His flesh thus designated has been subjected to the transforming energy of the radiant power of the Eternal Spirit. By this energy his flesh has been transformed into spirit, styled by Paul, pneuma hagiosunes, spirit of holiness. That is, a nature in which there is no filthiness of flesh or spirit. It is therefore HOLY SPIRIT NATURE; a nature, generated out of the free spirit radiant from the Eternal Substance. It is therefore like that substance, and hence consubstantial with it. Begotten of spirit it is spirit; as that which is begotten of flesh is flesh—Jno. 3:6. Therefore, Paul speaks of the exalted Jesus, saying, “he was made into a life imparting spirit;” and elsewhere he styles him “the Lord the Spirit”—Kurios pneuma.

Now Jesus as the Lord the Spirit, is the manifestation represented in the Apocalypse by the title of “the Who is, and Who was, and Who is to come; and the Seven Spirits which is before the throne”—ch. 1:4. In relation to Jesus Anointed as he is now, these Seven Spirits are his Seven Eyes. This appears from ch. 5:6, where John says, “I beheld a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven Horns and Seven Eyes, which are the Seven Spirits of the Deity sent forth into all the earth.” Seven is the number of perfection and completeness. The seven spirits are symbolical of the “One Spirit” in perfect manifestation; the seven eyes, of omniscience and perfection of vision; and the seven horns, of omnipotence and perfection of power. Hence, he who was slain is now a perfect manifestation of Deity, omniscient, all-seeing, and all-powerful—“Jesus Anointed, the faithful witness, the Chief Born from among dead ones, and the Prince of the kings of the earth;” from among those dead, who are to awake from their sleep in the dust of the earth; and Prince in their midst, when they shall reign with him for a thousand years—ch. 20:6.

Jesus, in view of his exaltation to this glory, said to his contemporaries, “Verily I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself” (or apart from the “Seven Spirits”) but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise. For the Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that himself doeth: and he will show him greater works than these, that ye may marvel. For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son: that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father who hath sent him. The “greater works” than those wrought by Jesus in the days of his flesh, which he said the Father would show him, are the works exhibited in the Apocalypse, which are to be executed at his second appearing. They are the works of the judgment hour, which are to bring all nations into obedience to his rule—Apoc. 15:4: for “all authority to execute judgment is given to him, because He is Son of man.”

But the manifestation of Deity in spirit does not terminate in the perfecting of Jesus on the third day. He was the free-will offering of the Eternal Spirit made perfect for acceptance (Lev. 22:21: Heb. 9:14); but he was only one of “the flock of the Deity which he had purchased with his own blood.” There were other sheep—sheep of the fold of Israel, and others not of that fold; all of perfect character, to be “made perfect in one,” that there might be one fold and one shepherd.

All who have heard “the things concerning the kingdom of the Deity and the name of Jesus Anointed,” have believed them with true affection, and have been immersed, are addressed in the apostolic epistles as “THE PERFECT.” “We speak wisdom,” says Paul, “among the perfect;” and again, “Let us, as many as be perfect, be thus minded.” But, as in the case of Jesus, this perfection was concomitant with imperfection. It was perfection of spirit, or conscience, resulting from faith and obedience. Paul says, that the law of Moses could not make the worshippers perfect, so that they should have no more conscience of sins. Hence, a person whose sins are covered over, or pardoned, is perfect. His conscience is the spirit of a just man who has been made perfect. Jesus tasted death for him, in which death he becomes interested by believing into him. Thus, “by his one offering the Eternal Spirit hath perfected for a continuance them that are sanctified,” or purged in conscience from dead works, to serve the living Deity. Being in Christ, they are invested, or covered over, with him; and, if the truth have had its due effect, they are cleansed from all filthiness of flesh and spirit; and can truly respond to the apocalyptic ascription to him as their Prince, and say, “Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his blood, and made us kings and priests for the Deity even our Father: to him be the glory and the supremacy during the Aions of the Aions. Amen”—Apoc. 1:5.

But, notwithstanding the saints are a community of “spirits of just ones made perfect;” they have while in the flesh, continual experience of imperfection. The experience of Paul is theirs, who says, “Not as though I were already perfect.” He was perfect in conscience, but very imperfect in nature; as was also that great cloud of witnesses, of whom the world was not worthy, who all died in faith, not having received the promises; the Deity having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect—Heb. 11:13, 40.

That which is perfect, however, is not yet come; but we wait for it. Perfect in conscience and character, we wait in full assurance of hope, the transformation of our bodies at the Apocalypse of Jesus Anointed; “for in heavens our commonwealth subsists; out of which also we await the deliverer, the Lord Jesus Anointed: who shall transform the body of our humiliation that it may become conformable to the body of his glory, according to the energy of his ability even to subdue all things to himself”—Phil. 3:20, 21. When this transformation shall have been effected, the prayer of Jesus will have been answered; and his brethren will have been “made perfect in one,” as the Father is in Him, and He in the Father, and they one in them both. Such a perfection as this is consubstantiality with the Deity; who, by his spirit is manifested in them all, as the Elohim OF ISRAEL, and the Sons of the Highest—the “Who” he said he would be, when he communed with Moses at the Bush.

The transformation of body is posterior to resurrection, as in the case of Jesus. The dead saints are first to be “raised,” and afterwards “quickeneth.” “As the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will.” The Son will quicken those only of the raised up whose walk in the present state he approves. Many are “raised up” who are not “quickeneth.” It is only those of the “raised up” who are pleasing to the Son that he quickens. Some of the “raised up” are awaked from the dust, as Daniel tells us, “to the reproaches and contempt of the Olahm”—ch. 12:2; or, in the words of Jesus, “they come forth for a resurrection of judgment”—John 5:29. The Son wills not to quicken them, but to drive them from his presence with eternal reprobation.

The word quicken in the original is zoopoieo, and signifies to make alive. From the fact that all the raised are not “quickened,” and yet are living in postresurrectional contempt, it follows that the quickening is an operation superadded to the formation of living bodies from the dust of the ground. It is the making alive of living saints with life eternal. Hence, there is a certain predetermined order of development in the multitudinous Apocalypse of the Sons of the Deity (Rom. 8:19), as there was in the manifestation of Deity in spirit in the case of Jesus. And this order, as deduced from the premises before us, is apparently as follows:

1. Formation of body from the ashes of the dead;
2. Impartation of life, making it a Body of Life;
3. Appearance at the Tribunal of Christ—2 Cor. 5:10;
4. Quickening consequent upon approval; in other words, “ascending to the Father,” so as to be consubstantial with him.—John 20:17.

Taken as a whole, these four elements constitute the anastasis Zoes, or RESURRECTION OF LIFE, in which the body is “raised in incorruption, in glory, in power, and spiritual,” all of which is consequent upon the fourth element, or “the Son quickeneth whom he will.” They are made perfect in one by “the spirit which quickeneth;” and when this Apocalypse is perfected, “the world will know that the Father did send Jesus, and hath loved them, as He had loved him,” which is manifested in their being “like him, and seeing him as he is.”

Here, then, is a multitude consubstantial with the Father—THE ELOHIM OF ISRAEL, and all of them the Sons of Deity, “kings and priests to Him;” “the kings of the earth,” whose Imperial Prince is the Chief-Begotten; “kings from a Sun’s risings;” the first fruits to the Deity and the Lamb, redeemed from the earth.—Apoc. 1:5, 6; 16:12; 14:3, 4.

4. Symbolization of Deity in Spirit.

Now, this “Apocalypse of the Sons of the Deity” is represented in the Apocalypse by different remarkable symbols. The first is that described in chap. 1:13–16, and styled “Son of Man.” This does not represent an individual man. It represents many in One. What John saw among the lightstands was a similitude or likeness—omoion huio anthropou, like to a Son of man. The voice John heard proclaimed the reality of this likeness to be “THE LAST”—the Spirit in the last manifestation; the ONE Yahweh in many Elohim. In the time of manifestation it is “the Living One,” which anterior to apocalypse “was dead,” but being apocalypsed, “is living for the Aions of the Aions;” and as “THE FIRST” before this apocalypse, and limited to Jesus Anointed, “had the keys of the invisible and of death”—ch. 1:18.

This apocalyptic plurality in victorious progress was obscurely communicated to Isaiah in the following testimonies: “Who raised up righteousness from the east, (‘the kings from a Sun’s risings’—the saints,) called Him (that which is indicated by the symbol before us) to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made rule over kings?” (Apoc. 2:26, 27). He gave them as dust to his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow (Ephraim and Judah—Zech. 9:13; 10:3, 4). He (the symbolical Son of man) pursued them, and passed in peace; by the way he had not gone with his feet. Who hath wrought and done this, naming the generations from the beginning (at the Bush)? To which inquiries the Eternal Spirit answers, אני יהוה

Ani Yahweh, I who will be ראשון!

rishon THE FIRST ONE, and אחרונים

eth-acharonim, THE LAST ONES; אחרונים

, I—HE. The isles saw, and feared; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near, and came. They helped every one his neighbor, and said to his brother, Be of good courage” Isa. 41:2–6. In this passage “the Last” is in the plural, but in Isa. 44:6, it is used in the singular, according to the formula, “Thus saith Yahweh, king of Israel, and his (Israel’s) redeemer, Yahweh Tz’vaoth (or, HE who will be of hosts, that is, “COMMANDER” of them, ch. 55:4). I THE FIRST ONE AND I THE LAST ONE; and without me no Elohim. And who as I shall proclaim, and declare it, and set it in order for me since I appointed the people of Olahm? And the things that are coming, and shall come, let them show unto them.” The “Last Ones” of the forty-first chapter are comprised in the “Last Ones” of the forty-fourth, which, though expressed in the singular, clearly indicates a plurality by its association with the sentence, “and without me no Elohim”—without the Spirit which quickeneth there will be no glorified saints, for “the flesh profits nothing;” they are “the people of Olahm,” destined to reign with the Christ a thousand years—Apoc. 20:6.

And here the reader is requested to bear in mind, that the titles and expressions by which the ETERNAL POWER designates himself in the scriptures of the prophets are all reproduced in the New Testament and the Apocalypse, and therein applied to Jesus and his Brethren when “perfected in spirit,” or “glorified together”—Rom. 8:17. Thus, the prophetic Yahweh Elohim styles himself “the First and the Last,” so doth the symbolical Son of man; Yahweh says he is the only Rock. Paul speaking of the Rock terms it Christ; Yahweh styles himself King of Israel, Christ Jesus calls himself the same; Yahweh declares that he is a saviour, and that there is none beside him: the Word made flesh was called Jesus, because he should save his people, or be their saviour—“I, I Yahweh, and there is no saviour beside me”—Isa. 43:11.

John saw the Son of man similitude in the midst of the Seven Lightstands, or aggregate of ecclesias, and heard “the voice of the many waters” from their midst, as indicative of the source from whence the persons constituting the reality symbolized by the similitude are derived. The promises symbolized in ch. 2:7, 11, 17, 26–28; 3:5, 12, 21, are all made to the constituent members of this similitude of the mystical Son of man—the “One Body” the church when victory is complete. Another vision of the Sons of the Deity in Apocalypse is described in the fourth chapter of the revelation. When John was “in spirit” he saw the similitude of their manifestation when they shall be “in spirit” on the day of the Christ. He saw them enthroned as “the twenty-four elders, clothed in white raiment, and crowned”—ch. 4:4. He saw them enthroned in a stormy period, when “lightnings, and thunderings, and voices” were issuing forth from their enthroned omnipotence—ch. 4:5. He saw the going forth of their power into all the earth in the burning of the Seven Spirits—ver. 5; 5:6, which seven, symbolical of the One Spirit, in judicial exercise upon the dominions of the world, he saw in the similitude of the FOUR LIVING ONES, omnipotent and omniscient—the One Spirit manifested in the redeemed, careering in victorious conflict, and proclaiming the superlative holiness of Yahweh Elohim almighty, the “Who was, and Who is, and Who is coming.”—vers. 7, 8. He saw these in progress through the earth, contending for dominion over it, with the full assurance that they would succeed. “WE SHALL REIGN,” say they, “ON THE EARTH”—ch. 5:10.

John also beheld the Sons of the Deity in Apocalypse in the mighty angel of chap. 10:1. This “comes down out of the heaven invested with a cloud; and a rainbow upon his head, and his face as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire.” His lion-roar proclaims the consummation of “the mystery of the Deity as he hath declared the glad tidings to his servants the prophets”—ver. 7; which accomplishment ultimates in the constituents of this mighty angel taking possession of the kingdom under the whole heaven, and the consequent establishment of the reign of Yahweh and of his Elohim for the Aions of the Aions. This is the result of the seventh and last trumpet having exhausted the judgment pertaining to it. The consummation of this trumpet, which is also the consummation of the Seventh Seal, is the work of the mighty angel, symbolizing the heaven-descended Jesus and his Brethren, the saints. The Seventh Vial is the work allotted for them to do; and in their mission they march to victory with “FACE AS THE SUN, and feet as pillars of fire.”

Again they appear upon the apocalyptic page in chap. 14:1. Here they are the sealed nation of chap. 7:4–12, resurrected with the Lamb, Jesus, in their midst. Their symbolical number, a definite for an unknown, (ch. 7:9,) is 144,000. In this vision they are stationary, as indicated by “stood” in reference to the Lamb with whom they are. They are standing, awaiting the result of the proclamation which announces to the nations that “THE HOUR OF JUDGEMENT IS COME”—14:6, 7. They wait the issue of this before they go forth, as “the Seven Spirits in all the earth,” to overthrow Babylon, and to torment the worshippers of the Beast and his Image—14:8–11.

In chap. 15:2, the Sons of the Deity are again apocalypsed. Here they are in the attitude of victory and blessedness. They are in joyous repose, “standing upon a translucent sea, having the harps of the Deity.” This sea of nations had been “mingled with fire;” but “they had gotten the victory” over the Beast and his Image, and over his Mark and Number, which as dross had all been destroyed from the sea by the fire of their indignation and power; and they are seen here in “rest from their labours, and their works following them.” This scene is the consummation of the Seventh Vial, in which it can be said, “Thy judgments are made manifest”—15:4.

In getting the victory over the Beast they are apocalypsed in the vision portrayed in chap. 19:11–21. Here the Sons of the Deity appear in military array, in clouds of cavalry, styled “the hosts in the heaven,” following “THE WORD OF THE DEITY” in his campaigns against the nations; which he smites and conquers in treading “the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of the all-powerful Deity.” They tread them “as ashes under the soles of their feet,” and bind and shut up the Dragon in powerlessness for a thousand years.

Having obtained this great victory over the kingdoms and dominions of the world, they are manifested as the occupants of thrones peculiarly their own; which continue undisturbed for a thousand years. Their victory inaugurates the universal dominion foreshadowed in the fifth chapter, from ver. 12 to 14. Peace being thus conquered by their omnipotence, “the spirit is quieted, and the earth is at rest.” The Gentile earth and heaven have fled away from before them. With the Captain of their salvation they are enthroned as “the Kings of the earth;” and as A DIVINE MUNICIPALITY, possess the glory and honor of the nations—21:26. In this relation they are apocalypsed as the NEW JERUSALEM, “the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is the Deity;” looked for, but not yet seen, by the patriarchs and prophets of the olden time—Heb. 11:10; Apoc. 21:9–27.

For a thousand years this Beloved City is the light of the nations, which are then “all blessed in Abraham and his Seed,” according to the gospel of the kingdom. It is the Yahweh-Elohistic municipality, symbolized by one hundred and forty-four cubits, each cubit representing one thousand of the numerical symbol of this “Holy Nation,” the Israel of the Deity—ch. 7:4; 14:1; 1 Pet. 2:9; Gal. 6:16. But, at the ending of these thousand years, during which they have been an Arboretum of healing influences to the nations, the base ingratitude, malice, and envy of human nature find scope to organize rebellion against the Saints and their government. Their camp is beleaguered by countless myriads which gather together against them for war. But the Sons of the Deity are as powerful at the end as at the beginning of the thousand years. Peace and blessedness will not have enervated their incorruptible nature; and they will be prepared to give the rebels a crushing and final overthrow. As the Woman’s Seed, their mission is to bruise the Serpent's Head—Gen. 3:15. The war begun, their burning indignation overflows them as a consuming fire, in which they are “tormented day and night” to the end of the thousand years—ch. 20:10. Thus “fire comes down from the Deity out of the heaven, and devours them.” This establishes “the End,” when the kingdom is delivered up to the Father; who will then have put all enemies under the Son's feet. At this crisis death is banished from the earth; the wicked utterly destroyed out of it; and the Deity apocalypsed, or manifested, in his Sons, considerably augmented in number by the accessions of the thousand years, becomes the sole occupant and inheritor of the earth—1 Cor. 15:24; Prov. 10:30; Apoc. 21:3, 4.

5. The Blessed

In Apoc. 1:3, the Spirit pronounces a benediction upon individuals of a certain class in relation to the Apocalypse. They are characterized in the original by the terms ho anaginoskon, and hoi akouontes, and terountes; the first being rendered in the Common Version, “he that readeth,” the second, “they that hear,” and the third, “keep.” But these renderings do not express the full sense of the original; for a man may read and hear and keep in memory the words prophesied, and the things commanded, and yet be very far from understanding, and heeding, and watching by the light of, what is written. The benediction of this verse is not pronounced upon such; but on those who answer to the import of the three words selected by the Spirit.

The word anaginoskon signifies one who gathers exact knowledge of a matter or thing. Hence, in my translation I have rendered it, “he that knows accurately.” Such a one might assume the position of an expositor; for knowing accurately the words of the prophecy, he would be competent to expound them to others. The first part of the benediction, then, falls upon him—“Blessed he that can expound the words of this prophecy!” But, alas! if the benediction were confined to him only, how few in the generations subsequent to John's would be of the number of the “blessed!” Happily, however, it is not so limited. If one come to know accurately, others, who would never have been able to get an exact knowledge by their own unassisted efforts, may obtain from him such a knowledge as will enable them to be hoi akouontes; that is, not only hearers, but hearers who give heed to what they hear, and understand. They are not to be negligent hearers if they would be blessed; they must keep or “observe narrowly the things which have been written in it.” They must scrutinize them, and by their aid “Watch.” “Behold, I come as a thief,” saith Jesus; “blessed is he that watcheth.” But they only can watch to any purpose who “narrowly observe.” The Apocalypse was given to this end—that the servants of the Deity, who are keeping their garments, might be able to discern the signs of the times preceding the apocalypse of Christ; and the real nature of things extant in their several generations. No believer understanding this prophecy could be seduced into fellowship with the clerical institutions of the world; because he would see them all in their native deformity and sin.

The reason given why they are blessed who know accurately, give heed to, and observe narrowly, the subject-matter of the prophecy, is “because the time is near.” The time of the prophecy. When the prophecy was given, that the Seed of the Woman should bruise the serpent's head, the time was not near. But in respect of this prophecy symbolized in the Apocalypse, “the time is near.” It began to be developed soon after it was published; and its development has been progressing onwards to its grand catastrophe ever since. Hence, all this long series of centuries from John to the apocalypse of the Sons of the Deity, and the consummation of their mission in the establishment of the kingdom of their Father, and the overthrow of the enemy, is the time of the prophecy. This long period had its beginning and its end, which are significantly indicated by the fact of the phrase occurring but twice; first in the verse before us, and next in ch. 22:10, at the end of the book; as if they had been so placed to enclose the prophecy between them. In the latter place it was said to John, "Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; because the time is near." This instruction was contrary to that given to Daniel in ch. 12:4, 9. He was commanded to "shut up the words, and seal the book" of his prophecy, "till the time of the end;" which was an intimation that it would not speak intelligibly till then. But it was not to be so with the Apocalypse. This was to speak intelligibly to the blessed who came to know it accurately, and to give heed to it, in all its course, each generation discerning the signs of its own times, while all "the servants of the Deity," whose especial document it is, had among them a scriptural understanding of the consummation it reveals.

"The time is near," then; not that the thousand years should begin, and Christ and the Saints should rule the nations, near to John's time, but that soon after the Apocalypse was revealed to him, the threatenings against the Nicolaitanes, the Balaams, the Jezebels, and the "liars," in the apocalyptic and other ecclesias of the time, in which John's contemporaries were personally interested, should begin to come upon them; and that this judgment, beginning at the house of God, would set in motion the comparatively, or rather politically, quiescent iniquity of the churches, which, in its working, would at length develop the results foreshadowed in the Dragon, the Beasts, and the False Prophet, and the events thereto relating, which, also, in their action and reaction upon one another in their efforts to establish their policies, should create such a situation of affairs in the Habitable, as should favor the interference of Omnipotence for their chastisement and overthrow, and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the ruin of theirs. The Seed of the Kingdom had been sown in the whole Roman Habitable by the apostles. Ecclesias had been planted everywhere, and wherever they existed they embodied principles subversive of the existing order of things, for if their doctrine prevailed in its purity, converting all the world, as our clergy vainly imagine it is to do, both governors and governed, Judaism and paganism, would of necessity have been abolished; and if perverted and traditionalized, it would still be inimical to the existing order. A corrupted gospel would only intoxicate its believers. This was the condition of such men as Origen, Dionysius, Cyprian, Lactantius, Eusebius, and such like. Like the people and clergy of our day, they had acquired too much light to continue pagans, but not enough to become Christians. They became CATHOLIC POLITICIANS. If there had been no true Christianity, they would have continued pagans; but the truth being established, there existed a basis out of which flesh and blood could evolve a system of abomination agreeable to its own diabolism. This, as we shall see, had attained considerable development in John's period of exile. It was a powerful element in the "ha eisi, the things which do exist," that is, contemporary with John. Many professors were intoxicated; and when they no longer had the apostle, and the faithful men that overlived him, to keep them in check, iniquity broke loose, and gave an impetus to human affairs, and a direction to their policy, which ultimated in the establishment of a system of spiritual prostitution, variously denominated Catholicism, Romanism, Protestantism, and sectarianism, as at this day.

But blessed is he that understands the Apocalypse, gives heed to, and observes narrowly the things which have been written therein, for it is utterly impossible for such a man to be imposed upon by any of these. He could as soon become a Mohammedan, as understanding, and honestly believing what he understands, to become a pious professor of any of the churches of what is absurdly enough styled "Christendom," and to imagine thereby that he was a Christian in faith and practice. The teaching of the clergy is opposed to, and subversive of, the Christian faith, and therefore, from alpha to omega, at variance with the doctrine of the Apocalypse in faith, hope, and practice. Blessed is the man who, instructed by its teaching, is delivered from the dogmas and commandments of the craft.

SECTION 3. THE SALUATION.

“JOHN TO THE SEVEN ECCLESIAS WHICH ARE IN THE ASIA: JOY TO YOU AND PEACE FROM THE WHO IS, AND WHO WAS, AND WHO IS COMING; AND FROM THE SEVEN SPIRITS WHICH IS BEFORE HIS THRONE; AND FROM JESUS ANOINTED, THE FAITHFUL WITNESS, THE CHIEFBORN FROM AMONG THE DEAD, AND THE PRINCE OF THE KINGS OF THE EARTH: TO HIM HAVING LOVED US AND WASHED US FROM OUR SINS IN HIS BLOOD, AND MADE US KINGS AND PRIESTS FOR THE DEITY, EVEN OUR FATHER, TO HIM BE THE GLORY AND THE SUPREMACY DURING THE AIONS OF THE AIONS. AMEN”—APOC. 1:4–6.

As we have seen, John, the beloved apostle, having tarried till the Lord came, and therefore witnessed the devouring of the Mosaic body politic by the Roman Eagles of the East, by the common consent of all reliable antiquity, was honored as the channel through which the wonders of the Apocalypse should be communicated to men. Having informed us in the first verse whence he derived it, from the fountain and origin of all wisdom and knowledge, from the Theos, or Former and Disposer of all things, through the Anointed Jesus by his messengers and for the Servants of the Father, he now tells us to what special communities of the faithful the invaluable gift was to be confided; that they might multiply it, and circulate it among all the Ecclesias of the Habitable, as the last communication from heaven till the time should come for the glory and power to be manifested before the eyes of all nations. He was not left at liberty to send it to what congregations his own prudence might suggest; but he tells us, in the tenth and eleventh verses, “I came to be in spirit in the Lord’s day: and I heard behind me a loud voice as of a trumpet, saying I am the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last: and what thou beholdest write for a scroll, and send to the Seven Ecclesias which are in Asia; to Ephesus, and to Smyrna, and to Pergamos, and to Thyatira, and to Sardis, and to Philadelphia, and to Laodicea.” Hence there was no alternative. The Apocalypse must be sent to these seven. In obedience, therefore, to this command, in writing he primarily addresses himself to “the seven ecclesias which are in the Asia.”

1. “Church.”

In the rendering of the original before us I have not translated the word ekklesiai, but simply transferred it. It is generally rendered churches; but this word does not express the ideas of ecclesia. Church is a corruption of kuriake, which signifies “pertaining to a lord.” The Anglo-Saxons took the first and last syllables of the Greek word, as kur-ke, which they spelled Circe; but which is more obviously shown in the Scotch kirke; both of which are equivalent to the modern English Chur-ch. “Something pertaining to a lord” is the etymological signification of the word; and although, in a certain sense, an ecclesia is something pertaining to a lord, and that lord the Lord of heaven and earth, yet the ideas of property and lordship are not contained in the word ecclesia. This is one reason why in this exposition of the Apocalypse we reject the word church as the representative of ecclesia.

Another reason is, that ideas are conventionally associated with the word which are altogether unscriptural. Ecclesia never signifies in the Bible “the place which Christians consecrate to the worship of God;” nor does it signify such collective bodies of “professors of religion” as pass current for Christians in and with the world, under the various “names and denominations” of “Christendom.” These, and many other ideas associated with the word church, such as churchman, church-warden, church-attire, churchyard, churching of women, and all such papistical foolishness, are altogether foreign from the scriptural use of ecclesia. In order, therefore, to get quit of all the rubbish we exclude church from our apocalyptic vocabulary, and hold on to the word used by the apostles. We have therefore transferred it in our rendering without translation.

Still, as an expounder of the word of truth, it is our duty to make the word ecclesia perfectly intelligible to the unlearned reader; for we write principally for the benefit of such.

2. Of Ecclesia.

ECCLESIA, then, is a word compounded of ek, “out of,” and klesis, “a call, or invitation.” Hence an ekklesis, is “an invitation to come out;” and the assembly of people convened in consequence of their acceptance of the invitation is an ecclesia. This is the etymology of the word, which is also in agreement with its scriptural constitution, which we shall briefly explain.

The mission of the apostles was to the Jews first, and afterwards to the Gentiles, for the purpose of announcing to them an invitation from the Deity to certain things, which, when accepted, became to the invited “the Hope of the Calling.” In delivering this message, or invitation, they distinctly defined the things to which their hearers were invited. In doing this, they informed them of the purpose of Deity—that He had appointed a day in the which the whole inhabited earth should be ruled in righteousness by the Anointed Jesus, whom he had raised from among the dead—Dan. 2:44; 7:14; Acts 17:31. But that, before that “day” of the administration of the world’s affairs in righteousness should be introduced, He had, in his great mercy and goodness, determined to invite all Jews and Gentiles to share in that kingdom and glory with eternal life, upon certain specified and indispensable conditions. Hence the twelve apostles, constituting “the Apostleship of the Circumcision,” were sent to the circumcised; and Paul to the uncircumcised, to invite all ranks and degrees of all nations “to God’s Kingdom and Glory”—1 Thess. 2:12. The result proposed by this invitation was not the converting of the “immortal souls” of mankind, and the saving of them from eternal conflagration in the apocalyptic “Lake of Fire and Brimstone;” it was not that they might “get religion,” and by its efficacy obtain a right and title to mansions in the skies: no such clerical result as these were proposed by the invitation. The invitation was designed, in the words of James, “to take out of the nations a people FOR HIS NAME.” The expected consummation was not the conversion of nations by the apostles and their successors in the faith, but the separation of a class from the general body of mankind, which class should constitute the “ONE Yahweh-NAME;” and that by this Almighty Name the world should be ruled in righteousness. When this name is completed,—that is, when the last believer shall be inducted into it, and all its elements shall be glorified,—it will constitute the ecclesia in its largest sense. When glorified, its members will occupy “the heavens;” not the skies, but the apocalyptic heavens, to which the kingdoms of this world belong—Rev. 11:15; Dan. 7:18, 27. In the present state, they are “an ecclesia of Chiefborns, who have been enrolled for heavens”—Heb. 12:23. The apostles were engaged in enrolling men and women for the future administration of the world’s affairs; so that when they shall attain to dominion they will be “the Heavens that rule.” The gospel invites men to enrolment for becoming in due time the stars and constellations of the New Heavens, in which dwells righteousness, that they may shine as such in the kingdom of their Father—Dan. 12:3; Matt. 13:43.

But men and women become elements of this people of the Name upon certain specified and indispensable conditions. They are invited to God’s kingdom and glory; and they accept the invitation in believing the gospel of the kingdom and name, and subjecting themselves to “the obedience of faith.” What Paul styles “the wholesome words of the Lord Jesus,” are these: “He having believed and been baptized shall be saved; but he having not believed shall be condemned.” If it be asked, what is a man required to believe? The Lord Jesus replies in the previous verse, “THE GOSPEL”—Mark 16:15, 16. There is no salvation without belief of, and obedience to this. Hence when Philip, one of the seven deacons, preached to the Samaritans, it is stated in Acts 8:12, that “when they believed Philip evangelizing THE THINGS concerning the Kingdom of the Deity, and of the Name of the Anointed Jesus, they were immersed, both men and women.” The things of the Kingdom and the Name are the great subject-matter of the Gospel of God, “promised before,” says Paul, “through the Prophets in holy writings”—Rom. 1:2: and “the power of God for salvation to every one who believes.” Without this power none can be saved; hence the immense importance of “the gospel of the kingdom,” which is totally different to anything preached for salvation by the clergy. “The things” must be known, understood, believed, and obeyed, with an honest and good heart. This is indispensable. But the work before me is not the exposition of the gospel; but the exposition of the Apocalypse for the benefit of those who have already comprehended and obeyed the gospel. Nevertheless, for the benefit of any sincere reader who is ignorant, we refer him to the Covenants made with Abraham and David, and to the testimony concerning Jesus in the writings of the apostles, and to the preaching by these as illustrated in the Acts, for an answer to the question, “What are the things to be believed for salvation?”—See Gen. 12:1–3, 7; 13:14, 15; 15:6, 7, 8–21; 17; 22; 1 Chron. 17:11–15; Matt. 16; Acts 2; 3; 8; 10; 26:6, 7; 28:20, 23.

Now when men and women became Christians after the apostolic fashion, (and this is the only way of any account,) they became members of “the Ecclesia of Chiefborns.” They were addressed in the apostolic epistles as κλητοὶ kletoi, “THE CALLED,” or invited, “of Jesus Anointed;” as “made holy in Jesus Anointed, called Saints,” or holy ones; as “the faithful in the Anointed Jesus;” as “the faithful brethren in an Anointed One;” and as “the Ecclesia IN God the Father, and IN the Lord, Jesus Anointed.” They, being in the Deity and in the Anointed One, and the anointing being in them, were a manifestation of Deity in flesh; and were addressed by Paul, saying thus, “Ye are all Sons of Deity in the Anointed Jesus through the faith: for as many as have been immersed into the Anointed, have put on the Anointed. There is (in him) neither Jew nor Greek; there is (in him) neither slave nor freeman; nor is there (in him) male and female: for ye are ALL ONE in the Anointed Jesus: and if ye be the Anointed’s, then are ye the seed of Abraham, and Heirs according to the promise”—Gal. 3:26–29.

From these premises, then, it is evident that an Ecclesia is a community of men and women, who have accepted an invitation to the kingdom and glory of the Deity; in believing the promises and testimonies concerning the kingdom and name of Jesus Anointed; and in being immersed into him: by which faith and obedience they have been “washed from their sins in his blood; and made kings and priests to the Deity, even to the Father;” and so separated from the body of mankind for the Age to Come. The Ecclesia of Chiefborns is, therefore, not the Kingdom of God, as church, in the clerical sense, is styled; but it is the community of the Heirs of the Kingdom; and every one knows, or ought to know, the difference between the heirs of an estate, and the estate itself.

From these premises, the reader will readily perceive that the distinction existing between church in the usual acceptation, and ecclesia as defined above, is not fanciful, but real and important. The churches of the Gentiles are not ecclesia. They make no pretensions to be such, according to the definition I have demonstrated. The members of the churches, judging from their prayers, extemporized and printed, are not saints, but “miserable sinners.” This is the designation imposed upon themselves by the most pious of the most exquisitely orthodox establishments. Thus the evangelical divines, who lead the stereotyped devotions of the Fabers, the Flemmings, the Elliots, the Crollys, the Bickersteths, and McNeils, send up their voices to heaven, saying, Lord, have mercy upon us miserable sinners! Now, if the most pious and orthodox denominate themselves thus, what must the schismatics of the heterodox conventicles be! They all, doubtless, know themselves; and as they one and all proclaim themselves to be miserable sinners, who have gone astray like lost sheep, it would be presumption in me to dispute it. I accept, therefore, their condemnation of themselves; and am, consequently, justified in saying that a church, as distinguished from AN ECCLESIA, is a community of miserable sinners, possessed by a lord commonly known as “the god of this world.” It is not wonderful, then, that “all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life,” should reign in the pulpits and all the pews. Churchmen, since the days of Eusebius, to go no further back, will have it that the church is the kingdom of God. Well, we grant it, with the understanding, that the God whose kingdom it is claimed to be is SIN, the great god, or power, or the world. There is nothing like understanding, and being understood, so that we may be able to call things by their right names. Here we have the line of demarcation broadly and distinctly drawn. The ECCLESIAS of the Scriptures are "the Heritages," or kleroi, the true clergies of the Deity, (1 Pet. 5:3,) who shall possess the earth and all that it contains; while the churches are the Kingdom of SIN, possessed and administered by his clergy for their own glory and behoof. This being indisputable, the reader will understand that the Apocalypse is not addressed to the churches of "Christendom;" neither is the salutation of joy and peace to them. Joy and peace are only for the Saints in the Anointed Jesus, who know, and have obeyed the truth, having been purified thereby—1 Pet. 1:22. The salutations of the scriptures are only for these; never for "miserable sinners," whose case we dismiss for the present with the remark, that the apostles never commenced their epistles with "joy and peace to you, miserable sinners, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Anointed; but on the contrary, "to you, the Saints and faithful." God is the Father, and Jesus the Lord, only of the enlightened and obedient; hence to these only did they send greeting.

3. Seven Ecclesias.

The Apocalypse is remarkable for the number seven. The first time it is used in the Bible is in Gen. 2:2, "On the seventh day Elohim ended his work which he had made; and he rested (or ceased) on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." In this, the ideas connected with the number seven are completion and cessation. Any thing denominated by seven, is complete; it lacks nothing to make it perfect, and beyond it nothing remains to be accomplished.

The seven ecclesias are specified by name in the eleventh verse of the chapter before us; and upon the principle of completeness, seven were selected rather than any other number, to indicate that what was written to the seven was written to all the "ONE BODY" throughout the Habitable in seven successive states thereof. No one of the ecclesias existed that could say it had no interest in the things apocalypsed.

The number seven was also associated with the ecclesias to denote their relationship to the parabolic holy place. They were the anti-typical lightstands—the heavenly things through which the darkness of the world was to be dispelled—the Ecclesia of the living God, the pillar and support of the truth—1 Tim. 3:15.

They were located $\rho\nu\ \tau\eta\ \text{Ασία}$, in the Asia, that is, in that province of Asia Minor, or Anatolia, called Asia, where their several cities, then in a highly flourishing condition, were situated not very far distant from each other. The salutation was to these as the representatives of the saints and faithful everywhere. And how highly honorable to them, when we consider who they were, and the exalted personage whence it came. They were communities of "the poor of this world," with not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble among them. To such, and not to the princes and potentates of the world, did the Creator of the universe salute them through John with "joy and peace." He presents himself to them as Deity by the Seven Spirits in Jesus the Anointed—THE DIVINE LOGOS IN FLESH. He styles him self ho on, "He who is," which is equivalent to declaring that he is not dead, but "is risen, as he said;" also ho en, "He who was"—He that is risen is the same as He who was before Abraham, and before the crucifixion: and ho erchomenos, "He that is coming" in power and great glory. But that they might not separate him in their minds from the anointing, the salutation is said to come from Him, "and from the Seven Spirits which is before the throne of him;" and that the source of the salutation may still stand out in bolder relief, it is said to proceed "from Jesus Anointed," who is "Deity manifested in flesh;" Jesus is the flesh, and the Seven Spirits the Deity with which the resurrected flesh is anointed so as to be omniscient and almighty. Thus combined, the salutation is from "the Lord the Spirit." He is styled "the faithful witness," because he came into the world that he might bear witness unto the truth; and did witness it before Pontius Pilate, in the face of the death which his confession brought upon him. "I AM THE KING OF THE JEWS," said he, and for that avowal he was put to death upon the accursed tree—John 18:33, 37; 19:3, 12, 14, 19; 1 Tim 6:13. But though he suffered thus, he was "justified by spirit," and became "the Cheifborn from among dead ones," that in all things he might have the preeminence. He is also styled "the Prince of the Kings of the earth." These, however, are not the existing "crowned heads," nor the wearers of crowns in the days of John, but those kings and priests whom he hath made such unto the Deity, his Father and theirs. He is Prince, or Chief Priest and King of these, who shall with Him rule the Habitable in righteousness, and hence his apocalyptic title, "KING of kings and LORD of lords"—Rev. 17:14; 19:16: "to Him," says John, "be the glory and the supreme authority during the AIONS of the AIONS. Amen."

There is a peculiarity in our rendering of this salutation which deserves a little further attention than we have yet given it. The form of speech is this, "from the SEVEN SPIRITS which is before his throne." This is an ungrammatical form of words. Both Greek and English grammar require that the verb "is" should be "are," and in the English Version it is so rendered. But verbal accuracy would lead to a doctrinal mistake. It is written in the Greek, "Seven Spirits which is"—ha estin; and the reason is, that these seven are not seven distinct and independent spirits, but the One Spirit in sevenfold or perfect manifestation. Paul says, "there is ONE SPIRIT, even as ye are called in ONE HOPE of your invitation;" and "there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit;" and "by One Spirit we were all immersed into One Body; and have been all made to drink into One Spirit"—Eph. 4:4; 1 Cor. 12:4, 13. Hence "seven" prefixed to "spirits" does not indicate plurality of spirits, but perfection in wisdom, knowledge, and power of one and the same spirit; so that this perfection is expressed by plurality of figure, while the oneness of the Spirit is expressed ungrammatically by the verb in the singular. The phrase, therefore, "the Seven Spirits which is," is a Hebraism like that in Gen. 1:1, bahrah Elohim, "Mighty Ones he created"—cases in which the rules of grammarians are ignored for the convenience of the truth.

4. "For Ever and Ever."

In response to the salutation from the Deity manifested by spirit in Jesus Anointed, John, as the representative of earth's future kings, ascribes to him as their Prince, "the glory and the supremacy during the Aions of the Aions." In the English version, those words in italics are rendered "for ever and ever;" and represent to the Anglo-Saxon mind the idea of unlimited futurity, commonly styled ETERNITY. This acceptance of the phrase leads to the conclusion, that the supremacy of Jesus as Prince-Priest and King of a priestly dominion on earth, is to be eternal; a notion which implies that sin and death are destined to obtain on this planet eternally. But this conclusion is altogether set aside by the teaching of the New Testament. In 1 Cor. 15:23, Paul lays down a certain order of future development; as, first, "they who are Christ's, made alive in his presence;" second, "the End." Between these two epochs there is a long interval, the duration of which Paul does not define; but, having notified the arrival of "the end," he tells us what is to come to pass then. He says, that the kingdom that had been existing during said interval is to be "delivered up" to the Divine Father; and that this delivering up is consequent upon "all rule, authority, and power" having been "put down;" for the reign of the Son of man is decreed of Heaven to continue till this result shall be consummated. "He must reign TILL he (the Father) have put all enemies under his feet"—Ps. 8:6; 110:1. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." The Son, then, is to reign as the Father's kings and priests, until death shall be abolished from the earth. This implies the previous extermination of sin; for death is the wages of sin; and wages are not paid where services are not rendered.

We see, then, that the Son of man is not to reign as the majesty of a priestly kingdom after sin and death are rooted out; and be it remembered, that the kingdom the apocalypse exhibits is the dominion of the Father's kings and priests. It contains but few hints of what is to be the order of things upon earth after "the End" indicated by Paul. The Melchizedec Kingdom of the Deity, subduing and reconciling terrestrial things to him, is the great theme of its visions and descriptions. When the end for which it will be established is accomplished, it will be delivered up, and then "the supremacy" of THE SON, both in respect of "the Head" and "the Body," in other words, of Jesus and his Brethren, will cease. An end will be put to it. During the long interval of a thousand years, the supremacy of the saints is decreed. For all that time, two classes will exist contemporaneously upon earth—the world-rulers, incorruptible and deathless; and the subject-world of nations, peccable and mortal. Flesh and blood cannot possess this Melchizedec or priestly kingdom. Jesus and the Saints alone can have it; so that while it continues, their supremacy must and will be upheld against all aspirations of the flesh. But when the time arrives for flesh and blood, or "corruption," to be abolished from the earth; and for all its future inhabitants to become Elohim. or incorruptible and deathless beings, consubstantial with Deity; the Elohim of the previous thousand years will no longer be priests offering gifts and sacrifices for them to the Deity. The priestly supremacy will terminate with the cessation of the necessity which originated it; and the Deity by spirit will be the all things in them all. Thus, "when all things shall be subdued unto him (the Son), then shall the Son also himself BE SUBJECT unto him (the Father) that put all things under him, that the Deity may be the all things in all."

Hence, John, who was in accord with Paul, did not ascribe an eternal supremacy to the Son, as taught by Anglo-Saxonism. He was not contemplating the position of Jesus in a postmillennial order of things; but his position in relation to the Millennial Dominion. In reference to this, he said, "to Him the glory and supremacy during the Aions of the Aions."

"For ever and ever," or even its parallel in Daniel, "for ever, even for ever and ever," are phrases, then, that do not indicate "eternity," being used of things which are in their nature, or constitution, terminable. But we must look to the original, and see what can be made of that. In the text of the Apocalypse, the phrase is eis tous aionas ton aionon. This occurs fourteen times, and is uniformly rendered "for ever and ever," except in chap. 1:18, where it is rendered evermore. In chap. 14:11, the definite article is omitted: the reading is, therefore, eis aionas aionon.

Now, as the Apocalypse treats of the same subject as that revealed to Daniel in his seventh chapter, namely, the kingdom and conquests of the Saints, we ought to find the Chaldee original of this formula, so frequently occurrent in the New Testament. And this we do in the eighteenth verse of that chapter. In this, the time is specified how long the Saints shall possess the kingdom; the same kingdom that Daniel had told Nebuchadnezzar should "stand לעלמיה leahlmayyah, for Olahms"—chap. 2:44 :—"they shall possess the kingdom ad ahlmah, wead ahlahm ahlmaiyyah, for an Ahlmah, even for an Ahlmah of Ahlmahs." The Chaldee word ahlmah is identical with the Hebrew אֶלְמָה

olahm; and is represented in the Greek by aiwv, though in etymology different.

The Hebrew and Chaldee nouns are derived from the verb ahlam, "to hide, to conceal." Hence an Olahm, in relation to time is a period hidden or concealed; hidden in the past, or concealed in the future. In prophecy, it designates absolutely a certain period to exist; but without defining its beginning or ending. The kingdom belonging to the Saints of the Most High Ones (elyonin) is to "stand for hidden periods," or olahms, comprised in one hidden period, or Olahm which must, therefore, be longer than all of them together. Hence this will be a Hidden Period of Hidden Periods, or an Olahm, even "an Olahm of Olahms." I have a translation of Dan. 7:18 before me which renders the time the Saints are to possess the kingdom by the formula, "for eternity, even for eternity of eternity." This, however, is a mere flourish, and no translation, and bears on the face of it proof that the inventor of the form knew nothing about the nature of the kingdom, nor the purpose for which it is to be established. As I have shown, the kingdom is not to continue eternally; so that the Saints cannot hold it for eternity; and as the scripture is true, they do not use the word here in the sense of ever and eternity.

The duration of this Chaldee formula may be approximated from another direction. Thus, the kingdom the Saints are to take is the dominion of the lion, the bear, and the leopard, three of Daniel's four beasts. They are utterly to destroy the fourth, but the political organizations represented by the other three, are to be continued in existence, but without sovereignty. While in existence, they are under the dominion of the Saints, whose administrations will not be superseded by other rulers. The existence of these organizations subjectively to the Saints is defined; and consequently, the duration of their holding of the kingdom is thereby defined likewise. In ch. 7:12, it says, "a prolonging in life was given the three beasts ad-z'man we-iddan, during an appointed time and a set time." This, then, is the duration of the Olahm, or Ahlmah, of the kingdom—a hidden period containing an appointed time and a set time. The Apocalypse has revealed the number of years contained in these kinds of time, in telling us how long the Saints are to reign with Christ after binding the Dragon; whose dominion at the appearing of Christ covers the territories of the polities symbolized by the three beasts. They are to reign thenceforth with him during a thousand years—Apoc. 20:6. The period consists of "a set time," and "an appointed time." A set time is indicated by iddan, which is equivalent to the Hebrew moaid, the word used in Gen. 17:21, where it is said, "Sarah shall bear unto thee Isaac, at this set time in the next year." This is, then, a period of gestation, which consists of 280 days; a day for a year in symbolic time. This, deducted from 1,000, leaves 720 years for the "appointed time;" or two times of 360 years each. Daniel did not discern "what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in him did signify" by the z'man we-iddan, nor by the ahlmah of ahlmahs; but not so with ourselves,—for the Father has apocalypted the solution in the thousand years.

The reader will, therefore, understand, that the prophets, under divine inspiration, predicted the development in a future remote from their day, of a period that should continue "for a season and a time." They did not know when it should begin, nor what length of time was meant by the formula; and consequently, could not tell when it should come to an end: but that such a period should exist, and be of a very peculiar character, even most glorious to all the righteous who should be contemporary with it, they were all agreed, as is plainly to be seen in all their writings. "I heard," says Daniel, "but I understood not; for the words were closed up and sealed till the time of the end." For this reason, the period was called Olahm, or THE HIDDEN; beyond which the prophets, and those instructed by them, did not often look. They saw it was terminable: and therefore if they spoke of anything not restricted to it, they would say, ad-olahm we-ad, "during the hidden period and beyond."

The promises made to Abraham and to David had especial reference to this Olahm; and the Apocalypse shows symbolically how the Olahm is to be introduced, and how the promises to those patriarchs are to be performed. Thus, the Spirit said to Abraham in regard to Canaan, "All the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed ad-olahm, during a hidden period." And again, reminding Israel of the same promise, He says by Jeremiah, "If ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings * * * I will cause you to dwell in the land which I gave to your fathers l'min-olahm we-ad olahm for from (the beginning of) the hidden period, and during the hidden period;" which in the Common Version is rendered "for ever and ever," as though the Israelites were destined to be flesh and blood occupants of Canaan for eternity!

The covenant made with David is styled by him in his last words, "a covenant of olahm." In the Common Version this is rendered "an everlasting covenant;" but it ought to be termed "a covenant of the hidden period." It was so styled, because it was to be established then; and as the subject-matter of this covenant is the throne symbolized in Apoc. 4, and the kingdom taken possession of by the Saints in ch. 11:15; Dan. 7:18, it is styled "a kingdom of Olahm, " or the kingdom pertaining to the hidden period.

The Mosaic Period was on Olahm; for, although the Israelites knew when it began, none of them, not even Jesus, nor the angels, knew when it would come to an end. This is proved by Mark 13:32. When the Mosaic Heaven and Earth should pass away, that olahm would be ended, as it was A.D. 72. In this long period of 1695 years, there were numerous lesser periods, as the jubilees, or periods of restitution, recurring every fifty years. Hence the Mosaic was an Olahm of Olahms, one long period containing many lesser ones. But this system of periods did not terminate in itself. It was typical, or representative, of times and seasons belonging to the throne and kingdom of the saints. Thus, in Apoc. 14:1–5, we have the Pentecost in the Kingdom; in ver. 6, 7, the trumpet of the Jubilee sounding; and in vers. 8–11, the great and terrible day of national atonement, ultimating in the conquest of the nations, and their subjection to Israel's Elohim for the olahm—Lev. 25:8–17, 39–46. Nor is this confined to the introduction of the olahm of the kingdom; there are periodically recurring olahms during all the thousand years, indicated by the observance of the Passover and Feast of Tabernacles to be observed by all nations—Ezek. 45:21; Zech. 14:16–19. For this cause, therefore, the thousand years is called in Daniel "an Olahm, even an Olahm of Olahms; " but by no means an eternity. Presuming, then, that the reader comprehends the matter thus far, I proceed to remark, that the Seventy Israelites who translated the prophets into Greek for the king of Egypt, substituted for olahm the word AION. But, although this does not express the same idea as olahm, it was about as good a word as they could select. It was indefinite; as indefinite as olahm; for it neither defined the beginning nor the end of the period it was chosen to represent.

Aion is compounded of aei and on. The word aei is from ao, aeo, or aemi, signifying primarily, "to blow, to breathe;" secondly, "to live, to pass or spend time." From this derivation aei would present the idea of a going on; and as a particle of time is expressive of that which is unlimited or undefined; "not so much that which cannot be bounded as that which is not bounded—which is not attempted to be defined, but is considered as going on, on, on." Aei, therefore, alone, would not express the true idea of eternity, but only of time, whose end is not bounded by any specification. "This flowing word, indicative of passing time, must be connected with, and, as it were, anchored upon another of more stability, in order to give it any kind of fixedness." This other word is on, the participle of that verb of existence which expresses, in its philosophical sense, the highest mode of being. One part of the compound word, then, is unconfined; the other, since on is of all tenses, altogether excludes the idea of time. Aion, then, is not time, long or short, bounded or endless. Time is said to move in a circle, on account of its likeness to an Aion; hence an aion, and a cycle or circle, are analogous. It is therefore used in the indefinite sense of life, existence, or state of being. Thus, that end which contains the period of each existence is called is aion. The aion of man is threescore years and ten; while the aion of Deity is "from everlasting to everlasting." It is, therefore, A COURSE OF TIME, aei, circling around, wv, BEING; the circling depending upon the nature of the being circled. Hence, Deity being essentially life, the circling of time can never cease in relation to him; but priesthood and man being essentially terminable, the circling of time around them cannot always continue. The diameters of their aions may be measured by their continuance.

"The Aions of the Aions" in the places cited, are the period of the apocalyptic reign, which is a priestly administration "after the Order of Melchizedec;" and therefore, of necessity, not eternal.

Aristotle, whose mother tongue was Greek, says, that "the period of each existence is its aion." The thousand years is therefore the Aion of the Melchizedec Reign, containing aions or cycles within itself, in which Jesus, anointed with the Seven Spirits, will have and bear the glory, and exercise the supreme authority in the midst of his associates, over the nations of the earth to its utmost bounds.

But in the mythology of the heathen, the heaven of their vain imagination, which they placed somewhere above the atmospheric firmament, and having for its supposed existences the gods of “High Olympus,” and the ghosts of Elysium—was an Aion, and so entitled: and as its presumed existences were regarded as of infinite duration, this aion with them was eternity. Hence, also, those styling themselves “members of the church,” whose minds are traditionally imbued with the vain philosophy of the Greeks, believe in the Aion of the heathen, styling it “heaven beyond the skies,” whose existences they allege are the ideas they call “God,” “Jesus,” “angels” evolved from the souls of infants, ghosts of departed saints, etc. This they call eternity—the Pagan-Greek and Latin, the Catholic, Papal, and Protestant ETERNITY: and as the last three have had the translation of the scriptures under their control, and know nothing of any other Aion than an imaginary superatmospheric eternity, they almost universally render eis ton Aiona, and its kindred forms, by “for ever,” and “for ever, even for ever and ever;” and adjectively, by “eternal.”

Now, to simplify this matter as much as possible, I have constructed the following diagram, which will perhaps enable the reader to comprehend more easily the explanation we have presented of the scripture Olahms and Aions.

The Aion of Sin and Death, 7000 Years

In this diagram, the parallelogram a b c d represents a period of 7000 years from the Creation until “the End,” when the Son delivers up the kingdom to the Divine Father; and Death is abolished. It is the period during which sin and death exist on earth, and contains three Aions and four Intervals. The aions are indicated by circular lines; and the intervals of time elapsing from the end of one aion to the beginning of a subsequent one, by parallel lines. The perpendicular line a c indicates the Era of the Creation. The parallel lines between it and the first circle, represent the time that elapsed to THE FALL.

The first circle represents the Antediluvian Olahm, or AION; and the figures in its diameter indicate that it terminated 1656 years from the Creation by the Flood.

The second interval, or space between the first and second circles, represents the period from the Flood to the typical confirmation of the Covenant of the land with Abraham, a duration of 377 years.

The second circle has a crescentic prefix on the left. In the crescent are the figures 430, which denote that it represents a period of that number of years from the confirmation of the Land Covenant to the night on which the Twelve Tribes left Egypt for the purpose of taking possession of it.

The circle itself represents a duration of 1695 years, which terminated at the burning of the Temple by the Romans. This was the Mosaic Aion: and commenced at the baptism of Israel into Moses in the cloud and in the Red Sea—1 Cor. 10:1. The circle and its prefix enclose the whole period of $430 + 1695 = 2125$ years; it embraced the aiones kai geneas, the Aions and Generations; and may therefore be termed the ABRAHAMO-MOSAIC AION, which, having waxed old, vanished away in blood and fire and vapor of smoke—Heb. 8:13; Acts 2:19.

The third interval, which lies between the second and third circles of the diagram, indicates the series of years which has already elapsed since the destruction of Jerusalem, and may yet elapse to the apocalypse of the Sons of the Deity in power and great glory to restore the kingdom again to Israel, an event which marks the commencement of THE REGENERATION. We have defined this interval by 1796 years from the destruction of the Holy City in the Vulg. Era 70. By the end of this period “the kingdoms of the World” will be about to become the kingdoms “of the Lord and of his Anointed; and he shall reign during the Aions of the aions” Rev. 11:15; the same phrase as in ch. 1:6. The end of this long period of 1796 years will terminate in the Vulg. Era 1864. About this epoch will begin as we believe, the wonders that are to introduce a thorough and complete revolution of human affairs, the representation of which enters largely into the scenes of the Apocalypse.

The third circle of the diagram has also a crescentic prefix on the left, only smaller than the preceding. I have made it smaller because it represents a shorter period—only 40 years, styled in the Apocalypse “the Hour of Judgment.” It is the antitype to the 40 years in the wilderness, and the Aion of the Sickles (Rev. 14:14–20) introductory to the third circle, whose diameter is 1000 years. This is “the Aions of the aions,” which are referred to thirteen times in the Apocalypse. It may be styled the ABRAHAMO-MESSIANIC CYCLE, because in it is fully displayed the covenant with Abraham concerning Messiah, Israel, and the Nations. This cycle of aions is “the Day of Christ,” which Abraham, who walked by faith, rejoiced in foreseeing. It is commonly called “THE MILLENNIUM,” because of its continuance mille anni, a 1000 years. To this circle belong to xulon tes zoes, “the Wood of the Life,” and the New Jerusalem. The Gospel treats of this aion, because it is the Aion of the kingdom, and styled by Paul “the Aion to Come”—Heb. 6:5. No one has ever heard the gospel who is ignorant of the doctrine concerning this Aion—the cycle enclosing the hope of all the faithful of patriarchal and Mosaic times. It ends about the Annus Mundi 6994.

The fourth interval of the diagram represents the “Little Season,” which intervenes between the termination of the 1000 years and the end of the 7000 years of the parallelogram. It is the brief period referred to in Rev. 20:3, 7, 8, in which the Dragon-power revives, and, as the Seed of the Old Serpent, contends once more with the Seed of the Woman for supreme authority over the earth. How long after the end of A.M. 7000 the contest may continue, is not apocalypsed. It will terminate, however, in the suppression of the rebellion, and the restoration of Yahweh’s sovereignty throughout the earth. It is at this crisis that Sin, and “Death the wages of Sin,” are finally abolished, with “every curse.” The perpendicular line b d indicates the end of the 7000 years from the Creation.

The fourth circle of the diagram represents ad. This monosyllable signifies “beyond,” and is part of the form of works, lai-Olahm wah-Ed, so frequently used in Moses and the prophets in speaking of Messiah’s aion and BEYOND. It is the Aion of the New Things to be created by the Eternal Power, when the 7000 years shall have passed away—Rev. 21:5. Of the duration of this the Apocalypse says nothing. It may or it may not be boundless, but this we cannot tell. Whatever may be its constitution, of this we are certain, that sin, curse, and death will have no more place in the earth, or the nature of its inhabitants. Its circling will be around incorruptibility and life.

SECTION 4

1. “HE IS COMING”

“BEHOLD he is coming with the clouds, and every eye shall see him, and whosoever pierced him; and all the tribes of the earth shall wail before him. Yea, verily; so let it be.”—APOC. 1:7.

In these words is an exclamation which is designed to direct the reader’s attention to Jesus and the Saints, as the οὗ ἐρχομενος, ho Erchomenos, the One Yahweh who is coming as the anointed with the Seven Spirits—“Behold, he is coming with the clouds.”

The Apocalypse begins immediately after the salutation with the announcement of the coming of Deity in Spirit, and concludes with the declaration, that “He who testifies these things (written in the Apocalypse) says, Verily, I come quickly;” and it points us also to the time when that coming may be expected, and in what sense “quickly” is to be understood in the warning recorded in ch. 16:15, beginning, “Behold, I come as a thief! Blessed is he that watcheth,” and so forth.

No event is more prominently set forth in the apostolic writings than the coming of the Lord Jesus in power and great glory. The prediction is not peculiar to the Apocalypse, though it is made one of its most glorious themes, or rather the most glorious of all.

Thus, when Jesus was preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, he said, “The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his messengers; and THEN he shall reward every man according to his works”—Matt. 16:27. And again, “When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy messengers with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory”—ch. 25:31. And referring to this time, he also said, “I, Amen, say to you, that ye (my apostles) who followed me, in the Regeneration when the Son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, ruling the Twelve Tribes of Israel; * * * ye shall receive a hundredfold, and shall inherit Life Aionian”—ch. 19:28. In these three testimonies, Jesus plainly teaches,

1. That the Son will come in glory and power;
 2. That He will come with Holy Ones;
 3. That He comes to ascend and sit upon the throne of His glory;
 4. That the Regeneration shall be at this epoch;
 5. That the time for rewarding men according to their works is in this Regeneration Era;
- and,
6. That in this Regeneration Era the thrones of the house of Israel will exist again, and be occupied by the Twelve Apostles, then possessed of the life pertaining to the Aion of the Son.

Such are the points inculcated in the teaching of the Seven Spirits, or Logos, with which the Son of David’s daughter was anointed without measure. It is in strict accordance also with the teaching of the same Spirit in the prophets. Thus, Jude testifies that Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, “Behold, Yahweh cometh in his holy myriads (en muriasin hagian autou) to execute judgment upon all”—ver. 14. This is precisely what Jesus taught. Yahweh, the Eternal Spirit, in Holy Myriads, in clouds of Holy Ones, constituting “One Yahweh and One Name,” cometh to execute judgment upon all; and in so doing, to reward every man according to his works. Yahweh in his Holy Myriads is the Son of man—Daniel’s אֵלֹהִים ish-echad, MAN OF ONE—ch. 10:5, referred to by Jesus in the remarkable testimonies already adduced.

Moses, also, referring to the apocalypse of Yahweh, says, in Deut. 33:26: “There is none like the AIL of Yeshurun, riding heavens in thy help, and in his Majesty of Clouds. Mighty Ones of the East is the refuge, even beneath the Powers of Olahm: and he shall drive out the enemy from before thy faces, and shall say, Destroy. Israel then shall dwell safely: the fountain of Jacob (shall be) alone upon a land of corn and wine; also his heavens shall distil dew. Thy blessings, O Israel (are these:) who is like thee, O people saved by Yahweh, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy splendor? And thine enemies shall waste away because of thee; and thou shalt tread upon their high places.”

This testimony of Moses is symbolized in the Apocalypse. Hence the apocalyptic coming of Eternal Power manifested in Spirit-flesh, is the AIL of Yeshurun riding heavens in his clouds of majesty to help Daniel’s people scattered among all nations. His clouds are the Mighty Ones of the East, the Powers of the Millennium, or Age to Come, styled in Rev. 16:12, “the Kings from a Sun’s risings.” These are Israel’s refuge, who shall expel the enemy from the covenant land, and cause them to dwell in it safely. They are the shield and sword of Israel, who shall make them a glorious nation, and subject all the nations to the majesty of Jacob.

I do not propose to adduce all that might be quoted from the prophets concerning the coming of Messiah in his glory and power, but simply a specimen, to show upon what the sayings of the Apocalypse are founded. I shall therefore only add one or two more.

Thus, in Isaiah 28:16, it is written, “Behold, saith Adonai Yahweh, I lay in Zion for a foundation a Stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation.” Now this stone has been tried, but it has not yet been laid in Zion; for when laid, it is a foundation that will not be removed. Jesus is the stone; but hitherto he has proved only “a Stone of stumbling and a Rock of offence” to Israel, as the same prophet predicted in ch. 8:14. It is necessary, therefore, that he return to Jerusalem, as he himself predicted in Matt. 23:39, that his power may be established there, and not be plucked up; and that it may be proclaimed to the cities of Judah, saying, “Behold your Elohim.” Hence, because of this necessity, the same prophet has said, in ch. 40:10, “Behold, Adonai Yahweh will come in might, and his power (shall be) a ruler for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him;” or, as Jesus taught, “when he comes, then he shall reward every man according to his work.” His work has to be performed after he comes. Hitherto, he has only been making preparation; when this is complete, then “Behold, he comes with the clouds!” And having accomplished the work he comes to do, then, as Jesus taught, “the Son of man will sit upon the throne of his glory;” or, as Isaiah expresses it in ch. 24:23, “Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when Yahweh of armies shall reign on Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem; and in the presence of his Ancients (there shall be) glory.” “And in this mountain, Yahweh of armies shall make unto all the peoples a feast of fat things. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all the peoples, and the veil that is spread over all the nations. And he will swallow up death in victory; and Adonai Yahweh will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth”—25:6–8.

Such is the work to be accomplished when he comes with the clouds; a work which will constitute Zion a saved city, and the worker her salvation; hence the prophet speaks on this wise: “Say ye to the Daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him”—ch. 62:11.

But, not only did Enoch, Moses, Isaiah, and indeed all the prophets, predict the coming of Messiah in power and great glory, according to the teaching also of Jesus himself before his ascension; but the apostles also, after that remarkable event, dwelt often and fondly upon it, as the great theme of hope and expectation. Thus, after they had been assured by angelic personages that “the same Jesus who had been taken up from them into the heaven should so come in like manner as they had seen him go into the heaven” (Acts 1:11), they went forth and proclaimed it in all the habitable. On the day of Pentecost, Peter declared that he who had ascended, even Jesus whom they had crucified, had been raised from the dead, for the future purpose of sitting upon the throne of David his ancestor, which every Jew present knew could only be fulfilled by Jesus coming back to Jerusalem in power; for to no other locality did the throne, or seat, of David’s kingdom belong—Acts 2:30. And not long after this, he told the Israelites in the temple, that the absence of Jesus from Palestine was only temporary. “The Lord,” said he, “shall send the Anointed Jesus (who was before preached) unto you, whom heaven indeed must retain until times of restoration of all things, of which the Deity hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, ap’ aionos, from the Aion’s beginning.” In other words, when “the times and seasons” apocalypsed shall arrive, the era of Israel’s national regeneration will have come. It will then be time to restore the kingdom again to Israel, which implies the ingathering of all the tribes of that race, from the outlying countries of the earth; the conquest of the Holy Land from “the powers that be,” and the moral purification of the nation, upon the principle of faith in Jesus as Son of Deity, and King of the Jews, and obedience to whatever form of truth he may be pleased to prescribe.

Afterwards Paul announced to the learned and polite Athenians, that the Deity purposed to rule the inhabited earth by the Anointed Jesus, whom he had raised from the dead for this intent; and in all the cities he visited, he proclaimed Jesus as the future king of all nations, by which he turned the habitable upside down—Acts 17:7, 31. This was in effect preaching the coming of the Lord in power; for unless he returned, and that with power, he could not do the things declared.

This being the tenor of Paul's teaching, when he wrote letters to the ecclesias he had gathered, he addressed them as "waiting for the Apocalypse (or revelation) of our Lord Jesus Anointed;" and concerning certain things affecting himself, he exhorted them to "judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come * * * when every man shall have recompence from the Deity"—1 Cor. 1:7; 4:5: and in ch. 15:22, 23, he told them, that "they which are Christ's, shall be made alive at his coming."

In writing to the saints of Philippi, he is very explicit. "Our politeuma, or commonwealth," says he, "subsists in heavens; out of which we look for the deliverer, the Lord Jesus Anointed, who shall transform the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of this glory"—ch. 3:20: and to the Colossian believers, he says, "Your life is hid with the Anointed One in the Deity. When the Anointed, our life, shall appear, then shall ye also be manifested with him in glory"—ch. 3:3, 4. The citizenship of the saints "subsists in heavens"—in the holy, and most holy states. They put on Christ in the obedience of faith, and are then "in him;" and through him have access to the Divine Father. In putting him on, their names are engraven on his breastplate, and their citizenship begins. Their names are with him within the veil, while they are in the heavenly state, the ecclesia, upon the earth, where, as members of his body, having their hearts sprinkled with the blood of sprinkling from an evil conscience, and the body washed with pure water (Heb. 10:22), they are waiting for his Apocalypse; and "by them who are looking for him," says Paul, "He shall be seen of a second time without sin for salvation"—Heb. 9:28.

Of this manifestation upon earth "a second time," he writes copiously in his letters to the saints in Thessalonica. He mentions it five times in his first epistle; and three times in his second. "You turned from the idols to the Deity, to serve the living and true Deity, and to wait for his Son from the heavens, whom he raised from the dead, Jesus, who delivers us from the wrath which is coming." And in relation to them, he says, "What is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye before our Lord Jesus Anointed in his presence?" "The Lord stablish your hearts unblamable in holiness before the Deity and our Father, in the presence of our Lord Jesus Anointed, with all his holy ones." And when some of them were sorrowing for the loss of brethren who had died, he exhorted them not to grieve as the heathen who have no hope. "For," says he, "if we (the saints) believe that Jesus died and rose again, so also them who have been sleeping, the Deity through that Jesus, will lead out with him. For this we say to you by the word of the Lord, that we, the living, who are surviving unto the presence of the Lord, shall not precede them who have been sleeping. For the Lord himself in command, with a voice of an archangel, and with a trumpet of Deity, shall descend from heaven, and the dead in the Anointed shall arise first; afterwards, we, the living, who are surviving, together with them, shall be hurried off in clouds unto a meeting of the Lord in air; and thus we shall be at all times with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words"—1 Thess. 1:9, 10; 2:19; 3:13; 4:14-17.

Such is the manifestation of the Lord to his saints. But while he appears thus to their joy and glorification, he is apocalypsed as a consuming flame upon the enemy. "For you who are being afflicted," says he, (there shall be) "rest with us in the apocalypse of the Lord Jesus from heaven with angels of his power, in a fire of flame, inflicting vengeance upon them who know not Deity, and who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Anointed; who shall pay justice, Aion-destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his might when he shall come to be glorified with his holy ones, and to be admired with all who believe in that day." Those who know not Deity, and obey not the gospel of the Lord Jesus Anointed, are of the Apostasy; whose Prince is the Lawless One, called by Paul "the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition," "whom," says he, "the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and annihilate in the manifestation of his presence"—2 Epist. 1:7-10; 2:8.

Lastly, upon this point, we remark, that Paul instructed his contemporaries who looked for the presence of the Lord Jesus Anointed, and their gathering together around him, that the day of that apocalypse should be preceded by an apostasy from the truth, which should attain great and powerful development. This Apostasy exists in what is called "Christendom," in all its "Names and Denominations;" and is largely treated of in the Apocalypse. It will shortly attain that maturity which precedes annihilation. The coming is for this purpose, that when abolished, "the knowledge of the glory of Yahweh may cover the earth as the waters cover the sea"—Numb. 14:21; Isaiah 11:9; Hab. 2:14; Rev. 18:1. The Day of Christ is now at hand, the signs of his coming are abroad in the earth; and blessed will they be who are watching and prepared.

2. "He is Coming with the Clouds."

In the system of nature whence the symbol before us is taken, clouds are opaque congeries of aqueous particles, exhaled from the waters of the earth into the air by the electricity of the expanse. This being their nature and origin, they furnish a beautiful and expressive symbol representative of those who are present with the Lord in his apocalypse. In the revelation given to John, the inhabitants of the earth, in their various subdivisions, are styled "many waters;" as, "the waters which thou sawest, upon which the Harlot sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and languages"—ch. 17:1, 15. From these waters have been exhaled by "the Spirit, which is the truth," from the generations of the past, particles which, when viewed in mass, constitute, as Paul terms them, "a great cloud of witnesses." But this cloud is only seen as a matter of testimony. The subjects of it are in the earth; and perceived only as particles to be exhaled, or drawn out, by the power of those beams, soon to irradiate from the Sun of Righteousness. When He shall "arise with healing in his rays," they will come forth from the womb of the dawn as dew. Every resurrected saint will be a dewdrop, sparkling in the star-like glory of a divine refraction. The appearance of dew from the womb of dawn, as representative of the resurrection of the saints, in the most beautiful of scripture similitudes. Before the sun rises, all nature is concealed in the womb of night; and although the herbage is wet with dew, yet is it invisible by reason of the darkness. The dew is, as it were, in Hades, waiting for the birth to be given it by the rising of the sun. As soon as the eastern portals of the sky begin to open to the light, which is the life of dew, its drops begin to sparkle with the prismatic glory of its refraction. The apocalypse, or appearing of the dew, is its birth from the womb of dawn; and, however clear the air may be at its birth, oftentimes the heat of the sun's rays exhales it from the herbage, and it becomes invisible until it reappears at the atmospheric dew point in the form of clouds. If the reader understand this he will be enabled to discern the relations of the saints to Jesus, as the Dew and Clouds of the Millennial Dawn to the Sun of the New Heavens, prepared "as a Bridegroom emerging from his canopy, and rejoicing as a Conqueror for the running of a course"—Psal. 19:5. The following testimonies will present the matter in a still clearer light.

That dew is sometimes used for people, appears from Mic. 5:7, as, "the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many peoples AS DEW from Yahweh, as showers upon the grass; which shall not wait for man, nor delay for the sons of Adam." Mankind cannot control the dew nor clouds, so that the one should remain, and the other nor pour down their torrents of rain and hail till they were ready. In what sense the remnant is a dew that will not tarry, appears from the next verse; as, "the remnant of Jacob shall be among the nations in the midst of many peoples, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, and as a young lion among flocks of sheep; who, if he pass through both treadeth down and teareth, and there is no deliverer."

Besides this dewy-remnant, we have holy ones who are compared to newly born dew in Psal. 110:3. This is a psalm of David, which he commences by declaring that Yahweh, the Eternal, had decreed concerning his (David's) Son and Lord, that he should sit at His right hand until his enemies should be subjected to him reigning in Zion in their midst. The enemies of David's Son and Lord are well known to be the Jews, who are not willing to acknowledge him as King of Israel. But in the third verse, the Spirit declares to the Son, saying, “Thy nation shall be willing in the Day of thy Might; in the splendors of holiness the Dew of thy Birth (shall be) to thee from the womb of the dawn.” The Son’s Dew, born from the womb of the Dawn, are his brethren, the saints; born of the Spirit from the invisible at the dawn of Messiah’s Day—the day of a thousand years. The resurrection is styled “thy birth,” because “He, the Deity, who raised up the Lord Jesus, will raise us up also by Jesus”—2 Cor. 4:14; and “He that raised up the Anointed One from among the dead, shall also make alive your mortal bodies through his Spirit”—Rom. 8:11. Hence, the birth given to the saints from the grave will be BY Jesus THROUGH the Spirit; and therefore the birth, in the psalm, is styled “thy birth”—the birth developed by David’s Son and Lord; the subjects of which will be Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the prophets, and among them David himself, the apostles, and all that believe into Jesus through their word.

In reference to this wonderful birth of the “Holy Nation” (1 Pet. 2:9) at the epoch of Israel’s national regeneration, the Eternal Spirit says, in Isai. 66:5, 6, “Hear the word of Yahweh, ye that tremble at his word: your brethren that hated you, and cast you out for my name’s sake, said, Let Yahweh be glorified! But he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.

“A noise of tumult from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice of Yahweh that rendereth recompense to his enemies,” as in the destruction of Jerusalem.

Then afterwards, “Before she travailed, she (Zion) brought forth: before her pain came she was delivered of a son. Who hath heard such a thing? Who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? Shall a nation be born at once? For as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children. Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith Yahweh. Shall I cause to bring forth, and hold back? saith thine Eloah.”

The resurrection, then, is emphatically “thy birth,” O Yahweh, Son and Lord of David! Begotten of the Spirit, the subjects of it are as dew from the womb of the dawn. This beautiful figure has also been employed to illustrate the same subject in Isaiah 26:19: it is there written, “Thy dead shall live, (as,) my dead body they shall arise. Awake, and sing; ye that dwell in the dust: for the dew of lights is thy dew, and the earth shall cast forth the dead”—“the earth shall disclose her bloods, and shall no more cover her slain.” This Dew of Lights is Yahweh’s dew. In the English version, it is “thy dew is as the dew of herbs.” There are only two places in the holy writings where אֵרֶב ohroth is rendered herbs; once in 2 Kin. 4:39; and once in the text before us. It is used once also in the singular in Deut. 18:4; but over a hundred times in the singular, and twice in the plural, it is rendered light. In Kings herbs are figuratively styled lights, because of their appearance when loaded with dew. Hence the light belongs to the dew, and therefore the propriety of the rendering, and the fitness of the expression as a similitude for the resurrected saints in the star-like splendor of holy spirit nature.

The saints in the resurrection-state being thus indisputably likened to sparkling dew drops, the reader will, we apprehend, have no difficulty in regarding clouds as their representatives when with the Lord in the apocalyptic firmament, or expanse, styled in Dan. 7:27, “the whole heaven;” under which “the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the Kingdom” they are to possess for the “Aions of the Aions,” are alone to be obtained.

The clouds of this Millennial Expanse are the sparkling dew drops of Yahweh exalted by his energy to place and power; and gathered together about him as glorious and towering masses, pregnant with “lightnings, and thunderings, and voices, and great hail”—Rev. 4:5; 11:19; 16:18–21. The power of Deity in every particle of these clouds is the omnipotence of the apocalypse. Eternal Power invested with clouds of virtuous and heroic immortals, constituted in the aggregate, Ezekiel’s “Whirlwind out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself; and round about it brightness, and out of the midst thereof as the color of amber even out of the midst of the fire; whence proceeded the likeness of four living creatures.”

If this be apparent to the reader, the following testimonies will present themselves with great force and beauty to his mind. Thus, “In the heavens, O Yahweh, thy mercy; thy truth is to the clouds”—Psal. 36:5; that is, his promised kindness is manifested in the New Heavens; and his truth is for those clouds of witnesses who shall compose them.

Again, “Ye kingdoms of the earth sing ye to the Elohim; sing the praises of Adonai, Selah; to Him who rides upon heavens of the heavens of old. Behold, with his voice he will give forth a voice of strength. Give ye strength to the Elohim, his excellency over Israel, and his strength in Clouds. Terrible, O Elohim, out of thy sanctuaries, the Ail of Israel (art thou:) He that giveth strength and powers to the nation. Blessed be the Elohim”—Psal. 68:32–35. In this text, the Ail, Adonai, and Elohim are presented as One in Many and Many in One—Ail, the Eternal Spirit, or Theos; Adonai, Lords, the Devar of Ail, or Logos, become Flesh, or Messiah, the Word; and Elohim, the Eternal Spirit incarnate in the Saints, each of whom is a sanctuary, or temple, of Eternal Power, out of which collectively is “the Ail of Israel,” in the Aions of the Aions. With his voice, the Eternal will give strength to the Elohim, whom he will bring forth as sparkling dew; and will establish them as His excellency over Israel; so that his omnipotence will be in the Clouds of Elohim, by and through whom he will do terrible deeds throughout the earth. “He makes thick clouds his chariot; and goes on the wings of the spirit.”

A destroyer going up against a nation with great forces, is thus referred to by Jeremiah. “Behold, he shall come up as clouds, and his chariots as a whirlwind”—ch. 4:13. This was spoken of Nebuchadnezzar’s invasion of Judea. Ezekiel also speaks of Nebuchadnezzar’s last successor and representative ascending and coming like a storm against the same country in the latter days, “like a cloud to cover the land”—ch. 38:9.

The apocalyptic “coming with the clouds” is the same as that described in Dan. 7:13: “I was seeing,” says the prophet, “in the vision of the night, and behold, there was coming with clouds of heavens like a Son of man, and he came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before Him.” These Clouds of Heavens were the “thousands thousands serving the Ancient of Days; and the myriad myriads that stood before him”—the flames of his fiery throne, his wheels of burning fire, and the stream of flowing fire that issues from before him. Collectively a Son of man in whom the Ancient of Days, or Eternal Spirit, comes to execute the judgment written; and to set up and possess the kingdom—ver. 22.

The apocalyptic clouds with which the Anointed comes are the same as those referred to by Moses in the passage already quoted from Deut. 33:26. Here, the Ho Erchomenos anointed with the Seven Spirits, and styled Yahoshaia Mashiahk, or He shall be Deliverer Anointed, that is, Jesus Christ—is styled Ail OF YESHURAN:—the “Who is Who was and Who is Coming?” Moses says, that, when he comes to help Israel, “he rides heavens in his majesty of clouds. Heavens is used for the constituents of governments, or administrations; as the sun, moon, constellations, and individual stars, in the celestial universe, constitute the heavens, because they are high. The Hebrew word shahmuyim, “heavens,” comes from shahmah “to be high.” Hence, a body of persons exalted to be a high position over “kindreds, tongues, peoples, and nations” are heavens which rule. Thus the Spirit in speaking of the overthrow of the political system in Idumea, says in Isai. 34:4, “All the host of the heavens shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling from the fig tree; for my sword shall be bathed in the heavens behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse to judgment.” In this the phrase “the heavens” is interpreted to signify “the people of Yahweh’s curse,” who rule Idumea, and destined for a great slaughter in Botzra of that land—Isai. 63:1; Rev. 19:17–21.

Again in Isai. 13: in predicting the overthrow of the Babylonish empire the Spirit saith, “the stars of the heavens and their constellations shall not give their light; the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine—ver. 10. The meaning of this is explained in the succeeding verses, as the punishing of the taivail of Babylon, made up of its wicked, proud, and terrible, civil, idolatrous, and military peoples. Read the whole chapter. As to the Son of Babylon being darkened in his going forth, the fourteenth chapter exhibits it in beautiful style in the “proverb taken up against the king of Babylon,” Belshatzar, in which he is apostrophized as the Day Star of the system, saying, “How art thou fallen from the heavens, O Day Star, son of the morning; thou art cut down to the earth, who didst weaken the nations!” And the reason of his fall is predicted in the next verse, “For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend the heavens, I will exalt my throne above the stars of Ail; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation on the sides of the north; I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High.” Read in connexion with this Dan. 5:22–30, where this predicted impiety is forcibly depicted, as the cause of Nebuchadnezzar’s Dynasty being cast out of the Babylonish heavens. When Isaiah wrote this prophecy, Babylon had only just begun to appear as a speck upon the political horizon of Judea: but in considering its development, he predicted that its government would aim to overshadow Yahweh’s kingdom of Judah; and to establish its dominion above “the Stars” of Aaron and David’s houses, and over “the heights” of Moriah and Zion, which were “the heights of the cloud” that rested upon the Wings of the Cherubim in the Most Holy Place.

What has here been adduced will be sufficient to illustrate the scripture use of the word heavens, in a multitude of instances. In the same sense it is representative of the members of the divine administration of mankind’s affairs in the Millennial Cycle, or World to Come. The Ail of Yeshurun rides these heavens, his eternal omnipotence being incarnated in each of them; so that, as Ezekiel says, “whither the Spirit is to go, they go;” or as John expresses it, “these are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth;” and “the body guards in the heaven follow Him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean”—“which is the righteousness of the saints”—clouds of cavalry making war in righteousness; or carrying on a just, righteous, and necessary war—Ezek. 1:12; Rev. 14:4; 19:14, 8. The Eternal Spirit rides these, whose Head, or Commander-in-Chief, is the Great Prince Michael, or “Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews.” They are the Eternal Majesty in Clouds, or “the Mighty Ones of the East, the Powers of Olahm,” who will be Israel’s refuge in the terrible affliction that impends.

“Whosoever boasteth himself in a gift of falsehood is as clouds and wind without rain.” Such, Jude describes those men to be, who had crept into the ecclesias at unawares, speaking evil of the apostles’ teaching, which they did not understand: “they are clouds without water carried about of winds—wandering stars.” This is what the saints of the right stamp are not. On the contrary, they are clouds with water, whose doctrine drops as the rain, and their speech distils as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass: because they proclaim the NAME OF Yahweh—Deut. 32:2.

Finally upon this point, it is worthy of remark, that the rendering of Paul’s words in 1 Thes. 4:17, “shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air,” is objectionable. This is one of those things of Paul’s writings, which Peter said were hard to be understood by the unlearned and unstable. These suppose, that Paul taught that the resurrected and changed should be carried up like Elijah to the dew-point of our atmosphere, the region of the clouds, there to remain for ever with the Lord. But, I object that Paul had no reference to either the clouds of our atmosphere, or to the air itself; and for these reasons.

In the first place, arpagesometha, rendered “we shall be caught up,” neither expresses the idea of up nor down; but signifies “to snatch, to seize, to take hold of forcibly, as a wild beast doth its prey;” and hence, the idea of hurrying off by any kind of force or power.

In the next place, Paul does not say in the clouds, but simply, en nephelais, in clouds; instead therefore of “caught up in the clouds,” we read “hurried off in clouds,” so that clouds of saints, by almighty power, will be removed from the east, west, north, and south, where they have been resurrected, “for a meeting of the Lord” in the territory of his kingdom, the Holy Land—Luke 13:28, 29.

3. The Aerial.

Thirdly, eis aera, rendered “in the air,” is devoid of “the” in the Greek. It may be rendered in various ways, according to the preposition used, and with or without an indefinite article. I prefer that which may be found in harmony with Paul’s use of the word elsewhere, when speaking of the administration of the existing order, commonly styled “world.” Thus in Eph. 2:2, where he reminds the saints of what they were as pagans before they obeyed the truth, he says, “in which sins formerly ye walked about according to the course of this order (kata tou aiona tou kosmou toutou) according to the ruling of the authority OF THE AIR; of the Spirit which not works in the sons of disobedience: among whom also we all were conversant in times past in the lusts of our flesh.” Here “the course of the order” is parallel with “the ruling of the authority of the Air;” which is based upon and nurtured by that flesh-and-blood “spirit” which rules in all sinners, and is essentially rebellious against God. In these phrases “the Air” and “the Spirit” are parallel. The ruling of the authority of the existing course of things in the Air or Spirit working. It is the Spirit of disobedience incarnate in the authorities exercising dominion and power over the nations, with whom Paul and his co-laborers “wrestled.” Thus he says in ch. 6:12, “the contest for us is not against blood and flesh, but with the sovereignties, with the authorities, which the world rulers of the darkness of this Course (aionos) with the spirituals of the wickedness, in the upper regions.” These uppers (epouranioi) are “the Air,” which by metonymy is put for all politically contained.

The Air, in apostolic times, which penetrated everywhere, was the power of the Fourth Beast. This Aerial Power, or Spirit, encountered Paul wherever he went proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom, and assailed him through the constituted authorities, Jewish and Gentile. He contended against them, endeavoring to open men’s eyes, and to turn them from the darkness of the existing course, in which the spirituals of the system, the Chief Priests and Rabbis of Israel, and the Imperial Pontifex Maximus, and all the priests of his idolatrous worship, flourished to their heart’s content. The chief Priests, Pharisees, and kings of Judah, Caesar, and all the civil and ecclesiastical or spiritual, authorities of the Roman empire, were the sovereignties, authorities, and world rulers of the darkness—all of them the spirituals of the wickedness, constituting, in the aggregate, the Uppers; or, as it is expressed among us, “the Uppertendom” of the order of things at that time extant. This was the Devil and Satan in the apocalyptic heaven before he was cast out into the earth—Rev. 12:9. In turning men from the dark superstition of his times, Paul turned them from “the power of Satan unto God”—Acts 26:18; and if any of them happened to be spirituals of the wickedness in the uppers, of Air,—that is, officials in Church or State, they were cast out into the earth, and had to eke out an existence among the undistinguished multitude, the best way they could.

The Great Teacher, the Spirit in Jesus, uses “the Air” in this sense, in one of the parables illustrating the kingdom of the heavens. In Matt. 13:31, he likens this monarchy to a tree, the greatest among herbs, in whose branches the birds of the air come and lodge. The birds of the political aerial, that come and lodge in this tree, are clouds of saints, who are “for an air,” and in the air, millennial. The Air is twice mentioned in the Apocalypse, where it has no reference to the natural atmosphere; first, in Rev. 9:2; and afterwards, in Rev. 16:17. In both these places, it stands for the same thing as in the epistle to the Ephesians, only at widely remote epochs of the times of the Gentiles; the former being the political air, contemporary with the invasion of the Roman empire by the Saracens; the latter, the same Air, only contemporary with the coming of Jesus Anointed with the clouds.

Now the revealed purpose of the Deity is to change “the Air”—to hurl the mighty from their thrones; exalt them of low degree, and to send the rich empty away—Luke 1:52–55. When this is accomplished, the kingdoms of this world will have become those of Yahweh, and his Anointed, according to Rev. 11:15. The political air, in which the sun, moon, and stars of the nations now shine, will then be abolished, and a new order be substituted in their stead. This new order is styled in the prophets, “a New Heavens, and a New Earth, in which dwelleth righteousness.” The course of this order, the ruling of the authority of this air, will be the Spirit that works in the sons of obedience. Instead of the apostles, or others like them, contending against, or wrestling with, the sovereignties, authorities, and world-rulers, of those upper regions of society, they will themselves be those rulers—the spirituals of righteousness in high places. The spirituals of wickedness, such as the Pope, and locust-clouds of ecclesiastics, of which he is the acknowledged chief, with all other clergies of every “Name and Denomination” of the dominion of Antichrist, together with all the secular officials in place and power, will all be cast out, and punished by the Saints for their iniquity. This honor is assigned to them; as it is written, “The Saints shall be joyful in glory; they shall shout with joy upon thier couches. The high things of AIL shall be in their mouth, and a devouring sword in their hand, to execute vengeance upon the Gentiles, and punishments upon the peoples: to bind their kings with chains, and their honorables with fetters of iron: to execute upon them the judgment written; this honor is for all his Saints: Praise ye YAH”—Psalm 149:5. To “an air,” such as this, the Saints are conducted in clouds, for a meeting of the Lord, that henceforth they may be with him thus for evermore.

4. “Every Eye shall see Him.”

The personage to be seen, is indicated in the next sentence as he who was “pierced.” Every eye shall see him whom they pierced; as saith the Spirit in Zech. 12:10, “I will pour upon the House of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon Me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn before him as mourning on account of the Only Begotten, and be in bitterness before him as in bitterness on account of the Firstborn. In that day, great shall be the mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon, in the valley of Megiddon. And the land shall mourn; families apart from families; the family of the house of David, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Levi apart, and their wives apart; the family of Shimei apart, and their wives apart. All the families that remain; families apart from families, and their wives apart.”

The passage in the Apocalypse has reference to this. Its language is a condensation of Zechariah’s—“Every eye shall see Him, and they who pierced him, and all the tribes of the land shall mourn before him.” But the “every eye” comprehends more than “all families that remain.” The resurrection of certain of the dead is also implied. For, as the reader will remember, Jesus said to the Pharisees and others, in the days of his flesh, “Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able. When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer, and say unto you, I know ye not whence ye are. Then will ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. But he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me all workers of iniquity. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of the Deity, and you yourselves thrust out. And they shall come (to where Jesus then was) from the east and west, and from the north and the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of the Deity. And behold, there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last”—Luke 13:24.

Jesus spoke these things to persons then living, and while the genealogies of the families of the land were in existence, which is not now the case. The families and houses named by Zechariah cannot now be defined, hence the resurrection of the dead belonging to those houses is implied. To some of these families it was said by apostles, “to this end the Anointed One both died, and rose, and lived again, that he might rule over both dead and living ones. For we shall all stand before the tribunal of the Anointed One. For it is written, “As I live, saith Yahweh, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to the Deity,” “that Jesus Anointed is Lord, to the glory of Deity the Father.” (Phil. 2:11.) So then every one of us shall give account of himself to the Deity”—Rom. 14:9–12; “that we may receive again through the body the things according to which he practised, whether good or bad”—2 Cor. 5:10. “Every eye,” then, is comprehensive of classes of Israelites and Gentiles according to flesh and spirit. The eyes of the latter who shall see him in joy and peace, are the eyes of the Four Cherubic Living Ones, which are “full of eyes” before, behind, and within—Rev. 4:6, 8. These eyes will not weep and mourn, for they will see the King, Yahweh of armies, whose “Eyes of Glory” they will be—Isa. 6:5. “Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see the Deity”—Matt. 5:8—the Deity manifested in spirit-flesh, and of which manifestation they shall be the hypostasis, or substratum.

But “every eye” will be directed towards the Lord, as the great object of absorbing interest for weal or woe to all mankind; for “the glory of Yahweh shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see together”—Isa. 40:5. Again, “it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory—ch. 66:18. The glory which they are to come and see, is stated in verses 15 and 16, where it is testified, that “Yahweh will come with fire and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire; for by fire, and by his sword, will Yahweh plead with all flesh; and the slain of Yahweh shall be many.” This is his coming with the clouds, at the time that “He has gathered all nations against Jerusalem to war;” for “then shall he go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east.” “Then,” says the prophet, “Yahweh my Elohim shall come in—all the holy ones with thee”—Zech. 14:2–5. In this fight against the nations, Gog is overthrown “with pestilence and blood; and, saith Adonai Yahweh, I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone; thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am Yahweh,” or He that shall be—Ezek. 38:22, 23. But while the armies of the nations subjected to this terrible overthrow upon the mountains of Israel see the glory that defeats them, the multitudes of the nations themselves in their several lands are not eye witnesses. To these, therefore, it is made known by proclamation through certain who have witnessed it. Hence, speaking of the remnant of Israel in Jerusalem, the Spirit saith, “I will set an Ensign among them; and I will send of those that escape unto the nations, Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, sounders of the truth, to Tubal and Javan, the isles afar off, which have not heard my fame, nor seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the nations”—Isa. 66:19; Rev. 14:6, 7.

When “every eye shall see him” upon these principles, it will be manifestly a time of great trouble. It is, in fact, the “time of trouble,” both of Jacob and the Gentiles, out of which, however, “Jacob shall be delivered”—Jer. 30:7. Daniel declares it to be “a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation to that same time”—12:1. Israel’s hopes will be at the lowest ebb; and unless another Joseph appear as in Egypt, for the salvation of his father’s house, they must perish. But the Eternal Power has provided for them a Deliverer after the type of Joseph, who at his second interview with the nation, his brethren after the flesh, will reveal himself to them in the days of affliction; and when they shall discover, as Zechariah teaches, by the wounds in his hands, that he is Yahoshaia, or Jesus, who was wounded in the house of his kindred (ch. 13:6; 12:10); and that it is to him they are indebted for deliverance from the enemy, they will mourn and be in bitterness before him, as their fathers were in

Joseph's presence, whom, as they had served Jesus, they sold for a few pieces of silver. All the tribes of the earth will howl, for the anguish of the times will be great—Israel among the nations, as a lion among flocks of sheep; Yahweh's battle-axe and weapons of war to break in pieces the nations, and destroy the kingdoms; his new sharp threshing instrument to beat the mountains small, and to make the hills as chaff; his fan to fan them; a whirling wind to scatter them as thistle down—Jer. 1:19; Isa. 41:15, 16; 17:13. "Even so, Amen."

5. Annunciation.

"I am the Alpha and the Omega, beginning and ending, saith the Lord, the Who is, and Who was, and Who is coming, the Omnipotent"—APOC. 1:8.

These words announce to us that He who is coming is "The Almighty;" also that this almighty one pertains to the past, the present, and the future; that he has a "beginning" and also "an ending," as symbolized by the first letter of the Greek alphabet "α A," and by the last, or "ω Ω"—"the Alpha and the Omega."

But let the reader understand, that this annunciation is not an announcement that the Eternal Theos, styled "the Father," had a beginning. If he had not always existed without beginning, there would have been no creation. To imagine a time, or point of past eternity, when Theos or Ail, commonly styled "God," did not exist, would be to suppose an epoch when there was nothing—no existing thing; and this supposition would be to make nothing the intelligent and wise creator of something, which is palpably absurd.

No; the annunciation before us carries us back no further than that "beginning" to which John had already introduced his readers, in the book he had already written, to convince men that Jesus is the Anointed One, the Son of the Deity; and that believing they might have life through his name—Jno. 20:31—the beginning of the preexistent Deity, by his Spirit-Effluence, or Logos, becoming Flesh; the beginning of the "Great Mystery, Deity manifested in Flesh"—1 Tim. 3:16.

This manifestation, then, as we have shown, had its beginning. It began in Jesus, Son of David and Son of Deity. Of him it was prophesied, "they pierced my hands and my feet." He was cut off, or covenanted; and afterwards removed by Eteral Power from this sublunary field of blood. But Jesus, though the Head, was not the Body. He had suffered, but his sufferings did not complete the sufferings of "His Body, which is the Ecclesia." Hence Paul says, "I now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the affliction of the Anointed One in my flesh for His Body's sake, which is the Ecclesia—Col. 1:24. But Paul did not consider that his sufferings, added to those of Jesus, would fill up the measure; for, in writing to the saints in Corinth he associates them with himself in the work. "As the sufferings of the Anointed One," says he, "abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth through the Anointed One. But whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which is operative in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer; or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation. And our hope of you is steadfast, knowing that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so ye shall be also of the consolation—2 Cor. 1:5–7. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him"—2 Tim. 2:12.

Thus the Body is pierced with suffering as well as its Head; and as Jesus, "though a son, learned obedience by the things which he suffered," so all his brethren must. It will be seen, then, that when the One Body is complete in all its elements, it will have been a suffering community. This is its Alpha, its Beginning, its ho on, or present condition. Most of its members are in the womb of death, shut up within "the gates of the invisible," which are so securely locked that no power can open them save that which is eternal. The key or power, is with Jesus, through whom it will operate as it did upon him when the power or spirit of the Father raised him from the dead.

At present, the Saints sleeping in the dust, and the few that are living in this generation, are all waiting for “The Adoption;” for living or dead, they were all immersed in hope of being planted in the likeness of the resurrection of their Elder Brother. Being thus “baptized for the dead,” they suffer with him, that they may be glorified together in the manifestation of the Sons of the Deity, who shall then “with him freely give us all things”—Rom. 6:5; 8:23, 17, 19, 32. As the brain in the head has property in the body, and calls it his; so the Logos in Jesus has property in him and his brethren, and styles them members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones; so that they all become one flesh; “which is a great mystery,” says Paul; “but I speak concerning the Anointed One and the Ecclesia”—Eph. 5:22–32. When this great mystery shall be consummated in the resurrection and the subsequent anointing of the One Body, “the Omega,” “the Ending,” and “the Who is coming,” will be manifested. The whole multitude will be “DEITY MANIFESTED IN FLESH”—glorified flesh, which is Holy Spirit, or pneuma hagiosunes, the divine nature at present common to Jesus and the angels; and then participated in by all the Saints; all of which is the development of the principle affirmed by him to Nicodemus, that “that which has been born of the Spirit is Spirit.”

Here, then, is “a multitude which no man can number,” every individual of which is Holy Spirit Flesh, glorified substance, “equal to the angels;” the ONE Yahweh and the ONE NAME. When they all attain to this Omega state, there will be nothing lacking. The Ending will be manifest. There will be no further proclamation inviting Jews and Gentiles to the kingdom and glory of the Deity. The Body will be complete, and have attained through much tribulation to a high estate. Whatever may be the destiny of the earthborns of the Millennial nations in relation to the post-millennial cycle, they will not be ranked with the Alpha and the Omega of this annunciation. The Second Adam and his Bride will be the embodiment of Eternal Power—the Almighty inheritor of the earth and all that it contains; for “it is his and the fulness thereof.”

The symbol in the text is very expressive. It is the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet. Between these two are twenty-two other letters, which, with the first and last, make one alphabet—twenty-four in one; an idea still further elucidated in the “twenty-four elders,” who are representative of the Almighty Alpha and Omega manifestation of Deity.

In connection with this annunciation, I would recall the attention of the reader to Isai. 41:4, where the Eternal Spirit says, “I, Yahweh the First One and the Last Ones, I—HE; the isles saw and feared; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near, and came.” I have supplied the words one and ones to mark the singular and plural of the original. In this, “the Last Ones” are “the Omega,” and “the Ending,” and the “He who is coming,” of the apocalypse.

SECTION 5.

SYMBOLIC VISION OF THE SPIRIT-NAME.

1. THE SON OF MAN IN THE MIDST OF THE SEVEN LIGHTSTANDS; AND THE SEVEN STARS.

I, John, both your brother, and a joint-partaker in the tribulation, and in the kingdom, and in the waiting for Jesus Anointed, was in the isle which is called Patmos, on account of the word of the Deity and on account of the testimony of Jesus Anointed.

I was in spirit in the Lord's Day, and I heard behind me a voice as of a trumpet saying, I am the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last; and what thou beholdest write for a scroll, and send to the Seven Ecclesias which are in Asia; to Ephesus, and to Smyrna, and to Pergamos, and to Thyatira, and to Sardis, and to Philadelphia, and to Laodicea.

And I turned to see the voice which spake with me; and having turned I saw Seven Golden Lightstands, and in the midst of the seven lightstands I saw like to a Son of man invested to the feet, and compassed about the breasts with a golden zone. And his head, and the hairs white, as it were wool, white as snow; and his eyes as a flame of fire: and his feet like to incandescent brass as if they had been glowing in a furnace; and his voice as a sound of many waters; and having in his right hand Seven Stars; and out of his mouth a sharp, double-edged longsword proceedeth; and his aspect as the sun shineth in his strength.

“And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying to me, Fear not! I am the First and the Last, and the Living One: and I was dead, and behold, I am living for the Aions of the Aions: and I have the keys of the invisible and of death. Write the things thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall come to pass after these.

“The mystery of the Seven Stars which thou sawest at my right hand, and the Seven Lightstands which are golden, is this: The Seven Stars are the Angels of the Seven Ecclesias; and the Seven Lightstands which thou sawest are Seven Ecclesias”—Apoc. 1:9–20.

In introducing his description of the first apocalyptic vision with which he was favored, John gives us a brief notice, in which he defines his own position and circumstances at the time. In the salutation, he addressed himself to the Seven Ecclesias of the Lydian or proconsular Asia. But there he simply styles himself “John,” saying, “John to the Seven Ecclesias.” It is true, that in the second and third verses he says a little more about himself; but these verses were most probably prefixed after he had “written for a scroll” what he had beheld; for the preface to a book is always written last.

Having, then, announced himself as the channel through which the divine salutation of joy and peace flowed to them, he proceeds to inform them, as there were many named “Johannes” besides himself, what particular man of that name it was who addressed them. It is “I, John, your brother,” says he, “and joint-partaker in the tribulation, and in the kingdom, and waiting for Jesus Anointed.” He and the Seven Ecclesias were in fellowship; of which he says, “and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Anointed. The Deity is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth; but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Anointed, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin”—1 John 1:3. They were brethren walking in the light of Deity; for in relation to them he writes, “The darkness is passed, and the true light now shines”—ch. 2:8. It is evident from this, that if the true light shone in John’s day, the “light” that now shines is not the true. The spiritual guides and their peoples profess to be walking in the light, in the very blaze of gospel sunshine; nevertheless “they do not the truth”—they neither believe it nor obey it. John therefore proclaims their walk to be in darkness, and them to be not of the truth, but liars. “He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him”—1 Epist. 2:4. This puts all clergy and all their “Names and Denominations” beyond the pale of John’s fellowship, which was with Deity. He is not “brother” to the pietists of our day; neither are these, consequently, in fellowship with the Seven Ecclesias.

Being the brother of these seven, he was, therefore, “a joint-partaker in the tribulation.” This was a persecution which began to rage against the Christians in the latter end of the reign of Domitian, the last of the Flavian family, who became emperor of Rome A.D.81. The tribulation commenced A.D.95. He does not appear to have been embittered against them in the beginning. In imitation of his father Vespasian, he made inquiry for such of the Jews as were descended from the royal line of David. His motives were evidently political. But there wanted not those who were glad of any opportunity of wreaking their malice on Christians. Some persons, who were brought before the emperor, were charged with being related to the royal family of Judah. They appear to have been related to Jesus, and were grandsons of Jude the apostle, his cousin. Domitian asked them if they were of the family of David, which they acknowledged. He then demanded what possessions they enjoyed, and what money they had.

They laid open the poverty of their circumstances, and owned that they maintained themselves by their labor. The truth of their confession was evinced by their hands, and by their appearance in general. Domitian then interrogated them concerning Christ and his kingdom—when and where it should appear. They answered like Jesus when questioned by Pilate—that his kingdom was not of this Order or kosmos; that its glory should appear at the consummation of the Order, when he would judge the living and the dead, and reward every man according to his works: poverty is sometimes a defence against oppression, though it never shields from contempt. Domitian was satisfied that his power was in no danger from Christian ambition; so the grandsons of Jude were dismissed with the same sort of derision with which Jesus had formerly been dismissed by Herod. They were indignant, but rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom promised to the obedient.

As Domitian increased in cruelty, toward the end of his reign, he renewed the horrors of Nero's persecution, which began A.D.64, and was the first time the Romans persecuted Christians according to law. Domitian put to death many persons accused of atheism, the common charge against Christians, on account of their refusal to worship the pagan gods. Among these was the consul Flavius Clemens, his cousin, who had espoused Flavia Domitilla, his relation. Suetonius observes, that this man was quite despicable on account of his slothfulness. Many others were condemned likewise, who had embraced Jewish customs, says Dion; part of them were put to death, others spoiled of their goods, and Domitilla herself was banished into the island of Pandataria. Eusebius records the same facts with a little variation: but, as he professes to borrow from the pagan writers in this instance, we may be content with their account. The charge of indolence against Domitian's cousin was natural enough, and does honor to the unworldly character of Flavius, who could not partake with the spirituals in the wickedness of their high places. Domitian, as emperor, was also PONTIFEX MAXIMUS, or the High Priest of the Roman Superstition; as the Pope, who is his Image in the same city, is at this day. Flavius Clemens and his wife, as Christians, must have been peculiarly obnoxious to him; and, in the spirit of the times, regarded by him as "the enemies of mankind." He therefore determined to get rid of them, and all such, whose unsociable atheism, as it was considered, was a troublesome rebuke and condemnation of the religion as by custom and law established.

While the malignity of Domitian did not forbear to shed the blood of the imperial house, it was not to be expected that he would spare the ringleader of the sect everywhere spoken against to which his relatives belonged. Tertullian accordingly informs us, that, by Domitian's order, John was apprehended, and cast into a caldron of boiling oil; but, after the example of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego from Nebuchadnezzar's furnace, came out again from the scalding bath unhurt. This wonderful result, however, did not soften the iron-hearted Domitian, who might possibly suppose that the apostle had been fortified by magical incantations. He banished him into the solitary and desolate isle of the Archipelago, called Patmos, where he was while he wrote the words we are considering. This persecution affected all the ecclesias he was addressing; for he tells them he was their "brother and joint partaker in the tribulation." It continued to harass the saints until the death of Domitian, who was slain A.D. 96. He was succeeded by Nerva, who published a pardon for those who were condemned for impiety in the pagan sense, recalled those who were banished, including John, and forbade the accusing of any men on account of impiety, or Judaism, by which was meant Christianity. Others, who were under accusation or under sentence of condemnation, now escaped by the lenity of Nerva. Thus the "joy and peace" of the salutation came to the Ecclesias from the Deity. Only one person was not restored by Nerva's amnesty. Domitilla still continued in exile, probably because she was a relative of the late tyrant, whose name was now odious throughout the empire. After his return from Patmos, John is said to have continued among the seven ecclesias till the time of Trajan, about three or four years after his release, having been preserved to the age of about a hundred years, for the benefit of the Body of the Lord. He died about A.D. 103.

Being a joint partaker in the tribulation as the consequence of his maintaining his fidelity to the “One Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one Hope of the invitation,” he writes himself also “a joint partaker in the kingdom, and waiting for Jesus Anointed.” He knew from him, and the collateral testimony of his brethren in the apostleship, that “it is through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom of the Deity.” He did not, therefore, shrink from tribulation, having the assurance that “if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him.” The Lord Jesus had promised him equality with angels; and a throne in his kingdom, on which he should sit, ruling one of the tribes of Israel. That this was to be when the Son of Man should sit upon the throne of his glory; and in the regeneration characterized by the restoration of all the things spoken of by the prophets. John was awaiting patiently for this, as his beloved teacher had instructed him, saying to him and his brethren, “Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father’s good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men awaiting for their Lord, when he shall return on account of the nuptials; so that, coming and knocking, they may open to him immediately. Blessed those servants whom the Lord coming shall find watching”—Luke 12:32–37; Rev. 16:15. This was John’s position. He had witnessed the disruption and overthrow of the Commonwealth of Judah, the sacking of the Holy City and Temple, and the dispersion of his countrymen to the four winds. He was himself an exile, because of his fidelity to “the word of the Deity and the testimony of Jesus Anointed;” his life ebbing away, as it were, on a desolate island. Surrounded by all these circumstances, and enlightened by these testimonies, it was impossible for him to imagine that he was in any other kingdom than Satan’s. But while in this, and feeling acutely Satan’s tyranny in banishing him from the society of the faithful, he was still “as a man awaiting his Lord,” and rejoicing in hope of his kingdom and glory, for which he had been accounted worthy to suffer tribulation.

2. “I was in Spirit.”

While conditioned thus, he tells us that he came to be “in spirit”—egenomen en pneumati. By reference to Ezekiel we find that when he was about simply to deliver a prophetic discourse, he introduced it by saying, “the Word of Yahweh came unto me, saying;” but when he was about to relate a prophetic vision he had seen, he prefaces his description by informing us that “there was upon me the hand of Yahweh, and he carried me out in spirit of Yahweh.” When “in spirit,” then, he both sees visions, and hears, and then proceeds to narrate. This was the case with John. He was “in spirit,” and then he beheld, or was caused to see, what was invisible to men in their normal state. Hitherto he had seen nothing; but as soon as he came to be “in spirit,” he beheld a vision, and continued “in spirit” so long as there was any thing to be seen. When the vision disappeared, he was again as usual, and proceeded to write whatever might be communicated. This was the case while writing the letters to the Seven Ecclesias; but when he had finished these, and the time had come to exhibit another vision, he tells us that, preliminary to beholding it, “immediately I was in spirit; and behold a throne” appeared—ch. 4:2; and in 17:3, “and he carried me away in spirit into a wilderness; and I saw a woman;” and so in ch. 21:10. Hence, from the general use of the phrase in this book, we are to understand that when “in spirit,” John was in such a relation to Deity as that he could see the things of Deity, which were known only to his Spirit; as Paul has said, “the things of the Deity knoweth no man, but the Spirit of the Deity;” in order, therefore, to know these things by primary visual representation, a man must be as John was, “in spirit.”

3. “In the Lord’s Day.”

Having ascertained what the apostle meant by “being in spirit,” the next consideration is, Where was he conveyed to? and then, What did he behold there?

In regard to the first inquiry, he tells us, that being in spirit, he was in a certain day en te kuriake hemera. He was in the kuriake day. And what day, it may be asked, was that? Any one acquainted with the apostle’s faith and hope, will be able to answer the question readily. He was in that day, which “Abraham rejoiced to see”—Jno. 8:56: the day that Paul said should not come until an apostasy had been thoroughly matured, and had become ripe for destruction—2 Thess. 2:3–8: “the day in which,” Paul proclaimed at Athens, “the Deity will judge the inhabited earth in righteousness in a man (en andri) whom he hath appointed, having offered assurance to all, having raised him from among the dead”—Acts 17:31. This was the great day, styled in Joel, “the great and terrible day of Yahweh” (ch. 2:31), and in Malachi, “the day that shall come, burning like a furnace,” in which “all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh, shall burn them up, saith Yahweh of armies, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. And ye that fear my name shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall work, saith Yahweh of armies”—ch. 4:1–3.

This was the day that Peter referred to on the day of Pentecost, when he quoted the words of Joel, and told his hearers, that “it shall be, every one who shall surname by the name of Yahweh, shall be delivered.” John stood up with him in the same proclamation; and all the saints, enlightened by their teaching, regarded it with great interest and expectation; and it was into this day that John, being in spirit, was conveyed in vision.

What then, should such a day be called?—“this day Yahweh hath made”—Psalm 118:24? John calls it kuriake; but why? Because it is the day when “the Only Potentate” in the Saints shall lord it over mankind—when those, represented by the symbolical Son of man in the midst of the Seven Lightstands, shall be the Sovereign Power of the earth to its utmost bounds. This power will be the Lord of all; and the word for lord in the Greek is kurios, from which comes kuriake, pertaining to a lord. This word is only used in one other place in the New Testament, as in 1 Cor. 11:20, “this is not to eat kuriakon supper;” which is properly rendered “the Lord’s supper.” We may, therefore, with the same propriety, style the day, “the Lord’s day,” only being careful not to confound it with Sunday, which is never so styled in the scriptures; but rather “the first day of the week,” and “the eighth day.”

Upwards of seventeen hundred and fifty years have elapsed since John was in spirit—since he was in the Lord’s day in spirit, and that day has not come yet. Hence John was only conveyed into it in vision: bodily, he was in Patmos; but mentally, he was beyond the resurrection of the dead, by which the great and terrible day of Yahweh is introduced. He was taught this dramatically; for he first hears behind him “a loud voice as of a trumpet” speaking to him, and saying what is written in the eleventh verse. This was one state of things; and related to “those things which were behind” (Phil. 3:13); or, as expressed in verse 19, “the things which are.” He then turned, as he says in verse 12; an action which brought him round, and placed him opposite to “those things which are before,” or, “which shall be after these, the things which are—behind. Being now face to face with the Son of man, he was in another state of things—“the Last.” In this last state, he is told not to fear; and this exhortation to confidence and courage, falls upon his ears, while he is recovering from the death state. “When I saw like a Son of man in the midst of the Seven Lightstands, I fell at his feet as dead”—verses 13, 17. It was necessary to introduce this action to represent that this vision related to things to be manifested after the resurrection of John and his brethren from the dead; who are also to be raised by the Spirit, in which he then was; and which is dramatically intimated by “the right hand” of the symbol being laid upon him, which is symbolical of the power of the Spirit.

The trumpet said, “I am the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last.” This was the loud voice of the Spirit, who said, “write for a scroll, and send to the Seven Ecclesias in the (proconsular) Asia;” for when the letters are written, they are introduced as from him seen by John among the Lightstands; and conclude by saying, “he that hath an ear to hear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias.” What John beheld, then, and what he has described as the subject of his first vision, is a representation of the Eternal Spirit manifested first, in the things behind, as the Alpha and the First; and afterwards, in the things before, as the Omega and the Last; and that between these two sets of things, or manifestations, is the opening of the invisible, and the deliverance of the saints from death. In this turning point, or epoch, between the Alpha things, and the Omega things, of the Spirit-Manifestation, the Key-Power unlocks the Gates of the Invisible, and sets the prisoners free from the bonds of death: so that, when the Alphas of the Spirit shall become the Omegas, they will be able to say, as the constituents of the “One Yahweh and One Name,” “I am the First and the last, and the Living One: and I was dead, and behold, I am living in (eis in, for, during) the Aions of the Aions;” or THE THOUSAND YEARS: “Amen.” Not that he shall live no longer; but, seeing that the Apocalypse treats almost solely of the Millennial Day and its antecedents, the duration of “the Living One” is only relatively, not absolutely, expressed. As Jesus taught, “they, who have been accounted worthy of that Aion, and to attain to the resurrection, which is from among the dead, cannot die any more: for they are equal to angels, and are Sons of the Deity, being sons of the resurrection”—Luke 20:35. They live for the Olahm we-ad, the Millennium, and beyond; but it is only necessary to say that they live for the thousand years; for the resurrected who live all this time, will live also beyond, “and die no more.”

This first vision John beheld is the same that Daniel saw; and the proximate condition of both seers in beholding it, was the same. Daniel, as well as John, became the subject of symbolical death and resurrection. He speaks of himself while entering, being in, and coming out of the death state, in these words, in ch. 8:17, 18, saying, “When the Appearance of a Man came near where I stood, I was afraid and fell upon my face * * * and was in a deep sleep on my face toward the ground, * * * but he touched me, and caused me to stand up upon my feet.”

He is still more explicit in defining his condition analogous to death, in ch. 10:8, saying, “I was left alone,” as the dead are when buried; “and I saw this great vision; and there remained no strength in me; for my brightness was changed within me into corruption, and I retained no strength, * * * neither was there breath left in me.” When a man is in a deep sleep prostrate upon the ground, destitute of strength and breath, his internal light extinguished, and corruption in the place thereof, he is dead. When, therefore, these things are affirmed of living men, as of Daniel and John, they are symbolically dead. Zechariah was in the same death state, and “was wakened out of his sleep” that he might behold the Seven-Branded Golden Lightstands, which, when burning with the Golden Oil, illuminate the earth with glory, after the resurrection of the dead—ch. 4:1. These conditions, then, happened to these prophets that they might be testified; and that they might constitute boundary marks, by which the reader might know whether the visions recorded related to the times before or after the resurrection of the dead. The Spirit-Man John saw said to him, after he had laid the power of his right hand upon him, by which he was brought out of the death-state, “I am living in the Aions,” or thousand years, by which we are taught that the Spirit did not refer to any period of that duration before the resurrection, but to a course of a thousand years after that event, dramatized in John’s person.

4. Seven Golden Lightstands and Seven Stars.

“Having turned,” says John, “I saw seven golden lighstands;” and in the last verse of the chapter, he records the signification of them as communicated to him by the Spirit, saying, “the seven lightstands which thou seest are Seven Ecclesias.”

When the Hebrew would say that one thing represents, typifies, or symbolizes, another thing, it affirms that the one is the other; as, “that rock was Christ,” “this bread is my body,” “the seven lamps are the seven spirits,” and “the seven lightstands are the seven ecclesias;” that is, “that rock typified Christ,” “the bread represents my body,” “the seven lightstands symbolize seven ecclesias.”

The golden lightstand, as a symbol, is taken from the seven-branched golden lightstand of the temple. It was peculiar to the Holy Place, where it stood on the south side, opposite to the table of Show-Bread. As there were no windows, the illumination was by the combustion of pure olive oil in its seven lamps. Without this lightstand and its burning oil, the holy was a dark place. It was therefore “a light shining in a dark place,” both lightstand and light being typical of something else. This Mosaic lightstand was of one stem, with a lamp on the top, and three branches projecting from each side, with their several lamps, making in all seven lamps or burners. Thus, the stock, stem, or shaft, was “in the midst of the seven lightstands,” altogether, stem, branches, bowls, knops, and flowers, constituting one illuminator of the holy place.

This was part of “the parable,” which Paul says was made up of “the patterns of things in the heavens”—in the true holy places. The things that the Holy Spirit signified by the pattern-lightstand in the pattern holy place, are of the Christ; for in speaking of the substance, or body, of these shadowy things, he says, “the body is of the Anointed One”—and that anointed one John beheld in his first vision.

The are of the vision is the state of being between the resurrection and the entire exhaustion of the wrath of Deity contained in the seventh vial; for until the wrath of Deity is filled up, no man can enter into the Holy Place of the Apocalyptic Temple, which is the Millennial Aion—Rev. 15:1, 8. In this post-resurrectional and pre-millennial holy state of being, the saints of previous generations are gathered together in Seven Ecclesias, or in complete assembly, as typified by the seven ecclesias of the proconsular Asia.

These seven Asian ecclesias were very different in “gifts,” “administrations,” and operations,” from anything extant, called “church,” in our time. The assemblies of the faithful in Christ were constituted of two classes of saints—the rulers and the ruled. “Obey them that have the rule over you,” says Paul, “and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account”—Heb. 13:17. “The Elders which are among you,” says Peter, “I exhort, who am also an elder * * * feed the flock of the Deity which is with you, taking the oversight, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; not as domineering over THE HERITAGES, but being examples of the flock. And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away”—1 Pet. 5:1.

These official brethren, called episcopoi and diakonoi, “overseers and assistants,” (Phil. 1:1,) constituted the pneumatikoi, or spirituals, of the congregations, because they were endowed with pneumatika, or spiritual gifts, (Gal. 6:1,) while the rest of the saints, constituting the ruled, were styled idiotai, or privates. To the Spirituals were given nine different gifts, called spirits, (πνεύματα pneumata—1 Cor. 14:12,) not for their own gratification, but for the common good. These spirits are enumerated as, “a word of wisdom,” “a word of knowledge,” “faith to remove mountains,” “gifts of healing,” “inworking of powers,” “prophecy,” “discerning of spirits,” “kinds of tongues,” and “interpretation of tongues;” “all these inworked the one and the same Spirit dividing to each one respectively as he willed”—1 Cor. 12:1–11. Being thus ordered in Corinth and elsewhere, Paul said to them, “Ye are Christ’s body, and members partitively”—they were all of the body, but it was only specially endowed saints who constituted the foot, hand, ear, eye, and so forth, of the body; these special ones were members ek merous partitively—special parts of the whole.

The official saints collectively constituted in each congregation the presbytery, or eldership—1 Tim. 4:14; and that each brother might know his place, they were set in regular order. They were called “apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers”—Eph. 4:11; and were ranked as, “first, apostles; secondarily, prophets; thirdly, teachers; after that, powers; then gifts of healing; sixth, helps; seventh, directors; eighth, kinds of tongues”—1 Cor. 12:22. This eldership thus remarkably endowed, was the Lightstand of the Ecclesia, each member thereof being a bowl, or vessel, containing the anointing oil, or spirit, so that when they exercised their functions in the midst of the saints, they were as trimmed lamps with their lights burning—Matt. 25:4; Luke 12:35. They shone collectively as a bright STAR in the midst of the body; and as the spiritual gifts were sent “for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the building of the body of the Anointed,” the PRESBYTERIAL STAR is styled “the ANGEL of the Ecclesia,” from aggelos, angelos, “one that is sent.”

Such was the arrangement of things in the seven typical ecclesias of Anatolia; typical, not of “the church” in seven periods of its history during the times of the Gentiles; but of the saints in their gathering together unto Jesus Anointed, after their resurrection, and before they pass from the Holy into the Most Holy of the Apocalyptic Temple.

In the typifying relation of things (themselves typified and typifying) they were in the partitive, and not the perfect state. Referring to this, Paul says, “we know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when to teleion, the perfect thing is come, then, that thing which is ek merous, in part will be done away.” This phrase, rendered in the English Version “in part,” is literally from parts—“we know from parts,” or partitively. That is, the word of knowledge, and the gift of prophecy, (“he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification and exhortation, and comfort”) were “spirits” possessed only by certain individuals of an ecclesia—by parts of the body, not by all the brethren: so that the knowledge and the prophecy preceeded ek merous, from parts, or specially endowed individuals. But “when the perfect thing is come,” symbolized in John’s first vision, “then that thing which is from parts,” the partitive, or partially distributive, order of things in the seven Asian ecclesias, will be abolished. This has been abolished, and we may say, before the time—before the arrival of “the perfect thing;” for this has not yet come, nor will it till after the resurrection. The knowing and prophesying from parts might probably have continued if “the Mystery of Iniquity” had not spoiled and desolated every thing; but as this prevailed through the working of Satan, the Angelic Presbyterial Stars, or Lightstands of the Ecclesias, shining by the Spirit, were abolished; or, in the words of the Spirit to the ecclesia in Ephesus, “I will come unto thee quickly, and will set thy lightstand a-going out of its place, except thou change thy mind.” But things got worse instead of better; so that, as a punishment for apostasy, all the lightstands went out for want of the Golden Oil of the Spirit; and the ecclesias were turned into “churches,” mere dark places in Satan, as we behold them at this day.

But when “the perfect thing” symbolized to John, is come, the Saints, as “a perfect Man” (Eph. 4:13) will be caused to see face to face, and to know as they have been known. Let the reader turn to 1 Cor. 13:11. There Paul illustrates the relation of the general assembly of the saints to the order of things in his day, and to the order of things after the resurrection, by reference to himself as a child, and as a man. In the first century, the Body of Christ was in its childhood, and made up of nepia, or “babes;” liable to be “tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive” (Eph. 4:14.) The pneumatikoi, or Spirituals, and the idiotai, or privates, apart from the gifts, spake as children, thought as children, and reasoned as children; and, by the truth, looked into a mirror at an enigma (di esoptron en aivigmati): and multitudes of them were “corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.” But when the Body becomes a Man—“A PERFECT MAN”—as represented by “the Son of Man in the midst of the Seven Lightstands with the Seven Stars in his right hand,” in the post-resurrectional state of holiness, then there are no childish things found with it. Then every saint of the body will be in accord, seeing face to face, or eye to eye. Distribution of gifts to individuals only will not recur; and the body will no more be divided into spirituals and privates. Then all will be official and spiritual; and the idiotai subject to their jurisdiction, will be Israel and the Nations. Every individual member of the Perfect Man, will be omniscient, and omnipotent; for this Man was revealed to John as "He who is coming, THE ALMIGHTY." There will be no knowing ek merous from parts then; for all the elements of the Perfect Man will be equally wise, and equally knowing; and the enigma, which is now revealed as a word and testimony, called "the Word of the Deity, and the Testimony of Jesus Anointed," on account of which John was in banishment,—this enigma, as Paul styles it, will then be practically solved in the eyes of all nations.

We have already shown the great and essential difference which exists between "church" and "ecclesia." The former is apocalyptically styled "the Synagogue of Satan." It is a clerical institution, existing for the advantage and behoof of certain theological empires, who incompetently undertake to "cure souls" for a decent and respectable living in the world. This satanic institution has had its childhood, youth, and perfect manhood in Satan; and is now tottering upon its staff in the feebleness and idiotcy of extreme senility. The reader will please not confound any thing we have said about the childhood and perfect manhood of the Body of Christ, with any ideas he may have about the Body of Satan, called "church." This church is no illustration in any part of its history of the things spoken by Paul, which we have been considering. Its officials are "the spirituals of the wickedness of the darkness" which overspreads the habitable, when the lightstands were extinguished for the want of oil. The Body of Christ still lived, animated by "faith, hope, and love," which remained after the gifts were removed, but suffering, bleeding, and struggling for existence, until Satan's officials "prevailed against it," and crucified it, but were not permitted to bury it. It laid in the death-state "three days and a half," and when these expired, it rose again (Rev. 11:7–12; and lives to die no more, but to bear witness to the truth until the resurrection. But, though it exists, it cannot be identified by a clergyman, or clergyman's disciples. A man must come to the understanding of "the gospel of the kingdom" promised in the prophets, and preached by Jesus and the apostles, before he will have intelligence enough to discern the Body of Christ. When he understands that, he will know that the "Names and Denominations" of "the Religious World" are a miserably executed counterfeit of the true, and current only with such as are indifferent to, or ignorant of the truth.

The mystery, or meaning, then, of the Seven Lightstands is, that they represent the sevenfold ecclesia; and of the Seven Stars is, that they are symbolical of the Elderships anointed with the Spirit, and shining with the gifts. While an anointed eldership was a lightstand to a particular ecclesia; this ecclesia was itself a lightstand to the pagan and rabinnical darkness on every side. But in the future state, no such distinction will obtain; for that which is "from parts" being nonexistent, and every saint "shining as the sun;" or, "as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars in the Olahm and beyond" (Mat. 13:43; Dan. 12:3.) The Sevenfold Ecclesia, as the Perfect Man, will be the Seven-Branched Golden Lightstand of the Earth. How brilliant then will be the illumination of the world; the whole earth will indeed be enlightened by the glory.

5. "The Son of Man."

Son of Man is a title bestowed upon "the Perfect Man" to indicate his origin. Son expresses the idea of emanation; hence, that seen in the midst of the lightstands, as their stem or shaft, as it were, was an emanation from the race of Adam—Son of Man. "Israel is my Son, my First-born." In this declaration to Pharaoh, a nation of some three millions of people, is styled the First-born Son of Yahweh; hence, the reader will find no difficulty in comprehending that the Son of Man in the midst of the lightstands was the form of a man representing a multitude of individuals taken by some certain process from the human race. This is indicated by the symbol itself; for John speaking of its voice loud as a trumpet, says, "his voice was as a sound of many waters;" and the apocalyptic waters are defined as importing "peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues." His voice was the voice of an election from these, saying, "thou has purchased us for the Deity with thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation; and made us for our Deity kings and priests, and we shall reign over the earth”—ch. 5:9, 10; 17:15.

This idea of a multitudinous Son of Man is clearly exhibited in Dan. 7:13, in the words, “I was seeing in the vision of the night, and behold there was coming with clouds of heavens like a Son of Man, and he came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him; And to him was given dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all peoples, nations, and tongues, should serve him: his dominion is a dominion of Olahm which shall not pass away; and his kingdom one that shall not be destroyed.” Here the clouds of heavens constitute the Son of Man, who is brought before the Ancient of Days, when “they” who compose him, themselves come into His presence. The Ancient of Days is “the Lord the Spirit,” the “Quickening Spirit,” the Logos in David’s Flesh, who is the Head of this Son of Man. In the fourteenth verse, the kingdom is said to be given to the Son of Man; and in verses 18, 22, and 27, it is said to be given to the Saints of the כִּיּוֹנִי]

Elyonin, Most High Ones; as, “the Saints of the Most High Ones shall receive the kingdom, and shall possess the kingdom for the Olahm, even during an Olahm of Olahms,” or during the Millennium. And, as in verse 22, the Horn prevailed against the Saints “until that the Ancient of Days came; and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High Ones, and the time came and the saints possessed the kingdom:” and in the twenty-seventh verse, “and the kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under all the heavens shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High Ones, whose kingdom is the kingdom of Olahm (the Millennium) and all the dominions shall serve and obey him.” If a kingdom be given to A, and the same kingdom at the same time be given to Z: then A and Z are one and the same, though called by different letters of the alphabet. This is the argument of the texts before us—the Millennial kingdom is given to the Son of Man; it is also given at the same time to the Saints; therefore “the Son of Man” and “the Saints” are but different phrases for one and the same thing. Daniel and John both introduce a Son of Man as a similitude; they tell us that what they saw was omoion huio a thing like to a Son of Man. It had the exterior form of a man; but from the description of parts anything than the exact counterpart of a man. The only place where the same similitude is again introduced is in Rev. 14:14, where John says, he saw “a white cloud;” and then, in order to show what the cloud represented, he tells us he beheld “upon the cloud sitting like to a Son of Man, having upon his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle.” This is the similitude of the cloud of saints ready to reap the harvest of the earth, and to tread the winepress without the city; they are styled “a white cloud,” because white is the raiment with which they are everywhere invested as the apocalyptic emblem of conquest and righteousness. The head of the similitude is crowned to indicate that the Son of Man similitude is a Body Politic of Kings.

The similitude exhibited to Daniel in ch. 7:9, 10, has reference to the same subject as John’s. Daniel was attracted principally to the Head, the rest of the body being concealed by “a garment white as snow.” The head of the similitude represents “the Ancient of Days;” “the hair of the head being like the pure wool.” Daniel and John’s symbols agree in this. White as snow, and pure wool, are emblems of purity: scarlet and crimson redness are representative of sin. Thus, it is written, “though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool” Isai. 1:18. The wool of the symbol connects it with the Lamb of Rev. 5:6, “as it had been slain” in which are the Seven Eyes of Deity. The other particulars of John’s Son of Man are merged in the following scenery of Daniel’s vision: “His throne the fiery flame, his wheels burning fire. A stream of fire glowing and issuing from before him; a thousand thousands served him, and a myriad myriads stood before him: the judgment was set, and books were opened.” The white garment indicates the priestly and righteous character of the body clothed thereby; all of which are justified, and priests as well as conquering kings for God.

When it was revealed to Daniel in ch. 8:14, that the holy should be avenged “after 2300 years had passed away; he fell into the death state and revived, to signify that the vengeance would be after the resurrection. At that time also he says, “Behold, there stood before me as the Appearance of a Man; and I heard a man’s voice between the banks of Ulai, which called, and said, Understand, O Son of Man; for at the time of the end the vision is.” Here Daniel is made to personate the Son of Man. He was lying on his face in a deep sleep at the time, but when touched, he stood up as the Son of Man raised from the dead, to hear about the breaking of the Little Horn at the epoch of vengeance by the Prince of princes. Again, the apocalyptic Son of Man appears to Daniel by the side of the great river, which is Hiddekel, as narrated in ch. 10:5. In the English Version, he is said to have beheld “a certain man.” This phrase in the original is אִישׁ-אֶחָד ish-ekhad, MAN OF ONE. It was not a real man he beheld; but, as he styles it in ver. 18, “the Appearance of a Man;” and in ver. 16, “like the Similitude of the Sons of Adam.” It was a symbolical, or shadowy representation of the Man of the One Eternal Spirit. It was, therefore, truly “a certain man,” not an uncertain, or indefinite, one. John, the Baptizer, “saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a Dove;” and Daniel, and John, the apostle, beheld the same Spirit, “like the similitude of the Sons of Adam,” or, “like to a Son of Man.”

Now, the description Daniel gives of this symbol, or SPIRIT-FORM is, that “He was clothed in linen, and his loins girded with fine gold of Uphaz. His body also was like the beryl, and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, and his arms, and his feet like in color to polished brass, and the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude.” He saw this in Eden, by “the third” of its rivers, “the Hiddekel,” where “the Cherubim and devouring fire” were originally located—Gen. 2:14; 3:24. The reason why the locality of the vision is specified, is to acquaint the reader with the region of the earth where the glory of the Spirit Man is to be revealed. The general description of the two symbols being before the reader, I shall proceed now to examine them more in detail, commencing with the intimation, that the similitude was

6. “Clothed to the Feet.”

While Daniel informs us that the Spirit-Man he beheld, was “clothed with linen,” John states simply, that he was “clothed to the feet.” Now, this clothing is significant of the character and office of the persons represented by the symbol. The holy garments of Aaron and his sons were of linen, “to cover their nakedness,” that when they ministered in the holy places, “they bear not iniquity, and die”—Exod. 28:42. “Nakedness,” and “iniquity,” are convertible terms in scripture; as it is written, “when Moses saw that the people were naked, for Aaron had made them naked to their shame,”—that is, they had transgressed in worshipping the golden calf: “blessed is he that keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.” Hence, to be “clothed,” and to keep the clothing white, and clean, is to be “righteous,” or holy. When Adam sinned, “he knew that he was naked,” and he was ashamed, and afraid; but the Spirit appointed for clothing skins of sacrifices, and his sin was covered. Hence, “blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered,” or clothed. Joshua, son of Josedec, a type of Jesus in the flesh, is first introduced as clothed with filthy garments, representative of the flesh with its propensities and lusts; but when the type is changed to represent Jesus in pneuma hagiosunes,—that is, in Holy Spirit Nature, such as he acquired after resurrection, Joshua’s raiment is represented as being changed—“Take away,” says the Spirit, “the filthy garments from him. When this was done, then the Spirit addresses him, and says, “I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment.” And when the time came to do it—to clothe Jesus, and all in him; symbolized in Joshua, and “his Fellows,” “they set a fair mitre (or priestly crown) upon his head, and clothed him with garments.” These are indicated in the visions of John and Daniel—Zech. 3:3–10.

“I put on righteousness,” says Job, “and it clothed me;” and in Psalm 132:9, “Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness.” In Rev. 19:8, it is said of the community, styled “the Lamb’s Wife,” that “to her it was given, that she should be arrayed in fine linen, pure, and bright.” Now, they who constitute “the woman,” are “called, and chosen, and faithful”—Rev. 17:14; “they follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth”—14:4; as his clouds of cavalry, “clothed in fine linen, white, and pure,” which is declared to be “the Righteousness of the Saints—ch. 19:14, 8; who are “purchased from among men,” and made for Deity “kings and priests to reign over the earth.” The multitude, symbolized by the Son of Man, attains to this dominion through much tribulation, and by resurrection. When they stand up they have obtained the victory over death and the grave, through him that loved them, and laid down his life for them: they are therefore represented in ch. 7. as “clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands”—robes “washed, and made white in the blood of the Lamb.” Hence, these are robes of salvation and victory. In their mortal state, they put on Christ as a robe, when, having “believed the things of the kingdom of the Deity, and the Name of Jesus Anointed,” they were immersed for that name, and into it. They fall asleep in him; and they arise to partake of the nature of his individual “body, of his flesh, and of his bones,” that they may be like him—1 Jno. 3:2. When they are clothed with this Spirit-Nature, they are “clothed upon with their habitation, which is from heaven—mortality being swallowed up under the life of spirit that is poured upon them”—2 Cor. 5:2, 4. This is the consummation of their investiture, which begins with their immersion into Christ, and is perfected in their post-resurrectional immortalization by the Spirit through Jesus. They are then the Body Corporate of God’s Kings and Priests, the inhabitation of Eternal Wisdom and Power, clothed in the linen garment of righteousness, honor, majesty, and salvation. Then Zion will have clothed herself with them all as with an ornament, and have bound them on as a bride—Isa. 49:18; 61:10; Psalm 132:16; 104:1.

The reader will understand, then, that the linen clothing of these symbols indicates the persons, their character, office, and nature, of which they are representatives. A glorious body of people prepared to execute righteous judgment upon the nations, and to govern them in righteousness when subdued—the Son of Man in glory and great power.

7. The Golden Zone.

The “Perfect Man,” seen by John, was “clothed with a garment down to the Foot:” no elemental part of him was unclothed; but each had on his wedding garment, clean, and white, so that in this glorious Son of Man no nakedness could be discerned.

The next item that arrested John’s attention in the glorious apparel of this royal and priestly man, was a Zone of Gold encircling his breast, or, in the words of the English Version, he was “girt about the paps with a golden girdle.” This would answer to a breastband rather than to a girdle, which in the dress of the ancients belonged to the loins. But Josephus says that the priests wore the girdle upon their breasts, under their arms; that a kind of flower work was there represented, with threads of purple, scarlet, and hyacinth; that it went twice round the body, was tied before, and the ends hung down to the feet. When they were in the act of sacrificing, they threw this girdle over the left shoulder, that they might perform their office with the greater freedom. This, however, cannot have been the “embroidered girdle.” This was attached to the Ephod’s lower margin, and below the breastplate of judgment, and could not have been thrown over the left shoulder without removing the whole ephod and its appendages. What Josephus refers to must have been something else than “the girdle of the ephod.” This was made of “gold, blue, purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.” These articles represented principles afterwards to be incarnated in the High Priest after the Order of Melchizedec. Aaron wore the representations upon his person; Jesus bore them in himself. The gold represents the wisdom of a tried and precious faith; blue, a cleansing principle; purple, the element of flesh; scarlet, the sin thereof; and fine twined linen, righteousness. These principles were embodied in Jesus, as “holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners,” as to character; yet “the likeness of sin’s flesh, in whom sin was condemned” when crucified, as to nature; and the purifier unto righteousness of those who become the righteousness of the Deity in and through him. The gold and fine twined linen were embroidered through all the blue, purple, and scarlet, of this “curious” breastband with which the breasts were girded; so in the case of Jesus, though “made sin for us, he knew no sin,” “yet was he tempted in all points like as we are, but without transgression;” wisdom and righteousness were intertwined in all his words and actions, according to the type. Thus “the body or substance is of Christ”—Exod. 28:2–21; Rom. 8:3; 2 Cor. 5:21; Heb. 2:14; 4:15; Col. 2:17; 1 Pet. 2:24.

But when Jesus and his Brethren shall all have attained to the divine nature, even as Jesus hath already, the gold and the linen of the girdle will alone remain. The blue, the purple, and the scarlet, make no part of the garments for glory and for beauty of the Son of man, as beheld by John, because what John saw pertains not to the sufferings, but to the glory of the Christ, or Anointed Body. In regard to the girdle Daniel tells us, that the Spirit-Man symbolized to him was “girded with fine gold of Uphaz.” This Uphaz is the Ophir of other passages. In the days of the prophets it was the gold region of the earth, whence the most abundant supplies of the finest gold were obtained. The Mosaic “patterns of things in the heavens” were all of gold, or of precious woods overlaid with gold. Mere “wood, hay, or stubble” found no place there, any more than “in the heavens” themselves. The Cherubim, the Ark of the Testimony, the Mercy Seat, the Altar of Incense, the Seven-Branched Lampstand, the Table of Shew Bread, spoons, tongs, censers, hinges, staves, and so forth, were all of gold, or overlaid with gold. And beside all this, “the holy garments for glory and for beauty,” worn by the High Priest, who officiated in this temple resplendent with gold, were brilliant with the shining metal and precious stones. Gold was chosen as the most precious of all known metals, to represent the most precious of “heavenly things” before the Eternal Spirit, namely, FAITH PERFECTED BY TRIAL, which is “much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be refined by fire;” and “without which it is impossible to please God”—Heb. 11:6; James 2:22; 1 Pet. 1:7; 2 Pet. 1:1. It is the basis of righteousness unto life eternal; for “we are justified by faith;” the fine linen robe of righteousness is girded about the saints by the golden girdle of a tried faith. “When God hath tried me,” saith Job, “I shall come forth as gold.” Thus David, in celebrating the future glory of the New Order of Elohim, consisting of the King and his Brethren, styles the latter “the Queen,” in Psal. 45:10, saying to His Majesty, “the Queen hath been placed at thy right in fine gold of Ophir.” He then addresses the Consort of the Great King, who, being the Eternal Spirit manifested in David’s Son, is both Father and Husband of the Bride, (thy maker is thine Husband; Yahweh Tz’vahoth is his name; the Elohim of the whole earth shall He be called—Isa. 54:5,) saying, “Hear, O Daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; and forget thy nation, and the house of thy father; and the King shall greatly desire thy beauty; for He is thy Lord, therefore do thou homage unto him. So the Daughter of Tyre with tribute, the rich of the people, shall supplicate thy favor. The Daughter of the King is all glorious within; her clothing is of interweavings of gold; in embroideries she shall be conducted to thee; the Virgins, her companions, following her, shall be brought to thee. They shall be conducted with joyous shouts and exultation; they shall enter into the palace of the King.” Thus David sings of “the Spirit and the Bride,” clothed in the holy garments of righteousness and of a tried and perfected faith, for glory and for beauty. They are apocalyptically represented as “like a Son of Man;” as “a great city,” styled “the Holy City, New Jerusalem, having been prepared as a Bride adorned for her Husband;” “a city of pure gold, like to transparent crystal;” “the precious sons of Zion,” saith the prophet, “are comparable to fine gold;” for in their glory they are the Spirit-Incarnations of a tried and precious faith, which is the shining girdle of their ephod.

8. His Head and the Hairs.

John says that the head and the hairs of the similitude he saw were “white, as it were wool, white as snow.” This appearance identifies it with Daniel’s Ancient of Days,” the hair of whose head was “like the pure wool.” Now, in regard to the head, Paul says, “I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ, and the head of Christ is God”—1 Cor. 11:3; and in Eph. 5:23, he says, “the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the Head of the Ecclesia; and He is the Saviour of the Body.” The apocalyptic Son of man is the body, and Jesus Anointed occupies the position of Head to that body. This is the reason why the head is represented as invested with the appearance of wool, white as snow. The whiteness represents the purity of the head, and the wool that head’s relation to “the Lamb of God that takes away the sins of the world;” and primarily the sins of those who constitute the community represented by the Son of man, of whom it may be said, that they had washed them in the blood of the Lamb, and made them clean; and that “though their sins were as scarlet they had become white as snow; and though they were red like crimson they had become as wool”—Isa. 1:16, 18. Thus the snow-white wool becomes the emblem of the purity of the whole body in Christ when “presented to himself a glorious ecclesia, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but holy and without blemish”—Eph. 5:27.

9. His Eyes as a Flame of Fire.

The eye is the symbol of intelligence, for “the light of the body is the eye.” The nature of the intelligence in predominant activity is expressed by the character of the symbol; hence an eye as a flame of fire, indicates intelligence in wrathful activity. The word for “eye” in the Hebrew also signifies “fountain;” because tears are welled up from the eye as water from a fountain or spring. Hence the eyes of the Man of Multitude are fountains of flaming fire; they pour out flames as “a fiery stream,” and he becomes “a consuming fire.”

There is nothing beneficent in symbolic flame. This will appear from the use of the term in all parts of scripture. Speaking of Dathan and Abiram, as examples of divine indignation, David says, in Ps. 106:18, “a fire was kindled in their company; the flame burned up the wicked.” Isaiah in treating of the overthrow of the kingdom of men under its last head in our near future, says, “Yahweh, Yahweh Tz’vaho, shall send among his fat ones leanness; and under his glory he shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire. And the Light of Israel shall be for a fire, and His Holy One for a flame: and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briars in one day. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, shall no more again stay upon him that smote them; but shall stay upon Yahweh, the Holy One of Israel in truth. The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the Mighty Hero—אל נבִּיר

, ail givbor”—ch. 10:16, 21. In this testimony “the Light of Israel” is the Logos of John; He is the fire; and his flame is the Holy One symbolized by the Son of man with his eyes as a flame of fire. This is the Mighty Hero to whom Jacob shall return.

Again, in speaking of the coming of the NAME OF Yahweh, the same prophet says, in ch. 30:27, “Behold, THE NAME OF Yahweh cometh from afar, His anger burning, and it’s vehemence a conflagration; His lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire: and his breath as an overflowing stream shall reach to the neck, to scatter the nations with the fan of destruction.” This name of Yahweh is apocalypsed in John’s similitude, the flame of whose eyes is poured forth as a stream of fire to effect what is here testified by Isaiah.

Many other passages might be adduced illustrating the significance of symbolic flame whether it be streaming from the eyes, or glowing about the feet; but these are sufficient at present to show that the mission of the company symbolized by the Son of man is not of peace, but a mission of judgment and retribution upon the nations of the earth.

10. "His Feet like unto Fine Brass."

"His feet," says John, "like incandescent brass, as if they had been glowing in a furnace." We have here to consider the import of the feet; why they are symbolized by brass; in what sense they glow; and in what furnace the glowing is evolved.

First, then, what is suggested by the feet of John's Spirit-Man of Multitude? The ideas primarily suggested by feet are a treading upon, and an advancing towards, or after, any thing. The flaming attribute of the similitude as illustrated by the prophetic testimony which it symbolizes, has shown us that it has a mission against the nations. Hence, in relation to them the feet of the Son of man suggests a treading down and a pursuing to the destruction of their power. This suggestion is in harmony with the testimony of Rev. 14, where "the clusters of the vine of the earth are gathered, and cast into the great winepress of the wrath of Deity;" and "the winepress is trodden without the city." The Feet that tread this winepress are the symbolic feet of the Son of man. The following testimonies will enlarge our view of their operation.

In Psal. 18:32, the Spirit inquires, "Who is Eloah besides Yahweh? And who a Rock except our Elohim, the Ail girding me with might? Even he will make my way complete. He causes my feet to be like hinds, and he will make me to stand upon my high places. He is training my hands for war; so that the bow of brass has been broken by my arms. Thou wilt cause my going to extend under me; and my ankle-joints have not wavered. I will pursue my enemies, and shall overtake them, and I will not return until they be destroyed; I will wound them so that they shall not be able to rise; they shall fall under my feet. Thou wilt gird me with might for the war (that styled, "the war of that great day of Almighty Power"—Rev. 16:14.) Thou wilt subdue under me those that rise up against me. And thou hast given to me the neck of my enemies; and those who hate me, I will cut them off. They will cry for help, but there is none to save them—unto Yahweh, but he answered them not. Then will I grind them as fine as dust before the Faces of the Spirit; as mire of the streets will I pour them out. Thou wilt deliver me from the conflicts of the nations; thou hast appointed me for Prince of the nations. A nation which I knew not shall serve me. At the hearing of the ear they shall obey me; the sons of the foreigner shall submit to me; the sons of the foreigner shall fall, and tremble from their strongholds.

47. Yahweh lives, and blessed be my Rock; and he shall raise the Elohim of my salvation. The AIL who giveth avengements to me, even he will subdue the nations under me.

49. Thou wilt exalt me. From the Man of Violence (Paul's "Man of Sin," the "Lawless One") thou wilt deliver me. Therefore, O Yahweh, I will give thee thanks among the Gentiles; and sing psalms unto thy name, magnifying the deliverance of HIS KING, and performing the promise to HIS MESSIAH, to David, and to his seed, during the Olahm," or thousand years.

In this passage the Eternal Spirit through the prophet speaks of Messiah in the crisis of his controversy for Zion, in which as the head or chief of John's Son of Man, he puts his feet upon the necks of the kings of the earth, scatters their armies like dust before the wind, and becomes Prince or head of the nations in their stead. But this is true also of all the other individual members of this "New Man." If the New Adam himself thus make war upon and trample in the mire the kings and armies of the Old Adam-nature, he has promised that all approved believers "in him"—all who are Abraham's Seed by being Christ's—that is, all the Saints shall do the same; and share with him in the fruits of his and their victory. In proof of this the reader is referred to the following testimonies:—

"The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance; he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked. So that a man shall say, Verily, there is a reward for the righteous; verily, there are Elohim ruling in the earth”—Psal. 58:10, 11.

“All the horns of the wicked I will cut off; but the horns of the righteous shall be exalted”—Ps. 75:10. “He shall cut off the spirit of princes; he is terrible to the kings of the earth”—76:12. “Arise, O Elohim, judge the earth; for thou shalt acquire possession in all the nations”—Ps. 82:8. “He will exalt the horn of his nation; the glory of all his saints; of the sons of Israel, a people near to him”—Ps. 148:14.

Now the phrase “all the saints” is comprehensive of Jesus and his Brethren, who collectively form Daniel’s, “Man of the One Spirit;” Paul’s “New Man;” and John’s “Son of Man.” The same things are therefore affirmed of all, both Jesus and the faithful in him. Hence, as a body, their feet will be like hind’s feet, swift in the pursuit of their enemies, whom they will overtake and destroy. These will fall before their power; and as Malachi says, they will trample them as ashes under the soles of their feet: and when they have got the victory, they will rule with Jesus as “princes in all the earth”—Ps. 45:16;—the resurrected “Elohim ruling in the earth;” “the Elohim of Messiah’s salvation.”

The feet, in the next place, are symbolized in brass to connect them with the temple-pattern of heavenly things. While gold was peculiar to the interior apartments, or holy and most holy places; brass was characteristic of the Court of the Priests where the sacrificing and washing were performed. The Altar of Burnt-offering and the Laver with his Foot, and the Two Pillars of the porch, and many other things of the Court of the Priests, were all of shining brass, or overlaid therewith. the brass pertaining to the temple was all holy. The Brazen Altar was “most holy,” so that whatever touched it was holy; no Israelite, however, was permitted to touch it, unless he belonged to the seed of Aaron; and even they were not permitted to approach the altar till they had first washed their hands and feet in the Brazen Sea.

The Altar of Burnt offering prefigured the One Body in sacrificial manifestation. The idea of an altar of sacrifice representing a personal, and divine plurality, is frequent in scripture. Thus, Jacob erected an altar at Shalem in the land of Canaan, and called it Ail-Elohai Yisraail; that is, the Strength of the Mighty Ones of Israel—Gen. 33:20: and Moses before the law was given, and in memory of the victory of Joshua over Amalek, “built an altar, and called the name of it, Yahweh-nissi; that is, He shall be my Ensign—He who was symbolized by the altar—Exod. 17:15; Isai. 11:10, 12; 18:3; 31:9; Zech. 9:16.

This Yahweh-nissi altar was superseded by an altar overlaid with plates of brass. These plates represented “the flesh of sin” purified by fiery trial. “Gold, silver, brass, iron, tin, and lead, every thing,” said Moses, “that may abide the fire, ye shall make go through the fire, and it shall be clean; nevertheless, it shall be purified with the water of separation; and all that abideth not the fire ye shall make go through the water”—Numb. 31:22. The connexion of the plates with sin’s flesh is established by their history. They were “the censers of those sinners against their own souls,” Korah, Dathan, Abiram, and their company, two hundred and fifty of them, who rebelled against the Strength of Israel. He commanded Eleazer, Aaron’s son, to melt them, and roll them into “broad plates for a covering of the altar;” and for “a sign to the children of Israel”—Numb. 16:37. The Brazen Altar, which was foursquare, had four horns of brass, one at each corner; and in sacrifice, the blood was applied to the horns by the priest’s finger; and the rest was all poured beside the bottom of the altar—Exod. 29:12. These Horns represent the same thing as the Four Cherubim, the Four Carpenters, and the Four Living Ones, of Ezekiel, Zechariah, and John; only in the Brazen State, which precedes the Golden Olahm, Aion, or Millennium. As Horns of Brass they “execute the judgment written,” as a consuming fire; for brass and offering by fire, is the association of things in the type.

The Brazen Altar and its Horns of Brass, then, are symbolical of AIL, the Eternal Power, in Elohistic, or sacrificial and judicial manifestation in flesh. “Eloah will come from Teman,” saith the prophet, “The Holy One from Mount Paran. Consider! His glory covers the heavens, and his praise fills the earth: and the splendor shall be as the light: He has HORNS out of his hand; and there is the covering of his Strong Ones. Before his Faces shall go pestilence, and from his feet lightnings shall proceed. He stood and measured the earth; he beheld, and caused the nations to tremble: and the mountains of antiquity were dispersed; and the hills of the Olahm did bow; the goings of Olahm are his”—Hab. 3:3–6. The Horns of the Brazen and Golden Altars are the Eternal Spirit’s Strong Ones who disperse the empires of antiquity, and subjugate the kingdoms of the latter days to Him and his Anointed; so that the current of the world’s affairs will be directed by his Elohim in the ensuing thousand years, or Daniel’s “season and a time.”

The saints, then, are the Feet of incandescent Brass, who have all passed through the fire, and the water of separation, and been consecrated by the blood of the covenant; and “are partakers with the Altar,” even with Jesus—1 Cor. 9:13; 10:18; Heb. 13:10, 12: and those of them who have been slain, have been poured out “beside the bottom,” or “under the altar,” from whence the cry apocalyptically ascends to the Father, “How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell upon the earth?”—Rev. 6:10; 11:1. Hence, those who dwell upon the earth, being like Israel of old, “grievous revolvers, brass and iron, corrupters all” (Jer. 6:28) are to be cast into a furnace glowing with the heat of Yahweh’s indignation. Israel has been passing through the process for ages. They have been trampled under foot of the Gentiles in a great furnace of affliction; for punishment was to begin first at the Jew; and afterwards to be visited upon the brass and iron of the Gentiles. Ezekiel’s description of Israel’s punishment by Gentile agency will illustrate that of the Gentiles by the agency of Israel under the direction of the Man, “whose Feet are like incandescent brass glowing in a furnace;” and will furnish an obvious interpretation of the text. “The word of Yahweh,” says the prophet, “came unto me, saying, Son of Man, the house of Israel is to me become dross; they are all brass and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace; they are the dross of silver. Therefore, thus saith Yahweh Elohim, because ye are all become dross, behold, therefore, I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem. As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it to melt it; so will I gather you in my anger, and in my fury, and I will leave you, and melt you. Yea, I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof. As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof; and ye shall know that I, Yahweh, have poured out my fury upon you”—ch. 22:17. In this testimony, Israel in the flesh are compared to brass and other metals full of dross. This drossy nature of the brass is the characteristic by which they are distinguished from the “fine,” or “incandescent brass” of the Son of Man, or Israel in the Spirit, in glowing, or burning, operation upon the subjects of Yahweh’s fiery indignation.

Israel, as dross, is exemplified in the denunciations of the prophets. Their drossiness is seen in the abominations they practised in burning incense to reptiles, and filthy beasts, and idols of every sort; in their women weeping for Tammuz, the Adonis of the Greeks; and in their worshipping the sun between the porch of the temple and the altar, with their backs towards the sanctuary of Yahweh—Ezek. 8:7–18. They are still in the drossy state, with the curse of Moses, and the blood-guiltiness they invoked upon themselves and posterity at the crucifixion of Jesus, lying heavily upon them. Israel lives in perpetual violation of the law; and yet professes to expect justification by that law, which only thunders the curses of Mount Ebal in their ears. Hence, they are to this day “the dross of silver in the midst of the furnace” of affliction; “left” of Yahweh, and “melted.”

But, if Israel be the dross of silver, the Gentiles are the dross of brass, iron lead, and tin. The Gentile dross is of no more value than Israel’s; for “God has concluded all under sin.” Israel boasts in Moses, and pays no regard to what he prescribes; and the Gentile bepraises Jesus, while their ears are closed, and their hearts steeled against his teaching and commands: so that Jews and Gentiles are both guilty before God; they only excepted who believe the gospel of the kingdom and obey it. They have all, therefore, to be gathered into a furnace glowing with intense combustion, before their races can attain to the blessedness that is to come upon all nations through Abraham and his Seed. Jews and Gentiles must be “melted in the fire of Yahweh’s wrath,” which fire will glow at the Feet of the Son of Man—“the Saints executing the judgment written;” and “treading the wicked as ashes under the soles of their feet.”

As to the furnace in which this intense glowing wrath of Deity is to glow, we may state it in the words of Ezekiel as “the Wilderness of the Peoples.” This is the “furnace” both for Israel and their enemies. In relation to Israel in this furnace, it is written, “As I live, saith Adonai Yahweh, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: and I will bring you out from the peoples, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the peoples, and there will I plead you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith Adonai Yahweh. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the Covenant. And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am Yahweh”—Ezek. 20:33–38.

When thus purified from dross in this glowing furnace, the Jewish nation will be brass and silver well refined—Mal. 3:2. The rebellious dross will have been cleaned out, and Anti-Mosaic Judaism, by which they are now caused to wander out of the way, will have been destroyed from the earth. This refining in the furnace is in “the time of Jacob’s trouble,” out of which he is to be delivered—Jer. 30:7; and though they are now “prostrate among the cattle pens,” they will be “the wings of the Dove covered with silver, and her feathers with the brightness of fine gold”—Ps. 68:14; John 1:32.

But the nations are to become molten brass, as well as Israel. Their brass, therefore, is also to be gathered into the furnace, that it may be melted and refined under the intense fire of divine wrath. Israel, commanded by the Son of Man, is a torch of fire in the wilderness, which not only purges them, but serves to consume its peoples. The wilderness thus converted into a smelting furnace, is that which John saw when he was carried away in spirit into the wilderness, where he saw “the Great Harlot sitting upon many waters;” which are interpreted to signify “peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues”—Rev. 17:1, 15. The countries of Portugal, Spain, France, Belgium, Germany, Italy, Greece, Egypt, and, in short, all the Mediterranean and Euphratean countries, being the territories of the Four Beasts of Daniel, constitute the furnace in which the Nebuchadnezzar gold, and silver, and brass, and iron, and clay, are made to glow with fervent heat of sevenfold intensity; and in which the four men of God—the Cherubim—walk to and fro without hurt, “the fire having no power upon their bodies,” as symbolized by Nebuchadnezzar’s furnace, and by John’s mystical Son of Man, who torments the worshippers of the Beast and the False Prophet “in the Lake of fire burning with brimstone”—Rev. 19:20; 14:10. The melting and refining the Gentile brass in this Babylonian furnace, incandescent with the wrath of Deity, is Daniel’s “time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation to that same time”—ch. 12:1. It is “the day burning like a furnace,” which shall consume the proud, and all that do wickedly with their Anti-Christian Gentilism, by which the peoples are deceived; but which shall have no power for evil against the people represented by Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, and the one with them like the Son of God; they shall come forth unharmed, unsinged, unchanged, and inodorous of the fire. For these are the Bride, the Daughter of Zion, to whom the Spirit saith, “Arise, and thresh, for I will make thine Horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces many peoples; and I will consecrate their spoil to Yahweh, and their wealth to the Lord of the whole earth”—Mic. 4:13. These brazen hoofs of Zion’s daughter, which answer to the feet of John’s similitude, are the feet of Ezekiel’s cherubim, which, he says, “are straight feet; and the sole of their feet like the sole of a calf’s foot; and they sparkled like the color of burnished brass”—Ezek. 1:7.

Thus, while Israel is passing through the furnace, under the conduct of the Saints, and are themselves being purged from dross, they are also made use of by their commanders, as a torch of fire among the sheaves, or a lion among flocks of goats (Mic. 5:8; Zech. 12:6) to destroy the power and kingdoms of the world, after the allegorical example of their transit out of Egypt into the land of the inheritance; for though passing under the rod themselves, they become also “a rod of iron” in the hand of Yahweh, for the destruction of the nations when their iniquity is full—Rev. 2:26, 27.

11. “His voice as the Sound of Many Waters.”

In the tenth verse of this first chapter, John informs us, that the first thing that arrested his attention, when he came to be “in spirit,” was “a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, I am the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last;” and in the fifteenth verse, he tells us, that the great voice was “as the sound of many waters.”

Now, in this book, “many waters” is defined to be “peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues”—ch. 17:15. This would give us the interpretation, that the voice of the Son of Man was the voice of a multitude; and that, consequently, the similitude was the symbol of a multitude—a Multitudinous Son of Man. And this accords with the voice of Daniel’s symbol, of which he testifies, that the voice of his words was as the voice of a multitude”—ch. 10:6. Ezekiel, also in characterizing the noise made by the Wings of the Four Cherubim, says, “I heard the noise of their wings like the noise of many waters, as the voice of Mighty Ones (Shaddai) in their goings, the voice of speech, as the noise of a camp: in standing they let down their wings”—ch. 1:24. The meaning of this is, that Ezekiel heard the voice of a multitude of Mighty Ones, speaking as the warriors of a camp in motion against an enemy; and that when they were not in progress, their voice was not heard; “in standing they let down their wings,” and consequently, there was no sound of war. The wings of the Ezekiel Cherubim, and the man-like Similitudes of Daniel and John, in speaking, sounded forth as the roar of mighty waters. This was when they were in progress, advancing in body and wings their brazen-footed battalions against the Fourth Beast, or the apocalyptic Beast and False Prophet, and the kings of the earth, and their armies,—the former utterly consumed in the furnace, or “lake of fire burning with brimstone,” and the kings of the earth, and their armies slain with the sword of the resurrected and Glorified Mystic Man.

The multitude of mighty ones, apocalyptically, denominated “the Almighty,” is that great multitude referred to in ch. 7:9—“a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, standing before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands.” These are the “many waters,” when their work is done. Ezekiel heard “the voice of speech,” and in uttering their great voice, some of the things they proclaimed are, “Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, honor, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they exist, and were created”—ch. 4:11: and “Salvation to our Deity who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb”—ch. 7:10; 5:14.

John likens the voice to the sound of a trumpet speaking, by which similitude it is connected with Paul’s testimony, concerning the descent of the “Lord himself from heaven, with a shout, with a voice of an archangel, and with a TRUMPET OF DEITY.” The Apocalypse of the Son of Man is an affair of trumpets. His manifestation is preceded by the sounding of six trumpets; and in the sounding of the seventh, and last, it is that the Saints are raised, and apocalypsed in clouds to meet their Lord the King. The last period of the seventh trumpet is a momentous and terrible epoch in the world’s history. It is the sounding of the voice of the Almighty Host, that is to make the world to tremble. Alluding to this, Isaiah says, “All the inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, when He lifteth up an Ensign upon the mountains, tremble; and when He bloweth a trumpet, they shall hear”—ch. 18:3. The prophet tells us, that this is to be at the time when Israel shall be brought to Yahweh Tz'vaoth, in Mount Zion, as a present, to the place of the Name of Yahweh Tz'vaoth; which, as Jeremiah testifies, will at that time be called "the throne of Yahweh"—ch. 3:17; Isa. 24:23.

This is the trumpet of Israel's restoration among other events. This is manifest from Isa. 27:12, 13, which says, "And it shall come to pass in that day, that Yahweh shall beat off from the channel of the river (Euphrates) unto the stream of Egypt (the Nile), and ye shall be gathered to one another, O ye children of Israel. And it shall be in that day, that the GREAT TRUMPET shall be blown, and they shall come who were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall bow down to Yahweh in the holy mount at Jeruslaem." This great trumpet shall be blown, and Zechariah tells us by whom. In ch. 9:14, having told us previously, that Zion's Sons should be raised up to become a sword upon Greece, it is said, "And Yahweh shall be seen over them, and his arrow (the Ten Tribes) shall go forth as the lightning; and ADONAI Yahweh (Yahweh's Lords) shall blow the trumpet, and shall go forth with whirlwinds of Teman. Yahweh Tz'vaoth shall defend them, and they shall devour, and disregard the stones of the sling." The trumpet blown is for the calling of the assembly, and for the journeying of the camps; first, for the gathering of the princes, the heads of the thousands of Israel; then for the convocation of all Israel; and thirdly, for war against their enemies—the antitype of the Memorial of blowing of trumpets, and of the trumpet of the jubilee, on the first and tenth days of the seventh month—Numb. 10; Lev. 23:24; 25:9. The Sons of Deity, his kings and priests, shall blow the trumpet, and proclaim, as the roar of many and mighty waters, to the inhabitants of the world, that they are "the Beginning and the Ending," "the Elohim of all the earth"—Isa. 54:5, —the Eternal Spirit multitudinously manifest in flesh.

12. "Out of His Mouth a Sharp Two-Edged Sword."

A sword proceeding out of the mouth of a symbol indicates that the community represented is prepared for military operations. "Yahweh," saith Moses, "is a Man of War;" and that warrior is before us in John's similitude of the Son of man.

The Mouth of such a similitude, with a sword affirmed to be proceeding out of it, is representative of the Commander-in-Chief. "Joseph gave them wagons, according to the mouth of Pharaoh;" that is, "according to the command of Pharaoh." When the word of command passes out of the mouth of a general, it moves armies, and causes them to draw their sword, and to smite their enemies with great slaughter. His word that goes out of his mouth causes blood to flow; and, as the sword is the instrument of blood-shedding, the idea is fitly symbolized by placing a sword in apposition with the mouth, and affirming that it is going forth. If the Son of Man were in an attitude of speaking peace to the nations, his eyes would not be as a flame of fire, and his feet would not glow incandescently, nor would his countenance be as sun-smiting heat; but all this would be modified and changed, and instead of "a sharp double-edged long sword," an Olive Branch would stand related to the Mouth. According to the tenor of the words is the character of the symbol.

The sword directed by the mouth of the similitude is said to be sharp and two-edged. It is sharp for cut and thrust—the sword of a Mighty Man ready for execution, and which ever way directed is sure to smite effectively. The voice of the words of the great multitude symbolized by this sword, is the voice of the Eternal Spirit speaking through them as the ministers of his vengeance. Hence the sword is symbolical of what Paul styles, "the Spirit of his Mouth," which is the Lord Jesus Anointed, the Mouth of the Body. Thus, though represented by this cutting instrument, Paul says, "The Word of Deity is living and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart." The word is sharper now, for it can penetrate in argument where a sword cannot reach; but, how much sharper will it be when the word of command shall find expression through a two-edged sword in the hands of the Saints. But while Jesus is mouth in a personal sense, He and the Saints are the Mouth of the Son of Man in a corporate sense. This personal and corporate sense, in its conjoint signification, must not be lost sight of in the prophetic and symbolic scriptures; or we shall fail to perceive their meaning in the full extent. Thus, Isaiah speaking of the One Body in its Alpha and Omega manifestation, says, in ch. 11:4, that “the Rod of Jesse’s stem shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips he shall slay the wicked * * * and the earth shall be full of the knowledge of Yahweh as the waters cover the sea:” so that the enemy is “slain by the words of his mouth”—Hos. 6:5. By reading Isai. 49 it will be seen what is to be effected by this sword of the Spirit wielded by David’s house—it effects the restoration of Israel, and the salvation of the nations from the superstition, and misgovernment that destroys them on every side.

The similitude of the Son of man is introduced in Rev. 19:11–16, where it is resolved into an army, consisting of the Commander-in-Chief, his staff, and the troops they command: or the Lord Jesus, the Saints, and the horses they ride, which are the armies of Israel. In this scene the Son of man has many crowns upon his head, which represents a multitude of Kings under one chief. “His vesture is dipped in blood,” as he had just come from the sacrifice at Botzra; while his body-guards, or officers of his hosts, are “clothed in fine linen, white and clean,” to indicate their righteousness, in peace or war; for “in righteousness he doth judge and make war.” Thus prepared, they are ready for the conquest of the world; which is indicated by the testimony that, “out of his mouth goes a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of the Deity who is Almighty. And he hath on the vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords;” who, being jointheirs with their imperial chief, have a common destiny and inheritance with him—Rev. 2:26; 3:21.

13. “His Aspect as the Sun.”

“His aspect as the sun shines in his power.” the words ης οψη εσται αυτου, which I have rendered “his aspect,” are expressed in the English version by “his countenance.” In modern style, this is generally understood of the face. But John certainly did not mean this. He began his description at the hair of the head; and if he had meant the face he would doubtless have referred to it before he passed down to the breasts. What he had reference to, after finishing in detail, was the general external aspect of the whole figure.

This was typified in the general appearance of the Alpha on the mount of Transfiguration. Peter, James, and John, were witnesses of this. it was a representation of the power and coming, or Majesty, of the Lord Jesus Anointed. Peter, alluding to it, says, “We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the glory and coming of our Lord Jesus Anointed, but were eye witnesses of his majesty. For he received from Deity, the Father, honor and power, when a voice came to him from the excellent glory, saying, This is my Son the Beloved in whom I am well pleased—2 Pet. 1:16. On that occasion, “his face prosopon, shone as the sun, and his raiment became white as the light.” This transfiguration scene exhibited the Son of man personal and corporate in the glory of the Father as he will be in the kingdom of Deity. His general aspect will be glorious; for “the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed when Yahweh Tz’vaoth shall reign the glory on Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and in the presence of his Ancients”—Isai. 24:23.

“Our life is hid with Christ in the Deity, and when he who is our life shall appear, then shall we (the Saints) appear with him in glory”—Col. 3:4; and, says John, “we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is”—1 Epist. 3:2. When, therefore, the apocalypse of the multitude of the Sons of God, represented by John's similitude of the Son of man, shall be manifested, being all like to Jesus in transfiguration, the aspect of the Body will be "as the sun when he shines in his power." Jesus being the Sun of Righteousness, and they like him, they will be all "as the sun;" and "when he shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." He will then "shine forth in his power" the Sun of an unclouded day; and as he shines, so will they; for he has said, "to him that overcomes I will give to sit down with me upon my throne, as I overcome and sit down with my Father upon his throne"—Rev. 3:21; "then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father"—Matt. 13:43; and there will be no place found for the earth and the heaven, in which the Beast and the False Prophet, and their kings now shine in all the glory of Satan; for then they will have fled away from before the face and sun-like aspect of the Son of man, seated upon "the Great White Throne" established by his prowess for the Thousand Years—Rev. 20:11.

From the illustration of the transfiguration, the personal appearance of the Saints will be splendid with brightness. But there is reason to believe that they will not be distinguishable from ordinary men in appearance until their labors are accomplished. When the angels visited Sodom, the citizens did not discern any difference between them and Lot. And so will it be with the Saints who arise to execute the judgment written upon "the Great City, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified"—Rev. 11:8. The nature of their work requires that they should have the aspect common to humanity, which is not at all incompatible with the symbolical glory of their Body Corporate. If they flashed light from their persons as the sun shoots forth his rays, their enemies would be so panic-stricken, that they would not stand in fight, by which their punishment would be greatly impeded. The resurrected saints will therefore appear upon the theatre of war, as Adam and Jesus when they first emerged from earth. Jesus was mistaken for the gardener. The Angel of the Lord who descended from heaven to open his grave, was of lightning-like countenance, and raiment white as snow; and the guards did shake, and became as dead men; but when Mary saw Jesus, she conversed with him without trepidation. There was an interval between the restoration of the body to life and the glorification of Jesus seven days before Pentecost. During this typical interval of forty days, he associated with the disciples, ate, drank, and conversed with them as usual. The body raised not having been "received up in glory," or displayed in the brightness of spirit-body, was in a condition to shine forth incorruptibility and immortality when the fitness of things required.

Now Jesus was the great example of all things pertaining to his Brethren, the Saints. When their bodies come out of their graves, they come forth as Adam or Jesus. Had Adam the First (who was the figure of Jesus) shone forth in glory, it would have been when he should have been permitted to eat of the Tree of Life. All the time between his creation and such eating would have been ordinary human existence. It was so with Jesus; and will be so with the Saints. Between their resurrection and glorification is the resurrection state, styled "in the resurrection," a period of forty years preceding the Millennium, in which some of the most important events of the Apocalypse are to be transacted. The end of this judicial period, during which the kingdom is being established, or "set up," is the "Evening Time"—the time preceding the Millennial Day. When the night has passed, the Day of Rest arrives, in which the Saints, who have been "scourging throughout the earth," cease from their labors, and their works do follow them. They enter the kingdom, covered with glory, which the nations will bear in lively remembrance for a thousand years.

Now, according to this arrangement, Zechariah testifies, saying, that when the Mount of Olives shall be rent asunder by an earthquake, "Yahweh, my Elohim, shall come in, all the Saints with thee. And it shall be in that day there shall be no brightness—the Splendid Ones shall draw in; and it shall be one day that shall be known to Yahweh, not day nor night; and it shall be at the time of evening there shall be brightness. * * * And Yahweh shall be for King over all the earth. In that day there shall be ONE Yahweh, and his Name One”—Zech. 14:5–9. The “Splendid Ones” of this passage are the Elohim, or Saints, who will not shine forth in the brightness of their glory until the time of evening; then, when the kingdom is restored to Israel, they will shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, as Daniel, Zechariah, and Jesus have foretold.

14. “The Amen.”

“I was dead, and behold, I am lying for the Aions of the Aions, AMEN.” This is from the Hebrew ahmain, “faithfulness.” The Eternal Spirit both absolute and incarnate, is “the Amen.” In the letter to Laodicea the Spirit speaks, and in speaking, says, “these things saith THE AMEN;” and in this first chapter, the Amen says, “I was dead.” But the Spirit never died; therefore, here it must be understood of the Logos speaking from a body, personal and corporate, with whom he had united in a resurrection thereof from the dead. All the elements of this Body are faithful and true witnesses, and believers of the promises of Deity, which in Christ, are yea, and in Him, Amen, unto the glory of the Deity by us—2 Cor. 1:20. The Son of Man being constituted of firm believers of the promises, is styled ho Amen, the Faithful One; hence all his constituents are Elohai Amen, “Mighty Ones of Faithfulness,” being all of that principle, faith, without which “it is impossible to please the Deity”—Heb. 11:6. Because, therefore, of their faithfulness, or Amen characteristics, the Spirit saith, they shall eat, and drink, and rejoice, and sing for joy of heart. But to Israelites of an opposite character, he saith, “Ye shall leave your name for a curse to my Chosen One; for Adonai Yahweh shall slay thee, and to his servants proclaim another name; that he who blesseth himself in the earth shall bless himself in the Elohim of Amen; and he that sweareth in the land shall swear by the Elohim of Amen (the Mighty Ones of Faithfulness); because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from my eyes. For, behold, I create New Heavens and a New Earth * * * for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy”—Isai. 65:13. These Elohim, then, embodied in the Son of Man, are “the Amen,” who, in the days of their flesh, “through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection. And others had trial of mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented (of whom the world was not worthy;) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens, and caves of the earth.” Such were the constituents of “the Amen,” the Mighty Ones of Faithfulness, who all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; Deity having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect”—Heb. 11:33; —a perfection apocalypsed in “THE AMEN,” who was dead and lives in the Millennial Olahm and beyond.

CHAPTER 2.

EPISTLES TO THE FOUR ANGEL-STARS OF THE ECCLESIAS IN EPHESUS, SMYRNA, PERGAMOS, AND THYATIRA.

SECTION 1. TO THE ANGEL OF THE EPHESIAN ECCLESIA.

TO THE ANGEL OF THE EPHESIAN ECCLESIA WRITE: THESE THINGS SAITH HE WHO HOLDS THE SEVEN STARS IN HIS RIGHT HAND, WALKING IN THE MIDST OF THE SEVEN LIGHTSTANDS, WHICH ARE GOLDEN; I HAVE KNOWN THY WORKS AND THY LABOR, AND THINE AWAITING, AND THAT THOU ARE NOT ABLE TO ENDURE WICKED MEN; AND HAST TRIED THEM WHO ASSERT THAT THEY ARE APOSTLES, BUT ARE NOT, AND HAST FOUND THEM LIARS, AND THOU HAST SUFFERED, AND HAST PATIENT ENDURANCE, AND THOU HAST LABORED ON ACCOUNT OF MY NAME, AND HAST NOT TIRED OUT.

“But I have against thee that thou hast forsaken thy first love. Remember, then, from whence thou hast fallen, and change thy mind, and do the first works; but if not, I come to thee speedily, and I will remove thy lightstand out of its place, except thou change thy mind.

But thou hast this, that thou hatest the works of the Nikolaitanes, which I also do hate. He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the Ecclesias. To him that overcomes, to him I will give to eat of the Wood of the Life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of the Deity”—verse 1–7.

The Ephesian Ecclesia was the Body of Christ in the city of Ephesus. This city was the metropolis of the Lydian Asia. According to Strabo, it was one of the best and most glorious of cities, and the greatest emporium of the proper Asia. It is called by Pliny one of the eyes of Asia, Smyrna being the other: but now it is venerable for nothing but the ruins of palaces, temples and amphitheatres. It is called by the Turks Ajasaluk, or the temple of the moon, from the magnificent structure formerly dedicated to Diana, the goddess of the Ephesians. In after times, the temples were represented by spiritual bazaars, called “churches,” dedicated to guardian saints, styled St. John, St. Mark, and St. Paul. That dedicated to St. Paul is wholly destroyed. The little that remains of St. Mark’s is nodding to ruin. The only one remaining is St. John’s, which is now converted into a Turkish mosque. The whole town is nothing but a habitation for herdsmen and farmers, living in low and humble cottages of dirt, sheltered from the extremities of weather by the mighty masses of ruinous walls, the pride and ostentation of former days, and the emblem in these of the frailty of the world, and the transient vanity of human glory. All the inhabitants of this once famous city amount now to not above forty or fifty families of Turks. The light has gone out, and darkness is complete.

The gospel appears to have been introduced into Ephesus by Paul, who, on his arrival there, went into the synagogue of the Jews according to his usual practice, and reasoned with them. After he left, Apollos visited the city, proclaiming the doctrine of John the Baptist. But he was far behind the times. Paul’s christian friends, Aquila and Priscilla, hearing him in the synagogue, formed an acquaintance with him, “and expounded unto him the Way of God more perfectly.” Having been thus set right by them, he went to work in the right direction, and mightily convinced the Jews in public, showing them by the scriptures that Jesus was the Christ.

Apollos having left, Paul returned, and found there certain disciples who knew only what John the Immerser had taught. They had been immersed upon the faith of the near coming of the Christ; but were not aware that Jesus was he. Paul having rectified their faith reimmersed them; and then, having laid his hands upon them, holy spirit came upon them, and the twelve men spake with tongues, and prophesied, and became a Star of light to Ephesus.

This was the beginning of the ecclesia in Ephesus. The fact of their being endowed with the power of speaking foreign languages, and of their being able to speak to edification, which all could who had the gift of prophesying, is proof sufficient that they became colaborers with Paul in sounding out the invitation to partake in the kingdom and glory of Deity. Having strengthened himself with these, “he spake boldly for the space of three months disputing and persuading the things concerning the Kingdom of God.” After this, he separated the disciples into a distinct congregation, and continued his disputations daily for about two years; so that all they that dwelt in the proconsular of Lydian Asia, heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks. By this time, the number of the faithful had greatly increased; for “many who believed came and confessed, and showed their deeds, and burned their books of magic to the value of fifty thousand pieces of silver; so mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed.”

1. The Angels of the Ecclesias.

Thus was the One Body created in Ephesus. It became a lightstand, and the Holy Spirit bestowed through the laying on of Paul’s hands, a light shining from it’s Eldership, the members in particular, for the illumination of the surrounding darkness. We need not here repeat what has been already said about the lightstands and “Stars” on page 161. Suffice it to remind the reader, that the Presbytery anointed with Holy Spirit was the particular STAR of the Ephesian ecclesia; and consequently, “the Angel” of the body here.

It was to this angel that the writing was addressed. This word was appropriately used for the presbytery of an apostolic ecclesia, as already shown in the place referred to above. It does not indicate one man, as clerical commentators suppose, who can see nothing sparkling as “a bright particular star” in what they call “a church,” but the dark body that ordinarily aims at “starting it” behind a velvet cushion! I say dark body, for what else is a blind leader of the blind into the ditch of perdition? The spiritual guides accepted of the people, are the “blind Pharisees” of our day, whose “light within” is the darkness of a “christendom,” apocalyptically designated, “the great city which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt”—Rev. 11:8. The writing before us, which contains “what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias,” is not spoken to papistical and protestant “churches” through their priestly and clerical, or ministerial “angels;” it is spoken neither to their “churches” nor to their angels; for these all belong to the party of the power apocalyptically styled “the Dragon and his Angels;” and by Jesus, “the Devil and his Angels”—Rev. 12:7, 4; Matt. 25:41. They pertain to “the Dragon’s tail” which draws after it “the Stars of the heaven” of this evil world. No; the writing before us contains what the Spirit saith to “the servants of the Deity;” to them of the party of “Michael and his Angels;” to them who have believed and obeyed the gospel, and are intelligently and faithfully waiting for the kingdom and glory of which it treats, and which are symbolized in the glorious book.

When Paul was on his way from Macedonia to Jerusalem, where he desired to be on the Day of Pentecost, he halted at Miletus, a city and sea port of Caria, about thirty-six miles south of Ephesus, waiting for the Star-Angel of Ephesus to meet him there. In Acts 20:17, this Star-Angel is styled hoi presbuteroi tes ekklesias, the Presbyters, or Elders of the Ecclesia. When they arrived, he rehearsed what he had done while a resident with them, “disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of the Deity.” He reminded them of the persecutions he had endured, and told them, that “he kept back nothing that was profitable, testifying both to Jews and Gentiles, change of mind concerning the Deity, and faith concerning the Anointed Jesus our Lord.” This was the result he aimed to produce by his disputations and persuasions in connection with the kingdom—first, to give them correct ideas of the Deity, and his promises; next, to work faith in them concerning Jesus, and the things pertaining to him, as the propitiatory set forth for a covering of sin—Rom. 3:25. This he styled, “testifying the gospel of the grace of the Deity,” “preaching his kingdom,” and declaring “all his counsel;” from all which it is evident that Paul’s teaching and course of public ministration are not those of the Angels of Satan’s Synagogue, who deceive the whole world in its present constitution. These neither know God, nor the gospel of the grace of God, and do not, therefore, nor can they, declare his counsel. All these things the Star-angel of Ephesus was well versed in; for they showed their approval of what Paul said, by their overflowing sympathy with him at the parting hour.

But while he reminded them of the past, he forewarned them of the calamitous future, about which he was much troubled; for he perceived that, on every side the hidden principle of lawlessness was already at work in and among the ecclesias; he therefore forewarned the Star-Angel that he might be forearmed. Hence, addressing him, he said, seeing that such have been my labors among you, “Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock en o, in which the Holy Spirit appointed you episkopoi, overseers to shepherdise the ecclesia of the Deity, which he purchased with his own blood. For I know this, that after my departure grievous wolves will enter in among you, not sparing the flock: yea, of your own selves will men stand up speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them.” This was the last interview Paul had with the Ephesian brethren, whose “first works” are approved by the Spirit in this apocalyptic epistle. Paul afterwards wrote to them “the Epistle to the Ephesians,” in which he told them that he was then “an ambassador in bonds;” being “the prisoner of the Anointed Jesus for you Gentiles.” The Jews had effected his arrest by the Romans, before whose emperor he afterwards appeared, and was sentenced to lose his life. He was victimized by them because he declared that the Lord Jesus had sent him to the Gentiles—Acts 22:21. For this cause, he styled himself “the Prisoner of the Anointed Jesus for the Gentiles,” whether in Ephesus or elsewhere.

2. False Apostles.

But not long after he had written to the Household of the Deity in Ephesus, the things of which he forewarned them began to display themselves. This appears from his second letter to Timothy, in which he says, “This thou knowest, that all they which be in Asia are turned away from me, of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes. The Lord grant mercy to the house of Onesiphorus, for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain; but when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me. The Lord grant unto him, that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day (of his apocalypse—2 Epist. 1:10, 15–18; 4:1, 8;) and in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well.” The Star-angel at Ephesus was perhaps a principal party alluded to as an element of the “all in Asia turned away” from him. Phygellus, Hermogenes, and the house of Onesiphorus, were probably all residents of that city, which, with Smyrna, was chief of the cities of Asia. Paul had been long a prisoner, in Rome, and could no more personally look after the congregations, to encourage the faithful and to restrain the presumptuous, who sought to supersede him, and constitute themselves authorities in his stead. They were “grievous wolves,” who, in “drawing away disciples after them,” of necessity “turned them away from Paul.” We see the working of the same thing in our own day. The world has gone off after the priests, clergy, and ministers, of “the great city.” All who are considered as belonging to a godly, pious generation, are disciples of these grievous wolves, who glorify the traditions of those who lead them to perdition; and in proportion to the intensity of their moonstricken admiration for these, so are they turned from the teaching of Paul and his co-workers. While in their discourses they may pay Paul and the other apostles a few passing compliments, their authority with the “religious world” they have effectually nullified and destroyed. None of their disciples venture to do anything because Paul commands it, but because it is the opinion of some clerical authority that it may be done. Thus it was when all Asia had turned away from him. His authority was disregarded by the Star-Angels of Asia, in which men stood up and proclaimed themselves “apostles,” and taught “perverse things,” destructive of the truth. “Who is Paul? A prisoner in Rome as a disturber of the peace of society; a man of weak personality, and contemptibility of speech! Are not we the people of the Lord, and are not we endowed with the earnest of the Spirit, as well as he? Are we not inspired with ‘the word of wisdom,’ the ‘word of knowledge,’ the ‘gift of tongues,’ the ‘operation of powers;’ and does not the Lord speak also by us? Having these endowments, we claim apostleship as well as he; and by virtue therefore, of our gifts we affirm, and appeal to them as the proof, that we are the ambassadors of the Anointed Jesus, called and sent of God as Aaron was; and successors of the apostles to the end of the world!" Such were the assumptions of this class of men after Paul's departure; grievous wolves, not sparing the flock, for with them godliness had become craft, and the feeding of the sheep a merchandize of gain.

But before they were abandoned to utter perdition in their own corruption, the Spirit addressed them through John in Patmos. He addressed them as the Potentate who held the Star Angels in his right hand, and walked in the midst of the Golden Lightstands. If the Presbyteries of Episcopalians shone as Stars, it was by the right-hand power of the Eternal—by the effluence of His substance, shed abroad by the ministration of Him at his right hand, who was dead and buried, and afterwards ascended on high, leading captivity captive, and receiving gifts for men. By this effluence in the endowed, he walked in the midst of the Ecclesias, and by his shining converted them into stands effulgent light upon the sons of day.

The Spirit, then, radiant from the eternal throne, and localized in the Anointed Jesus, said to the Star-Angel of Ephesus, "I have known thy works, and thy labor, and thy patient waiting, and that thou art not able to endure wicked men; and hast tried them who assert that they are apostles, but are not, and hast found them liars; and thou hast suffered, and hast patient endurance; and thou hast labored on account of my Name, and hast not tired out." This was the Spirit's knowledge of them in relation to the first estate of the Presbyteries symbolized by the Star-Angel of the Ephesian ecclesia. The "first works" and the "first love" are illustrated in the narrative of the Acts of Apostles. The primitive zeal of the Star-Angels is illustrated by that of Corinth. A case of wickedness occurred in that ecclesia, in which they were thought to sympathize. Paul wrote in reproof of what he had heard. When his letter was received, it produced a great and salutary effect upon them; so that hearing of it, when he wrote again, he said, "Ye sorrowed after a godly sort; what carefulness it wrought in you; yea, what clearing of yourselves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, what vehement-desire; yea; what zeal; yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter." And he told them, also, that one reason of his writing was to put their obedience to the test; "to this end," says he, "did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient IN ALL THINGS." Having put their obedience to the test, and found them ready to do right "in all things," he brought before them another case of wickedness, namely, that they had been visited by men professing to be Christ's, who preached another Jesus, another Spirit, and another Gospel, than he; who commended themselves; charged him with being crafty, and catching them with guile; spoke of his speech and person with disrespect; boasted in the circumcision of their flesh; in being Hebrews, Israelites, and the Seed of Abraham; ministers and apostles of Christ. Now these he regarded with indignation and contempt, and likens their operation upon the congregations in Corinth and elsewhere, to that of the serpent who beguiled Eve. He styles them "False apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel, for he, the Satan, is transformed into an angel of light. It is, therefore, no great thing if his ministers also are transformed as ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works"—2 Cor. 11:4, 13.

This class of men were a serious and fatal trouble to Paul and the ecclesias. They first made their appearance on the page of New Testament history, in Acts 15:1–5. Their new-fangled crotchet was, that the belief of the Gospel of the Kingdom, and baptism, were not sufficient for salvation; but that a Gentile must besides, or in addition to these, be circumcised, and keep the law of Moses. This dogma was their stock in trade—the basket of small wares, with which they began the world, and set out in life to make their fortunes. The simple assertion of their dogma brought them into direct collision with the apostles, and especially with Paul. They were the Judaizers, styled in ecclesiastical history, the Ebionites. Their dogma was tantamount to a denial, that "the blood of Jesus Anointed, Son of the Deity, cleanses from all sin”—1 Jno. 1:7; and that “his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree”—1 Pet. 2:24; for if salvation could not be attained without circumcision and obedience to Moses, the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus, were an insufficient sacrifice for sin. The apostles seeing this, unanimously repudiated the dogma, and labored incessantly to prevent it from obtaining a lodgment in the public mind. Paul being “the teacher of the Gentiles,” was particularly and acutely argumentative against the Judaizers, or Ebionites; who, consequently, denied the divine authority of the epistles, and accused him of being an Antinomian, because opposed to seeking justification in Moses and in Jesus combined. Thus “they turned away from him.”

They seem to have acquired great influence with weak-minded professors in Galatia, so as to alienate them from Paul. In writing to these, he says, “I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the favor of Christ to another gospel: which, however, is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But, though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel to you than that we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.” This is plain and unmistakeable language. They were preaching “another gospel” than Paul’s, which was communicated to him by the Anointed Jesus himself; and, therefore, he pronounces them “accursed.” Upon this principle, all the pulpit orators of the “Names and Denominations,” are accursed of Paul; for they none of them preach the gospel promulgated by him. They are all Ebionites, upon the principle of perverting the gospel of Christ by their insane traditions, only that the Ebionites, heretical as they were had more intelligence of “the truth as it is in Jesus” than the ecclesiastical leaders of the priest ridden populations of our day.

Paul understood these pretended apostles thoroughly. He styles them, “false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty.” “They zealously affect you,” says he, “but not well. I would that they were even cut off, which trouble you. They desire to make a fair show in the flesh, therefore they constrain you to be circumcised; but only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ.” They had no objection to be Christians; but they did not like the tribulation the faith brought upon them by the Jewish power. They determined, therefore, to blend Moses and Jesus in such a way as to avoid persecution. But Paul would admit of no compromise; and all that adhered to his teaching renounced them. In the words of the Spirit, “they were not able to endure these wicked men, who asserted that they were apostles, and are not, and had found them liars.” And, though by joining their faction, they might have become popular (for “they spake of the world, and the world heard them”), they preferred to suffer and patiently endure, and to go on laboring for the Name, unweariedly. Such was the first estate of the Star-Angels of the apostolic ecclesias. So long as they continued faithful, the congregations flourished in the midst of persecution; but when men stood up the opponents of apostolic teaching and authority, affairs began to go wrong. The hidden principle of lawlessness began to work like leaven until the whole body was leavened with iniquity, and Satan triumphed for a time.

At this crisis, when the Spirit addressed them through John, the Star-Angel of Ephesus was in a fallen state. They had forsaken their “first love.” Grievous wolves had secured a foothold, and were ready for every evil work. The opponents of Paul’s teaching were among the presbyters, and from them nothing but perversion of the truth could be expected. The abandoning of their first love was the effect of their influence; still there was scope for recovery. They had not gone the extent of denying the faith, or of holding principles subversive of it. Though Phygellus and Hermogenes might be presbyters, there were many of the presbytery who had tried them, and found them to be liars, and would not endure them. Hence, the Spirit exhorted them to “remember from whence they had fallen”—to recollect the spiritual health they enjoyed when Paul went in and out among them for three years, declaring to them “all the counsel of the Deity.” They were exhorted to retrace their steps. To put themselves in their original mode of thought and disposition, when in their first love, and to do the first works, lest the Spirit should come and remove from them the gifts he had bestowed; and so leave them in outer darkness, a prey to all the wiles and ravaging of the grievous wolves. This would be removing the light, without which the stand would be of no account; and, therefore, equivalent to “removing the lightstand out of its place.” But the Star-Angels of the epoch did not recover from their fall. Instead of changing their mind they went on from bad to worse, until at length the time referred to by Paul arrived, when “prophecies (the gift of speaking to edification, exhortation, and comfort, by inspiration) failed; tongues ceased, and (the word of) knowledge vanished away.” The gifts of the Spirit were withdrawn, because they had been abused; and “faith, hope, and love” only remained to a remnant of the saints; and “the greatest of these is love;” for “it rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things; believeth all things; hopeth all things; endureth all things;” and “is the fulfilling of the law”—1 Cor. 13:6–13. Hence, “love” is the major term, and comprehensive of “faith and hope;” while a man may believe and hope, but not rejoice in and obey the truth. “Love does not rejoice in iniquity,” therefore, it is hostile to the clerical apostasy in all its forms. Love is the greatest of the three; yet a houseless wanderer in the “religious world,” where none will take him in!

3. The Nikolaitanes.

But though fallen from his first estate, the Star-Angel had one redeeming characteristic; namely, that he “hated the works of the Nikolaitanes, which,” says the Spirit, “I also hate.” The word, Nikolaitanes, is used in no other book of the scriptures than this symbolical one of the Apocalypse; and in this, it only occurs twice,—that is, in ch. 2:6, 15. In the former verse, “the works” of the Nikolaitanes; and in the latter, their “doctrine,” or teaching, is denounced. The word is a symbolical name, like Balaam and Jezebel, in the same chapter. In the original, it is Nikolaiton a word compounded of nikos victory, and laos people; and as a mystical name, signifies Vanquishers of the People. The class of men so designated, were the “grievous wolves” Paul predicted would stand up among the episcopals of the Presbyteries, and ravin upon the flock. These episcopal men, by their works, and by their teaching, would so bewitch, and deceive the people, as to get a complete ascendancy over them. They would persuade them at length, that they were “the ambassadors of Jesus Christ,” and the true “successors of the apostles;” and that it was to them henceforth professors should look for the consolations of religion, and for a true exposition of the sacred writings, which were too holy and too recondite to be interpreted by any save “the called and sent of God as Aaron was,” which they affirmed themselves to be! The people, not holding on to their “first love,” that they might be saved, and neglecting the study of the word for themselves, were easily beguiled by “the working of Satan with all power and signs, and lying wonders, and with all the deceivableness of unrighteousness,” brought to bear upon them. They surrendered themselves to their spiritual guidance, selling themselves to the clergy for their “philosophy and vain deceit”—Col. 2:8. “For this cause, the Deity sent upon them a strong delusion to their believing in a lie, that all might be condemned who believe not the truth, but have pleasure in the unrighteousness”—2 Thess. 2:9–12. Such was the transgression into which they were beguiled by Hymeneus, Philetus, Alexander, Phygellus, Hermogenes, Demas, Diotrephes, and other men of their stamp; and such is the punishment that came upon them to their exclusion from the kingdom of the Diety. The delusion waxed stronger and stronger, as centuries increased the distance from apostolic times, until now the human mind is so enchained by the clerical system of unrighteousness extant, that the truth has scarcely any influence at all.

But the Judaizers were not alone the perverters and vanquishers of the people. Another faction arose from among the Gentile element of the Star-Angels. This was composed of the “wolves” referred to in Paul’s first letter to Timothy, ch. 6:20, where he says to him, “O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane, vain babblings, and oppositions of Gnosis, or knowledge falsely so called; which some professing have erred concerning the faith.” These came to be called Gnostics because of their professing what they called Gnosis, or knowledge, a false science, whose principles were subversive of the truth. The same thing is styled in our day “theological science,” “divinity,” “ethics,” “hermeneutics,” and so forth; terms invented to amaze the ignorant, and to impress them with the necessity of schools and colleges for the indoctrination of pious youth in the mysteries they learnedly conceal. Now the principles of this ancient and modern Gnosis are subversive of the truth; for “some professing them,” says Paul, “have erred concerning the faith.” He refers to them again in his second letter, ch. 2:16, saying, “Shun profane, vain, babblings; for they will increase to more ungodliness. And their word will eat as a gangrene; of whom are Hymeneus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already, and overthrow the faith of some.”

These Gnostics were a sort of immersed philosophers—Gentile professors of “the wisdom” then current in the world among the admirers of Plato, and other heathen speculators upon the unknown. They had acquired a smattering in the truth, and had been immersed, and so “brought in unawares.” Having still a hankering after their old foolishness, and not relishing the mockery and persecution their new profession brought upon them from their old associates, they conceived the idea of so commingling the speculations, or fables, of heathenism with the doctrine of the apostles, as to make the compound palatable to the respectability and learning of the age. In this way, they conceived the offence of the cross of Christ would cease with the Gentiles, as it had done with the Jews by mixing up the Gospel with the law. Thus “the thinking of the flesh” set to work to elaborate a theology that would popularize Christianity, make it a respectable and fashionable profession, and acceptable to the learned world. And in this diabolical enterprize they succeeded but too well. Being of the world, they derived their inspiration from the feelings and imaginings of the flesh, from whatever it approved, and therefore “the world hears them”—it heard them then, and it hears them to this day. Their word has eaten gangrenously into the body, reducing it to a mass of wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores; which represents the existing condition of what is “falsely called” Christianity in the world.

The Gnostics commenced their department of the Nikolaitan University, with the dogma first enunciated by the Serpent in the Eden-Paradise. By this dogma the lie was given direct to the truth of God. The Spirit has declared, that man, without qualification, was dust; and that he should return to dust, if disobedient to the law of Him who created him; in other words, that “dying” he should “die.” But the Serpent, the most sagacious of all animals under man; and endowed with the faculty of speech to express the perceptions and reasonings of its observant brain; by which argumentation it might be proved, whether man would believe and obey the Eternal Spirit, rather than the sophistry of the flesh—the Serpent, I say, denied that death should be the consequence of disobedience. “Ye shall die no death,” said he; “Elohim knows that in the day of your eating from it your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as Elohim knowing of good and of evil. The Serpent had seen “Elohim” in Paradise; he had listened to their discourse with man; and was aware of the existence of “the Tree of the Lives in the midst of the Garden.” His brain being merely percipient, reasoning, and propensitive, and therefore utterly devoid of a moral sense, he spoke in harmony with its ratiocination. He had learned, that the Elohim had experienced evil as well as good; and that consequently their eyes had not been opened to evil: that the eating from the tree of knowledge would have a like effect upon the human eaters; and that, as to their dying any death at all, was quite out of the question, seeing that all they would have to do was to eat from the tree of their lives, which would prove an antidote to all mortal and corrupting tendencies, the other tree might possibly impart. Such was his speculation upon the premises before his mind. It was a speculation not entirely devoid of truth; for on eating their eyes were opened; they did become as Elohim; and they did know evil as well as good. This is proved by the testimony which says in Gen. 3:7, “the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked;” and in ch. 3:22, “Behold, said Yahweh Elohim, the man has become like one of US for to know good and evil; now therefore lest he put forth his hand, and take also from the Tree of Lives, and eat and live during the Olahm; therefore Yahweh Elohim sent him forth from the Garden of Eden.”

But this was an arrangement not provided for in the Serpent’s speculation. He did not imagine that they would be expelled from Paradise, and a guard be stationed at the life-imparting tree to prevent all access to it by every living thing. This appointment converted his speculation into a lie; and made him “a liar, and the father of a lie”—John 8:44. His assertion, then, lo-moth temuthun, “YE SHALL DIE NO DEATH,” was the first lie, which, when believed and acted upon, brought the believer under sentence of death. It was a Nikolaitane, or people-vanquishing principle, which tells the Deity that he lies; and that “the soul that sinneth shall” not “die;” and that “the wages of sin are” not “death.”

From the day of the first transgression to the time we are now writing, the Serpent’s Seed have taken their stand upon their old father’s principle, that the Eternal Spirit’s thinking and purposes are in accord with the feelings and imaginings of unenlightened flesh. Men are lying, unstable, and changeable creatures; and they think that God is such an one as themselves. But he denies this, and affirms that “in Him there is no variableness nor shadow of a turning.” They admit that he says “the soul that sinneth shall die;” but in all their reasonings maintain, in effect, that he does not mean what he says, but the very reverse—that when he uttered those words, he meant, “the body of the soul that sinneth shall die; but the soul itself, when disembodied, shall live for ever”—or, as their father the devil hath it, “It shall die no death.”

Dark-minded sinners of all orders of foolishness have been endeavoring, from the beginning, to satisfy themselves that this is true. Pagans, Catholics, Mohammedans, Papists, Protestants, and Jews, with all sorts of nondescript professors of pietism, declare it to be their conviction that every human being has within the body a divine and immortal entity, which is the real man that thinks and acts, and is either virtuous or wicked; that this man lives without a body from the time it ceases to breathe, and is buried; that this immortal man, having “shuffled off his mortal coil,” finds himself instantly in heaven’s bliss, or hell-torments; that he remains there ages without end; though upon this point they are not all agreed: some supposing that after being in bliss some few or many thousands of years, as it may happen, immortal men will come back to earth, and, in some way or other, be re clothed with their old grave-eaten mortalities, and then fly back again in all haste to reenter upon their skyanian bliss: and that the same process occurs with respect to the immortals in hell-torments; who, as Cain for example, having lived in fire and brimstone for five thousand years, more or less, are re clothed with their bodies, and straightway find themselves in a breathing body respiring the fumes and flames of burning brimstone. This class of sinners entangles itself, and encumbers its theory, with this body-snatching speculation, to save itself from a pointblank denial of a resurrection. But the subterfuge will avail nothing. The assertion that the immortal enjoys heaven’s bliss or heirs torments without a body for hundreds or thousands of years, effectually abolishes the body for ever; and makes the doctrine of its resurrection a gratuitous absurdity.

Others, more consistent in their foolishness, unhesitatingly reject all idea of disembodied immortals being brought back to earth to be re clothed with bodies fabricated out of the old dust. Their theory having disembodied them with a Shakespearian shuffle, dismisses them from earth for ever, which they annihilate at some convenient season in a conflagration of the universe itself!

But real Christianity has nothing whatever to do with all this trash, which, in the days of the apostles and many ages before, constituted “the wisdom of the world;” a prime element of which is the dogma, that the real man is in the body; and that he shall die no death at all. This dogma is commonly expressed by the phrase “the immortality of the soul”—the indispensable and vital principle of Nikolaitane theology.

Being bewitched by this pagan myth, the Gnostics were impelled to the assertion of many things utterly subversive of the gospel of Christ. The first thing they affirmed was that "the resurrection is past already." This was tantamount to saying that "there is no resurrection of dead ones"—1Cor. 15:12; 2 Tim. 2:18. Upon what ground could they affirm that "it is past?" By falling back upon the resurrection of the saints, who came out of their graves after Jesus rose—Matt. 27:52. This was a past resurrection, which was admitted by the deniers of a future one. But upon what principle could they deny a future resurrection? Either by affirming that when men died they perished, without exception, as the beasts; or that, having "immortal souls" in their bodies, which passed into heaven or hell instantaneously, the resurrection and a post-resurrectional judgment were unnecessary and superfluous. There is no other ground for the denial than these. They did not deny it upon the first assumption; because they believed in the salvation of men; not that they all perished as the beasts. They must, therefore, have based their denial upon the assumed immortality of something in the body the heathen called "the soul." Their argument was, "There is an immortal soul in the body which is the real man; when he puts off the body he goes to his reward beyond the skies, which is his judgment. Men are judged only once, therefore, being judged, there is no necessity for resurrection to judgment; consequently, we deny that there is hereafter any resurrection of the dead."

The next thing these Nikolaitanes were impelled by their gnosis to affirm was, that the real Son of the Deity was "the Immortal Soul" that tabernacled in the body, which body was nothing else than the son of Joseph and Mary, consequently, that the Son of the Deity had no real humanity. That it was the son of Joseph who died on the cross, was buried, and rose again, while the Son of God being immortal, did not, and could not, die upon the cross, but only appeared to die. Now this was tantamount to saying, that Jesus was not the Christ; because the Christ was to be both Son of Deity and Son of Man, in a special sense, at the same time; but they allowed that Jesus was no more than Son of Man, and therefore could not be the Christ promised in the prophets.

Some of the Gnostics, however, admitted that Jesus was really the Son of God; but then they nullified this admission by affirming that "He did not come in flesh." They would not allow that he had the same kind of flesh and blood, nor "in flesh," as we. They considered it a holy and immaculate appearance, entirely free from all the emotions and affections of our nature. The operation of this heresy upon the truth, was to destroy it, and to annihilate the hope of all that confided in it. For, if Jesus Anointed did not partake of our nature, but obtained, somehow or other, a pure physical organization, or was only "a similitude," such as Daniel beheld by Ulai, then Paul's testimony is untrue; for he has testified, that "forasmuch as the children (of the Deity) are partakers of flesh and blood, Jesus also himself likewise took part of the same;" and "in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren;" and "God sent his own Son in likeness of Sin's flesh, and for sin condemned the sin in the flesh"—Heb. 2:14, 17; Rom. 8:3; but if the principle of corruption had not pervaded the flesh of Jesus, or if he were not flesh, he could not have been tried in all points as we; nor could sin have been condemned there; nor could he have "borne our sins in his own body on the tree."

Thus the dogma of immortality inherent in Sin's flesh, impelled the Gnostics to a denial of the faith, and to the subverting of the souls of all who heeded them. They, in concert with the Ebionites, set up a Jesus and a Gospel which were totally at variance with "the faith once for all delivered to the saints" by the apostles. As a whole, it constituted the Nikolaitanism of the first century, and became the foundation of the kingdom of the Clergy, which, as the deadly upas, poisons every thing beneath its shade. Well might the Spirit say, "the works and doctrine of the Nikolaitanes I hate." They had "a form of godliness, but they denied its power." These were they "who crept into houses, and led captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts. Ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. And as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so did these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, of no judgment concerning the faith"—2 Tim. 3:8. They blended law, gospel, and heathen philosophy all together, in one indiscriminate hodge-podge, and called it “Christianity.” They founded schools, of which that at Alexandria in Egypt became the most notable, for the education of beardless youths in its mysteries, and from which went forth a multitude that filled the world with strife, debate, and bloodshed in the name of Christ, so that every succeeding century proved the truth of Paul’s words, that “evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.”

The heresies of the Nikolaitane Ebionites and Gnostics were the germ of what Paul terms “THE APOSTASY,” and John, “the Deceiver and THE ANTICHRIST.” “Many deceivers are entered into the world,” saith the latter, “who do not confess that Jesus Anointed is come in flesh. This is the deceiver and the Antichrist”—2 John 7. And again, “Every spirit that confesses not that Jesus Anointed came in flesh, is not from the Deity; and this is that of the Antichrist whereof ye have heard that it comes, and is now already in the world”—1 John 4:3. The spirit of a thing precedes the thing itself. First, the idea, and then its embodiment. The ideas of Nikolaitanism were its spirit. These were first conceived in the brains of corrupt and shallow men, who sought a present distinction and position in the world, at all hazards. Their ideas were perverse and perverting, and were spoken for the purpose of drawing away disciples after them. All who received their dogmata imbibed their spirit, and as they increased in number and influence among the people, became a power which continued to grow, until it was prepared to contend with older powers for the ascendancy, and in the struggle gain the victory. This has been the career of the Nikolaitane heresy. It began by affirming the insufficiency of the gospel without the law for salvation; affirming, also, the immortality of an inner man; and denying the proper humanity of Jesus; and it prevails as the ANTICHRISTIAN APOSTASY embodied in the Beasts, False Prophet, and appendices thereto belonging, as apocalyptically exhibited in the book in hand. If men had been faithful to the principle of “the gospel being the power of God for salvation to the believer”—Rom. 1:16, they would not have tried to commend themselves to the Deity by Mosaic observances in respect of sabbaths, meats, drinks, holy days, &c. If they had closed their ears against the dogma of an immortal man in the mortal body, they would not have denied the resurrection and the judgment taught in the scriptures; nor would they have believed in going to heaven when the body ceases to breathe; nor in purgatory; nor in wicked impostors, called priests, praying souls out of its flames for a fee, or retaining them in its fires for want of it; nor would they have worshipped the ghosts of dead men, they call saints. If some of them, while admitting that Jesus was flesh, had not affirmed the spotlessness of that flesh, “the immaculate conception of the Virgin” would not have been invented in order to account for it. All these old wives’ fables, and lying traditions, are embodied in the ecclesiastical institutions of the world. The Protestant abominations are all based upon immortal-soulism. With respect to this dogma, they are as pagan as Plato and the papists. Their superstitions are all Gnostic schemes to save a “soul” that has no existence, save in the imagination of the flesh. Their heaven and hell are as fabulous as purgatory, and the paradise of Mohammed. In short, “the Mother of Harlots and All the Abominations of the earth”—the Babylonish Jezebel of Rome, and all her Protestant and Sectarian progeny, are Nikolaitanism fully manifested—the plant of the first century become a tree in the midst of the earth, in whose boughs the fowls of the heaven rest, and by which all the beasts of the nations are sheltered and fed. “I hate it,” saith the Spirit. Then hew it down as a cumberer of the Ground! This is its coming fate.

4. “He that hath an Ear, let him hear!”

“He that hath an ear, let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias!” These words occur in each of the letters to the Seven Ecclesias. They are addressed to every one that hath an ear for the truth; to every one of “the servants of the Deity,” for whose instruction the Apocalypse was communicated. By hearing, or attending to what is spoken, as exhorted imperatively to do, they would be preserved from “grievous wolves,” “seducing spirits,” “demons,” and “deceivers,” with whom religious society abounded, as at this day; and their minds would be kept in lively expectation of the promises. Thus they would be “blessed,” and prepared to receive the blessings of the covenants.

These words seven times repeated, give us to understand, that what is said in each particular letter is not confined to the particular ecclesia addressed, but to all the ecclesias whose spiritual condition at a certain stage of apostasy was represented by that particular one. The promises made in all of them, are promises to all true believers of all ages and generations, who are members of the One Mystical Christ, styled by Paul, “the One Body.” The words are not “let him hear what the Spirit saith to the Star-Angel of the Ephesian ecclesia.” One might hear this and feel no personal interest in the matter. He might, say, that the promises beginning, “to him that overcomes,” imported, “to him of the particular Star-Angel addressed that overcomes, I will give;” but this restriction is excluded by the phrase “what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias;” showing that it is spoken to the saints in general.

Lastly, the text informs us, that what is spoken is uttered by the Spirit; and that the speaker is “he that holds the Seven Stars in his right hand.” Now, this holder of the Seven Stars is the same whose similitude John describes in the first chapter, where he styles it “like a Son of man.” The Eternal Spirit, or Theos, incipiently manifested in Jesus by the Effluent Logos; and hereafter to be manifested in that almighty multitude by the Son of Man, “saith,” through the Anointed Jesus, thus and so. In all these letters, then, we hear “what the Spirit saith,” who gave the apocalypse to the Anointed Jesus to exhibit to his servants things which must come to pass speedily.

5. “To Him that Overcomes.”

“To him that overcomes,” saith the Spirit, “to him will I give to eat from the Wood of the Life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of the Deity.” “Whosoever,” says John, “is begotten of the Deity overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcomes the world—our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of the Deity”—1 Jno. 5:4. No other class of persons can gain this victory but such; nevertheless, there were many who professed to believe that “Jesus is the Son of God,” who did not overcome the beguiling influence of the world, “which is not of the Father;” but made up of “the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life”—1 Jno. 2:16. The Nikolaitanes professed to believe that Jesus is the Son of God, in a sense of their own; but their “faith” did not incite them to a contest with the world, nor strengthen them in conflict for its subjugation. Many, however, did overcome the world. The apostles overcame it, and all who adhered to their teaching. Their conquest was evinced by their “denying themselves of all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously, and godly, en to nun aioni, in the present course of things; looking for that blessed hope, even the appearance of the glory of our great Deity and Saviour, Jesus Anointed; who gave himself for us, that he might ransom us from all lawlessness, and purify for himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works”—Tit. 2:12. They set their mind upon the things which are higher than the things on earth; and no efforts the world could bring to bear against them, could turn them aside from the hope of the calling. They knew in whom they believed; and that “their life was hid with the Anointed in the Deity; and that when the Anointed One, their life, should be manifested, then they also would appear with him in glory”—Cor. 3:2–4.

How unlike modern professors of faith in the Divine Sonship of Jesus were these! Instead of such modern professors overcoming the world by faith, the world has overcome them in subjecting them to its lusts. What are called “the churches” are made up of devotees to “the lusts of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life” from the martext in the pulpit to the sexton at the door. “The Church” has become “World;” and between the two, consequently, there is peace and amity. “Love not the world, neither the things in the world,” says John; “for if any one love the world, the love of the Father is not in him”—1 Jno. 2:15: for “the friendship of the world is enmity against the Deity; whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God”—James 4:4. From these premises it is clear, that the clergy and their “churches” of all their “Names and Denominations,” are “the enemies of God.” They neither believe his promises, nor obey his will. They are all “miserable sinners” self-confessed; and while they glory in the honor mutually bestowed, they are regardless of the honor that comes “from God only.” Therefore they do not, and cannot, believe—Jno. 5:44 Hence, none of the promises of the apocalypse are for them. Their portion is in the terrible threatenings of the book; whose judgments are for the destruction of the Kingdom of the Clergy, and the emancipation of “christendom” from their superstitions and misrule.

6. “The Wood of the Life.”

To him, then, who “believes the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Anointed;” and has therefore been immersed (Acts 8:12) and thenceforth, “by a patient continuance in well doing, seeks for glory, and honor, and incorruptibility (Rom. 2:7): and thus overcomes the world—“to him,” saith the Spirit, “I will give to eat from the Wood of the Life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of the Deity.”

The reader will perceive that I have here rendered ek tou xulou tes zoes, which, in the English version, is expressed by the phrase “of the Tree of Life,” by the words from the Wood of the Life. This is not a departure from the common form for the sake of singularity, as the following remarks will show.

In the Apocalypse there are two Greek words, as xulon and dendron, which are both rendered tree in the English version, but incorrectly, as I believe. I cannot suppose, that the Spirit selected these two different words to express exactly the same idea; but the rather, because there was a distinction of ideas, which required different words to convey it. To translate xulon by “tree,” involves one in a difficulty respecting Rev. 22:2, from which there is no satisfactory extrication. This passage reads thus, “In the midst of her broad place and on this side and that side of the river a Xulon of life, bearing twelve fruits,” etc. Now, if xulon be rendered “tree,” the difficulty is, how can a tree be at one and the same time on both sides of a river? The difficulty, however, vanishes by rendering xulon by the word wood. A wood may be “on this side and the other” of a river, and yet be one wood; a singular of plurality, which harmonizes with the structure of other apocalyptic symbols, which are formed upon the principle of many in one; as, many sons of men in One Son of man; many emperors in One Head of the Beast; many popes in One False Prophet; and many dendra, or trees, in One xulon, or Wood.

The word dendron, “a tree,” occurs in Rev. 7:1, 3; 8:7; 9:4, and is so rendered there correctly enough; but in Rev. 2:7; 22:2, 14, “tree,” in the English Version, is xulon in the Greek; and in ch. 18:12, it is also xulon twice, but in both instances rendered wood, as “thyine wood” and “precious wood.”

We may here remark that while dendron, in the singular, only represents one tree, the word xulon, in the singular, may represent a plurality; as “they made their feet fast in the stocks”—“eis to xulon.” In short, the matter of all trees is used symbolically for any number of individual trees—one material, or xulon, typical of a whole forest, or aggregation of dendra.

The idea of plurality in connection with what is commonly styled “the Tree of Life,” is first suggested in Gen. 2:9, where it is styled by Moses, aitz ha-chayim, A TREE OF THE LIVES. In this phrase, the tree is the type of the lives, and though single represents plurality. It was in the midst of Eden’s garden, and would have imparted life for the Olahm had Adam and Eve, the representatives of the whole family of man, been permitted to take of the fruit of the tree and eat thereof. But they were excluded on account of disobedience; and the eating of a tree of life was set before the race as a thing to be attained consequent upon obedience to the commands of God.

This tree in the Mosaic Paradise was allegorical of the wood in the apocalyptic. The original phrase here suffers a sort of transposition Lives is changed into life, and tree into wood; that is, the idea of plurality is found in the wood, and the oneness in the life. Thus, the Spirit in Jesus said, “I am the life;” “I am the Vine, and ye (my apostles) are the branches.” Here was a tree consisting of fourteen living persons, all animated by one and the same life-principle; namely, the Spirit, Jesus, and the Twelve Apostles. Now let this idea be extended so as to embrace “the multitude which no man can number”—all IN Jesus Anointed—and we have a tree, which in the beginning was “as a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and planted in his garden, and it grew and waxed a great tree, and the fowls of the air came and lodged in the branches of it” (Luke 13:18)—a tree, which with its leathered songsters of the aerial, is apocalyptically symbolized by a Wood of trees in the Garden, or Paradise of the Deity. As Jesus anointed with holy spirit was a vine-tree, so are all his brethren trees also. Speaking of the man who delights in the instruction of Yahweh, the Spirit in David says, “He shall be as a tree planted by the channels of waters, which shall yield its fruit in its season, and its leaf shall not fade; and whatsoever he shall work shall prosper.” This is a perennial tree which lives for ever; for “its leaf shall not fade;” which is affirmable only of a tree incapable of decay.

The Spirit also in Isaiah, speaking of the same class, informs us, that Messiah’s mission is, among other things, “to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness, that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of Yahweh, that he might be glorified”—ch. 61:3.

“As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons”—Cant. 2:3. In this, the Messiah is likened to an apple tree, and his brethren, the Sons of Deity, to “the trees of the wood.”

“To him that overcomes, saith the Spirit, I will give to eat from the wood of life.” A man’s victory over the world is not complete so long as he is engaged in the conflict of life. In this state of existence, then, a man does not eat from the wood of the life promised; he is, therefore, in no sense immortal. The promise of life is, that we shall have it when the victory is won. “I will give to him to eat,” points us to the future. We must first appear before the throne by resurrection, to learn whether we are accounted worthy of the life; and then, if the verdict be in our favor, we shall be permitted to eat; otherwise, not. “I will give to eat.” Mastication, deglutition, and assimilation, constitute the whole process of eating, which is the conversion of food into blood, which is the life. But the life of the saints in the Millennial Aion is not blood; for “flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God;” for it is corruptible, and the kingdom of God is indestructible, and not to be left to a succession; hence, “corruption cannot inherit incorruption.” Their life in that Aion is holy spirit. When this is poured out upon their bodies, posterior to their resurrection, it assimilates to itself, “in the twinkling of an eye,” all the particles of their flesh and bones; and they become transformed into incorruptible, deathless, and glorious bodies, according to Paul’s testimony, who says, “the Lord Jesus Anointed, shall change the nature of the body of our humiliation, that it may become of like form with the body of his glory, by the inworking of what enables him also to subdue all things to himself”—Phil. 3:21, —that is, of the Spirit. This inworking, by which the nature of the resurrected body is changed, so as that it becomes a spirit-body, or spirit, is the giving to eat of the wood of life. When the victor has thus eaten he becomes an element of the wood, whose leaf shall never fade, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.

7. “The Paradise of the Deity.”

The wood of the formative spirit-life is to stand “in the midst of the Paradise of the Deity.” This word paradise is merely a transfer from one language to another,—that is, it is not translated. It is originally, a Persian word, transferred from that tongue to the Hebrew; and from the Hebrew to the Greek; and from the Greek to the English. In the Perso-Hebraic form it is pardais, and occurs in Nehem. 2:8, where one Asaph is designated as “the keeper of the pardais which belongs to the king” of Persia; that is, a pardais in Palestine, from which the king authorized Nehemiah to take “timber to make beams for the gates of the palace,” and so forth. It is evident, from this, that a pardais was a tract of land containing trees, from which timber might be hewn. In the English version it is translated by the word “forest.”

This word occurs in two other places of the scriptures; first, in Eccl. 2:5. Here Solomon says, “I made for myself gardens, and pardaisim, and I planted trees in them of all fruits; I made me pools of waters for to irrigate with these the wood, making the trees to grow.” In the English version, pardaisim is rendered “orchards.” From this text it is easy to perceive what pardaisim were understood to be in Solomon’s time. They were tracts of land planted with all kinds of fruit trees, and irrigated with streams of water, to make the trees productive.

The third place where the word occurs is in Cant. 4:13. The passage reads thus, “A garden enclosed is my sister bride, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed. Thy sprouts are a pardais of pomegranate trees, with fruits of most pleasant ones; cyprus-flowers with spikenards. Spikenard and saffron, calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense; myrrh and aloes, with all the chief of the spices; a fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, and streams from Lebanon.” The literal of this exhibits a pardais as a very beautiful enclosure, and illustrates the sort of garden our first parents were placed in at the beginning. Speaking of this, Moses says, “Yahweh Elohim planted a garden in Eden of the East. And Yahweh Elohim made to grow out of the ground every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food; and a Tree of the Lives in the midst of the garden, and a Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil. And a river went out of Eden for to water the garden; and from thence it was divided, and became into four heads. The name of the first Pishon; that encompassing the whole region of Havilah, where there is gold; and the gold of that region is good: there is the pearl and stone of the onyx. And the name of the second river Gihon; that encompassing the whole region of Khush. And the name of the third river Hiddekel; that flowing eastward of Asshur. And the fourth river the Euphrates”—Gen. 2:8.

From these examples we may know what the Hebrews understood by a pardais, namely, a tract of land well watered, and abounding with choice trees, pleasant to the eyes, and yielding luscious fruits, and fragrant flowers; and rich in gold, and pearls, and precious stones. The Greeks called the Hebrew and Persian pardais by the word paradeisos, which has been transferred into our language, and anglicised by changing eisos into ise, and so making paradise.

The Hebrews were instructed out of the law and the prophets. Hence, all the truth they believed was in harmony with these writings, while all their errors obtained place in their minds by adopting the speculations of the heathen, and thinking after their own vain conceits, as Jews and Gentiles do at this day. Corrupted as they were by myths and traditions, they never imagined paradise to be the grave, or sheol, or hades, or some ethereal region “beyond the solar system,” or in the skies! It remained for the reverend and learned dunces of the Nikolaitan Apostasy to proclaim this marvellous absurdity. The Jews knew what paradise signified, for they were taught it in glowing terms by many of the prophets.

Instructed by these, they knew that the area of Paradise belonged to the country styled “Eden.” When Moses wrote the passage quoted above, he was westward in “the wilderness of the land of Egypt.” He says, “Yahweh-Elohim planted a garden in Eden of the East.” This region was so named because of the delightful and pleasant character of the land and climate, from !ך]

Eden, “delight, pleasure.” Eden was a part of the East, as Ohio is a part of the West. It was quite an extensive range of country, and in after times became the seat of powerful dominions. It appears to have been well watered by the tributaries to “a fiver that flowed out of Eden.” These were four principal streams—the Choaspes, the Gyndes, the Hiddekel, and Euphrates; of which the Hiddekel, or Tigris, and the Euphrates, are well known. The Hiddekel, Moses says, “is eastward of Asshur;” that is, eastward of Nimrod’s original settlements between the Tigris and Euphrates. The Choaspes, or Pishon, flows down from Media; and the Gyndes, or Gihon, is the river of Khushistan. These four rivers water the Eden of the East; and flowing out of it in a confluence of waters, empty themselves at length into the Persian Gulph.

This country, in after ages, came to be denominated “the Garden of Yahweh;” and the Powers reigning in it, “the Trees of Eden.” It came, doubtless, to be styled Yahweh’s Garden, as a whole, from the fact of his having in the beginning planted a garden in it for Adam and Eve; so that the name of a small part of Eden came to be applied by his family, in the time of Abraham and his posterity, to the whole region; more especially as the prophets of their race testify that the future paradise is to occupy a considerable portion of its ancient limits.

That the Holy Land is a part of the Eden of the East, appears from certain prophecies of Ezekiel. In setting forth the certainty of the overthrow of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, by the king of Babylon, the Spirit recapitulates the power and dominion of the Ninevite dynasty of Assyria; which, however, was not able to withstand the king of Babylon, “the mighty one of the heathen;” and, therefore, there was no hope for Egypt of a successful resistance. In the recapitulation, the Ninevite Assyrian is styled “a cedar in Lebanon;” that is, his dominion extended over the land of the Ten Tribes of Israel, in which are the cedar-crowned mountains of Lebanon. After describing the greatness of his power by the magnitude of the cedar, the Spirit saith, “the cedars in the Garden of Elohim could not hide him; nor was any tree in the Garden of Elohim like to him in his beauty. I made him fair by the multitude of his branches; so that all the trees of Eden in the Garden of the Elohim envied him”—ch. 31:3, 8, 9. These trees were the royalties of Mesopotamia, Syria, Israel, and so forth, which the kings of Assyria had abolished (Isai. 37:11–13), and which “could not hide him,” or prevent him getting the ascendancy over them. It is clear, then, from the terms of this beautiful allegory, that the countries I have indicated were parts of the Eden of the East; that as a whole it is styled the Garden of the Elohim; and that the trees are the royalties of the land.

That Eden extended to the Mediterranean, or “Great Sea,” appears from Ezekiel’s prophecy against Tyre. Addressing this Power, he says, “Thou hast been in Eden a Garden of Elohim. Thou hast been upon the holy mountain of Elohim. Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day thou wast created till iniquity was found in thee. Therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of Elohim. Thou shalt be a terror, and nothing of thee during the olahm”—28:13–19. The meaning of this is obvious to one acquainted with the history of the kingdom of Tyre. It was a royalty of Palestine in Upper Galilee, whose king, Hiram, was in intimate alliance with Solomon. He appears to have been a proselyte of Judaism, which his successors sometime afterwards abandoned; and therefore Yahweh Tz’vaoth suppressed the kingdom of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar for seventy years; and for the rest of the olahm, by the Greeks.

Eden has been a field of blood from the beginning of the contest between the “Seed of the Woman,” and the “Seed of the Serpent,” until now; and will yet continue to be until the Serpent Power be broken upon the mountains of Israel. It was in Eden that Abel died by the hand of Cain. There also Abel’s antitype was wounded in the heel when “he was made a curse for his brethren” by hanging upon a tree—Gal. 3:13; and lastly, to fill up the measure of the iniquity of the blood-defiled land, the serpents of Israel slew the son of Barachus between the temple and the altar. But the blood of the saints shed in Eden did not cry to him in vain for vengeance; for as the Lord Jesus predicted, so it came to pass. “Behold,” said he, to that generation of vipers, “I send you prophets, and wise men, and scribes; and some of them ye will kill and crucify; and some of them ye will scourge in your synagogues, and persecute from city to city; that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the land, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zecharias, son of Barachus, whom ye will slay between the temple and the altar”—Mat. 18:35.

The Holy Land, Syria, Mesopotamia, and Assyria Proper, are manifestly countries of Eden. But in the beginning, Eden contained a Garden, pardais or PARADISE; so also in the beginning of the Millennial Aion, the same Eden will rejoice in a paradise adapted to the necessities and enjoyment, not of two persons only, but of “a great multitude which no man can number”—Rev. 7:9. Adam and Eve’s paradise was upon a small scale, yet ample enough for them. From its Mosaic geography no other locality, I believe, can be reasonably assigned to it than between the Gulph of Persia and the confluence of the four rivers named. The text reads, “and a river went out of Eden to water the Garden: and from thence it was divided, and became into four heads.” This I understand to mean, that a river, formed by the confluence of four others flowing out of Eden, was caused to water the garden on its way to the sea; and that, tracing this river northward from the garden, it diverged into its tributaries which terminated in four several heads. The heads were not in the garden, but at remote distances from it; therefore, they err who locate Adam’s paradise at the heads, or original sources, of the Tigris and Euphrates in the mountains of Armenia. A warmer climate was necessary for the comfortable existence of two naked persons. The heads, I say, were not in the garden, for it was watered by one only; as it is written, “a river went out to water it,” which certainly excludes the four from its inclosure.

From subsequent developments in the history of their posterity, the Babylonian region of Eden was a very appropriate locality for the origination of “sin, which is the transgression of law.” In the Adamic Paradise was laid the foundation of that gigantic system of iniquity, which is styled, apocalyptically, “Mystery, BABYLON THE GREAT, the Mother of Harlots, and Abominations of the Earth.” The principle, which may be termed, “the vital principle,” of this “mystery,” is disobedience. Adam’s paradise was the birthplace of this principle, and at once the arena of the Serpent’s victory and defeat.

The individual serpent prevailed, and was cursed in the paradise of the first Adam; so also he has prevailed, and is destined to be bruised in the paradise of the Second. The serpent principles, embodied in the Power symbolized by the Goat and his Five Horns (Dan. 8:8, 9), have thus far prevailed. The Power has desolated the Holy Land, and made it a field of blood. But this fair portion of Eden is not always to lie in ruins under the serpent-dominion; for the sentence is, “Thy Head, O Serpent, the Woman’s Seed shall bruise:” the dominion will therefore be destroyed, and the Holy Land in Eden of the East be delivered from the enemy.

That the Holy Land is to become the Paradise of the Deity is manifest from the following testimonies, which, every one acquainted with the history of Eden, in whole, or in part, knows have never yet been accomplished. Thus the Spirit saith, “Thy land, O Zion, shall no more be termed ‘Desolate;’ but thou shalt be called Hephzibah (that is, My Beloved is in her), and thy land Beulah (that is, Married): for Yahweh delighteth in thee, and thy Land shall be married. For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thine Elohim rejoice over thee”—Isa. 62:4, 5. Here Zion and the Holy Land are represented as a Virgin-Bride; and the Elohim, or Messiah, and his brethren in their One Spirit-Body manifestation, as the Bridegroom. This Virgin-Bride and her Bridegroom are the loving couple, whose loves are celebrated by Solomon in his “Song of Songs.” The land, in its paradisaic development, is typified in his “garden enclosed,” and which, as king, he styles, “my sister spouse,” as already quoted. This is the literal, which is also allegorical of something more recondite, as hereafter will be shown. At present we have to do chiefly with the geo-material aspects of the subject.

When the marriage, or union, between the Sons of Zion and their King, as the Bridegroom, and the Holy Land as the virgin-bride, comes to pass, the country will become the Paradise of Yahweh, which his own right hand planted. Thus, the Spirit saith, “Yahweh shall comfort Zion; he will comfort all her waste places, and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the Garden of Yahweh; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody”—Isa. 51:3. “Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to Yahweh for a renown, for a memorial of the Olahm, which shall not be cut off”—Isa. 55:13. At that time, “I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys; I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water; I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrtle tree, and the oil tree; I will set in the desert the fir tree, and the pine, and the box together, that they (Israel) may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of Yahweh hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it”—Isa. 41:17–20.

Lastly upon this point Ezekiel’s testimony may be adduced; as, “Thus saith Adonai Yahweh; in the day that I shall have cleansed you, O Israel, from all your iniquities, I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded. And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the Garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities fenced, and inhabited. Then the nations that are left round about you shall know that I, Yahweh, build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate: I, Yahweh, have spoken it, and I will do it”—Ezek. 36:33.

When thus converted into Paradise, the same prophet tells us that there will be “a river that can not be passed over” by wading; and that it will be formed by a confluence of “waters springing out from under the threshold of the temple eastward, from it’s right side, at the south of the altar”—ch. 47:1–5.

He then informs us that “on the bank of the river was a great wood, רַב # aitz rav, (both words in the singular number) on the one side and on the other. The waters issue from Mount Moriah down its south side, and flow on toward the east through a vast cleft in the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:4, 8.) When they have passed this valley they divide into two rivers, the one flowing through the desert and emptying into the Dead Sea; and the other into the Mediterranean: both of them abundant and never failing streams.

The effect of the eastern river upon the Dead Sea will be to heal its waters. Both streams are healing waters; for the prophet says, that “It shall be, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the two rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither; for they (of the Dead Sea) shall be healed; and every thing shall live whither the river cometh. And it shall be, that the fishers shall stand upon it from Engeddi even unto Eneglaim; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the Great Sea (or Mediterranean) exceeding many.

“And by the river on the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall come up every tree for food, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be exhausted; for its months it shall yield, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary: and the fruit thereof shall be for food, and the leaf thereof for healing.”

After these statements, the Spirit then proceeds to point out the boundaries of Paradise. He commences the line from the Mediterranean at the outlet of the Orontes, called “the entering into Hamath,” and passes on in a direct course of one hundred and thirty-three miles to Berothah upon the Euphrates. This is marked out as the natural boundary on the north by the range of mountains, called Amanus, which, as a natural barrier, extends across the country from the Great Mediterranean sea to Berothah; to which the Euphrates is navigable from the Persian Gulph. When Messiah is enthroned king of the land, and proceeds to take possession of it to its utmost limits, he will then say to his companions, “Come with me from Lebanon, my Spouse, with me from Lebanon: look from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon, from the lion’s dens, from the mountains of the leopards”—Cant. 4:8.

Taking up their position upon that commanding border, the Sons of Zion may view the landscape of a goodly and glorious land, fragrant of rich odors, and flowing with milk and honey, outstretching eastward in all the length of Euphrates to the East Sea. This is its border on the east. From the junction of the Euphrates with the Persian Gulph in lat. 30°, the frontier is drawn “from Tamar to Meribah of Kadesh, to the river towards the Great (or Mediterranean) Sea.” This is the south border of Paradise; a line of over a thousand miles abutting upon the Nile, and thence to the sea; and affording free access to the Red Sea by the Elanitic Gulph. The boundary on the west “shall be the Great Sea from the border (south) till a man come over against (the entering in to) Hamath.”

Thus we have an ample area; containing by estimation three hundred thousand square miles, for the length and “breadth of Immanuel’s land,” extending, as covenanted to Abraham and his Seed, “from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates, for a possession in the Olahm”—Gen. 15:18.

Such is the territorial paradise or kingdom of the Deity; which all the prophets testify shall be inhabited by the Twelve Tribes of Israel, and their nobles, all of them Priests and Kings with Messiah preeminent in all things over all. The twelve tribes will have had a new heart given them, and a new spirit put within them, by the refining process they will have been previously subjected to. Their present stony heart will have been abolished, and a heart of flesh substituted in its stead, as it is testified in Ezek. 36:25–32. Then, for the first time since their revolt from the house of David in the days of his grandson Rehoboam, they will again become “one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all.” They will then rejoice in Jesus of Nazareth, as High Priest upon the throne of his father David after the order of Melchizedec for the “season and a time,” or Olahm of a thousand years. The former troubles will all be forgotten; and they will “no more be made a reproach among the nations”—Joel 2:19.

Under this new and glorious constitution of the Hebrew Kingdom, the tribes will be settled in Paradise in parallel cantonments, extending across the country from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates. Dan’s canton is the first reckoning from the north border. Then Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, and Judah. This brings us down to “the midst of the Paradise of the Diety.” South of Judah is the Foursquare Oblation, “a holy portion of the land,” containing “the sanctuary, the Most Holy;” the holy portion for the Levites; and the “Profane Place for the City, for dwelling, and for suburbs. On the east and west is the Prince’s portion, the foursquare oblation being in his portion, and bounded north by the canton of Judah and south by that of Benjamin. Thus, “Yahweh shall inherit in the (canton) of Judah his portion upon the land of holiness, and shall delight in Jerusalem again”—Zech. 2:12.—the Holy Oblation and Prince’s portion being thus reckoned of the canton of Judah.

The Holy Oblation is to contain the Millennial Temple described by Ezekiel, which is to be in the midst of the Most Holy Portion of the Oblation, “upon the top of the mountain, the whole limit whereof is Most Holy”—ch. 43:12. The details are given in ch. 45:1–8, which concludes with the remark, that “in the land shall be his (Messiah the Prince’s) possession in Israel: and my princes (who will then be the saints) shall no more oppress my people: and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel according to their tribes.”

The City, which will be square, will be 4,500 measures on each side, or 18,000 in circumference. Its twelve gates will open into suburbs of 250 measures broad; and to the east and west there will be areas of 10,000 measures each, making altogether “a profane place” of 25,000 measures from east to west, by 5,000 from north to south, which “shall be for the whole house of Israel:” and “the name of the city from that day shall be Yahweh-Shammah,” because “He who shall be is there.”

Next to the Holy Oblation a portion is allotted to Benjamin, and successively afterwards to Simeon, Issachar, Zebulon, and Gad, which is the most southerly of all the tribes. Such is the area of Paradise from north to south, and from east to west, a royal domain larger than that of any kingdom or empire of Europe, Russia alone excepted. It exceeds in the aggregate amount of square miles, the territories of ten kingdoms of Europe, as Prussia, Belgium, the Netherlands, Bavaria, Saxony, Hanover, Wirtemberg, Denmark, Sardinia, and Greece; and its relative proportion to Great Britain and Ireland is 300 to 118, or more than two and a half to one.

The situation of Paradise is peculiar in relation to its borders. The Mediterranean, the Red Sea, and the Persian Gulph, form on the west, the south, and the east, borders of a land which, but for these inland seas, would be wholly encircled by Asia, Africa, and Europe, and shut out from all direct communication with the Pacific and Atlantic, and lesser oceans of the globe. The river of Egypt to the Mediterranean, and that sea from the mouth of the Nile to the estuary of the Orontes, and the Euphrates from the foot of Amanus to the Persian Gulph, leave not the smallest portion of the west side, or of the side, that is not actually or virtually a navigable coast to the extent on both sides of two thousand miles; while on the north, the intermediate barrier of Amanus, at the breadth of less than one hundred, renders the land “a Garden Enclosed.” No country could be better situated for the establishment of a kingdom whose sovereignty is destined to rule all nations, peoples, and tribes, inhabiting the land and sea to their utmost bounds.

Such, then, are the geographical and the literal of the Paradise of Deity. It belongs to the earth, and is as real, visible, and actual a region, as Britain or America. The literal Paradise, however, differs from these in that its literality is also symbolical and allegorical of things pertaining to that great incorporation of the citizens of the commonwealth of Israel, styled by Daniel and other sacred writers, “the Saints.” Thus its literal river is symbolical of the spirit to be received from the throne, and through the altar Jesus, by the trees of righteousness that come out of the earth by resurrection. Ezekiel’s river is therefore placed among the apocalyptic symbols of Rev. 22:1. So also, his aitz rav, or GREAT WOOD, on both sides of his river, is adopted as a symbol by the Spirit in the same chapter, and there styled “the xulon on this side and that side of the river of water of life,” and representative of the aggregate of the saints, each saint being an element of the wood. The leaf of the Ezekiel wood is for healing; as an apocalyptic symbol it is representative of the saints, who are leaves as well as trees of the xulon of life, through whom the Spirit breathes “for the healing of the nations,” symbolized by the waters of the Dead Sea.

To eat of the wood of the life in the midst of the Paradise of the Deity is to be an unfading leaf—an immortal possessor of the glory, honor, and incorruptibility of the kingdom, which the God of heaven shall set up in the Holy Land. It is to be one of the priests of the Most Holy Portion of the Holy Oblation, to whom it shall be said by the King, “Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the State”—Matt. 25:34.

SECTION 2.

TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA OF THE SMYRNEANS.

“AND TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA OF THE SMYRNEANS WRITE: THESE THINGS SAITH THE FIRST AND THE LAST, WHO WAS DEAD AND LIVED: I HAVE KNOWN THY WORKS, AND THE TRIBULATION, AND THE POVERTY, THOUGH THOU ART RICH; AND THE BLASPHEMY OF THOSE WHO SAY, THAT THEY THEMSELVES ARE JEWS, AND ARE NOT, BUT A SYNAGOGUE OF THE SATAN.

“Fear not the things which thou shalt suffer. Behold the Diabolos will cast of you into prison, that ye may be tempted; and ye will have a tribulation of ten days. Be faithful until death, and I will give to thee the coronal wreath of the life.

“He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias: he who overcomes shall not be injured by the Second Death”—verses 8–11.

SMYRNA is a city of Ionia, in Asia Minor, situated on the Archipelago, and having a fine harbor. It is still a place of great consideration, having a large foreign trade, and a population of about 140,000. The present city is on lower ground than the ancient one, and lies about forty-five miles northward of Ephesus. It is called Esmir by the Turks, and is celebrated not so much for the splendor and pomp of the buildings, which are rather mean and ruinous, as for the number, and wealth, and commerce of the place. The Turks have here fifteen mosques, and the Jews several synagogues. "Among these enemies of the Christian name," says Bishop Newton, "the Christian religion also flourishes in some degree!" But this is a great mistake. His episcopal lordship mistakes the Nikolaitan Apostasy, of which his own communion is an influential part, for the Christian religion. The religion of the Bible has long since been exterminated from Smyrna, and nothing remains there now but "the abominations of the earth." Smyrna still retains an ecclesiastical preeminence, being a metropolitan see of the Greek church, which has two congregations. But besides these, there is a great number of Nikolaitans of all nations, sects, and languages. The Latins have a monastery of Franciscans. The Armenians have a church. But the English, who are the most considerable number, are said to have only a chapel in the consul's house. Frequent plagues and earthquakes are the great calamities of the place.

We have no special notice of Smyrna in any other book than the Apocalypse. The gospel was most probably introduced to the notice of the Smyrneans by Paul during his three years' residence in Ephesus. Though not much noticed in the scriptures, it appears to have been a conspicuous congregation in the middle of the second century, through its connection with Polycarp, a member of its Star-Angel, who was burnt at the stake, because he would not call Caesar "Lord," and sacrifice to his divinity. This occurred about A.D. 167, some seventy years after the Apocalypse was revealed.

Ignatius, who had been an episcopal in the Star-Angel of the ecclesia at Antioch for thirty-seven years, twenty-six years of which he was officially contemporary with the apostle John, came to Smyrna on his way to Rome A.D. 107, whither he was sent by order of Trajan, "to be thrown to the wild beasts for the entertainment of the people." While at Smyrna he wrote a letter to the Ephesian ecclesia, in which he says, "Onesimus exceedingly commends your godly order; and that you live according to truth, and that no heresy dwells with you." The thing referred to as "heresy" at that crisis, was Nikolaitanism. Hence the words of Ignatius are equivalent to saying, that Onesimus testified that "no Nikolaitanism dwelt with them." It had not then as yet got into the Ephesian ecclesia, as the Spirit testified some eleven years previous, saying, "thou hatest the deeds of the Nikolaitans, which I also hate."

But in the same letter he says, "Some indeed with much ostentation, make specious but fallacious pretensions, whose works are unworthy of God, whom you ought to avoid as wild beasts. For they are raging dogs, biting in secret, whom you should shun, as being persons very difficult to be cured. One physician there is, bodily and spiritual, begotten and unbegotten, Deity appearing in flesh, in immortal true life, both from Mary and from Deity—first suffering, afterwards impassible." These "raging dogs," alluded to by Ignatius, were the "wicked men," and "those who said they were apostles, and are not," referred to by the Spirit. The Ephesians "could not bear them;" and on examining their "specious but fallacious pretensions," as Ignatius terms them, "found them liars." It appears from this letter, that some of these pretenders to apostleship, and teachers of Nikolaitanism, went to Ephesus from Smyrna: "I have known," says he, "some who went from this place, whom you did not suffer to sow tares among you: you stopped your ears, so that you should not receive their seed, as being stones of the temple of your Father." "Without Christ think nothing becoming; in whom may I be found at the resurrection through your prayer, that my lot may be cast among the Ephesian Christians, who have always (to A.D. 107) harmonized with the Apostles in the power of Jesus Christ!"

"Ye are partakers of the mysteries with Paul the holy, the renowned, the blessed, whose footsteps may I follow!" "Neglect not assemblies for thanksgiving and prayer: for when you assiduously attend to these things, the powers of Satan are demolished, and his pernicious kingdom is dissolved by the unanimity of your faith.” “Remember me, as Jesus Christ also does you,” as evinced by the apocalyptic epistle. “Pray for the ecclesia in Syria, whence I am led bound to Rome—the meanest of the faithful who are there.”

In regard to “the Angel of the Smyranean ecclesia,” the exposition already before the reader, in relation to the Seven Stars, and the Angel of the Ephesian congregation, makes any further remark unnecessary. The Spirit, in his exordium, does not repeat what he said to the Ephesian Star, but selects another characteristic of the Son of Man similitude. “These things (that follow), saith the First and the Last, who was dead, and lived.” Jesus, when anointed with holy spirit and power, after resurrection, is styled by Paul, “the Lord the Spirit;” and “the Last Adam was made into a Life-imparting Spirit;” for, as Jesus said, when in the flesh, “that which has been begotten out of the Spirit, is spirit”—2 Cor. 3:18; 15:45; Jno. 3:6. Upon this principle, the Spirit says, “I was dead.” that element of the Spirit-speaker, who had become spirit, died; therefore, the become-Spirit could say, “I was dead.” Thus, “the First” was dead, and lived by resurrection; and when all the Saints shall have been begotten out of the same Spirit, and so also have become spirit, the Spirit-speaker will have a still larger element of the once-dead, and lived, constituting him who spake to John in Patmos, “the Last,” or “the Last Ones,” according to Isaiah.

Such is the divine speaker who testifies to the excellency of the Smyranean believers, A.D. 98, or thereabouts. Though in tribulation and poverty, the Spirit said, “Thou art rich.” They were, therefore, the type of the approved; for no evil is laid to their charge. They were a congregation of such believers as James says, God has chosen; and he was a very competent judge in the case. “Hearken, my beloved brethren,” saith he, “hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of that kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him?” And as to “the tribulation,” Paul says, “it is through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom of God”—Acts 14:22. “Blessed the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of the heavens. Blessed they that mourn, for they shall be comforted. Blessed the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed they which are persecuted, for theirs is the kingdom of the heavens”—Matt. 5:3–10. These were “the consolations of religion,” imparted in the instruction of Jesus and the apostles. The Spirit anointed them to preach the gospel of the kingdom to “the poor in spirit,” or, as Isaiah styles them, “the meek;” to honest and good-hearted people of childlike disposition—Isa. 61:1; Luke 4:18; Matt. 10:25; 11:5; 18:3; Luke 8:15. The Smyrneans were such; a poor, meek, persecuted, and richly faithful people. They were “HEIRS of that kingdom,” in which they believed; and, as every intelligent person, who is not spoiled by the clerical traditions of the Nikolaitans, knows, an heir is one who is to obtain possession of a thing after the present possessor dies; so the Smyrneans were not present possessors of the kingdom, but living in hope of some time or other coming into possession of “the kingdoms of this world,” when “the Satan,” the present and actual possessor of them, shall be forcibly ejected. They were heirs of these kingdoms patiently waiting to possess them, when they shall become “the kingdoms of Yahweh and of his Anointed,”—that is, of Jesus and his Brethren, illimitably anointed with the effluence of the Eternal Spirit; and thereby constituted “THE Yahweh Elohim ALMIGHTY;” who, having conquered them in the war of his great and terrible day, shall reign over them during the Aions of the Aions, or the thousand years—Rev. 11:15; 16:14; 20:4, 6.

The Smyrneans did not entertain the silly and absurd notion, so characteristic in our day of clerical craziness, that they were either the kingdom itself, or in the kingdom! Not having been Nikolaitanized, they did not believe that “the church” was “the kingdom of grace,” and transkyana “the kingdom of glory above,” where “immortal souls” sing and dance to the hundredth psalm! This teaching of the Nikolaitans, or vanquishers of the people the Spirit says, “I hate.” The Ephesians hated it; and all scripturally enlightened people of the first century, and of the nineteenth, and of all intervening centuries, despise it and hate it also, with a hatred most perfect and cordial. It is nothing but Gnostic Heathenism, contemptible and hateful to Deity, and all the saints. The Smyrneans had no sympathy with “oppositions of science falsely so called;” but were rich in faith, “the substance of things hoped for, the conviction of things unseen”—Heb. 11:1.

1. Jews of the Satan's Synagogue.

But, though the Star-Angel of the ecclesia of the Smyrneans was richly faithful in the midst of poverty and tribulation, the Spirit informs us, that there existed in that city an institution of a hostile and rival character. Its rivalry is indicated by the claim of its founders to be Jews—“who say they are Jews;” and its hostility, by the affirmation of the Spirit, that they constituted “a Synagogue of the Satan.” This was “the church” in Smyrna, as opposed to “the Ecclesia of the Smyrneans.” The “church” claimed to be “Christian,” and its “clergy,” apostles, in the sense of being “successors of the apostles, and ambassadors of Jesus Christ,” who, in Ephesus, had been tried, and found to be “liars.” It was from this synagogue, that “the raging dogs biting in secret,” as Ignatius says, went forth to Ephesus, sowing their tares.

The claim of this synagogue to be a Christian institution is discerned in the assertion of its members, that they were Jews. All true believers immersed into Christ are Jews by adoption; so that for any natural born Jews and Gentiles to affirm that they were such Jews was to declare that they were “in Christ,” and therefore Christians.

The kingdom promised to them that love God, and are “the called according to his purpose,” is a Hebrew Kingdom. Its territory is the land of Israel turned into Paradise; the nation to inhabit it, the twelve tribes of Israel cleansed from their iniquities, as the result of an intelligent and affectionate recognition of the Anointed Jesus; and obedience to him as their King; its princes, priests, and nobles of all ranks and degrees, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, the prophets and apostles; and those Jews under the law, “who walked in the steps of that faith of the father Abraham, which he had, being yet uncircumcised,” or a Gentile; and those Jews after the Day of Pentecost, who continued in Abraham’s faith, affectionately recognizing Jesus as the Seed promised to him and Israel, and were “immersed for his name”—Luke 13:28; Matt. 19:27–29; Rom. 4:12.

To this point, all pertaining to the kingdom is Hebrew from “Abraham, the Hebrew,” to the appearance of Peter at the house of Cornelius, the Gentile proselyte of the gate. From the typical confirmation of the land-covenant to Abraham, 430 years before the night of the Exodus from Egypt; to the antitypical confirmation of the same covenant in the crucifixion of Jesus (Gen. 15:7, 8–18; Exod. 12:41, 42; Matt. 26:26–29; Rom. 15:8; Gal. 3:16, 17)—there was an interval of 2187 years. In all this time, there was a peculiar people that had the mark or “token” of the Land-Covenant in their flesh. This mark was placed by circumcision. Ail-Shaddai said to Abraham, “a father of many nations have I constituted thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy Seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for a possession of the Olahm; and I will be to them for Elohim.” Then having commanded circumcision, he said, “It shall be the token of the Covenant between me and you:” and my covenant shall be in your flesh for the covenant of the Olahm,” of the thousand years—Gen. 17:5, 8, 11.

This institution in its Mosaic practice by dwellers in the land of Canaan was purely a matter of flesh—a mark indiscriminately borne by the faithful and profane; by Judas as well as Jesus. The mere fact, therefore, of having the token of the covenant in the flesh, or of being a natural descendant of Abraham, confers no right to a joint-inheritance of the land of Canaan when transformed into Paradise. Hence the truth of what Jesus taught, that “the flesh profiteth nothing”—Jno. 6:63; for “the promise to Abraham that he should be the heir of the world, was not to him, or to his Seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith: for if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect”—Rom. 4:13, 14. When, therefore, we read the promises to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and David, they are to be interpreted as made to them, and their Seed, not because they were circumcised in flesh, and were natural descendants of Abraham (for upon this principle Ishmael and Esau’s descendants would have an equal right to Canaan with the posterity of Jacob), but because they believed what God promised them; and evinced their faith in doing what he commanded them: thus becoming subjects of a righteousness which is by faith.

This being the case, some other definition of a Hebrew, Israelite, or Jew, and of circumcision became necessary. Hence in the New Testament we have the terms, “Hebrew of the Hebrews,” “Israelite indeed,” “a Jew inwardly,” and “Circumcision of the Heart”—Jno. 1:47; Rom. 2:29; 9:6; Phil. 3:5. These are phrases which resolve the descendants of Abraham into two classes,—Israel after the flesh; and Israel after the spirit. Referring to this division, Paul says, “they are not all Israel who are of Israel; neither because they are the Seed of Abraham are they all children: but “In Isaac shall thy seed be called”—not in Ishmael or Esau. “That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed”—Rom. 9:6–8. Thus, Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, and all the prophets, Jesus and the apostles, and so forth, were “Hebrews of the Hebrews,” “children of the kingdom,” “Israelites indeed, in whom there was no guile,” “Jews inwardly,” who were circumcised in heart and ears, while Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, the sons of Eli, Saul, Absalom, Zedekiah, Judas, Caiaphas, the Pharisees, Sadducees, and such like, were “the children of the kingdom to be cast into outer darkness;” “Jews outwardly;” and of a “circumcision, which is outward in the flesh,” according to the letter; “of Israel,” but “not Israel,” whose praise is of men, but not of God.

Now if these children of Abraham’s flesh are not the children of God, because of unbelief and disobedience; what shall we say of faithless and rebellious Gentiles, who are no kin to “the Friend of God?” If such affirm that they are Jews are they not manifestly liars? If Judas or Caiaphas had affirmed that they were Jews inwardly, they would have lied; much more then Gentiles of like character, who are Jews neither by nature nor faith.

Seeing then, that “the flesh profiteth nothing,” it is manifestly not necessary to be born a Jew, and to be circumcised, to become “the Jew inwardly” and to be circumcised of heart. In this matter of becoming Jews, and of circumcision, upon the principle of subjection to the righteousness of faith, God has placed the descendants of Adam generally, and the posterity of Abraham in particular, upon common ground. “We have proved,” says Paul, “that Jews and Gentiles are all under sin;” and being all sinners, they have all become liable to punishment before God.

Now the Hebrew Kingdom in Paradise is covenanted, not to sinners of any race, but to the children of God by adoption. A man of any “kindred, tongue, people, or nation,” may become a son of God upon gospel principles; and “if a son, then an heir of God, and joint-heir with Christ”—Rom. 8:17. But, in order to become a son, he must “put on Christ,” that he may be “complete in him.” Now Jesus is the Christ; therefore to put on Christ, he must put on Jesus; and this can only be done by “believing the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ;” and being immersed into the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit—Acts 8:12; Matt. 28:19. If a man have believed these things and been baptized in consequence, he has “consented to the wholesome words of the Lord Jesus, and to the teaching which is according to godliness.” He believes the promises covenanted to Abraham and to David; he believes that Jesus was Son of God and Son of David, and therefore the Anointed of God; and that, though not the son of Joseph, he was a real man, and of the same nature as we ourselves; that he really suffered death, was buried, and rose again; that he ascended into heaven, and now sits at the right hand of Power; that he was delivered for the offences of the believers in the covenants of promise, and raised again for their justification; and that he will return to Jerusalem in power; that he will raise the dead; and in cooperation with the righteous, acquire great glory in the conquest of the world, and the regeneration of Israel and the nations. Having believed thus, and been baptized, he patiently continues in well-doing seeking for glory, and honor, and incorruptibility; that when Christ shall appear he also may appear with him in the glory of the thousand years.

Now to men of such faith and practice as this, the apostle says, “Ye are all the Sons of Deity in the Anointed Jesus through the faith; for as many as have been immersed into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek; there is neither slave nor free; there is neither male nor female; for ye are all ONE in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ’s then are ye Abraham’s Seed, and heirs according to the promise”—Gal. 3:26. Thus, “of twain ONE MAN is made,” and he is called “the Jew inwardly”—Eph. 2:15. This inward Jew is multitudinous; and consists of all in Christ, and because in Christ, in Abraham. Believing men and women, slaves and freemen, Jews and Greeks “are all one in Christ”; and being in Jesus, share with him in all his national, official, and divine relations. He is a Jew; therefore all in him are Jews: He is Son of the Deity; therefore all in him are Sons of God: He was circumcised; therefore all in him are “circumcised by the circumcision of Christ.” He is king and high priest; therefore they are “kings and priests for God.” He is the Christ; therefore all in him are His Body, the Mystical Christ; He is the Seed of the Woman, and of Abraham, and of David; therefore all in him are their Seed also: the righteousness of the law was fulfilled by him; therefore the righteousness of that law is likewise fulfilled by all in him who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. In short, as no one can inherit the kingdom and glory of the Paradise of the Elohim unless he become of the Jew, who is the circumcised Son of Abraham, David, and the Deity; priest, king, and anointed one of Israel; and the subject of the righteousness of God; and, as men of all races are but sinners under the sentence of death, and therefore cannot acquire this position upon hereditary and natural principles—they can only become of “the Jew” and therefore Jews, elementary parts of a majestic whole, by putting on Christ, by entering into him, and so being “in him.” By this arrangement, though by nature destitute and naked, they become complete, as saith the apostle, “Ye are complete in him, who is the Head of all principality and power; in whom also ye are circumcised”—Col. 2:10, 11.

We have shown what it is to get into Jesus Christ; and we proceed to remark, that no one can get into him without being the subject of “the faith,” for Paul says, “Ye are all the Sons of the Deity in the Anointed Jesus, through the faith”—dia tes pisteos; and he tells us, that there is “one faith,” and not two, or more; and that without this faith “it is impossible to please God.” It is evident, then, that those Satanists in Smyrna, and in Philadelphia, “who say they are Jews,” but who had either not embraced the faith, or having embraced it, had, afterwards, made it void by their traditions, or had denied it in any way, “are not Jews, but do lie;” they were not in Christ Jesus, nor He in them by faith, and therefore, whatever their pretensions might be, they were not Christians.

“Through the faith,” then, Gentiles become “Jews;” and natural born Hebrews become “Israelites indeed.” “Through the faith,” expressed in “the Obedience of Faith,” men and women get into Christ; and in getting in become citizens of “the Polity of the Israel,” to be planted as “the Wood of the Life,” in the Paradise of the Elohim, where it will flourish unfadingly during the Olahm of a thousand years. “The Polity of the Israel—he politeia tou Israel—styled in the English Version, “the Commonwealth of Israel,” is at present in the formative state—Eph. 2:12. It is being formed by the process of “taking out a people from the nations for the Name”—Acts 15:14. This name is the polity; and when the gospel of the kingdom preached has separated all required for the purposes of God, the Name, or Polity, will be complete; and, as it is a Hebrew Polity, by which the Jewish nation, and all other nations, are to be governed, all who share in its politeuma, or Commonwealth, must become “Inward Jews,” or “Israelites indeed”—Phil. 3:20; where Paul says, “Our politeuma subsists in heavens, out of which also we wait for the deliverer the Lord Jesus Anointed.” The citizenship begins there, by true believers on earth being immersed into Him now in heavens at the right hand of Power.

But the Land-Covenant requires that all the members of this Divine Polity be circumcised. When the Millennial Sanctuary is set up in the Holy Oblation of Paradise, the law is, that “No stranger, uncircumcised in heart, nor uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary of any stranger that is among the children of Israel”—Ezek. 44:9. This is the principle—there must be circumcision. Israel and foreigners that come to sojourn there, must be circumcised in heart and flesh. “And the uncircumcised man child, whose flesh is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant”—Gen. 17:14. Circumcision is therefore indispensable.

Now females partook of the circumcision of their fathers, even as Levi before he was born paid tithes to Melchizedec, being, as it were, in the loins of Abraham: so after a like arrangement, “the Bride, the Lamb’s wife,” springing as Eve from the side of Adam, partakes of the circumcision of Jesus’ flesh; and does no more therefore need to be circumcised individually in the flesh of their persons, than the female half of Abraham’s posterity.

This necessity being thus obviated, yet circumcision being indispensable, it is evident, that the members of the Divine Polity of Israel must be the subjects of “the circumcision of the heart.” There is no other alternative,—circumcised of flesh by imputation; and circumcised of heart through the faith. “We,” says Paul to the saints, “are the circumcision, who worship God in spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh”—Phil. 3:3. The Saints, then, are “the Circumcision” in the true spiritual import of the institution, and not the rejectors of Jesus, or those who are too ignorant from whatever cause, to get into him. But, in the primitive institution, there is a putting off of flesh—a bloody cutting off, which makes it a covenant, or ברית berith. When, therefore, true believers,—that is, believers of the truth, are circumcised, there must be in their case “a putting off of the flesh.” This is actually so, as expounded in the words of Paul, who says, “In Christ ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off THE BODY OF THE SINS of the flesh by the circumcision of the Christ.” That is, when Jesus was circumcised on the eighth day according to the law, the flesh cut off from his person was representative of the flesh and its lusts which were to be put off by all who should be constituted the righteousness of God in him—who should put off their sins; and afterwards, put off their flesh, as he had done in its transformation into Holy Spirit Nature. All the sins of a man, previous to his putting on Christ, in their totality, are styled “a body,” and as they result from the uncontrolled operation of the inherent lusts of the flesh, the embodiment is styled, “the body of the sins of the flesh”—“the old sins,” “the Old Man, which is corrupt, according to the deceitful lusts;” “the Old Man with his deeds”—Col. 3:9; Eph. 4:22.

Now this Body of Sin must be crucified, that it may be circumcised, or cut off, even unto its death; and there is nothing can do this but “the truth as it is in Jesus” heartily believed and obeyed. When this is intelligently and heartily received, it works a thorough and complete transformation of the man. His eyes are opened, he is turned from ignorance to knowledge, and from the power of Satan to God. The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, are put to death; and he lives for a better, higher, and nobler state of being. Thus prepared in heart and understanding, he is ready for circumcision. Not as the “Concision” would prescribe, who first immersed, and then circumcised the flesh of their dupes; nor as the Anticision of after times, who teach that water-sprinkling came in the room of circumcision; but in the way the apostle indicates, in the words, “Ye are circumcised in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh in the circumcision of the Christ, buried with him in the immersion; with whom also ye are risen through the faith of the energy of the Deity who raised him from among the dead: and ye being dead in your trespasses, and in the foreskin of your flesh, he hath made alive together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses”—Col. 2:12. Hence, to be circumcised with the true circumcision is for a genuine believer of the truth, “as it is in Jesus,” to be “immersed for the Name of Jesus Anointed into a remission of sins”—Acts 2:38. Such a circumcised believer is in Christ, and being “in him” is an Inward Jew; in other words, a Christian.

In Smyrna, then, and Philadelphia, there were Satanists, who said they were Jews,—that is, Christians; but, saith the Spirit, “they are not, but do lie.” The world is full of such liars to this day. Their “names and denominations” are Legion. “They say they are Christians, but are not, but do lie.” They are water-sprinkled Nikolaitans, and nothing more; uncircumcised Gentiles of the unmeasured outer court, which is theirs; in which also they tread under foot the Holy City during forty and two months—Rev. 11:2. Our contemporaries, who say they are Christians, are ignorant of God, are destitute of the faith, and without even the form of baptism; for none but the wicked, or the insane, would affirm either that baptism came in the room of circumcision; or, that sprinkling a few drops of water into the face of a puling infant, or into the face of an ignorant adult, was baptism! Neither sprinkling, pouring, nor immersion, came in the room of circumcision: immersion, the only true action of the “one baptism,” is not a substitute; but the means by which the believer of the truth gets at, and partakes of the circumcision of Christ. If a man be ignorant of the truth, all the dipping and sprinkling in the world cannot circumcise him; and without “circumcision of heart in spirit,” he can have no part in the Paradise of the Elohim.

Lastly, upon this point we remark, that for an unqualified man to affirm that he is an apocalyptic Jew, or by interpretation, a Christian, is “blasphemy.” This is manifest from the words of the Spirit, who says, “I know the blasphemy of them who say they are Jews, and are not.” Blasphemy is Greek, and signifies “defamatory, calumnious, abusive language.” To blaspheme is to hurt one’s good name, to speak ill, or to the prejudice, of one. The blasphemy of saying we are Jews, when not, is defamatory and injurious to the name of Christ. For liars to affirm that they are Christ’s, is to injure the reputation of Christ with those who believe it, and to impede the progress of the truth. Thus, when men say they are Christians, but are really nothing else than Judaizers of the Concision, Gnostics, and sprinklers of the Anticision, or Nikolaitans all, they are blasphemers; for in proportion as their criminal foolishness rises in public estimation, “the truth as it is in Jesus” falls, and becomes the subject of ridicule and contempt. This is the relative position of things at the present time. All ranks, orders, and degrees of the clergy of the Nikolaitan Names and Denominations can stand up before the world, and utter the most ridiculous and wicked blasphemies, which their flocks receive with all satisfied and pietistic grimace. They can take a squalling brat, and sprinkling water into its face, tell their audiences, with a grave countenance, that they thus baptized it by Divine Authority for its regeneration and membership in the church of Christ, and that, this sorcery accomplished, it is a Christian. If shortly after it dies, they “preach its funeral,” and tell their deluded followers that its “precious immortal soul has gone to glory,” and is now one of the angels around the throne! This, and much more of the same sort of incoherent twaddle, they retail as religious consolation to a deluded world, which responds in tuneful and glorious instrumental and vocal harmony, “glory, hallelujah!” while the annunciation of the gospel of the kingdom would either be submerged in shouts of ribaldry, or met with the imprecations of infuriated pietism. Shall it stand on record, that it is blasphemy for one to say he is a Jew, when he is not; and that all these unscriptural and antichristian traditions are not blasphemy? Truth and candor forbid it; and therefore, with our loudest voice we say, “He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith” to the Smyrneans, who in effect proclaims, that the darling pietism of “the religious world” is mere bald, unmitigated blasphemy!

2. “The Synagogue of the Satan.”

SYNAGOGUE is a Greek word, from the verb sunago “to bring together, collect, gather; passive, to convene, come together, meet.” The noun sunagoge, signifies “a collecting, gathering; hence a congregation,” and sometimes the building where the congregation meets. The blasphemers in Smyrna, who said they were apocalyptic Jews, or, by interpretation, Christians, but lied, are not styled “the Ecclesia of the Satan,” because that would imply that they were a calling out by a special invitation to something. The Satan has nothing to invite men to that they are not already entitled to by nature. Being sinners, they are “children of wrath,” and therefore adversaries to all contained in “the One Hope of the invitation,” which is to the kingdom and glory of the Deity. They are not, therefore, an ecclesia, but simply a gathering together, a congregation of blasphemers.

Synagogue in Jas. 2:2, is put for an “assembly” of Hebrew Christians. Addressing them, the apostle says, “My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus, anointed of the glory, with respect of persons. For if there come into your Synagogue a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel; and there come in also a poor man, in vile raiment; and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here honorably; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or Sit here at my footstool; do ye not then confer superiority among yourselves, and are become judges (possessed) of evil imaginations?” This that James reproves, came to be characteristic of many in the Christian assemblies. It was the old pharisaic love of preeminence budding forth in the congregations of the faithful. “Do not ye,” said Jesus, “after the works of the Scribes and Pharisees; for all their works they do to be seen of men; they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments and love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the Synagogues, and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men Rabbi, Rabbi. But be not ye called Rabbi, (or Great One,) for one is your Guide, the Anointed One, and all ye are brethren. And call no one your father upon the earth, for one is your Father, who is in the heavens. Neither be ye called guides, for one is your Guide, the Anointed. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant”—Matt. 23:6.

“When thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the Synagogues and in the streets. And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites, for they love to pray standing in the Synagogues, and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. And when ye pray, use not vain repetitions as the Gentiles, for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking”—Matt. 6:2, 5.

Such were the practices characteristic of the religious meetings of the Jews in their synagogues. The elders, who constituted the Presbytery of the Synagogue, called also “the rulers,” assumed to be the special favorites of heaven, and the “spiritual guides” of the “cursed people”—the am-ha-aretz, “who knew not the law.” They styled themselves “the Great Ones,” and were looked up to as the great lights, or stars, of the ecclesiastical aerial, who guided the blind to the curing and saving of their souls. They honored one another, delighted in the honor bestowed by the wondering multitude, and consorted mainly with the rich, influential, and powerful. To the honor that came from God they were indifferent, for all they did was for public applause, and the profits accruing from the approbation of their dupes. They made long prayers, and many prayers, and vain prayers, loud, contradictory, and absurd; prayers, like the prayers of the “spiritual guides” and “soul-curiers” of our day, full of blasphemy and noise, and which, if answered, would compel the Deity to falsify his promises, and thereby make himself a liar. As to their teaching, they taught for doctrine the commandments of men, and so made void the word of God by their traditions. Isaiah styled them, “Blind, ignorant, and all dumb dogs, that cannot bark; dreaming, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, greedy dogs, who can never have enough; shepherds that cannot understand; they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his own quarter,” or sect—ch. 56:10. They prided themselves upon their “learning,” or as they term it now, their “scholarship.” They studied at the feet of “Masters in Israel,” and in due time became Rabbis themselves. But, though stuffed and crammed with learned lumber, Isaiah says, “they are drunken, but not with wine; they staggers but not with strong drink: for Yahweh hath poured out upon them the spirit of a deep sleep, and hath closed their eyes: the prophets and the rulers, the seers hath he covered. And the vision of all is become unto Israel as the words of a book that is sealed, which they deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith, I cannot, for it is sealed. And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith, I am not learned. Wherefore Yahweh saith, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a wonderful work among this people”—ch. 29:9–13.

Such was the Synagogue-System, at the epoch of the institution of the Ecclesia of the Deity, based upon Jesus as the Christ. The description is applicable to the rulers and the ruled of Israel to this day; only that, if they were then besotted with tradition, and vainly worshipping with their lips, they are now, as Ezekiel saith, “Dry bones, very dry.” There was then some sap in the topmost twig of the cedar; but now, alas, none!

Such a synagogue, then, came to be a fit and proper emblem of those “Christians,” falsely so-called, who in Smyrna “said they were Jews, but were not.” John, referring to these spurious Christians in divers places, says, in 1 Ep. 2:19, “They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us they would doubtless have continued with us; but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.” This emigration from the apostolic fellowship became “the synagogue of the Satan,” and was afterwards distinguished by the assumed title of “the Holy Apostolic Catholic Church.” The leaders of this schism transferred all the customs of the old Jewish Synagogue—System into their pseudo-Christian “church;” and as they were not slow in getting the majority—for “they were of the world, and therefore they spoke of the world, and the world heard them;” for it hears and loves its own—they turned upon those who continued faithful to the apostolic teaching, and denounced and oppressed them as “heretics.” The leaders of this schism erected themselves into a distinct order from the laioi, or people, now styled “the laity” and “laymen”—men of the people. They usurped to themselves the title of ho kleros, “the clergy,” or the lot, portion, or heritage; on the assumption that, while the people belonged to their spiritual guides, said guides are the special lot, or inheritance, of God! Thus, “clergy” is defined “the body of men set apart by due ordination for the service of God;” and a “clergyman,” as “one in holy orders; not a laick.” But, though this distinction of clergy and laity is universal in “the synagogue of the Satan,” there is no such distinction in the Ecclesia, or Body of Christ. The elders, overseers, and deacons, were no holier than the saints at large. There were no “holy orders” as distinct from orders not holy; for elders and people were “all one in Christ Jesus;” and, as a whole, constituted the kleros, or clergy of the Diety. Each particular congregation, with its overseers and deacons, was a kleros, or clergy; that is, a heritage: and all the heritages, or congregations, in the aggregate, made up “the flock of the Deity.” Hence, in writing to the saints in general, Peter says, in 1 Epist. 5:1, “the presbyters (or elders) among you I exhort, who am a co-elder and witness of the sufferings of the Anointed One, and a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed, feed the flock of the Diety with you, not overseeing it unwillingly, but spontaneously (1 Tim. 3:1); not for the sake of sordid gain, but with alacrity: not as domineering over THE HERITAGES (hoi kleroi, the clergies), but becoming patterns of the flock. And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive the unfading wreath of glory.” But “the Synagogue of the Satan” reversed all this; instead of “feeding the flock,” they turned upon it as “grievous wolves” and “raging dogs;” and sought to episcopize for filthy lucre’s sake, as spiritual lords ignoring all “heritages” but their own ranks, orders, and degrees; and accounting the people only as a beast of burden to be worked for the honor and profit of “Reverend Divines,” as at this day. “The Synagogue of the Satan,” of whose flock they are the patterns, has grown to enormous dimensions, while the Ecclesia of Christ has been prevailed against almost to extinction, as foretold by Daniel and John—Dan. 7:12; Rev. 11:2; 13:7. Satan’s Church is co-extensive with what they call “Christendom”—a huge and mighty synagogue, comprehending all the names and denominations of “the Great City” from Rome to Bethany and Utah. “The world rulers of the darkness of this Aion,” or Course of things; “the spirituals of the wickedness in high places”—are all members or supporters, in some form or shape, of this Synagogue. Like the blasphemers in Smyrna, “they all say they are Christians, and are not, but do lie;” and they are all either ignorant of the gospel of the Kingdom, or, if they have any knowledge of it, know it only to oppose it, or to neutralize the obedience it implicitly and explicitly requires. Having identified “the Synagogue,” we shall now proceed to scrutinize

3. “The Satan;” and Demons.

SATAN is a Hebrew word from the root שָׂטַן!

, sahtan, which signifies, 1. To lie in wait, to be an adversary, to persecute; as in Ps. 109:29, where the Spirit says, “Those persecuting me (sotnai, satanizing me) shall be clothed with shame.” It signifies, 2. to oppose, to resist in the forum; as in Zech. 3:1, “he showed me the Satan, הַשָּׂטָן!

, has-Sahtahn, standing at Joshua’s right hand, לַשָּׂטָן,

, le-sitno, for to oppose (or satanize) him.”

The noun Sahtahn, signifies an adversary, e.g. in war, an enemy, as in 1 Sam. 29:4, where the lords of the Philistines say, “lest in the battle David shall become, le-sahtahn, for a Satan, or enemy, against us.” It is also used for one who in any way opposes another, as in Numb. 22:22, “the angel of Yahweh stood in the way, le-sahtahn FOR A SATAN, or opponent, to Balaam.”

In 2 Sam. 19:22, David inquires of certain retainers who counselled him to put Shimei the traitor to death, “What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be to me, le-sahtahn, for (a Satan, or) adversary?”

In the New Testament the use of the word is the same as in the Old. We have seen that Moses styles an angel of Yahweh a Satan; we need not therefore be surprised at Jesus styling Peter one. “And he said unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offence unto me: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men”—Mat. 16:23. Peter was a Satan in this instance in offering evil counsel to Jesus, who would have been as effectually ruined if he had followed it, as Judas; and the purpose of the Deity in the redemption of the race through him completely frustrated. Any counsel that would have persuaded Jesus to stop short of obedience unto death, although it might have emanated from the kindest personal feelings, was satanic; and constituted the counsellor a Satan to him, and to all interested in his welfare. The reply of Jesus to Peter gives us a hint of what constitutes a Satan in a moral, or spiritual sense. It is this—that, whatsoever savours of the things of men in opposition to the things of the Deity, is Satan. Thus, if the Gospel of the Kingdom be stated and proved, to a man, or to a company of men and women, and they oppose it as contrary to their views and feelings, by so doing they evince that they savour not of the things of God, and are therefore Satans. On this principle, those who emigrated from the fellowship of the apostles, and made a new settlement upon the Nikolaitan basis, for themselves; seeing that their teaching was opposed to and subversive of “the truth as it in Jesus,” became Satan. This was the case with the faction in Smyrna. They pretended to be Christians, but were opposed to the doctrine of Christ, and opposed those who were faithful to it; thereby constituting themselves “the Satan” in Smyrna.

The Lydian, or Proconsular, Asia in which the Seven Ecclesias were situated was the arena upon which is apocalyptically represented “the Satan” in antagonism to the One Body. Pergamos, in verse 12, is given as the capital and throne of the rising power, where it flourished in the midst of Balaamism and Nikolaitanism; while in Thyatira the Satan’s Woman Jezebel, the False Prophetess in Embryo, works diligently “according to the working of the Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all the deceivableness of the unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved.” The Satan and Jezebel are the apocalyptic types of what afterwards was manifested in the Church and State developments of the Constantinian Era, and the subsequent era of Charlemagne, when the Ecclesiastical Prophetess of Rome acquired dominion “according to the working of the Satan.”

“The Satan” of these writings to the Ecclesias, is a noun of multitude. It does not stand for one person, man or devil; but for many deep, and crafty teachers, all pretending to be ministers of righteousness and preachers of the gospel. This is evident from verse 24, where it is written, “as many as have not known the depths of the Satan as THEY speak; I will put upon you none other burden.” Here “Satan” stands for many; and is comprehensive of the Nikolaitanes, Balaamites, false apostles, spurious Jews, and Jezebel-seducers. They are all aggregately “the Satan;” and when ecclesiastically considered, the same adversaries are symbolized by Jezebel, the idolatrous and cruel wife of Ahab, the widowed queen of the ten tribes, a king’s daughter, and accursed. Paul speaks of this Satan in 2 Cor. 11:13, saying, “Such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for the same Satan is transformed into an angel of light. It is no great thing then if also the ministers of the same be transformed as ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works.” The apocalyptic Satan accordingly in all outward appearance is very sanctimonious. Their tone is peculiar. They do not speak like “the laity;” but have a drawling, nasal, twang, with which all men are familiar who attend their ministrations. It is known as “the holy tone,” a phrase which when pronounced through the nose, will give the reader some idea of the sound of Satan’s utterances. Besides the tone, the grimace of Satan’s countenance is very peculiar. It is long-faced, and smoothfaced, suffused, not with blushes, but with downcast and pale-faced humility, his utterances are stereotyped formulas current with all “miserable sinners” of highly mesmerized piety. They talk much about “grace,” “experience,” “regeneration,” “immortal souls,” “the devil,” “hell,” “fire and brimstone,” “eternal torment,” “burning up of the world,” “kingdoms in the skies,” “infant salvation,” “baby-damnation,” “sprinkling in the room of circumcision,” “baptismal regeneration,” “purgatory,” “sabbath,” and so forth: but for Moses and the prophets they have particular disrelish. They praise the Scriptures, however, and circulate them widely; having previously with great diligence made them unintelligible by indoctrinating the laity with their vain and gospel nullifying traditions. So popular is Satan’s piety and religion that the Devil himself has at length become a member of his synagogues. Thus Church and World are hand in glove; and Naboth’s vineyard is their holding, until the avenger comes; and then “great will be the day of Jezreel,” when “I will make them,” saith the Spirit, “of the synagogue of the Satan, who say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie, to come and do homage at the feet of them who have kept my word, and have not denied my name”—Rev. 3:9, 8.

In Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, and Philadelphia, “the Satan” was in the formative state. He occupied a position between the One Body of Christ and the unbelieving Jews and Pagans. He was opposed to both, as at this day. He is neither a Jesus-rejecting Jew, nor a Mohammedan or Pagan; and while he repudiates and persecutes these, he more cordially hates the truth than either of them. He is Greek in Turkey and Russia; Papist in Rome and its dependencies; Protestant in Canterbury and Edinburgh; Dissenter and Sectarian, where the Devil declines to divide the spoils. In the days of John, “the Devil and Satan” had not united their fortunes. On the contrary, the Devil persecuted “the Satan,” and slew him by thousands. This antagonism lasted until the Devil was cast out of the heaven—Rev. 12:12. But, as “the Devil,” whose capital was Rome, was equally opposed to “the Satan” enthroned and dwelling in the capital of the old kingdom of Pergamos, as to the Saints, he is also styled “Satan” in chap. 12:9. While the Devil was a pagan he was “a great red dragon-Satan;” but when he became a saint of “the Holy Catholic Church,” his Satanism was that of the blasphemers, who say they are christians, but do lie—Rev. 20:2. Hence, the Pagan Satan and the Catholic Satan are both apocalyptic Satans, and equally enemies to the truth. The pagan Roman emperors and their priests were of the former; while the pseudochristian Origen, Athanasius, Arius, Eusebius, Chrysostom, and such like, were of the latter; “men of corrupt minds, and of no judgment concerning the faith; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof;” mere sacramentarians: “from such turn away”—2 Tim. 3:8, 5.

Lastly under this head we remark, that though “the Satan” whose synagogue was in Smyrna and elsewhere, has gained the ascendancy; and now possesses the glory, honor, and riches of this world, or Order of things, in Church and State; and by his representatives the bishops, priests, ministers and deacons of the Apostasy, administers in human affairs; yet the same Satan is doomed to a disruption and scattering after the type of Jezebel, whose carcass was so dispersed and devoured that “none could say this is Jezebel.” Hence, when the Seventy returned to Jesus, and informed him that the Demoniacs were subject to them through his name; he said to them, “I saw the Satan as lightning fall out of the heaven.” This was a prevision of that event literally and typically accomplished in the expulsion of the Pagan Satan by the typical Michael and his Angels; and hereafter to be as literally, but anti-typically, fulfilled in the expulsion of the Pseudo-Christian Satan from the heaven of the Four Beasts of Daniel, styled “the whole heaven,” by the real Michael, which is Jesus and his Brethren, “the Saints.” Then will be as effectually abolished all ranks, orders, and degrees of “the Clergy,” as were the pagan priests by Constantine and his successors. The “Reverend Divines” of all the schools, colleges, pulpits, and platforms of Satan’s Christendom, whom Paul styles prophetically DAIMONIA: men, whose vocation is to seduce from the faith, and to draw disciples after themselves; “speaking lies in hypocrisy, having had their own conscience cauterized; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats”—1 Tim. 4:1–3:—all these “reverends” and “D.D’s,” and “divines,” will be taken and abolished. A daimon in Paul’s day, was a god, deity, or divine, that occupied a middle station between the “Dii Superiores,” the gods of the first rank, theoi, and the people who worshipped them. In the mythology of the idol-worshippers daimones, were “the souls of men of the golden age hovering between heaven and earth, and acting as tutelary deities: they formed the connecting link between gods and men, and so Aesch. Pers. 620, calls the deified Darius a daemon: hence when daimones and theoi are joined, the daimones are gods of lower rank.”

Now, according to the theology of the Satan, the theoi, or Supreme Gods, are what they call “the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost;” that is, really their father their Devil, his Son Antichrist, and the Ghost of the Flesh. These are their “Holy Trinity” in whom they delight, and after whom they go wondering—Rev. 13:3. Next in rank below these are “the angels” whom they also worship in praying to them and dedicating to their honor the temples in which they perform their rites—Col. 2:18. With these also may be ranked what Satan styles, the immortal disembodied souls of dead men, women, and babes, which, being furnished with wings on their arrival “beyond the skies,” become angels. These “Saints and Angels” are “the ministers of grace” between the “Holy Trinity” of the Devil, Antichrist, and their Spirit, and their Heritage on earth, “the Clergy,” who are the hierophants of their mysteries in the world. These imaginary saints and angels of Skyana are the demonies of the Satan’s theology; the internuncios, or mediators, between his Trinity and men; the Guardians and Protectors of nations, tribes, and peoples; and the Patrons of their bazaars of spiritual merchandize, their benefit societies, holy days, and benevolent institutions. These mythological orders of Theoi and Daimones constitute “the providence” of the Satan's theology. As a whole, it is nothing but "the Old Serpent" heathenism in a new skin—Bible names applied to devilish things.

The "First Person" in the Satan's Trinity, is a ferocious, inaccessible, and implacable divinity. He is represented by his priests as having created myriads of human beings with the certainty of no other destiny than eternal torture in fire and burning brimstone. That he has made "faith alone" the condition of escape from this; but that none of his creatures can have this faith unless he works it in them by the operation of his spirit, bestowed in answer to the prayers of his priests, clergy, or ministers; and even then he only grants it reluctantly in special cases, at the instigation of the combined supplications of "ministers," the Virgin and her Son, and the Saints and angels of the system. Read the liturgies of Rome and Canterbury; and listen to the random outpourings of the pulpit; and witness the tumults, uproars, and bawlings of the religion-gettings of the Satan; and the character of the Gods and Demons of their theology may be accurately inferred from their words, and works, in conventicle.

This implacability and ferocity of the "First Person" of the Satan's Trinity necessitated the institution of a mediation, whose function should be to make "the First Person" willing to save a soul,—in other words, to make him placable. This mediation introduces "the Second Person" as a mild, inoffensive, amiable, and benevolent Eternal God—the milk of all kindness compared with "the First Person," whose disposition is illustrated by the fabled Saturn, who is said to have devoured his own offspring. These two incompatible personages the Satan teaches are One God—the one in a rage; and the other, expostulating, and soothing him, and affectionately interceding with him to spare certain miserable and guilty wretches whose thefts, adulteries, murders, covetousness, and other abominations, "have found them out;" but pleading for them in vain, until he promises to go and die on a cross in their stead. With this he is hardly restrained till the sacrifice is accomplished; but being performed, he accepts it only in behalf of the few he may send "the Third Person" to mesmerize into "feeling good," and "experiencing a hope." But it would occupy too much of our space to unveil all "the DEPTHS of the Satan, as THEY speak." I have adduced the foregoing as the extreme necessity created dogmatically by the Satan, to impress upon mankind the indispensability of their ministrations. Whose prayers are so effectual as the Satan's, in bringing down "the Third Person," "God the Holy Ghost," into the unclean, and infidel, evil hearts of the wicked, to convert them, and to give them a feeling?—A feeling of hope that they are forgiven? Whose "consolations of religion" are more comforting than the Satan's, to the wretch about to be swung off by the neck for rape, arson, and murder?—or to the exhausted debauchee fast sinking into a drunkard's grave? Whose prayers so availing as the Satan's for the bringing down of the Holy Ghost into the hearts of tyrannic kings and governors, inflated senators, and muddle-headed legislative assemblies, that they may be anointed with a wise and knowing unction? This being the general conviction inwrought by the working of the Satan for centuries past, we find them in the order of things visible occupying the position of the Demons of their theology. They are the internuncios between their three eternal persons in one eternal person, on the one part; and "their people," on the other. Because, therefore, of this, they share in the official character of their imaginary Demons. Hence Paul selected the adjective, daimonion, "of, or belonging to, a daimon," to designate them. According to him, "those who in later times apostasize from the faith, give heed to seducing spirits, even to the teachings of Daimonia." We look into the scriptures and learn what "the faith" is; we read the history of the past, and there we see the people calling themselves Christians, wholly given to idolatry and all sorts of abomination; in this we see the apostasy from "the faith;" we look around us, and see the same sort continuing in the practices of their predecessors; and in view of all this we inquire, To whom do these people give heed, and whom do they delight to honor? To this there is but one answer—to the clergy as they happen to be led. The conclusion, then, is inevitable, that the Clergy are the Seducing Spirits and the Daimonia of Paul, whose dogmatic depths are destructive and subversive of the faith he labored so ardently and valiantly to establish, and transmit to posterity uncorrupted by the traditions and foolishness of men.

These Daimonia of the Satan are like the frogs of Egypt, which infested the palace, the mansions of the great, the houses of the people, their ovens, kneading-troughs, and so forth. They fill the heavens of the nations; and there is no place where Mammon requires service but they are in hungry expectation of employ. The Seventy rejoiced that the demoniacs were subject to them through the name of Jesus. This is typical of what awaits them in regard to the Demoniacs of Satan's synagogue. "They shall come," saith the Spirit, to the Philadelphians, "and do homage at thy feet"—they shall be subjected to the Saints through the Name of Yahweh. Seeing this great and glorious consummation, Jesus said "I saw the Satan as lightning fall out of the heaven." This fall will be the ruin of the Clerical Demoniacs, who, like Othello, will then find "their occupation gone." Then "they will weep and mourn; for no man buyeth their merchandize any more"—Rev. 18:11. Place, power, position, and wealth will all be dissipated; and the Saints who will have subdued them, will take possession of all their good things, and "send them empty away." Then, woe betide the clergyman or rabbi, who shall attempt to dole out his old foolishness to the people; for "it shall be, when any shall yet prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou speakest lies in the name of Yahweh: and his father and his mother that begat him shall thrust him through when he prophesieth. And it shall be in that day, that the prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision, when he hath prophesied: neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive"—Zech. 13:3.

When, then, the clergy are abolished, the nations will be emancipated, and not till then; for these are they who aided by the civil power, "destroy the earth"—Rev. 11:18. They fill the minds of the people with their soul-destroying traditions; and, even in "free America," and "liberal England," the civil power will not permit their falsehoods to be disputed on the spot before the people they deceive. But the time approaches rapidly when this defence will fail them; and they will become the hated of the people, one and all. When these come to discover how they have been bamboozled and bewitched by their sorceries, they will cause them to "weep and mourn," for the loss of their trade. We can easily conceive what a clerical howl would resound through the world, if in the current year all their salaries were to be cut off, all supplies and sympathy withdrawn, and never to be renewed, on the ground that the people had discovered that they were mere soul quacks, impostors, and perverters of the people; which they really are! Yet this is only a question of time. It will not come to pass this year; but it will not be long after 1866, that their craft will be repudiated by the world; which shall confess to Yahweh, and give thanks to his name for their deliverance; as it is written, in Jer. 16:19, "the Gentiles shall come to thee, O Yahweh, from the ends of the earth and shall say, Of a truth, our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit. And at that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of Yahweh; and all the nations shall be gathered into it (as the seat of government)—to the Name of Yahweh, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart—Jer. 3:17: "and the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in Yahweh shall they glory"—ch. 4:2. "Then will I turn to them a pure language, that they may all of them call upon the Name of Yahweh, to serve him with one consent"—Zeph. 3:9. "And many peoples shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of Yahweh, to the house of the Elohim of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of Yahweh from Jerusalem"—Isai. 2:3. This will be a glorious revolution consequent upon the ejection of the Satan from the high places of the earth. The power of the Devil being broken the Satan falls. The clergy being suppressed, the nations become intelligent, justified, and blessed in Abraham and his Seed.

4. The Diabolos.

“Fear not the things which thou shalt suffer. Behold, the Diabolos will cast of you into prison, that ye may be tempted”—verse 10.

The Saints in Smyrna were not strangers to tribulation; for where the gospel of the kingdom was believed and obeyed for remission of sins, and the hope of a resurrection from among the dead, to inherit that kingdom with the glory of the Millennial Aion, or Olahm, tribulation of some sort from Jew or Greek, or from both, was sure to follow, as it does even in this day of so-called liberty and light; for all the apostles in word and example testified, that “it is through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom of the Diety”—Acts 14:22.

But their “works,” which were righteous, being manifest in the presence of “the Satan” and of “the Diabolos,” would be sure to bring upon them frequent renewals of their malignant and dangerous attacks. The repudiation of “the Satan’s” claims to the christian name, secured to them the enmity of their “synagogue;” whose members are scandalized at an earnest, and uncompromising contention for the faith as originally delivered to the Saints by the apostles—Jude 3. They call this “uncharitable,” and calculated to “do harm,” and to drive off respectable people from the truth; who, but for the ultrasim fo ANTIPAS, which destroys the popularity and endangers the position, of all connected with him, would embrace the truth, swell the number of its adherents, and make it respected, if not esteemed, by the wealthy and honorable of the world. This has been “the Satan’s” desire from the beginning until now. They are nto so much opposed to the truth as an abstraction; but the consequences of a bold, straightforward, and uncompromising statement and advocacy of it, they hate, and detest with unmitigated bitterness and disgust. This state of mind and policy with respect to the truth on the part of the Satan’s synagogue of “all christendom,” establishes and develops “enmity” between the Seed of the Woman, or true apocalyptic Jews, that is, Christians; and the Seed of the Serpent, or real apocalyptic liars, “who say they are Jews,” or Christians, “and are not, but do lie.” This enmity subsisting between true and spurious christians, caused the Satanists “to betray” the others, as Jesus foretold they would in Matt. 24:10. But, then, to whom should the Satan betray the saints of the ecclesias? This letter to the Smyrneans answers to “ho diabolos,” to the Diabolos, vulgarly styled, THE DEVIL; as it is written, “Behold, the DIABOLOS will cast of you into prison, that ye may be tempted.”

But to what sort of a Devil is this that the saints were to be betrayed? A devil that could apprehend flesh and blood men, and in carcerate them alive in prison? Was it the immortal, fire-proof, orthodox Devil, with horns, hoofs, forked-tongue, and arrow-headed tail, redolent of brimstone, and armed with pitchfork, who arrested the saints, and imprisoned them in the gaols of the Asia Minor? Is it this, “His Sooty Majesty,” to whom the gaols and penitentiaries of “christendom” belong? If so, how comes he to admit the clergy to these precincts to convert his prisoners, and to offer them the consolations of their religions, unless they are his particular friends and confidants? Would he imprison saints on account of “the faith,” and appoint Reverend and Holy Divines, genuine Christian men, to be the Chaplains of his gaols? Or would true and genuine believers, real “ambassadors of Jesus Christ,” and unsophisticated “successors of the apostles,” condescend, or defile themselves—become such traitors to him who had purchased them with his blood, as to accept office under so hideous and monstrous a Devil? Must there not be an amicable compact, some treaty of peace, friendship, and alliance, between the Clergy and the Devil, seeing that they are in official service under him; and that he pays them salaries for indoctrinating his “gaol-birds,” and spiritualizing his legislators, and the soldiers and sailors of his armies and marines? The prisons of the world, and the police of the world, and the executioners of the world, manifestly belong to the Devil. This is proved by the text before us, which testifies, that the Devil casts into prison. Now in order to do this, the magistrates must be in his service; or they would not issue orders of arrest at his dictation. The police also must be in his service; or they would not serve the warrants; and the gaolers and lictors, or they would not put the saints in ward, or carry them to death. All these things, therefore, are the Devil's, whoever, or whatever, he may be. What then, do we see? We see the Clergy his willing and official tools! We see them serving him for the honor and wages emanating from the high places of his kingdom. They are in the world's pay, which they admit belongs to the god of the world whom they call the Devil; therefore the conclusion is necessary and inevitable, that they are the Devil's, and the work of the Devil they do. This being the case, it is not difficult to understand how it is that the Clergy are the chaplains of all the Devil's institutions. He claims the bodies and souls of the people, whom he has ensnared, having been "taken captive by him at his will"—2 Tim. 2:26. He has found it, therefore, to his interest, since the truth was promulgated in his dominions by the Apostles, to set up a counteracting system, which under the name of Christianity should nullify, or neutralize, the thing. This "the Satan," who set up his synagogue, or "Holy Apostolic Catholic Church," upon the foundation of "the Mystery of Iniquity," were ready to do. Having entered into a "Holy Alliance," under the style of "The Old Serpent, the Devil, and Satan," (a form renowned for its unprincipled transactions throughout the world,) the Devil appointed the Lords Spiritual, "the Right Reverend," "Most Reverend," "Very Reverend," and "Reverend," divines of "the synagogue of the Satan," to take care of "the unclean and hateful birds" (Rev. 18:2) he had ensnared, in their last moments; ignorantly supposing it possible, that having served him loyally all their days, they might escape him at last. But the Devil is by nature and education very ignorant of the truth and very superstitious; and as the clergy live and flourish by his folly and stupidity, they are not solicitous for his enlightenment; at all events, that he should not become more intelligent in scripture than themselves. Hence they are careful to flatter him and to pander to his superstition; so that wherever folly is to be transacted in the name of religion, there the Devil finds on hand "gentlemen of the cloth" ready to perform it in tone, grimace, and full canonicals, to suit. For who but the Devil's Own could attend a murderer to the gallows with "the consolations of religion" in view of the divine testimony, that "no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him?"—1 Jno. 3:15. Who but one of "the children of the Devil" could kidnap a little Jew boy, and sprinkle him with a few drops of water, and proclaim him to be a Christian, in view of Paul's testimony, that "without faith it is impossible to please God?"—Heb. 11:6. Who but one of the Devil's own counsellors could preach a sermon over a deceased scoundrel, affirming that his immortal soul was then in glory beyond the skies, in view of the declaration, that "the soul that sinneth it shall die?" Who but one of the Devil's own priests could promise salvation to man or woman upon other terms than those contained in "the wholesome words of the Lord Jesus," who hath said, "He that believeth the Gospel of the Kingdom, and is immersed, shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be condemned?"—Mark 16:15, 16; Matt. 24:14. All these abominations and a multitude besides the clergy do; in short, their teaching and practices are all approved by the world and the pietism of the flesh; and therefore there is but one scriptural conclusion that can be arrived at, namely, that they are of the devil, devilish and condemned.

But in regard to their patron and father the DEVIL we may profitably inquire, is he the hideous and sooty monster generally supposed by the disciples of his divines; or is he altogether something else? I answer, that all that can be known about the devil is revealed in the scriptures; and that in these writings, there is no such devil exhibited as is preached by the clergy, and believed in by the world. The clerical devil is the devil of heathenism, introduced into "the synagogue of the Satan" by the apocalyptic "liars." They introduced him into their theology as the great terror of their system, which was designed to work upon the fears, rather than upon the admiration and nobler affections of mankind. The old heathen devil, and "an eternal hell of fire and brimstone," have been the basis of the clerical gospel from that day to this. They had abandoned "the goodness of the Deity," and consequently could no longer make use of it to "lead men to repentance," or change of mind and disposition (Rom. 2:4): they had therefore to introduce another agent; and, as the clerical system of doctrine is merely heathenism in a new dress, they adopted the old god Pluto, tricked out with the appendages of another called Pan. These heathen deities combined in one they call “the Devil,” surrounded by all the Furies of Tartarus of horrid shapes, and appalling aspects, they exhibit to their dupes, as the Devil’s officials in the regions of the damned, waiting to clutch their immortal souls in the article of dissolution unless they repent of their sins, and become members of the clerical communion; thus making the Devil an effectual colaborer in bringing men under the influence of the Clergy. Separate the Devil and his adjuncts from their system, and their occupation would be gone; for apart from hell and the Devil the clergy have no power to excite the mind.

But while we repudiate the clergyman’s devil as a mere phantasma of disordered brains, we by no means deny the existence of what is styled diabolos in the scriptures. Our proposition at this point is, that the Devil of the clergy is not the Diabolos of scripture. This is easy to be seen by taking their representation of the devil as the definition of the word, and trying to expound the scriptures in which devil is mentioned thereby. Take, for instance, Heb. 2:14, where it is written, “Therefore for as much as the children (given of the Deity to the Son for brethren) partook of flesh and blood, he also himself in like manner shared in the same, that through the death (he accomplished) he might destroy that having the power of death, that is, THE DIABOLOS.” Now, Paul elsewhere informs us that “Jesus was crucified through weakness” (2 Cor. 13:4); and the clergy teach that their diabolos, or devil, is second only to their Trinity in power—almost, if not quite, omnipotent; at all events, powerful enough to hold in eternal captivity and torture the vast majority of the human beings God has made. He either holds them with God’s consent or against it; if he hold them with it, God and the Devil are made copartners; and God is made by their traditions to have created an enormous multitude of men, women, and children for no other destiny than eternal torments; which gives the lie to the scriptures, which teach that “God is love:” if the Devil hold “the damned” against God’s consent, then the Devil is more powerful than God! But, the clergy are unwilling to accept the consequences of their own theories. They would not like to admit the copartnership, nor the superior strength of their Devil; though upon their premises one or the other is unavoidable. They will admit, however, that their father and patron, the Devil, is vastly powerful. This is admission enough to illustrate the incompatibility of their traditions with scripture. Thus, How comes it that the Spirit laid hold upon death-stricken and corruptible flesh and blood, which is so weak and frail, called “the Seed of Abraham,” that through its death he might destroy so mighty and powerful a Devil? Would it not have been more accordant with the requirements of the case for him to have combated with him unencumbered with flesh, or in the spirit-nature of angels? Became weak and dead to destroy the mighty and the living; when the Creator of the Devil could with a word annihilate him! But there is as little reason as scripture in “the depths of Satan” as the clergy teach; and therefore it would be mere waste of time and space to occupy ourselves any further with their speculations and traditions upon this subject.

The Spirit clothed himself with weakness and corruption—in other words, “Sin’s flesh’s identity”—that he might destroy the Diabolos. It is manifest from this the diabolos must be of the same nature as that which the Spirit assumed; for the supposition that he assumed human nature to destroy a being of angelic nature, or of some other more powerful, is palpably absurd. The Diabolos is something, then, pertaining to flesh and blood; and the Spirit or Logos became flesh and blood to destroy it. Now, whatever flesh-and-blood thing it may be, Paul says that “it hath the power of death”—that is, it is the power which causes mankind to die. If, then, we can ascertain from Paul what is the power or cause of death, we discover what the thing is he terms the Diabolos; for he tells us that the Diabolos has the power of death.

Well, then, referring to Hos. 13:14, where the Spirit saith, “I will ransom them from the power of the grave,” Paul exclaims, in view of this deliverance as the result of a price paid, “O Death, where is thy sting? O Hades, (sheol, or grave,) where is thy victory?” The power of a venomous serpent to produce death lies in its “sting,” therefore Paul uses “sting” as equivalent to “power:” hence his inquiry is, “O Death, where is thy power?” This question he answers by saying, “The sting (or power) of death is SIN, and the strength of sin is the law.” That the power of death is sin, he illustrates in his argument contained in his letter to the saints in Rome. In Rom. 5:12, he says, “Death by sin.” He does not say, “By the Devil sin entered into the world;” if he had, this would have given “the Devil” existence before Sin: but he says, “By one man, or Adam, sin entered into the world.” This agrees with Moses, who tells us that there was a time after the creation was finished when there was nothing in the world but what was “very good”—“and Elohim saw all that He (the Spirit) had made, and behold, it was very good”—Gen. 1:31. Man is, therefore, older than Sin, and, consequently, older than the Diabolos. Man introduced it into the world; and not an immortal devil, nor God. Neither God, then, nor such a devil, was the author of sin; but the authorship was constituted of the sophistry of the serpent believed and experimented by the Man, male and female.

Man, then, having introduced Sin, “death entered into the world by Sin; and so death passed upon all men * * * to condemnation; for by one man’s disobedience the many were constituted sinners; and the wages of sin is death to those who obey it”—Rom. 5:12, 8, 19; 6:23, 16. But though constituted sinners in Adam, if no law had been given after his transgression, his posterity would not have known when they did right or wrong; for Paul says, “I had not known sin, but by the law.” The law is, therefore, “the strength of Sin.” Sin reigns by “the holy, just, and good law,” through the “weakness of the flesh”—Rom. 7:7, 12; 8:3. Where there is no law there is no sin; for “sin is the transgression of law:” so that “without the law sin is dead”—ch. 7:8; 1 John 3:4. This shows how inherently bad flesh is in its thoughts and actions, that a good thing should stir it up to wickedness. Its lusts and affections are impatient of control. Paul therefore said, “in me, that is, in my flesh, dwells no good thing.” When this, which is utterly destitute of any good thing, is placed under a good law, scope is afforded it to display itself in all its natural deformity; and to prove that “the law of its nature” is not the law of God, but “the law of sin and death.” Thus, the introduction of a good law, demanding obedience of that which has nothing good in it, is the occasion of sin abounding in the world (ch. 5:20), and thereby evinces its enormity, and shows that “SIN is an exceedingly great sinner”—kath, hyperbolon amartolos—ch. 7:13. In this expression Paul personifies Sin; and says that it deceived him, slew him, and worked death in him.

“SIN” is a word in Paul’s argument, which stands for “human nature,” with its affections and desires. Hence, to become sin, or for one to be “made sin” for others, (2 Cor. 5:21,) is to become flesh and blood. This is called “sin,” or “Sin’s flesh,” because it is what it is in consequence of sin, or transgression. When the dust of the ground was formed into a body of life, or living soul, or as Paul terms it, a psychical or natural body, it was a very good animal creation. It was not a pneumatic, or spirit-body, indeed, for it would then have been immortal and incorruptible, and could neither have sinned nor have become subject to death; but for an animal or natural body, it was “very good,” and capable of an existence free from evil, as long as its probationary aion, or period might continue. If that period had been fixed for a thousand years, and man had continued obedient to law all that time, his flesh and blood nature would have experienced no evil; and at the end of that long day, he might have been permitted to eat of the Tree of the Lives, by which eating he would have been changed in the twinkling of an eye into a spirit-body, which is incorruptible, glorious, and powerful; and he would have been living at this day. But man transgressed. He listened to the sophistry of flesh, reasoning under the inspiration of its own instincts. He gave heed to this, “the thinking of the flesh,” or carnal mind, which “is enmity against God, is not subject to his law, neither indeed can be.” The desire of the flesh, the desire of the eyes, and the pride of life, which pertain essentially to all living human, or ground, souls, were stirred up by what he saw and heard; and “he was drawn away of his, lust, and enticed.” His lust having conceived, it brought forth sin in intention; and this being perfected in action, caused death to ensue—James 1:13. Every man, says the apostle, is tempted in this way. It is not God, nor the clerical devil that tempts man, but “his own lust,” excited by what from without addresses itself to his five senses, which always respond approvingly to what is agreeable to them.

Seeing that man had become a transgressor of the divine law, there was no need of a miracle for the infliction of death. All that was necessary was to prevent him from eating of the Tree of Lives, and to leave his flesh and blood nature to the operation of the laws peculiar to it. It was not a nature formed for interminable existence. It was “very good” so long as in healthy being, but immortality and incorruptibility were no part of its goodness. These are attributes of a higher and different kind of body. The animal, or natural body, may be transformed into a deathless and incorruptible body, but without that transformation, it must of necessity perish.

This perishing body is “sin,” and left to perish because of “sin.” Sin, in its application to the body, stands for all its constituents and laws. The power of death is in its very constitution, so that the law of its nature is styled “the law of Sin and Death.” In the combination of the elements of the law, the power of death resides, so that “to destroy that having the power of death,” is to abolish this physical law of sin and death, and instead thereof, to substitute the physical “law of the spirit of life,” by which the same body would be changed in its constitution, and live for ever.

By this time, I apprehend, the intelligent reader will be able to answer scripturally the question, “What is that which has the power of death?” And he will, doubtless, agree, that it is “the exceedingly great sinner SIN,” in the sense of “the Law of Sin and Death” within all the posterity of Adam, without exception. This, then, is Paul’s Diabolos, which he says “has the power of death;” which “power” he also saith is “sin, the sting of death.”

But why doth Paul style Sin diabolos? The answer to this question will be found in the definition of the word. Diabolos is derived from diaballo, which is compounded of dia, a preposition, which in composition signifies across, over, and answers to the Latin trans; and of ballo to throw, cast; and intransitively, to fall, tumble. Hence, diaballo, is to throw over or across; and intransitively, like the Latin trajicere, to pass over, to cross, to pass. This being the signification of the parent verb, the noun diabolos is the name of that which crosses, or causes to cross over, or falls over. DIABOLOS is therefore a very fit and proper word by which to designate the law of sin and death, or Sin’s flesh. The Eternal Spirit drew a line before Adam, and said, Thou shalt not cross, or pass over that line upon pain of evil and death. That line was the Eden law; on the east of that line was the answer of a good conscience, friendship with God, and life without end; but on the west, fear, shame, misery, and death. To obey, was to maintain the position in which he was originally placed; to disobey, to cross over the line forbidden. But “he was drawn away, and enticed by his own lusts.” The narrative of Moses proves this. The man was enticed of his own lust to cross over the line, or to disobey the law; so that his own lust is the Diabolos. Thus, etymology and doctrine agreeing, our definition must be correct.

But diaballo has secondary and ternary significations. It signifies to traduce, to attack character, to slander, to libel; and thirdly, to deceive, mislead, impose upon. Hence, diabolos will also signify a traducer, slanderer, deceiver, imposter. In this sense, Judas is styled a diabolos—John 6:70. So also the pious scribes and Pharisees, priests and rulers, who, though as priests, officially holy, were as Jesus said, “of father the Diabolos, and the lusts of their father (the flesh) they would do. The same was a man-killer from the beginning, and stood not in the truth, because truth is not in him. When he speaks a lie he speaks of his own things, for he is a liar, and the father of it”—John 8:44. And “he that committeth sin is of the Diabolos, for the diabolos sinneth from the beginning”—1 John 3:8. All this is perfectly intelligible when understood of Sin’s flesh, in which dwells no good thing, and which of itself can neither do right nor think aright. Man’s ability to do either is derived from a higher source—from the truth indoctrinated into him. When this is declared and reasoned into him, and he comes to understand it, to believe it, and to love it, a power is set up within him called “the law of the Spirit of life,” which is counteractive of “the law of sin and death,” and brings the man to “the obedience of faith,” by which he is manifested to the skilful in the word as a son of God. The disobedient are all of father Diabolos; and his spirit, which is the spirit of the flesh, works in them. Hence the clergy, Jewish and Gentile, are all of what they call “the Devil,” being ignorant, and consequently disobedient of the gospel of the kingdom. But, Diabolos is discoursed of in scripture in its imperial as well as racial manifestations. John says, “For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Diabolos”—1 Jno. 3:8. When the Diabolos and his works are destroyed “every curse will have ceased”—Rev. 22:3. The works of the Diabolos are the Works of Sin. Look into the world, ecclesiastical and civil, and the reader will see Sin’s works on every side. The thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers; Greek, Latin, Mohammedan, Pagan, Protestant, Sectarian, and “Infidel,” superstitions of all “Names and Denominations,” are all the works of Sin, which festers and ferments in all “the children of disobedience.” They are all based upon the transgression of the divine law; and are all officered and sustained by the children of the Diabolos. The Messiah’s mission is to destroy them all. John, the baptizer, proclaimed this in pointing to Jesus, and saying, “Behold, the Lamb of God who takes away THE SIN of the world!” which, by Paul and John the apostle, is interpreted as the Son of God that destroys the Diabolos and his works—the flesh and all its institutions: for the time comes at the end of the Thousand Years, when flesh and blood nature will be abolished from the earth; and by consequence, all evil and death, “the last enemy,” which are its wages in all the earth.

The fourth beast of Daniel is the symbol of the Diabolos in Imperial manifestation. It represents “the Kingdom of Men” upon “the whole habitable,” which, in the days of John, in regard to the Fourth Beast, extended from the Tigris to the Atlantic; and from the Rhine, the Danube, and the Euxine, to the Atlas Mountains and Upper Egypt; the Mediterranean lying in the midst. Since the apostle’s time, the territory of this dominion has been greatly extended by the addition of Germania and “All the Russias.” Upon this platform “the kingdom of men” mainly rests. It is the Kingdom of Sin, or the Empire of the Diabolos, which has passed through various constitutional phases, but always in harmony with its diabolism. This, in apostolic times, was of that species of heathenism, according to which the flesh worshipped Jupiter, and all the Olympian deities, through the works of men’s hands. The magistrates of this pagan power were not only individual diaboloi, but the officials through whom the Imperial Fourth Beast Diabolos oppressed, tempted, persecuted, and destroyed the Saints. All the prisons of the Habitable belonged to the Diabolos, whose spies and informers “walked about, as a roaring lion, seeking whom they might devour.” This power is entitled in Rev. 12:9, “the great red Dragon, that Old Serpent, surnamed the Diabolos, and the Satan, which deceives the whole Habitable.” The “Dragon” is the serpent-symbol of the power which sought to seduce the faithful from their allegiance to Christ—to cause them to transgress—to cross the line of “the law of faith.” It was, therefore, truly “surnamed THE DIABOLOS” by the Spirit. It was also “the Adversary” to everything not pagan; and, therefore, rightly “surnamed THE SATAN.” It was adversary to Jesus, and crucified him; it was adversary to all the apostles whom it slew and persecuted; and to the Saints for two hundred and eighty years, when it was “cast out of the heaven.” For further information, in connection with this subject, the reader is referred to page 139, under the caption, “He is Coming with the Clouds.”

This was then the Diabolos who, the Spirit predicted, would cast some of the Smyrneans “into prison, that they might be tempted;” for all Asia Minor was under its dominion. The purpose of their imprisonment would be to tempt them to abandon the faith. The manner in which the Diabolos tempted, is illustrated in the case of Polycarp. When he was apprehended, they sat him upon an ass, and led him into the city. “The Irenarch Herod, and his father Nicetes, met him, who, taking him up into their chariot, began to advise him, asking, "What harm is it to say, Lord Caesar! and to sacrifice, and be safe?" At first he was silent, but being pressed, he said, "I will not follow your advice." When they could not persuade him, they treated him abusively, and thrust him out of the chariot, so that in falling, he bruised his thigh.

When brought before Statius Quadratus, the proconsul, he began to exhort him, saying, "Have pity on thine own great age—and the like. Swear by the fortune of Caesar; repent; say, Take away the atheists." Polycarp, with a grave aspect, beholding all the multitude, waving his hand to them, and looking up to heaven, said, "Take away the atheists." The proconsul urging him, and saying, "Swear, and I will release thee—reproach Christ." Polycarp said, "Eighty and six years have I served him and he hath never wronged me, and how can I blaspheme my King who hath saved me?" The proconsul still urging, 'Swear by the fortune of Caesar,' Polycarp said, 'If you still vainly contend to make me swear by the fortune of Caesar, as you speak, affecting an ignorance of my real character, hear me frankly declaring what I am: I am a Christian; and if you desire to learn the Christian doctrine; assign me a day, and hear.' "The proconsul said, "Persuade the people." Polycarp said, "I have thought proper to address you; for we are taught to pay to magistrates and powers appointed by God, all honor consistent with a good conscience. But I do not hold them worthy that I should apologise to them." "I have wild beasts," said the proconsul: "I will expose you to them unless you repent." "Call them," replied Polycarp. "Our minds are not to be changed from the better to the worse; but it is a good thing to be changed from evil to good." "I will tame your spirit by fire," said the proconsul, "since you despise the wild beasts, unless you repent." "You threaten me with fire," answered Polycarp, "which burns for a moment, and will soon be extinct: but you are ignorant of the future judgment, and of the fire of Aion-punishment reserved for the ungodly. But why do you delay?—Do what you please." The proconsul was visibly embarrassed; he sent, however, the herald to proclaim thrice in the midst of the assembled multitude, "Polycarp hath professed himself a Christian!" Upon this, they all, both Gentiles and Jews, who dwelt at Smyrna, with insatiate rage, shouted aloud, "This is the teacher of Asia, the father of Christians, the subverter of our gods, who hath taught many not to sacrifice nor to adore." They now begged Philip, the Asiarch, to let out a lion against Polycarp. But he refused, observing, that the amphitheatrical spectacles of the wild beasts were finished. They then unanimously shouted, that he should be burnt alive. Whilst he was praying, he observed the fire kindling; and turning to the faithful that were with him, he said "I must be burnt alive." The business was executed with all possible speed, in which the Jews distinguished themselves as usual. As soon as the fire was prepared, the usual appendages of burning were placed about him. And when they were going to fasten him to the stake, he said, "Let me remain as I am; for he who giveth me strength to sustain the fire, will enable me also, without your securing me with nails, to remain unmoved in the fire." Upon which they bound him, without nailing him. The burning, however, not proceeding satisfactorily, the confector plunged his sword into his body, by which his existence was terminated.

This account, which is condensed from Milner, may serve to show how the Diabolos was "resisted steadfast in the faith," as well as how he tempted the resistants. Polycarp was an elder of the ecclesia of the Smyrneans in A.D. 107, when Ignatius visited him on his way to suffer death in Rome. Both Ignatius and Polycarp were acquainted with the apostle John; and is highly spoken of by Ignatius, who says of him and others, "they live as in the presence of the glory of God." Polycarp was put to death sixty years after Ignatius, A.D. 167. If he was one of those in Smyrna to whom the Spirit saith, "I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty—but thou art rich;" and if he continued "rich in faith" to the end, (which his martyrdom is no proof of, as many of "the synagogue of the Satan" also suffered,) then he was clothed with "the whole armor of the Deity;" and his examination before the proconsul exhibits "the wiles of the Diabolos," and how Polycarp stood against them in the armor,—Eph. 6:11, 16; quenching all the fiery darts of the wicked one, or Diabolos, with the shield of faith.—1 Pet. 5:9.

5. “Ten Days” Tribulation.

“Ye will have tribulation TEN DAYS.”—Verse 10

Domitian, the Roman emperor, was slain A.D. 96. John was in Patmos at the time; therefore the letter to the Smyrneans was before that date. Domitian was succeeded in the throne by Nerva, who published a pardon for those who were condemned for impiety, recalled those who were banished, and forbade the accusing of any men on account of impiety, or Judaism. Others, who were under accusation or under sentence of condemnation, now escaped by the lenity of Nerva. This brings us the close of the first century, in which we behold the Christians, for the present, in a state of external peace. Under this full toleration the apostle John recovered his liberty, and, at the age of about one hundred, fell asleep in Christ before the short interval of tranquillity was closed by the persecuting spirit of Trajan.

The mild and aged Nerva adopted Trajan A.D. 98, and declared him his colleague and successor in the empire. When Nerva deceased, and Trajan became sole master of the Habitable of the Diabolos, the spirit of persecution broke out afresh; and appears to have been very severe in the region of the Seven Ecclesias. The “tribulation” continued ten years, until the death of Trajan, A.D. 117. While the Smyrneans, and their brethren in Asia Minor, were enduring the tribulation of the symbolical “ten days,” Pliny, the governor of Bithynia, a character well known in pagan history, wrote the following letter to Trajan, which sufficiently explains itself.

C. Pliny to Trajan, Emperor.

“Health.—It is my usual custom, sir, to refer all things, of which I harbor any doubts, to you. For who can better direct my judgment in its hesitation, or instruct my understanding in its ignorance? I never had the fortune to be present at any examination of Christians, before I came into this province. I am therefore at a loss to determine what is the usual object either of inquiry or of punishment, and to what length either of them is to be carried. It has also been a question with me very problematical, whether any distinction should be made between the young and the old, the tender and the robust, whether any room should be given for repentance, or the guilt of Christianity once incurred is not to be expiated by the most unequivocal retraction;—whether the name itself, abstracted from any flagitiousness of conduct, or the crimes connected with the name, be the object of punishment. In the meantime, this has been my method with respect to those who were brought before me as Christians.

“I asked them whether they were Christians: if they pleaded guilty, I interrogated them twice afresh, with a menace of capital punishment. In case of obstinate perseverance, I ordered them to be executed. For of this I had no doubt, whatever was the nature of their religion, that a sullen and obstinate inflexibility called for the vengeance of the magistrate. Some were infected with the same madness whom, on account of their privilege of citizenship, I reserved to be sent to Rome, to be referred to your tribunal.

“In the course of this business, informations pouring in, as is usual when they are encouraged, more cases occurred. An anonymous libel was exhibited, with a catalogue of names of persons, who yet declared that they were not Christians then, nor ever had been; and they repeated after me an invocation of the gods and of your image, which, for this purpose, I had ordered to be brought with the images of the dieties: they performed sacred rites with wine and frankincense, and execrated Christ—none of which things I am told a real Christian can ever be compelled to do. On this account I dismissed them. Others named by an informer, first affirmed, and then denied the charge of Christianity; declaring that they had been Christians, but had ceased to be so some three years ago, others still longer, some even twenty years ago. All of them worshipped your image, and the statues of the gods, and also execrated Christ.

“And this was the account which they gave of the nature of the religion they once had professed, whether it deserves the name of crime or error; namely, that they were accustomed on a stated day to meet before daylight, and to repeat among themselves a hymn to Christ as to a god, and to bind themselves by an oath, with an obligation of not committing any wickedness; but on the contrary, of abstaining from thefts, robberies, and adulteries; also of not violating their promise, or denying a pledge; after which it was their custom to separate, and to meet again at a promiscuous harmless meal, from which last practice they however desisted, after the publication of my edict, in which, agreeably to your orders, I forbade any societies of that sort. On which account, I judged it the more necessary to inquire by torture from two females, who were said to be deaconesses, what is the real truth. But nothing could I collect, except a depraved and excessive superstition. Deferring therefore any further investigation, I determined to consult you. For the number of culprits is so great as to call for serious consultation. Many persons are informed against, of every age and of both sexes; and more still will be in the same situation. The contagion of the superstition hath spread not only through cities, but even villages and the country. Not that I think it impossible to check and correct it. The success of my endeavours hitherto forbids such desponding thoughts: for the temples once almost desolate, begin to be frequented, and the sacred solemnities, which had long been intermitted, are now attended afresh; and the sacrificial victims are now sold everywhere, which once could scarcely find a purchaser. Whence I conclude, that many might be reclaimed, were the hope of impunity, on repentance, absolutely confirmed.”

To this the emperor replied as follows:

Trajan to Pliny.

“You have done perfectly right, my dear Pliny, in the inquiry you have made concerning the Christians. For truly no one general rule can be laid down, which will apply itself to all cases. These people must not be sought after. If they are brought before you and convicted, let them be capitally punished, yet with this restriction, that if any one renounce Christianity, and evidence his sincerity by supplicating our gods, however suspected he may be for the past, he shall obtain pardon for the future, on his repentance. But anonymous libels in no case ought to be attended to; for the precedent would be of the worst sort, and perfectly incongruous to the maxims of my government.”

Thus the Diabolos and his pagan Satan “cast them into prison that they might be tempted” to renounce the faith. Their tribulation was great. They had foes without, foes within, who said they were Christians, but lied, and their flesh with all its affections and lusts to contend with. But they were “rich” in faith and good works, and zealous against the Docetae or Gnostics, and the Ebionites, both of which, we have shown, constituted the Nikolaitans, or Vanquishers of the people of God’s flock. When Ignatius was at Troas, where Paul and his companions abode seven days (Acts 20:6), he wrote to the Smyrneans commending them for their faithfulness, and zealously warning them against the Nikolaitans. In his view the evil of their heresy consisted in a nullification of Jesus as a covering for sin, and of the resurrection. Let the clergy and those deceived by them, hear him, and be instructed. “I glorify Jesus Anointed, our God, who hath given you wisdom. For I understand that ye, Smyrneans, are perfect in the immoveable faith of our Lord Jesus Christ; who REALLY was of the seed of David according to the flesh; and born of a virgin REALLY; who REALLY suffered under Pontius Pilate. For those things he suffered for us that we might be saved. And he TRULY suffered; as also he TRULY raised up himself; not as some infidels say, that he SEEMED to suffer. I forewarn you of these beasts (2 Pet. 2:12; Jude 10) who are in the shape of men; whom you ought not only not to receive (2 Jno. 10,) but if possible not even to meet with. Only you ought to pray for them—if they may be converted (2 Tim. 2:25)—which is a difficult case. But Jesus Christ, our true life (Col. 3:3) has power to save to the uttermost” (Heb. 7:25.) I have inserted references in parentheses to show how the scriptures were acting upon the mind of Ignatius while he was writing his epistle. It seems that the “infidels” who pretended to be true Jews or Christians, with the usual artifice of such persons, labored to work themselves into the good graces of Ignatius, who was an influential man among the saints. But he saw through their craftiness, and says—“for what doth it profit me if any man commend me, and yet blaspheme my Lord, denying him to have come in the flesh? They separate from he eucharistia the giving of thanks (that is, “the Lord’s Supper) and from prayer, because they confess not the Eucharistia to be (representative of) the body of our Saviour Jesus Anointed, who suffered for our sins. They who contradicted the gift of God (Gal. 1:4; 2:20; Eph. 5:25; 1 Tim. 2:6; Tit. 2:14) die in their reasonings.”

Ignatius suffered death in this Trajan persecution of the “ten days.” When he was led to execution, he was attended by a number of the brethren who accompanied him to Rome, and were residents of that city. When about to suffer, he prayed in behalf of the Ecclesias, that a stop might be put to the persecution, and that their love might be continued one toward another. He was then led into the amphitheatre, and speedily thrown to the wild beasts, who soon devoured him, leaving only a few bones, which the deacons carefully collected and afterwards burned at Antioch.

The concluding remarks of the narrative of the execution of Ignatius are expressed in terms which indicate their writers’ understanding of the Diabolos in the case. They style him “the magnanimous witness of Christ, who trode underfoot the Diabolos.” Now the pagan Roman power cast him into prison, and put him to death; yet he trode it under foot in the sense of not yielding to its temptations, and dying with the assurance of rising again; or, as it is expressed in this letter to the Smyrneans, of “not being hurt of the Second Death.” The contemporaries of Ignatius evidently regarded this power as Sin in imperial manifestation, and therefore “the Diabolos.”

6. The Ten Days, or Day for a Year.

This letter to the Smyrneans is the first placed in the Apocalypse where “days” stand for years. The Apocalypse is a book of symbols, in which the greater is represented by the less. Its agents, and their operations, and its times preliminary to the thousand years, are all miniature representations of the reality—great things illustrated by small. This is the rule of prophecy, whether the truth be stated literally or by symbols—the verbal always falls short of the real, which is “joy unspeakable and full of glory;” things which cannot be expressed. Because of the Spirit’s working by this rule it is that so much has been revealed in so small a book. It is a condensed view of the deep things of the Deity, which, if they had been magnitudinously revealed, “I suppose,” as John says, “that even the kosmos itself could not contain the books that should be written.”

Condensation, then, is the general principle of divine revelation; but of the symbols, it is the special. The apocalyptic times are an apportionment of the times of the Holy City, or of the Saints, concurrent with “the Times of the Gentiles,” during which Jerusalem’s polity, Hebrew and Christian, is trodden under their feet. Hence-Jerusalem has her times, and the Gentiles have theirs; but the two sets of times are not times of concurrent prosperity and triumph. On the contrary, when Jerusalem’s polity is subject, her times are times of adversity; and those of the Gentiles relatively prosperous; and when she “arises and shines because her Light is come,” she becomes victorious, and the Gentiles prostrate, according to the word of Isaac, who said to Jacob, “Let the people serve thee, and the nations bow down to thee; be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother’s sons bow down to thee; cursed is every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee”—Gen. 27:29.

Day is frequently used in scripture to represent a year. The first intimation of this is in Gen. 47:9, where Jacob says, “the days of my pilgrimage are 130 years,” and in ver. 28, “the days of the years of his life were 147 years.” In this we have 47,450 days of pilgrimage represented by 130 years. Now, as many thousand days are condensable into a few years, upon the same principle many years may be compressed into a few days. Hence, “the days of the years were 147 years,” or, Jacob lived 147 days, each day for a year of days, or 52,691 days.

This principle of the ideal condensation of a great while into a little, is practically exhibited in Numbers 14. While the twelve tribes of Israel were in the wilderness, they sent twelve spies to search out the land of promise; “and they returned from searching of the land after forty days.” Now these were literal days, and so would have remained purely and simply, but for an incident which was made the occasion of converting them into typical or symbolical days. The spies caused the tribes to despise the land, so that they refused to go up and take possession of it. Therefore the Spirit said, they should wander in the wilderness forty years. His words are, “After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my breach of promise.” Here is the day for a year rule plainly indicated. Forty days searching of the land in a faithless spirit, working disobedience in the multitude, made typical of forty years bearing of iniquity, ending in death in the wilderness.

The next notable example of a day being appointed to represent a year, is in Ezek. 4:4. In this place he states that he was commanded to lie upon his left side 390 days, during which he would be considered as bearing the past iniquity of the house of Israel. After these were expired, he was to lie upon his right side 40 days, to bear the iniquity of the house of Judah, making in all 430 days for the iniquity of the whole twelve tribes. All these were sign-days, for the Spirit said, “I have appointed thee each day for a year.” They were memorial of the past, and prophetic or significant of the future. They memorialized the iniquity of the nation, from their revolt against the house of David, in the fourth year of the reign of Rehoboam, to the nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar, B.C. 589, when the temple was burned, an interval of 390 years; and the iniquity of Judah from the fourth of Solomon, when the foundation of the temple was laid, to the fourth of Rehoboam, when his dominion was restricted to Judah and Benjamin. The whole 430 years marks the existence of the temple built by Solomon, a period of national transgression coextensive with the interval between the typical Confirmation of the Land-Covenant with Abraham, (Gen. 15:7–21,) and the end of the sojourning in Canaan and in Egypt—Exod. 12:40. This text is obscure as it stands in the English Version and the Hebrew, unless we read “who dwelt in Egypt,” as a parenthesis, thus, “Now the sojourning of the children of Israel (who dwelt in Egypt) was 430 years.” That is, “their sojourning was 430 years,” partly in Canaan and partly in Egypt, and is so expressed in the Septuagint, which, after Egypt, adds the words kai en ge chanaan, and in the land of Canaan.

But the 430 days of Ezekiel became typical of 430 years, during which the children of Israel “should eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them,” saith the Spirit—ver. 13. That is, as Ezekiel ate defiled bread for the 430 days he typically bore their iniquity, so the people scattered by Nebuchadnezzar should eat their defiled bread 430 years. History shows this to have been literally fulfilled in the condition of the nation from the burning of the temple to the recovery of independence under the Maccabees, B.C. 169. Thus, 430 years of transgression were visited with 430 years of national humiliation, the former memorialized by 430 sign-days, and the latter typified by the same.

The next instance that may be adduced is illustrative of a day representing years in prophecy, as found in Dan. 8:14. In the previous verse the question is asked, “For how long the vision of the Daily, the desolating transgression, to give both the holy (city) and the host, for a treading underfoot?” The answer is, “For an evening-morning of two thousand and three hundred, then the holy shall be avenged.” In Gen. 1:5, Moses says, “the evening and the morning were one day.” Here then is one day of 2300. This is a long day. Is it a day of 2300 days, weeks, months, or years? When the answer was given, the Holy City was nothing but heaps of ruins, and the host of Israel scattered abroad. Now 2300 days are six years, three months, and twenty days, but the period could not be literal days, because from no date that can be selected with the least plausibility did the things predicted come to pass at their expiration. The fulfilment belongs to the times of the Little Horn Power, and this did not appear in the Holy City until B.C. 63. No termination, therefore, before that event can be admitted. The only conclusion that can be arrived at is that it is a day of 2300 years. This long day was to form an interval at the expiration of which means would be instituted for the vindication of the Holy from violence. The years have expired, and "the time of the end" has come in which the vindication is to be consummated. It is a day containing the first, second, and part of the third, days of Hosea 6:2, where the Spirit represents Israel as saying, "AFTER two days will he revive us; in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight." These are days of 1000 years each; of the third of which 586 years have passed away. Some time in the third day of a 1000 years the twelve tribes of Israel are to be the subject of a national resurrection.

But we come to understand that the 2300 is a period of years from the evidence afforded in the prophecy of the Seventy Weeks. These relate to the Holy and the Host, and the suppression of the Daily, as well as the 2300. The seventy are evidently weeks of years; for they are stated as beginning at the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, and ending at the cutting off of Messiah the Prince, which was exactly 490 years to a day; and containing seven seventy times.

The Lord Jesus spoke according to the day for a year rule in Luke 13:32. When certain of the Pharisees said to him, "Get thee out and depart hence, for Herod will kill thee"; he replied, "Go ye, and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out demons, and I do cures to-day, and to-morrow, and the third day, I shall be perfected. Nevertheless, I must walk to-day and to-morrow, and the day following; for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem." In this passage a day is used six times for a year. Jesus ministered during the latter half of the seventieth week, or the last three years and a half of the 490. When the Pharisees warned him of Herod, there were yet three years for him to occupy; and these years he represented in his reply by as many days.

From these examples we see that a day, according to the nature of the subject treated of, may signify a year, a thousand years, or two thousand three hundred years. In Numb. 14 and Ezek. 4, for the Old Testament; and in Luke 13, and Apoc. 2, for the New, the day for a year cypher is clearly adopted. And I may remark here that the apocalyptic times can be correctly interpreted upon no other. It is true, that the day for a year cypherists have not hitherto succeeded in interpreting the book; but it is also as eminently true that those who affirm, that a day in symbolic writing means a literal day of twenty-four common hours, have as signally failed as their opponents. What they have urged in support of the tradition delivered to them by Romanist and German controversialists and critics, has so little weight in it, that it is not worth the time and space of a formal refutation in these pages. We shall therefore give the objectors the go-by, and when we treat of the apocalyptic times as they severally occur, show the correctness of the principle by the fitness and historical accuracy of the interpretation.

7. The Second Death.

The letter to the Presbytery and Heritage in Smyrna, concludes by promising those among them who overcome that they shall "not be hurt of the Second Death." The words of the passage are, "Be faithful until death, and I will give to thee the coronal wreath (stephanon) of the life. He having an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias. He that overcometh shall not be injured of the Second Death." Be faithful until death. They had a course of tribulation to run; for "it is through much tribulation that the saints must enter the kingdom of God" where the crown is to be obtained and worn—Acts 14:22. The kingdom and its crown of life and glory is "the prize." All the faithful in the times of the apostles knew this. Hence Paul, in 1 Cor. 9:24, writing to the christians in Corinth says, "Know ye not that they which run in a race,” the Athletes in the Grecian Games, “all run, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain. And every combatant is temperate in all things; but they are so that they may receive a perishable coronal wreath (stephanon); but we one incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so I fight, not as beating the air. But I keep my body under, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when having preached to others, I myself should be a castaway.” The pagans contended in their games for crowns or coronal wreaths of laurel; but the saints for wreaths of unfading leaves from the forest of the life pertaining to the Aion and the Paradise of Deity.

But they were not to expect the unfading wreath till after death; for they were exhorted to be faithful until death. They were, then, to expect to die; for the Fourth Beast would make war upon them in the tribulation of the “ten days,” and prevail against them, and put many of them to death. They would be injured by this death, with great suffering. But there is “a Second Death” that would be more tormenting and of more bitter anguish than the first. In the first, men and women “were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection. Others had trial of mockings, and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonments; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented (of whom the world was not worthy); they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect”—Heb. 11:35–40.

This first death was indeed terrible in all its forms. It laid its victims low “in the dust,” where it retains them “invisible” for centuries. But the apostle addressing the Saints, says to them, “death is yours”—1 Cor. 3:22. They do not belong to death, but on the contrary, death belongs to them. The Serpent hath bruized them in the heel, and they now lie wounded in prison. But the wound is not incurable; they have been wounded as it were to death, but their deadly wound will be healed; for in regard to them death hath lost its sting; for “the sting of death is sin,” and all their sins have been forgiven, so that it is impossible that they can be holden of it for ever. For them death hath no sting; and over them “Hades,” “Hell,” “the Grave,” or “Invisible,” has no final victory; for their death will be swallowed up of life and victory, through their Lord Jesus Anointed—1 Cor. 15:54–57; 2 Epist. 5:4. Then, though invisible in the dust, or in common parlance, dead, or scripturally, “asleep in Jesus,” they have “not received the promise,” neither can they, for God’s arrangement is that all the Saints shall with Christ be “glorified together”—Rom. 8:17, 32. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the prophets and apostles all, (Enoch, Moses, and Elijah, Jesus, and those who came out of their graves after his resurrection, alone excepted,) yet sleep in their graves waiting for redemption. But that redemption will not be revealed till all the saints are separated by “the obedience of faith” from among the Gentiles; for Paul testifies, that they are not to be made perfect without us; that is, if there be now a saint living who has not been glorified, then they have not been glorified, and will not be without him; for all are to be glorified and to receive the promise at the same time and together.

The Smyrneans have not, then, as yet, obtained the unfading wreath of the life of the Aion, for they have not been “made perfect,” and the Aion is not yet arrived. Those of them who were faithful until death, have conquered though they fell, and await the healing of their wounds, for the promise is to such, and such alone. They who could not endure the terrors of the death they had to face, were vanquished when they fell; or, if they rose from this death in accepting deliverance, they miss the “better resurrection,” and become obnoxious to the sorer and more fearful terrors of the Second Death. Though they will rise, it will be to condemnation—John 5:28, 29, not to the resurrection of the life. “Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection.” This is the great epoch of retribution for weal or woe; then, and not before, the living and the dead receive according to their works—kingdom, power, glory, and endless life for the saints; the Second Death for the faithless, fainthearted, and abominable.

The phrase “the Second Death,” occurs in three other places of the Apocalypse besides this. First, in Rev. 20:6, which saith, “Blessed and holy he that hath part in the first resurrection; over these the Second Death hath no power, but they shall be Priests of the Deity and of the Anointed, and shall reign with him a thousand years.” Here it is testified, that the Second Death hath no power over those who compose the First Resurrection: then consequently, it cannot injure the faithful Smyrneans who were faithful until death; for they are to have unfading life, and it has no power to affect that. They will be of the first rank in resurrection; so that their class being preeminent, the resurrection of which they are the subject, is “THE FIRST.” The post-resurrectional death has no power over them, and nothing pertaining to it can injure them. The First Death was at the control of the Diabolos; the Second is subject to them for the punishment of their enemies, and the enemies of God. It is styled “the second death” because multitudes, though not all, who will be injured by it, will have been previously dead. To them who have been dead, and afterwards rose again to life, and after that pass through its preliminary terrors and die again, it is a second death. To that class of the resurrected, and to all living contemporaries, it is THE Second Death, though the last may not have previously died at all. It is the resurrected who are condemned to it that characterize the death as “the second;” if no one who shall be subject to it had ever before died, it would not have been styled “the second;” it is the class that designates the death, and not the death the class.

The second text is in the fourteenth verse of the same chapter. Here we have the death symbolically defined in the words, “And the Death and the Invisible were cast into the lake of the fire;” for, says the Spirit, “this is the Second Death.” The consuming of the Death and the Invisible in the lake of a certain fire is the Second Death. What lake of fire is this? That mentioned in Rev. 19:20, into which the Beast and False Prophet are to be cast alive. And what are “the Death and the Invisible?” Whosoever is not found written in the book of the life—Rev. 20:15. “Death and the Invisible” are used metonymically for the subjects of them, who are to be postresurrectionally condemned to contemporary and conjoint destruction with the Beast and False Prophet, in the judgments by which these allied powers are to be utterly destroyed. “The Death and the Invisible” are the symbols of the unwritten. These, while still living souls, are “dead in trespasses and sins”—“miserable sinners” by their own confession; and when they cease to breathe, they “die in their sins;” and when they come out of the ground again, they rise in their sins; and as “the wages of sin is death,” they come out of where they have been concealed from human ken, heirs of the terrors of the Second Death. What more appropriate by which to represent these dead of the invisible, than by their inheritance, death and invisibility, past and for ever? Hence, unpardoned sinners doomed to the torment of the Second Death, and to subsequent exclusion from life for evermore, are symbolized by “the death and the Hades,” or Invisible, and are destroyed with the Beast of Eight Heads and its False Prophet, styled by Jesus, in Matt. 25:41, “the Diabolos and his Angels,” in the lake of the fire and brimstone, which he terms, to pur to aionion, THE AION-FIRE. The third place beside our text is Rev. 21:8. This informs us of the character of the dead “in the Death and the Invisible,” who are delivered up for the judgments of the Second Death. They are styled, “the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all the liars, whose part shall be in the lake being caused to burn with fire and brimstone, which is the Second Death.” This is a formidable and comprehensive list of criminals. Who of all the clergies of “Christendom,” and their pietistic followers will escape condemnation on the ground of exemption from the specifications of the text? Are they not all “Unbelievers?” Who among them believe “the Gospel of the Kingdom;” or, believing it, have obeyed it? Are they not all “fearful” to avow and preach what is not popular with the people? Is not whoremongering proverbially “the ministerial sin?” Like priest like people. Within the pale of the Old Mother of their churches we look for nothing else. And who are sorcerers, and liars, and inventors of lies, but sacramentarians of all sects, who practically give the lie to God in teaching the infusion of “spiritual grace” into the souls of faithless and ignorant infants and adults? “Without faith,” saith Paul, “it is impossible to please God;” and by the Spirit, we see from the text before us, the unbelieving are condemned to the fiery indignation and sore punishment of the Second Death.

But we forbear to anticipate more under this head. The epoch of the Second Death will present itself for consideration under the missions of the second and third angels of Rev. 14:8–11. Sufficient has been said here explanatory of the Second Death in connexion with the epistle to the ecclesia of the Smyrneans to make it intelligible. Not to be injured of the Second Death was great consolation to those who lived in constant jeopardy of life for the truth’s sake. They might be slain by the sword, but they would rise again; and wield the two-edged sword against the enemy in the execution of “the judgment written” (Psal. 149.); yet amid all the dangers, vicissitudes, and terrors of the crisis, they should “not be injured by the Second Death.”

SECTION 3. TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA IN PERGAMOS.

“AND TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA IN PERGAMOS WRITE: THESE THINGS SAITH HE HAVING THE SHARP TWO-EDGED LONGSWORD; I HAVE OBSERVED THY WORKS AND WHERE THOU DWELLEST, IN WHICH PLACE IS THE THRONE OF THE SATAN; BUT THOU HOLDEST FAST MY NAME, AND DENIEDST NOT MY FAITH EVEN IN THE DAYS IN WHICH ANTIPAS WAS MY FAITHFUL WITNESS, WHO WAS PUT TO DEATH WITH YOU WHERE THE SATAN SOJOURNS.

“But I have against thee a few things; that thou hast there men holding the teaching of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the sons of Israel, to eat idol-sacrifices and to fornicate. So hast thou also men holding the teaching of the Nikolaitans, which thing I hate.

“Change thy mind; but if not, I come to thee quickly, and will fight with them with the longsword of my mouth.

“He having an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias. To him that overcometh I will give to him to eat of the manna that hath been hidden; and I will give to him a white pebble, and upon the pebble a new name that hath been engraved, which no one knew except the receiver”—verses 12–17.

1. Typography of Pergamos.

This writing affords additional proof that “Angel” is used in these letters as a noun of plurality. For example, “Thou,” the Angel, “hast there,” in Pergamos, “men holding the teaching of Balaam:” and again, “So hast thou also men holding the teaching of the Nikolaitans.” These “men holding”—kratountas—were constituents of the symbolical Star-Angel, or Presbytery; whose influence was only evil and that continually, until at length the truth was extinguished in Pergamos through them. Pergamos was the name of a kingdom as well as of a city. The seat of government was in the city to whose “angel” the Spirit wrote by John. It was the metropolis of the Hellespontic Mysia, and the throne of the kings of the race of Attalus; and is situated about sixty-four miles to the north of Smyrna. It still retains its ancient name, which in the mouth of a Turk is pronounced Bergamo. There are some good buildings in the place, but more ruins.

Attalus king of Pergamos died B.C. 138, and was succeeded by his nephew Philometer, who governed the kingdom in a most pernicious and extravagant manner. He was scarcely seated upon the throne before he stained it with the blood of his nearest relations, and the best friends of his family. He caused foreign troops, whom he had expressly sent for from the most savage and cruel nations, to make them the instruments of his enormous barbarity, to execute whole families. Having vented his ferocity, he thenceforth ceased to show himself abroad. Cruelty and folly were the characteristics of his reign, which happily for his subjects lasted only five years.

Previous to his death, which occurred before the birth of Christ 133 years, he made a will, by which he appointed the Roman people his heirs. Eudemus of Pergamos carried this will to Rome. The principal article was expressed in these terms, "Let the Roman people inherit all my effects." They were not slow to take possession; but being resisted, a war ensued which lasted four years, at the end of which they had conquered Lydia, Caria, the Hellespont, Phrygia, in a word, all that composed the kingdom of Attalus, was reduced into a province of Rome, under the common name of ASIA in which the seven ecclesias were situated. This was consummated B.C. 126.

At the present time, the city is occupied chiefly by Turks, very few families calling themselves christian being left, and these but "dogs" and "swine." Bishop Newton, looking at Pergamos from an episcopalian point of view, says, "Here is only one church remaining, dedicated to St. Theodorus; and that the name of Christ is not wholly lost and forgotten in Pergamos, is owing to the care of the metropolitan of Smyrna, who continually sendeth hither a priest to perform the sacred offices. The cathedral church of St. John is buried in its own ruins; their Angel or bishop removed; and its fair pillars adorn the graves and rotten carcases of its destroyers, the Turk, who are esteemed about two or three thousand souls in number. Its other fine church, called Santa Sophia, is turned into a mosque, and daily profaned with the blasphemies of the false prophet. There are not in the whole town above a dozen or fifteen families of miserable christians, who till the ground to gain their bread, and live in the most abject and sordid servitude. There is the less reason to wonder at the wretched condition of this church, when we consider that it was the very "throne of Satan," that they "ran greedily after the error of Balaam, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication;" and that "they held the impure doctrines of the Nicolaitans, which Christ detested." It was denounced unto them to "repent, or else he would come unto them quickly, and fight against them," as the event evinces that he hath done." This is all the bishop has to tell us about Pergamos and the letter to its ecclesia. Its population is unequally divided between the Turks and Greeks, the former of whom, he says, "daily profane it with the blasphemies of the false prophet." To our mind, Pergamos would be more intensely profaned were it peopled exclusively with Greeks in the full tide of Byzantine prosperity. It was their "blasphemies," like the profanities of Sodom and Gomorrha, that brought upon them their overthrow, and the Turkish desolation. Instead of adhering to the truth, they worshipped demons called "St. Theodore" and "Santa Sophia," to whom they dedicated bazaars, called "churches," for the sale therein of clerical merchandize. The remnant are indeed "miserable christians," with nothing of christianity but the name.

2. The Throne of the Satan.

Pergamos having been, as we have seen, the metropolis of the kingdom in whose territory the seven ecclesias were situated, was fitly selected by the Spirit as the place of the throne of the Satan. From the writing to the ecclesia there, it would appear that the clerical influence was stronger there than in any other of the seven. They were Balaamites and Nikolaitans; teaching idolatrous practices, committing spiritual abomination, and Judaizers and Gnostics. The miniature kingdom of Pergamos in its connection with christianity had become the Kingdom of the Clergy, whose power in the days of John, was enthroned in the city of that name being opposed both to State-Paganism and to apostolic christianity. It was the head-quarters of the Synagogue of the Satan, who, like its symbolical predecessor, Philometer, left all its effects to Rome.

The seven apocalyptic epistles illustrate "the things that are"—the things that do exist while the Spirit speaks through John; the things constituting the christendom of the kingdom of Pergamos at the end of the first century, and in the beginning of the second. Pergamos was the throne of the clerical Satan as Rome is at this day; for Rome became the heir of all the effects of those in Pergamos who held the teaching of Balaam and of the Nikolaitans. But we shall not enter further at present into the consideration of the Pergamian Christendom a type of the Greco-Latin Christendom at the apocalypse of Christ in power and great glory until I have expounded in detail what remains peculiar to the ecclesias yet to be discoursed of.

Having dictated to John the superscription of the epistle as “To the Angel of the Ecclesia in Pergamos,” the Spirit in telling him to “write what follows, saith of himself that he is “He having the sharp two edged longsword.” The reader can here refer to what I have already written upon the saying, “Out of his mouth a sharp two-eged sword,” on page 183. In addition to what is there said, we may remind the reader that Paul testifies that “there is One Body and One Spirit”—Eph. 4:4. The one Spirit is sometimes in singular, and at other times in plural, manifestation. As the apocalyptic Son of Man in plurality, he speaks “as the sound of many waters;” but in speaking as one person, as the head and mouth of the one body, it is the glorified Jesus speaking, whom Paul styles “the Lord the Spirit,” “the last Adam a life-imparting spirit,” “the second man, the Lord from heaven”—1 Cor. 15:45, 47. The Lord Jesus, then, here styles himself paraphrastically, “He having the sharp two-edged longsword,” which is the word or testimony of Deity; for “the spirit is the truth.” “I am the truth,” said Jesus in discourse; and he discoursed by the Spirit: and when the Spirit raised him from the dead, he converted him into solid, substantial, and corporeal spirit; so that Jesus and the Spirit became One and Indivisible. The sword that he hath is styled rhomphaia. There are two words used in the apocalypse for our word sword. Being different words we judge that their signification is diverse. The other word is machaira. The first occurs in chap. 1:16; 2:12, 16; 6:8; 19:15, 21: the second, in ch. 6:4; 13:10, 14. The rhomphaia was the longsword used by the Thracians; while the machaira was a short sword, or sabre, as opposed to xiphos, the straight sword. The machaira was the Roman military sword, the badge of office worn by the Imperial Lieutenant, to whom the power of the sword was delegated by the Emperor. This was not the sword with which he, the Spirit, threatened the Angel of the ecclesia in Pergamos, when he declared he would fight against the Balaamites and Nikolaitans among them “with the longsword of his mouth.” This was the word-sword, a sharper one than a steel-sword; for it destroys the soul eternally, slays it out of existence, when wielded against it.

3. “The Place the Satan Inhabits.”

In the time of “the things which are” Pergamos was the place the Satan dwelt in. The reader can refresh his mind concerning the Satan by turning to a former page. The Satan in Pergamos, as elsewhere, was the Church Hierarchy claiming to be apostles and ambassadors of Jesus Christ, leading away disciples after them, and teaching perverse things, by which the gospel of the kingdom and its obedience as inculcated by Jesus and his apostles, were abolished. They dwelt in Pergamos in full force; and therefore, in the days of John, it was apocalyptically represented as “the throne of the Satan.” These of the Satan did their best to separate the Saints from “the Name,” and from “the Faith” of the Spirit. Nevertheless, when John wrote, though the “Angel” had unfaithful constituents, yet the majority were true. The Angel-Presbytery dwelt side by side with the Satan. It was in daily communication with them; “contending for the faith once for all delivered to the saints,” as the true believers have done, and are doing to this day in tribulation and reproach. Still they “held fast the Spirit’s name and denied not his faith;” in other words, they were faithful to “the truth as it is in Jesus.”

The power of this Church—Satan, the rival and subsequent destroyer of the One body of Christ—destroyer of its tranquility and happiness for the time being—was enthroned in Pergamos, where they were more influential than the priests of the established superstition. This appears from Pliny’s testimony concerning the state of things in his letter to Trajan, A.D. 106, which is already before the reader on page 254. Speaking of christianity as a whole (for the pagans made no distinction between Apostolic Christianity and the rising Apostasy) the Roman governor of Bithynia says, "The contagion of the superstition hath spread not only through cities, but even villages, and the country." Still he did not despair of suppressing it; and on expressing his hope gives us to know the depths in which he found idolatry when he first came to Anatolia. "Not that I think it impossible," saith he, "to check and correct it. The success of my endeavours hitherto forbids such desponding thoughts; for the temples, once almost desolate, begin to be frequented; and the sacred solemnities, which had long been intermitted, are now attended afresh; and the sacrificial victims are now sold everywhere, which once could scarcely find a purchaser." This is the testimony of a pagan ruler about four years after the death of the apostle John. In A.D. 106, the temples were almost desolate, idolatrous rites suspended, and "things sacrificed unto idols" could scarcely find any one to purchase them for food. But when Pliny came to Anatolia a considerable change was effected by his measures in favor of the old superstition. Many persons who had renounced idolatry, he says, returned to its abominations. These were called christians. They styled themselves such, and were so regarded by the pagans; but not by the Spirit, and those who held fast his name and had not denied his faith. They were such christians as "sinners of the world" call christians in our day. They were the catholics, protestants, and sectarians of the second century, "the synagogue of the Satan," the apostasy in embryo, ramifying and striking out its roots in all the habitable. The type of their principles was that of "easy virtue;" a very "charitable" community who would receive Socrates, Plato, and "the best of the heathen," into their synagogue, and practice heathen customs, if their contemporaries would give honor to Christ, and forego the worship of images. On this principle variously expressed, they so popularized christianity as to make it palatable to the heathen mind, and to produce the effect deplored by Pliny. But he preferred pure and unmixed Paganism to the semiheathenism of the Satan's synagogue, whose system of superstition had no images of gods, no visible altar, and no bloody sacrifices. He therefore commanded christians to frequent the temples, to attend to "the sacred solemnities," and to purchase the idol sacrifices for food, upon pain of death. Many obeyed, but others were in his judgment sullenly and inflexibly obstinate. These were they whom the Spirit commends saying, "Thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith." Pliny tried all he could to compel them. He commanded them to "perform sacred rites with wine and frankincense, to repeat after him an invocation of the gods, and of the emperor's image and to execrate Christ." To do this would have been to release their hold of his name and to deny his faith; which, Pliny says, he had been told "a real christian can never be compelled to do." From this it is evident that the distinction existed in John's day, between "real christians" and "christians." The name christian comprehended all the adherents of Balaam and Jezebel, whether Ebionites, Gnostics, or by whatever name or denomination of heresy they might be known. The "real christians" had no fellowship with such; though among them, as in Pergamos, the poison of the serpent might be detected. The ecclesia and "the synagogue of the Satan" were institutions as distinct as they are now; for in the nineteenth century a true believer of the gospel of the kingdom is against all who have not obeyed the same; yet a congregation of "real christians" may have in it some who are not true, as at Pergamos; these will sooner or later show themselves, for their sympathies are fleshly, and they become impatient of principles which they regard as "harsh, uncharitable, and severe."

Such was the state of things in the place where the Satan dwelt in the days of John and Pliny, who were contemporaries. But though the Satan may still be found in Pergamos, or Bergamo, installed in the spiritual bazaars dedicated to St. Theodore and Santa Sophia; in which, "the Right Reverend Father in God, Thomas Newton, D.D., Bishop of Bristol," a "lord spiritual" of their synagogue, informs us the Greek Metropolitan of Smyrna is careful to have "the sacred offices" performed by "a priest whom he continually sendeth there, and by which performance the name of Christ is not wholly lost or forgotten in Pergamos”—though this be so, “the throne of the Satan” hath long since been removed. It was only temporarily in Pergamos, until a more convenient season; when this should arrive the generation of the Satan then existing would plant it in a place more fitting for dominion. “Ye know,” said Paul to his contemporaries, “what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time.” The “He” he refers to here in 2 Thess. 2:6, is A POWER, not an isolated individual—a Power which is the subject of the prophecy in Dan. 11:36–39. This power Daniel styles “the King that shall do according to his will;” and Paul terms it “that lawless one whose coming is after the working of the Satan.” The Satan here is evidently a christian agency; that is, a working under the christian name—“THE MYSTERY OF INIQUITY already working” to the perversion of the gospel Paul preached. It was working “with all power, and signs and lying wonders;” and those in Pergamos, and elsewhere, who held the doctrine of Balaam, and the teaching of the Nikolaitans, and who possessed “spirits,” or spiritual gifts, were the workers, who prostituted their gifts to the confirmation of the teaching they promulgated in opposition to the apostles. They worked “with all the deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish,” and therefore they were styled “deceitful workers.” They were like the Mormons of our time, who proclaim themselves to be “christians;” profess to believe in Jesus as the Son of God and Christ; in short, to believe all that “orthodox christians” approve; but with all their verbiage, having a political purpose to effect as the great end of all their enterprize. If they could carry this purpose into effect, they would abolish the constitution of the United States, and set up a kingdom which should rule the country according to the principles of Mormonism. But every one knows “what withholdeth,” namely, the power of the Union.

I have selected the Mormons as an example illustrative of the purpose and working of the generation of the Satan contemporary with the apostles, because they occupy a relation to the United States more resembling that of the Christians of the first, second, and third centuries to the Pagan-Roman government, than any other sect of Satan’s synagogue at present extant. They began their career with a doctrine, the vindication of whose scripturality seemed to occupy all their energies. But as they increased their proselytes, certain ambitious demagogues among them conceived the idea of turning the speculation to present political account. In a few years they had some two thousand votes to dispose of to any of the political factions in being, able and willing to promote their schemes. They proselyted to Mormonism to increase their political influence with the factions, whose leaders and wireworkers would as soon profess this as any other ism, if it would help them to place, profit, and power. By working thus, though “persecuted,” they have become a Power, which this government finds difficult to control. It began with a doctrine, it ends, when it thinks itself sufficiently strong, with an appeal to the sword. And thus it was in the first three centuries in the Roman empire. Christianity had its ambitious demagogues, and Rome its factions, and hypocritical and dishonest politicians. The factions contended for supreme power, and to obtain it, the politicians would as soon profess the christianity of Satan’s syngogue, as the paganism of the Diabolos. At first, the “ministers of the Satan” were zealous for doctrines, and for a righteousness of law and gospel commixed. Notwithstanding the opposition they encountered from the apostles and all real Christians, their numbers increased. Starting originally in their career as constituents of the elderships, they obtained position and a vantage ground; and with ability to work signs and wonders, which became “lying wonders,” because used for the confirmation of “a lie,” which became “a strong delusion” in all it took possession of. “Of your own selves,” said Paul to those of the Ephesian Star-Angel endowed with spiritual gifts, “shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them.” Their numbers increased from this source, and by direct conversion to their “perverse things” from among the Jews and pagans; so that the apostolic party were placed in the minority, where it has remained to this day.

In two hundred and eighty years from the Pentecost of A.D. 33, the adherents of the perverse things of the Apostasy had become sufficiently numerous and influential to be an object of fear to the constituted authorities, and of hope to the aspirant of supreme power that might be fortunate enough to obtain their cooperation. They had got rid of the old-fashioned doctrine of non-resistance and passive obedience taught by Paul; and they were now ready to draw the sword, and fight for empire under the first champion who should present with claims upon their support. The “coming man” appeared A.D. 306, in the character of a worshipper of the sun, named Constantine. This pagan aspirant, ambitious of the supreme and sole dominion of the Roman Habitable, then ruled by six emperors, came to an understanding with “the Christian Hierarchy” of the Satan, which, for the sake of distinguishing it from the real christian community, may be styled “catholic.” Constantine and the Catholics made common cause to remove “what withholdeth” by force of arms, that their own Satanism might be enthroned. After a conflict of six or seven years, they succeeded in planting the Cross, the symbol of the New Power, upon the Capitol in Rome. In consummating this, the Satan had worked as they have since worked in making Protestantism sovereign in Germany, Britain, and the United Provinces. The Satan’s throne in the little kingdom of Pergamos was transferred to Rome, the symbol of whose imperialism was “the Dragon”—“purpureum signum draconis,” the purple red ensign of the dragon.

But “the throne of the Satan,” and the metropolis the Satan inhabited, were not established in the city of the Tiber. The Roman dominion had become the Satan’s; but at the time of this great revolution, the city of Rome had become confounded with the dependent kingdoms which had once acknowledged her supremacy. In reference to this, Gibbon remarks, that “after the defeat and abdication of Licinius, his victorious rival, Constantine, proceeded to lay the foundations of a city destined to reign in future times the Mistress of the East. The motives, whether of pride or of policy, which first induced Diocletian to withdraw himself from the ancient seat of government, (on the Tiber,) had acquired additional weight by the example of his successors, and the habits of forty years. Rome was insensibly confounded with the dependent kingdoms which had once acknowledged her supremacy; and the country of the Caesars was viewed with cold indifference by a martial prince like Constantine, born in the neighborhood of the Danube, educated in the courts and armies of Asia, and invested with the purple by the legions of Britain. The Italians, who had received him as their deliverer, submissively obeyed the edicts which he sometimes condescended to address to the Senate and People of Rome; but they were seldom honored with the presence of their new sovereign. During the vigor of his age, Constantine according to the various exigences of peace or war, moved with slow dignity, or active dilligence, along the frontiers of his extensive dominions; and was always prepared to take the field either against a foreign or a domestic enemy. But as he gradually reached the summit of prosperity and the decline of life, he began to meditate the design of fixing, in a more permanent station, the strength as well as the majesty of the throne. In the choice of an advantageous situation, he preferred the confines of Europe and Asia. Diocletian had selected and embellished the residence of Nicomedia, (about sixty-five miles east of Constantinople, and one hundred and fifty north of Pergamos). “But the memory of Diocletian was justly abhorred by the protector of the Church; and Constantine was not insensible to the ambition of founding a city which might perpetuate the glory of his own name. During the late operations of the war against Licinius, he had sufficient opportunity to contemplate, both as a soldier and as a statesman, the incomparable position of Byzantium; and to observe how strongly it was guarded by nature against a hostile attack, whilst it was accessible on every side to the benefits of commercial intercourse. He determined, therefore, to make the site occupied by Byzantium the locality of the Capital, the policy, and the religion of the Satan, who had helped him in his wars. In speaking of the foundation of the city which was henceforth to be called Constantinople, Gibbon further remarks that “the prospect of beauty, of safety, and of wealth, united in a single spot, was sufficient to justify the choice of Constantine. But as some decent mixture of prodigy and fable has, in every age, been supposed to reflect a becoming majesty on the origin of great cities, the Emperor was desirous of ascribing his resolution not so much to the uncertain counsels of human policy, as to the infallible and eternal decrees of divine wisdom. In one of his laws he has been careful to instruct posterity, that, in obedience to the commands of God, he laid the everlasting foundations of Constantinople: and though he has not condescended to relate in what manner the celestial inspiration was communicated to his mind, the defect of his modest silence has been liberally supplied by the ingenuity of succeeding writers, who describe the nocturnal vision which appeared to the fancy of Constantine, as he slept within the walls of Byzantium. The tutelar genius of the city, a venerable matron sinking under the weight of years and infirmities, was suddenly transformed into a blooming maid, whom his own hands adorned with all the symbols of imperial greatness. The monarch awoke, interpreted the auspicious omen, and obeyed, without hesitation, the will of heaven. The day which gave birth to a city or colony was celebrated by the Romans with such ceremonies as had been ordained by a generous superstition; and though Constantine might omit some rites which savored too strongly of their pagan origin, yet he was anxious to leave a deep impression of hope and respect on the minds of the spectators. On foot, with lance in his hand, the emperor himself led the solemn procession, and directed the line, which was traced as the boundary of the destined Capital; till the growing circumference was observed with astonishment by the assistants, who at length ventured to observe that he had already exceeded the most ample measure of a great city. ‘I shall still advance,’ replied Constantine, ‘till HE, the invisible guide who marches before me, thinks proper to stop.’ “

Constantinople was dedicated A.D. 330, or thereabout. Its foundation commemorates the union of the Greek Catholic Satan with the Roman Diabolos, whose ensign we have remarked, on the authority of Ammianus Marcellinus, a pagan writer, was the purple red dragon. Constantine made his city a partaker of the throne of the Roman Majesty—the Emperor and his Court residing on the Bosphorus, and the Senate on the Tiber. In process of centuries, however, the Dragon ceded his throne on the Tiber to the Beast of the Sea—Rev. 13:2; from which time Constantinople became alone the throne of the power whose symbolical title is “the Dragon, the Old Serpent, which is Diabolos and Satan”—Rev. 20:2. From these premises it will be seen that, before the Apostasy was allied with the civil power its throne was in Pergamos, a little over two hundred miles south by west of Constantinople. It was there, in fact; but only temporarily, until it could plant itself in the place appointed for it. In due time Constantinople was built, and the Throne of the Apostasy was erected there. At present, the place of the Satan’s throne is provisionally occupied by a race which does not belong to the apocalyptic synagogue of the Satan. The Satan is ecclesiastically Greek. They were Greek in Pergamos; Greek in Constantinople for more than a thousand years; and must be Greek there again when the crisis of binding the Dragon, or Satan, shall have arrived. Then will the Spirit, in the full and antitypical import of the prediction, “come quickly, and fight against them with the sword of his mouth.”

4. “My Name.”

After reminding the Angel-Star of the Ecclesia in Pergamos that they dwelt where the throne of the Satan then was, the Spirit tells them that one of their works he had observed was, that they held fast his Name. This was a great thing in the midst of paganism, and the semiheathenism of the apostasy, with all its sanctimonious pretensions on every side.

In regard to this “Name,” we have already offered some remarks on page 98, to which the reader is referred. In addition to what is there written, it may be stated that the Spirit saith in Isai. 42:8, “I (am) Yahweh; this is my name.” The Spirit, then, declaring this to be his name, when he says that the saints in Pergamos held fast to it, the testimony is tantamount to saying, “thou holdest fast my name, Yahweh.”

In our remarks on “Jesus,” referred to above, we have spoken of the etymology of this name. We repeat that it signifies He shall be: and in the form אֲנִי יְהוֹה ani Yahweh, signifies, “I, the Spirit, am He who shall be.” The individual who was to be—he who was promised to Eve in Gen. 3:15; to Abraham in Gen. 15:4; 21:12; to Judah in Gen. 49:10; to David in 2 Sam. 7:12–14; Isai. 9:6, 7—was the personage indicated by Yahweh He shall be, styled, in Hebrew “the Messiah;” in Greek, “the Christ;” and in English, “the Anointed.” Now, the Spirit said by the prophets, I shall be he; and here, in the apocalypse, we find the Spirit and Jesus speaking as one.

Now, the “Seed of Abraham,” genealogically considered, must partake of Abraham’s nature—must partake of flesh and blood. The Spirit, therefore, in effect said, I shall become flesh and blood. But how could this be? The answer to this is, that the fact depends not upon our ability to explain the mode in which spirit may be elaborated into flesh and blood. The Bible testifies that all things are out of Deity, who is spirit. The Eternal Power formed Adam out of dust. Spirit is the basis of all created things, and, according to the will of the Creator, becomes rock, dust, sea, vegetable, and animal, in all their diversity of form and beauty. All the resurrected who shall be approved, will become spirit; “for that which has been begotten of the Spirit is spirit”—begotten subsequently to their post-resurrectional appearance at Christ’s tribunal. If, then, flesh and blood thus become spirit, (and some flesh and blood will become spirit without tasting of death, Paul says,) why may not spirit become flesh and blood? It is but a reversal of results from a change of process.

The name, then, in connection with the testimony of the prophets, indicates a conversion of Spirit into flesh and blood, developed by the formative power of the Eternal, independently of and apart from the will of man. In the case of the first Adam, spirit, as it were leaven, mingled formatively with dust, and a flesh and blood man was developed, styled “Son of God;” but in the case of the second Adam, spirit acted upon the nervous system of Mary, as it had previously done upon Sarah, and Hannah, but to a further degree (for in these, it had only imparted strength for conception according to nature) in that it operated germinatively upon the contents of Mary’s ovarium; and caused an ovum, or “seed of the woman,” to be deposited in her womb. Here, as the spirit-germ of the second man it remained the usual “set time,” subject to the laws of the animal economy. At the appointed time it was born the babe of Bethlehem; and duly named JESUS, or He shall be who shall save—both “Son of God,” and “Son of Man,” which the first Adam was not. Adam was Son of God and Son of the Dust; Jesus was Son of God and Son of Man, being a creation of the Eternal Power from the substance of David’s daughter.

Such was the babe Jesus in preparation for the Sacrificial Man. His germination was irrespective of the lust of the flesh, the propensity excited in the first Adam by his guilty companion, and of which Cain was the fruit. In this particular, the generation of Jesus was different from that of all other men. If Joseph had been his father, he would have been born of blood, of the will of the flesh, and of man, instead of the Spirit. He would have been son of man only, and not Son of God; and consequently would not have answered to the testimony of the name.

The Yahweh-Name, then, presents itself to us in prophecy and in history. To Israel it is incommunicable so long as they reject Jesus; for he is the historical and practical personal illustration of it. The Yahweh-Name in prophecy comprehends the things concerning the Christ in his birth, life, sufferings, resurrection, and glory. To understand the Yahweh-Name, as exhibited in the writings of the prophets, is to “know the joyful sound”—to believe “the gospel of the Deity which he had promised before by the prophets in the holy scriptures,” concerning his Son the Christ, made of the seed of David according to flesh, and constituted son of Deity in power according to spirit of holiness—Rom. 1:1–4: and to understand the same name historically and doctrinally expounded, as it is in the New Testament, is to understand “the things concerning the kingdom of the Deity, and the name of Jesus Anointed” of the Spirit—Acts 8:12. In the teaching of Jesus “the name,” “the gospel,” and “the kingdom of the Deity,” are interchangeably used. Thus in Matt. 19:29, he says, that every one who forsaketh any thing "for my name's sake" shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit aion-life;" in Mark. 10:29, he says, that there is no man that hath left any thing "for my sake and the Gospel's," but he shall receive an hundred fold in this time with persecutions; and in the coming Aion Life aionian;" and in Luke 18:29, he says, there is no man that hath left any thing "for the kingdom of the Deity's sake," who shall not receive manifold more in this time, and in the Aion to come life aionian." Hence, to hold fast the Spirit's Name and not to deny his faith, is to be "rooted and grounded in the faith, and not to be moved away from the hope of the gospel," as in the case of the Pergamians. They were suffering tribulation for the kingdom and glory of the Deity, to which they had been invited by the gospel of the name they had obeyed. They held it fast as their hope; and, as Pliny testifies, no power or terror could compel them to abandon the position they had assumed in regard to it.

Not so, however, the Satan; they did not hold fast the name, and did deny the faith. As we have seen in treating of the Nikolaitanes, they denied that Christ had come in flesh; the consequence was that they logically rendered the Yahweh-Name ineffectual to the remission of sin: for if Christ did not come in the flesh and blood nature common to all mankind, the condemnation of sin in the flesh which had sinned, as represented in the lambs slain from the foundation of the world, could not have occurred when he was crucified; and moreover, if his body had not been identical with ours, he could not have borne the sins of his brethren, the saints, to the cross. The denial of his true and proper humanity made him logically unfit for a sacrificial man, by whose stripes obedient believers should be healed.

The sin-covering efficacy of the Yahweh-Name depended upon the person bearing it being a flesh and blood Messiah; for "without the shedding of blood there is no remission." The Spirit plainly testifies this in the prophets and apostles. In Lev. 17:11, he saith, "I have given the blood to you upon the altar for a covering upon your souls; for the blood itself shall cover the soul." The reason given for blood being thus used is "because the soul of the flesh is in the very blood." The soul, nephesh, or life is in the blood. The blood contains or covers it, as it were; and as it is a question of life or death—life forfeited for sin, the wages of which is death—that is appointed to cover sin which covers life, namely, the blood. In this sense, "the life, or soul, of all flesh is the blood thereof;" because the vitality of all animals is in the blood. Hence, a bloodless man could not, upon the principles of the divine law, be a covering for sin. He must have real blood in his veins containing life, as in redeeming flesh and blood nature from death, he had to give the same sort of life for the life to be redeemed.

Now the blood of Jesus was more precious than the life-blood of any other man. If it had not been so, it would have been inadequate to the purchase of life for the world. The Spirit testifies in David, that there is no man rich enough to redeem his brother, nor to give God a ransom for his soul that it should live forever, and not see corruption; "for," he says, "the redemption of their soul will be costly, and it ceaseth to the Olahm"—Psal. 49:6–9. If the wealthiest be impotent for the redemption of one soul, how precious must the blood of the Yahweh-Name be, seeing that it can ransom "a great multitude which no man can number!"—Rev. 7:9. The blood of Jesus was the only blood of all the generations of Adam, that had not been generated by the lust of the flesh; and which had not energized a man to the commission of sin. Jesus was an unblemished man, without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; for "he was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners."

This precious "blood of sprinkling, which speaks better things than the blood of Abel," the sanctifying blood of the covenant shed for the remission of the sins of many, (Heb. 12:24; 10:29, 22; Matt. 26:28), is the principle which makes the Yahweh-Name sin-cleansing, or a covering for the hiding of sin, so that the believer upon whom the name is invoked, may have "no more conscience of sins," or, as Peter expresses it, may have "the answer of a good conscience toward God"—1 Pet. 3:21.

The purifying or sanctifying property of the Yahweh-Name being connected with bloodshedding, as prefigured in the law, necessitates the death of him who becomes the medium of its manifestation. The prophetic testimony is direct upon this point. “Thou, O Serpent,” said the Spirit, “shalt bruise the heel of the Woman’s Seed”—Gen. 3:15. And this seed was to come out of Abraham’s son, as it is written “in Isaac a Seed shall be chosen for thee;” and to show that he was to be a sacrificial man, the Elohim told him to “offer him for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains of the land of Moriah which should be shown.” In obedience to this command, Abraham travelled with Isaac a journey of three days, until they arrived at the mountain where the temple afterwards stood. He laid upon Isaac the wood upon which he was to be bound, and led him as a lamb to the slaughter. Having erected an altar, he laid him thereon upon the wood, and took the knife to slay him. This he would have done, but for the interference of heaven. God ordered him to spare Isaac, and to finish the offering by slaying a ram in his place. The release of Isaac was a resurrection to life—a type of the future literal resurrection of the Seed to descend from him—Gen. 21:12; 22:6, 9, 13. This was the death and resurrection of the Yahweh-Name bearer represented to Abraham dramatically. It taught him, that the Seed to be chosen for him, who was to “possess the gate of His enemies, and in whom all the nations of the earth shall be blessed,” should suffer a violent death, and then rise again to fulfil his destiny. Abraham saw this, and therefore named the place of the offering Yahweh-Yireh, He who shall be will provide—“In the mount Yahweh shall be seen”—ver. 14.

The prophets are full of testimony illustrative of this remarkable representation. “The Songs of Zion” treat largely of the sufferings of the Spirit’s name. The Spirit in David says, “they pierced my hands and my feet”—Psal. 22:16; and “He shall be filled with iron and the shaft of a spear”—2 Sam. 23:7; and in Dan. 9:26, “Messiah shall be cut off;” and in Isa. 53, speaking of the Deity’s “righteous servant,” the Spirit saith, “Yahweh has caused to lay upon Him the iniquity of us all * * * for the transgression of my people was he stricken; when thou shalt make a trespass-offering of his nephesh, soul,” or life, “he shall see a seed; * * * through his knowledge shall my righteous servant make a justification for many; and he shall bear their iniquities. Therefore I will apportion to him among the great and the mighty; he shall divide the spoil; because that he hath poured out his nephesh or soul (contained in the blood) unto death.”

Such was to be Name of the Christ in fact and doctrine—a personage, the descendant and antitype of Isaac, in his sacrifice and resurrection, who should be the Sin-Bearer and Justifier of his people, through their belief of the things, or knowledge concerning him. When Jesus appeared, and was crucified and rose again, the Yahweh-Name was no longer absolutely a testimony to be fulfilled; it became a living reality—the Truth Incarnate; and “the Name of Christ” became “the Name of Jesus Christ;” and all that is predicted of the Spirit’s Name is to be fulfilled in Jesus and his Brethren.

The New Testament treats very largely of the mystery of the Name. After Jesus rose from the dead, and before his assumption to the right hand of power, the kingdom and the Name were the especial topics of conversation between him and his disciples. They understood the doctrine of the kingdom better than of the name, until he opened their understandings that they might understand the scriptures of the prophets—Luke 24:45. These in regard to the death, burial, resurrection, and assumption of the Name-Bearer, and the doctrinal use to be made of them, had been hid from their eyes—Luke 18:31–34. But when he had risen, the time had come to remove the veil, which still remains upon the understandings of all who do not comprehend “the truth as it is in Jesus.” “O fools,” said he to two of them, “and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken; ought not the Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself”—Luke 24:25. On a subsequent occasion, when all of them were convened, he said, that according as it was written in the prophets, “it behoved the Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead on the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached IN HIS NAME among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem”—vers. 44–47. “In his name” is here an all-important phrase, for apart from this great name, there is no repentance nor remission of sins for Jew or Gentile. “There is salvation in no other; for,” continues the Spirit in Peter, “there is none other Name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved”—Acts 4:12; and again, he said, “to Him give all the prophets testimony, that whosoever believeth into him, shall receive remission of sins THROUGH HIS NAME”—ch. 10:43. The Name is expressive of a personal existence “among men.” In its first sojourn here, though it was the Deity’s Name, it was a name of no reputation; it was without rule, being the name of a servant, or a humiliated, oppressed, and afflicted man, absolutely obedient to the will of the Deity, even unto the death of the cross. Wherefore “God also,” says Paul, in Phil. 2:9, “hath highly exalted him, and given him a Name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow of heavenlies and of earthlies, and of subterraneans; and every tongue confess that Jesus Anointed is Lord to the glory of Deity the Father.”

In this highly exalted name are repentance and remission of sins alone to be found. A man may be ever so intelligent in the scriptures, ever so excellently and piously disposed, ever so firmly convinced of “the truth as it is in Jesus,” still, if he have not been added to this name—if he have not laid hold upon it according to divine appointment—(and in no other way can it be laid hold of)—he is the subject neither of “repentance” nor “remission of sins;” and furthermore, if having laid hold of it, he follow not the example of the faithful in Pergamos, and hold it fast, the Spirit will “fight against him with the sword of his mouth.”

By grace are men saved, through faith that works by love, and purifies the heart—Eph. 2:8; Gal. 5:8; Acts 15:9. Assuming then, that a sinner “believes the things of the Kingdom of the Deity and of the Name of Jesus Anointed;” and that he has fallen in love with them; and that, loving what he believes, and the effect of this affectionate belief, or “believing with the heart,” has been to alienate his affections from “the pleasures of sin,” and “earthly things;” and has caused him to set them upon the things anew, or exalted, where the Christ is on the right hand of the Deity sitting; assuming this to be the state of his mind and disposition, he is then in a condition to receive repentance, and to be saved from his past sins, and to obtain a right to eternal life, through the Name of Jesus Anointed, who is “the Lord the Spirit.” But, if the sinner have not this affectionate belief, he can receive nothing through the name; because he has no faith for justification, and no disposition such as Abraham had, to be reckoned for repentance. Without the faith that works by love and purifies the heart, it is impossible to please the Deity.

On the day of Pentecost, in the thirty-sixth year from the birth of Jesus, Peter addressed three thousand Jews, whose understandings and affections had been thus prepared by the things they believed. When they asked Peter, saying, “What shall we do?” he replied, not knowing as yet, what their convictions were, “Change ye your mind, and every one of you be immersed upon the Name of Jesus Anointed INTO remission of sins.” They were to be immersed epi to onomati, upon and for the name of Jesus Anointed; because the gospel of the kingdom was preached to them to separate them from that evil generation of Israel “for the name;” as it was afterwards preached to the gentiles for the same purpose—“to take out of the nations a people, epi to onomati, for the name of him”—Acts 15:14. They were immersed “for” this name that they might constitute a part of this name; for it is a name of multitude, all of whose constituents are “IN Jesus Christ; in other words, “in Deity the Father, and the Lord Jesus Anointed”—1 Thess. 1:1. For a sinner, then, affectionately believing the truth, to be “immersed for the name,” is for him to be added to the name of Deity; that, when that Divine Name is complete, he with Jesus may be manifested in power and great glory. “The righteousness of God through Jesus Christ’s faith is eis, for all and epi, upon all the believing”—Rom. 3:22.

This manifestation is the ultimate purpose of his addition to this name; but there is also a present reason and advantage resulting therefrom. “Be every one of you,” said Peter, “immersed upon the Name of Jesus Anointed INTO remission of sins.” When added to the name, the immersed believer is “en to onomati” In the name (Acts 10:48) as a man is in a robe when he has put it on. The name is regarded as a covering by which his “sin is covered”—Psal. 32:1, 2. Now, immersion is the divinely appointed action by which a true believer is, and a true believer only can be, united, added, or married to the name; and in order to this, that he may be “in the name,” it is appointed for him to be immersed “eis, INTO, or for, the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit”—a formula which is equivalent to the phrase, “the Name of Jesus Anointed;” for Jesus Anointed is the Father manifested in the Son, Jesus, by Holy Spirit; in other words, DEITY MANIFESTED IN FLESH.

The believing and rejoicing sinner, then, who has followed the example of the Samaritans in faith and practice (Acts 8:12) is immersed in water “upon,” “for” and “into” the name, which is the same as being immersed into remission of sins. The Spirit, the water, and the blood are the three witnesses on the earth that are convergent into the one name—1 Jno. 5:8. “The spirit” which “is the truth,” works in him, who understands it, to believe, to will, and to do; “the water” is the medium of induction into the name; and no one since Pentecost, A.D. 35, can prove that he has been added to the sin-covering name, who has not passed through the water. “Except a man be born ex, out of water and spirit,” saith the King of Israel, “he cannot enter into the Kingdom of the Deity”—Jno. 3:5. The water will not bear witness in favor of the unwashed. The third witness is “the blood.” By faith in the testimony concerning the sin-covering efficacy of the blood of Jesus, the sinner who believes the covenanted promises, is brought into sacrificial relation thereto. By faith in the testimony of Jesus he believes that sin was condemned in his flesh when he was crucified; that his blood is the blood of the New, or Abrahamic, Covenant by which it was dedicated, shed for the remission of the sins of the many; whose sins Jesus bore in his own body to the Cross. Believing that, without the shedding of the blood of Jesus there would have been no remission through the name, the blood becomes to him an important and indispensable element of the name, which he embraces for its purifying efficacy imparted to it thereby. He goes into the laver of the water, that he may approach the altar, Jesus, and be sprinkled by faith with his blood. This done, and he is “justified by faith,” “by grace,” “by his blood,” and “washed, sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus and in the Spirit of our God”—the truth, the water, and the blood all testify to his justification “through his name.”

Lastly, upon this subject we would at present remark, that there is a precise and definite point of time at which a sinner’s disposition and faith are granted to him for a change of mind or heart, and for remission; and this is in the act of obedience. Ananias said to Saul, “Arise be baptized and wash away thy sins, attaching thyself to the name of the Lord”—Acts 22:16. In the act of doing this, in rising from the water, Saul’s state of heart was granted to him for repentance, and his belief of the truth was counted to him for remission of sins—both in the act which effected his attachment to the name.

To perceive the force of the Spirit’s saying in the writing to the Star Angel in Pergamos, “thou holdest fast MY NAME,” it is necessary to understand the doctrine of that name, therefore I have gone at some length into the exposition of it here; especially as there are so few in the world that have a scriptural comprehension of it. The teaching brethren in Pergamos still expounded it aright; although in such close neighborhood to the Satan’s head-quarters, where they were indefatigably sowing tares; and denying the foundation of the name, which is laid in the real humanity and sufferings of the sacrificial man, Jesus; “who was delivered for the offences, and raised again for the justification” of sinners, who affectionately believe the promises made to Abraham and David, and the truth as it is in Jesus. To these teachers resident in the Satan’s dwelling place and capital, the Spirit not only said “thou holdest fast my name,” but also, “and hast not denied my faith.”

5. “My Faith.”

The Name and the Faith are terms comprehensive of the whole subject. “There is One Faith,” says Paul, “and one Hope of the Calling.” The name is that part of the faith just expounded; but when “faith” is used in connexion with “name” it embraces the things associated with it by Paul in his definition of it in Heb. 11:1. In this place, he says, “Faith is a hypostasis of things being hoped for, an elegchos of transactions not seen.” Here faith, or belief, is said to be hypostasis and elenchos; that is, faith is reality and proof. The person who has it, embraces certain things promised as realities, and certain transactions as things proved. Hence, faith is the assured hope of things promised, the conviction of the truth of transactions not witnessed by the believer.

The English Version renders Paul’s words, thus; “Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.” This, however, does not give us the full import of his definition. The word elpizomenon rendered “of things hoped for,” is the present participle passive, the sign of which is “being,” the word should therefore be translated “of things being hoped for.” Faith is not the “hypostasis of things hoped for” once, and afterwards forgotten: nor “of things hoped for” by other people of old time, but never heard of by professors now: but they are things “by which ye are saved if ye keep in memory a certain word I preached unto you,” says Paul; “unless ye have believed in vain;” that is, by forgetting it—1 Cor. 15:1, 2 :—it is the hypostasis of things hoped for, being kept in memory, by the believer; who, understanding the things promised, is fully persuaded of them, and lives in hope even against hope, or present appearances, that what God has promised to Abraham and David, he is able and will perform—Rom. 4:21, 18.

Another defect in the English Version is, that it does not fully translate the word pragmaton. The word pragma signifies “a thing done, a fact, deed, work, or transaction,” and is, therefore, a matter of history. In the phrase “of things being hoped for” there is no separate word in the original for “things;” but it is supplied, and correctly so, because elpizomenon is of the neuter gender. But in the latter part of this definition Paul has inserted the word pragmaton, that all the things of faith may be embraced in the definition—“the things of the kingdom,” which are “being hoped for,” and “the things of the Name,” which have been transacted and expounded in the mystery revealed.

It is evident, then, that what is termed “historical faith,” or the mere belief of history, and which some “theologians,” say is the best sort of faith, is a defective faith; and therefore, not what the Spirit styles “My Faith.” On the other hand, also, the mere belief of things hoped for, omitting faith in the pragmata, or transactions, is a defective faith. A faith perfect in kind and in degree must heartily embrace the things of hope, and the things transacted; in other words, “the things concerning the Kingdom of the Deity, and of the Name of the Anointed Jesus.”

This is what the Spirit styles “my faith,” which the teachers in Pergamos “Had not denied.” The divines of “the synagogue of the Satan” in that city did however deny it. Their Nikolaitan speculations about “immortal souls” led them to deny it. Justin Martyr, who was fourteen years contemporary with the apostle John, though he did not embrace christianity till about thirty years after his death, in his dialogue with Trypho, a Jew, says, “I am not such a wretch, Trypho, as to say one thing and mean another. I have before confessed to thee that I, and many others, are of their opinion, (that of the prophets concerning the Millennial Reign,) so that we hold it to be thoroughly proved that it will come to pass. But I have also signified unto thee on the other hand that many, even those of that race of christians who follow not godly and pure doctrine (those of the apocalyptic synagogue of the Satan) do not acknowledge it. For I have demonstrated to thee that these (Nikolaitans) are indeed called christians, but are atheists and impious heretics, because that in all things they teach what is blasphemous, ungodly, and unsound.” These self-styled christians are the professors denounced in the letters to the seven ecclesias under the epithets of “those who say they are apostles, and are not, but are liars;” “blasphemers who say they are Jews, and are not, but the synagogue of the Satan;” “the Satan;” “those who hold the doctrine of Balaam;" "the Nikolaitans;" "that woman Jezebel, calling herself a prophetess, teaching and seducing the servants of God;" and "those who said they were rich, and increased with goods, and had need of nothing." These all called themselves christians, but, as Justin truly says, they were atheists, or without God, and impious heretics; blasphemous, ungodly, and unsound teachers. He goes on, therefore, to say concerning these "Fathers" of Modern Christendom, "If therefore, you fall in with certain who are called christians, who confess not this truth, (of the thousand years' reign of Jesus and his brethren on earth over all nations) but dare to blaspheme the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, in that they say there is no resurrection of the dead, but that IMMEDIATELY WHEN THEY DIE, THEIR SOULS ARE RECEIVED UP INTO HEAVEN—avoid them, and esteem them not christians, etc." In affirming this, which is now called orthodoxy, because "the synagogue of the Satan" is now in the ascendancy under the current style, or title of "the Names and Denominations of Christendom"—they denied the faith termed by the Spirit "My Faith." Justin protests that it is blaspheming the God of Abraham to say, that there is no resurrection of the flesh; and that they do say this who say, that souls are received up into heaven immediately they die. I believe Justin's position is apostolic and scriptural; and that what was blasphemy, atheism, heresy, ungodly, and unsound, in the year 140, is the same in 1861. Justin, therefore, who is highly commended by the commentators, denounces them as not christians, and the sentiments of all christendom in our day as blasphemy. Where is the name, sect, or denomination, from the papacy to Mormonism included, but what teaches the dogma or immortal-soulism, and translation to heaven at death? Our contemporaries all deny the Spirit's Faith; if any are to be found that hold fast the Name and have not denied the faith, which the Spirit styles his, they are not of the names and denominations of "the religious world." They are outsiders, having no fellowship with "the Satan" in any of "the depths as they teach."

No, the Spirit's Faith is not the faith of Christendom. The "faith" of the religious world taught by all orders of its clergy, is mere heathenism, interlarded with some scriptural phraseology uttered in a tone called "holy." The Spirit's faith teaches what is promised "to them that overcome"—the resurrection of the mortal body; absolute dominion over the nations of the earth; Deification; a share in the throne of Omnipotence; and endless existence in glory. The dogma of an immortal soul in sinful flesh is not to be found in the Spirit's faith; it knows nothing about the translation of such a vain conceit to heaven, but to condemn it in its logical consequents. The dogma of the transfer of such a fiction to heaven at death is subversive of the resurrection of the flesh; and of the kingdom covenanted to Abraham and David; and promised to the saints with eternal life and glory. The Spirit's faith repudiates such trash; and threatens vengeance upon those who hold it.

6. Antipas.

The Spirit says to the Star-Angel in Pergamos, "Thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, as in the days in which Antipas was my faithful witness, who was put to death with you where the Satan sojourns." The Star-Angel was still faithful, and had been so in former days of trial, characterized as days in which Antipas was put to death in Pergamos. Antipas is styled "my faithful witness." Hence the name is identical with him, or them, who held fast the name and denied not the faith of Christ, whether in Pergamos or elsewhere, in the midst of persecution. The name is typical of a class at that time related to "the things that are." The word Antipas signifies "against all;" and is doubtless introduced here as the apocalyptic designation of those who were the faithful in opposition to all pretenders to Christianity. Paul and all who adhered to his teaching were Antipas. They were against all Nikolaitans, Balaamites, children of Jezebel, false apostles, and spurious Jews, who, as Justin says, "are called Christians, but are atheists and impious heretics, because that in all things they teach what is blasphemous, ungodly, and unsound.”

The Antipas Christians were obnoxious to the hatred both of the Diabolos and the Satan. The Satan were sometimes persecuted by the Diabolos; but the Antipas were persecuted by both. The Satan, however, who called themselves Christians, when hard pressed by the Pagan Diabolos, would, as Pliny relates in his letter to Trajan, deny the faith to save their worthless lives; but the Antipas were always “faithful unto the death.” The Satan was contending with the Diabolos for supremacy in the Roman State, which brought them into collision and bloodshed; but the Antipas party were “contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints,” that they might be approved of God, save their contemporaries, and transmit it uncorrupted to the next generation. The Antipas, or Christ’s faithful witness, cared nothing about the riches, and honors, and power obtainable in the present evil world. His affections had loftier aspirations. Not so the Satan. They were ambitious of all these. They aspired to political ascendancy, and when they found themselves powerful enough, they appealed to the sword, and conquered. And when the Diabolos found that the cause of paganism was lost, the religion of the Satan, the catholic, became the religion of the State, under the old style of “the devil and the Satan.” But Antipas still continued in affliction. The victory of the Satan professing christianity was of small advantage to Antipas. The faithful witness had to fly into the wilderness from the face of the New Power, which sought to sweep them from the earth.—Rev. 12:6, 14–17.

But, it is said of Antipas, that he was put to death in the Satan’s kingdom—“Antipas, my faithful witness, who was put to death with you where the Satan sojourns”—at Pergamos, the place of their throne. When the Satan removed from Pergamos to Rome and Constantinople, Antipas fled into the wilderness, and was protected there during 1260 years. But at the end of that period, the adversary made war upon the Antipas, and slew them; for being against all, in their testifying, they incurred the wrath of the self-styled christians who ruled and argued with the word—Rev. 11:1, 2, 7.

Antipas, however, though put to death, hath been resuscitated; and they now “stand upon their feet,” and their enemies are afraid of them. The Satan of Pergamos is still prosperous in the enjoyment of the lusts of the flesh and the pride of life; with a dominion coextensive with christendom. Their church is large, and embraces within its pale all sects, and parties, names and denominations, except Antipas; who is still, as in apostolic times, against all. Antipas, who holds fast the name and denies not the faith of Christ, has no fellowship for any of them; but protests against them all as the Satan. As he is against all, so all are against him. No “orthodox christian” of the Satan’s synagogue will admit an Antipas into their pulpits, because he is not in what they term “holy orders;”—he has not been ordained by the imposition of the hands of those “reverend divines,” who say that they are “apostles;” the ambassadors of Jesus Christ, and successors of his apostles; “and are not, but are found to be liars.” Antipas has no more respect for these than Jesus had for the “scribes, pharisees, and hypocrites;” or Paul for “the false apostles and ministers of the Satan,” who perverted the gospel, and sought to exclude him on every side. The author of this exposition is an Antipas; and would rather stand alone, faithfully adherent to the name and faith of the Spirit, than redolent of the odors of sanctity burned to his honor by all the clergy and pietists of “Christendom”. For further exposition upon this subject see our remarks on “on the depths of the Satan” hereafter.

7. The Balaamites.

But, though the Star-Angel, or eldership, of the ecclesia in Pergamos in the general answered to Antipas, the Spirit’s faithful witness, “Yet,” said he, “I have against thee a few things, because thou hast there them holding fast the teaching of Balaam who taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the sons of Israel, to eat idol-sacrifices, and to fornicate. So hast thou also them holding fast the teaching of the Nikolaitans, which thing I detest.”

Balaam, like Nikolaitan, Antipas, etc., is a typical name. It is written בל־]

, Bilaam in the Hebrew; from בל־]

, bela am, signifying wasting of the people. A Nikolaitan is a vanquisher of the people; and a Balaam is a waster of the people; qualities uniting in the same class. It is also the name of an ancient prophet, who, in the days of Moses, resided at Pethor on the Euphrates, in Mesopotamia, among the mountains of the East. Though a believer in the true God, he practised divination for the discovery of enchantments, and was held in high esteem by the Baal-worshippers of his time; who declared their conviction, that “whom he blessed was blessed, and whom he cursed was cursed.”

On a certain occasion, when the Israelites were encamped in the plains of Moab, on the east of Jordan by Jericho, Balak, the king of Moab, in concert with the Midianites, sent princes to Balaam, with the rewards of divination, to request him to come and curse them, that being devoted to destruction, he might prevail over them, and expel them from the country. But God said to him, “Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people: for they are blessed.” Upon this he refused to go, and the princes returned to Moab.

But Balak was importunate. He sent again by more princes, and of a higher rank, and with promises of great honor and riches, if he would comply with his request. But, though he loved the wages of unrighteousness, he was afraid to encounter the consequences of violating the interdict he had received. He concluded, however, to try the Lord again, and see if he would not relax in favor of his covetousness. At night he received the answer, that if the men came to call him, he might rise up and go with them; but he was to speak only the word revealed to him at the time. It seems, however, that he was so keen after the honors and rewards, that he did not wait to be called, but of his own accord rose up, and posted off with two servants. Balaam was evidently a man of bad principles. No further account would be necessary to prove this. Yahweh had told him that the people were blessed, yet he sought to gratify a Baal-worshipper for a reward, in seeming to comply with his request. Had his heart been right, he would have accepted God’s interdict as final, and have refused to consult the Lord any more upon the subject. He would have dismissed the princes of Moab with an unqualified and emphatic denial, and have commanded them to appear no more in his presence with their bribes to sin. But no; he professed a zeal for the word of Jehovah his God, while he was anxious to please the worshippers of Baal for reward. “If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of Yahweh my God, to do less or more;” but stay; don’t go away; I will see what I can get him to let me do! If he had been an honest and upright man, he would not have said “I cannot,” but he would have declared, “I will not go beyond his word.”

But he went with two servants, and therefore God’s anger was kindled; “and an angel of Yahweh stood in the way for a Satan against him,” with a naked sword in his hand. When his eyes were opened to see the peril, he fell prostrate; and having received a severe reproof for the perverseness of his way, he was permitted to go with the princes.

Balak hearing of his approach went forth to meet him. Balaam having explained his position, accompanied Balak to Kirjath-huzzoth, the capital of Moab, where he eat of the idol-sacrifices with the princes of the king; and on the morrow, they took up their position on one of the high places of Baal, commanding a view of the four square encampment of Israel. But Jehovah would not allow him to defy them, but compelled him to utter those beautiful predictions of their future glory under the Star and Sceptre of Jacob, recorded in Num. 23 and 24. Seeing he could not reverse Yahweh’s blessing upon his people, and knowing that His favor is consequent on keeping his commandments, he counselled Balak to cast a stumblingblock before them, causing them to sin. Instead, therefore, of advising him to war, he suggested the policy of seducing them from their allegiance to Yahweh and his law, by sending in the daughters of Moab among them, and enticing them to impurity and idolatry. Balak followed his advice, and by the means proposed, caused Israel to be joined to Baalpeor, which caused the anger of Yahweh to smoke against them.

Such, in brief, is the history of the prophet who caused a wasting of the people; for Yahweh commanded their chiefs to be hung, and all who had offended to be slain to the number of twenty-four thousand. The points of his character were covetousness, perverseness, presumptuousness, unrighteousness, beguiler of unstable Israelites, apostasy from the right way. Where such attributes of character meet in a class of persons, they are said in the New Testament to be “following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor;” and Balaam becomes the representative of the class.

Thus, in the days of the apostles, there were “false teachers” in the Christian congregations, whose motives, teaching, and practices, were analogous to Balaam’s. They were “grievous wolves,” wasters of the people, “speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them.” They taught that belief of the gospel, and being baptized, was not enough; but that, in addition to this, it was necessary also to be circumcised, and keep the law of Moses, or men could not be saved. They appended this dogma to the wholesome words of the Lord Jesus, in order to popularize his doctrine, and make it palatable to the Jews. Paul styles it “another gospel; which (truly) is not another, but a perversion thereof.” He says that they who preached it were “accursed;” that they sought to bring believers into bondage; and that, desiring to make a fair show in the flesh, they constrained their victims to be circumcised, only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ—Acts 15:1–5; 20:29, 30; Gal. 1:6, 7; 2:4; 5:10; 6:12.

They proceeded from bad to worse. They inculcated a distinction of meats and drink; the observance of holy days, new moons, and sabbaths; and a voluntary humility in neglecting the body, and worshipping of angels. They not only commanded to abstain from meats, but they also forbid to marry; and corrupted the minds of their dupes with fables, endless genealogies, and doctrines of demons—Col. 2:16, 18, 22, 23; 1 Tim. 1:4; 4:1, 3.

But these false teachers not only Judaized, or taught disciples to seek a justification by Mosaic observances, but some of them Gentilized by indoctrinating them with the principles of philosophy, and inducing them to conform to practices and customs of idolatry. Paul wrote 1 Cor. 8 and 10:7–33, to fortify the minds of the brethren against their influence. His reasoning in these places is directed against the teaching of the Balaam-class who taught the lawfulness of eating idolsacrifices in the temples. Their argument was after this wise: “We have knowledge. We know that the idols are nothing; so that in eating of the demon-sacrifices, and drinking of the demon-cup, not having an idolatrous conscience, we perform no act of worship: being safe with God upon this point, we obtain the advantage of seeming conformity in avoiding persecution for our desertion of the national superstition.”

In philosophizing, they taught the inherent immortality of all men. They rejected the immortality of body, and substituted for it the indwelling of an “immortal soul” in the mortal body; and affirmed its separate and independent intelligent existence in heaven the instant the heart ceased to beat and the lungs to breathe. This led them to deny the resurrection of the body, and to teach that “the resurrection had passed already;” or, what is equivalent to it, that “there is no resurrection of the dead;” and so overthrowing the faith of some, by their profane vain babblings and oppositions of science, falsely so called—1 Cor. 15:12; 2 Tim. 2:18; 1 Tim. 6:20.

Now, of these false teachers the apostle saith, “They reckon of us as if we walked according to the flesh: and say, his letters are weighty and powerful; but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible. But though I be rude in speech, yet am I not in knowledge. They are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for the Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as ministers of righteousness. Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I. Are they ministers of Christ? I speak ironically, I am more. In nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing. Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds. But, being crafty, they say I caught you with guile!”—2 Cor. 10:2, 10; 11:4, 6, 13–15, 22; 12:11, 12, 16; Phil. 3:2, 18, 19.

Still speaking of these, he says, “There are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision, whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre’s sake. Their mind and conscience are defiled. They profess that they know God, but in works they deny him, being abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate”—Tit. 1:10. “They have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. Of this sort are they who creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Now, as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. They are evil men and seducers, and will wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived”—2 Tim. 3:1–13.

Peter was not behind Paul in his denunciation of this class of men whose diabolical mission it was to turn the grace of God into licentiousness. “There were,” saith he, “false prophets among the people (Israel) even as there shall be false teachers among you (Nazarenes,) who will privily introduce destructive sects, and denying the Master that bought them. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of the truth will be evil spoken of. And through covetousness will they with feigned words make merchandise of you. As natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, they speak evil of the things they do not understand; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption.” He then shows that these characters were already in full operation in the societies of the faithful; for, he continued, “They are spots and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings, while they feast with you; having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls; an heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children: who have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness; but was rebuked for his iniquity. These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; for whom the mist of darkness is reserved in the Aion. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption”—2 Pet. 2. These were the scoffers who appeared in the last days of the Mosaic Aion, “walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of His coming?”—the “false prophets” that the Lord Jesus predicted would “arise and deceive many; and say in heart, the Lord delayeth his coming;” and should therefore “begin to smite their fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken”—Matt. 24:11, 48, 49.

John also, to whom the Apocalypse was revealed, is particularly pointed against these wolves in the clothing of sheep. “Little children,” saith he, “it is the last hour: and as ye have heard that the Antichrist comes, even now many antichrists exist: whereby we know that it is the last hour. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for, if they had been of us, they would have continued with us: but they went out that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.” They denied that Jesus is the Christ; and, consequently, repudiated the doctrine of the manifestation of the Father through him as the Son. Therefore, referring to them, John inquires, “Who is the liar but he who affirms that Jesus is not the Christ? This is the Antichrist rejecting the Father and the Son.” From this it would appear, that they had given the lie to the apostles for teaching what they had come to deny; but John retorted upon them that they were the liars, and the germ of the Antichrist to be more fully revealed. “These things,” says he, “I write unto you concerning them that seduce you. Little children, let no man deceive you. Believe not every spirit”—believe not every man who pretends to speak by the spirit: “but try the spirits;” bring them to the test of the Law and the Testimony, and by this standard ascertain “whether they be of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world. By this ye may know the Spirit of God; every spirit (or prophet) that confesseth that Jesus Christ has come in flesh is from God: and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ came in flesh is not of God: and this is the (spirit) of the Antichrist which ye have heard that it comes; and is now already in the world. They (these false prophets or teachers) are of the world; because of this they speak of the world (being inspired by its traditions) and the world hears them.”—1 Jno. 2:18, 19, 22; 4:1–6.

These were they who released their hold upon the name of Jesus, and denied his faith; and who were strenuously opposed by the true believers under the class-name, or symbol, Antipas; which see. John in writing his second epistle wrote to an Antipas-Ecclesia, or community of faithful witnesses. He exhorted them to continuance in the truth that was from the beginning; and as the reason of his exhortation refers to the fact that “many deceivers were entered into the world, not confessing that Jesus Christ is come in flesh: this,” says he, “is the deceiver and the Antichrist.” Therefore, he continues, “If there come any unto you and bring not the doctrine of Christ (that He is come in flesh,) receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.” In his third epistle, he informs us that Diotrephes was one of this class, and refused even to acknowledge him. Affairs must have attained to a preeminently antichristian state to have come to this. This Diotrephes loved to have the pre-eminence in the congregation, and prated against John and his friends with malicious words; “and not content therewith, did himself neither receive the brethren, and forbade them that would, and cast them out of the ecclesia.”

The manifestation of these false teachers contemporary with the apostles created a crisis in the history of the faith. It had come to this, either they must be put down, or the doctrine of Christ would be suppressed. This alternative would certainly have resulted, if God had not reserved to himself a remnant who refused to bow the knee to Baal. This remnant was Antipas; and therefore against all the Nicolaitanes, Balaams, and Jezebels; false teachers, who had crept in unawares, corrupting and handling the word of God deceitfully, that they might make it less offensive to the Jews and idolaters; and so make the profession of christianity more popular, and consequently, less dangerous to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness in the world.

The only weapon granted to Antipas against Satan, was “the two-edged sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.” He was to be earnest and indefatigable in the use of this, that he might perpetuate the faith in the heart of a remnant till the apocalypse of Christ—Rev. 6:11; 12:17. Writing to this class to which the apostles belonged, Jude says, “It was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith once for all delivered to the Saints. For there are certain men crept in unawares, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only sovereign Deity, even our Lord Jesus Christ.” These, after the example of Israel in the wilderness, the messengers that kept not their first estate, and Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities of the plain, “believed not,” “left their first love,” and “gave themselves over to fornication, going after other flesh,” and to eating of things idolatrously devoted. They were dreaming fanatics who defiled the flesh, despised authority, and spoke evil of the illustrious, as Diotrephes did of John and others. They spoke evil of those things which they understood not: but what they knew naturally, as the irrational creatures, in those things they corrupt themselves. “Woe unto them!” exclaims Jude, “for they have gone in the way of Cain, and rushed headlong into the error of Balaam for hire, and destroyed themselves with the rebellion of Korah. These are sunken rocks feasting with you in your love-feasts, feeding themselves without fear; clouds without water, borne about by winds; fruitless autumnal trees, twice dead, uprooted; stars, to whom the blackness of darkness is reserved for the Aion. These are grumblers, fault-finders, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh pompous things, praising persons for the sake of gain. But, beloved,” continues Jude, “remember ye the words before spoken by the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; thus they told you that in the last period there will be scoffers walking after the lusts of their impieties. These who separate themselves are they, animal, not having spirit.”

From these testimonies who can forbear to exclaim, What an apostasy is here! As Paul truly styled it, it was “THE MYSTERY OF INIQUITY,” which he said “already is working;” and was that iniquity to which Jesus referred, as the result of the operation of the many false prophets that would arise, saying, “and because of the abounding of the iniquity, the love of the many will grow cold”—Matt. 24:11, 12. It must have been a matter of great mortification to the apostles to witness such havoc in the field of their labors. Yet, when we consider the natural perverseness of flesh, any other result would have excited more surprise. No names more appropriate could have been selected from Jewish history, to designate this incarnate iniquity of the apostolic age, than those of Balaam and Jezebel, who were hoi nikontes ton laon, the Conquerors of the people, or Nikolaitoi, Nicolaitans. They made war upon the saints, and prevailed against them.

Here, then, was an organization, a fellowship of iniquity, developed from the tares which the enemy had sown among the wheat. It grew up with the good seed until it acquired political ascendancy, and then the separation became complete. The “woman Jezebel” in the maturity of her abominations, became “the Church,” the daughter of Baal and the wife of Ahab, the State-Harlot of the habitable; and the Balaam-corrupters of the disciples, the priests of her idolatrous communion.

Thus the elements of the Apostasy were ecclesiastically organized antecedently to the revelation of the things exhibited in the Apocalypse. The men that figure as “THE FATHERS,” such as the writers of the Apocryphal New Testament, Cyprian, Origen, &c., were of Balaam. From Balaam and Jezebel have sprung the Clergy of all the Names and Denominations of Christendom. These are the successors of those self-styled apostles, who prated with malicious words against the true apostles; and the leading characteristics of the Balaamite teachers of the first century, will be found to be those of the Clergy of our own times. The following enumeration will establish the truth of this remark:

1. The primitive Balaamites prophesied for hire; so do the clergy;
2. The primitive Balaamites preached perverse things to draw away disciples after them, that their hire might be increased; so do the clergy;
3. The primitive Balaamites blended Mosaic observances with gospel principles, Judaizing and sabbatizing especially; so do the clergy;
4. The primitive Balaamites preached a perverted gospel, or rather no gospel at all; so do the clergy.
5. The primitive Balaamites brought the people into bondage; so have the clergy, and keep them so;
6. The primitive Balaamites commanded to abstain from meats and drinks; so do clergy;
7. They taught the worship of saints and angels, and forbid to marry; so do the popish clergy;
8. They sought to please men, and flattered them for gain; so do the clergy;
9. They made the doctrine of the resurrection and a future judgment of none effect by their traditions about souls; so do the clergy;
10. They made merchandize of the bodies and souls of men with feigned words; so do the clergy;
11. They knew more of heathen philosophy and learning than of the gospel; so do the clergy;
12. They thought more highly of their own speculations than of apostolic and prophetic truth; so do the clergy;
13. They taught things which they ought not, for filthy lucre’s sake; so do the clergy;
14. They professed that they knew God, but were disobedient; so are the clergy;

15. They resisted the truth, and caused it to be evil spoken of; so do the clergy.
16. They scoffed at the coming of the Lord; so do the clergy;
17. They denied that Jesus came in flesh, and so originated the immaculate conception; so do the clergy;
18. They were of the world, therefore the world heard them; so are the clergy, and therefore it hears and honors them;
19. They loved the preeminence; so do the clergy;
20. They cast all out of their churches that stood by the apostles, and opposed their errors; so do the clergy;
21. They were destroyers and corrupters of the people; so are the clergy;
22. The primitive Balaamites were inventors and lovers of lies subversive of the truth; so are the clergy;
23. They made a fair show in the flesh, had a form of godliness, and set up for ministers of righteousness, while really the servants of sin; this is equally true of the clergy.

“CLERGY,” in the Gentile use of the word, is generic, comprehending many species, and in the popular sense, signifies “the body of men set apart by due ordination for the service of God;” hence, a clergyman is “one in holy orders, not a laick,” or one of the people. Every sect has its peculiar “clergy,” which are hired, like Balaam of old, to do the will of Balak, that is, to preach the dogmas of their employers. There was a diversity among the children of Balaam and Jezebel in apostolic times. Hence Jude exhorted Antipas to “have compassion on some, making a difference; and others, save, snatching them out of the fire with fear, (lest they also should be scorched;) hating also the garment defiled by the flesh.” Some were more deceived than wilfully deceiving, still, they were all engaged in one work, consciously or not, and that was in “making the word of God of none effect by their traditions,” and “teaching for doctrine the commandments of men;” so that the sentence of condemnation to the blackness of the darkness in the Aion, rested upon them all.

Thus it is likewise with their clerical successors in the nineteenth and previous centuries. All the clerical species are not equally abominable in detail; and individuals even of the same species, are far less exceptionable than others. Apart from their spiritual merchandizing, many of them are moral, intelligent, and honorable citizens of the world. The Protestant Clergy of all sects are generally more intelligent and moral than their brethren in “Holy Orders” of the Latin and Greek departments of Jezebel’s house. The latter are designated apocalyptically “worshippers of Demons, and of idols of gold, silver, brass, stone, and wood, incapable of seeing, hearing, or walking; murderers, sorcerers, fornicators, and thieves”—Rev. 9:20, 21. The Protestant clergy, however, though making a better show in the flesh, are not clean. When men read prayers on a day set apart by mere human authority in honor of “St. Charles the Martyr,” (the royal tyrant beheaded by Cromwell,) and other equally holy witnesses, whose ghosts, they affirm to be in heaven and crowned with glory, they are worshippers of Demons. When men preach funeral sermons in praise of souls, which, in dying, they declare went to heaven, where they have become guardian-angels or spirits to their friends on earth, their congregations responding in faith or word, they are all worshippers of Demons. When men teach, endorsing, as they do, their dogmatism by their practice, that mankind can devote their lives to sin, and perpetrate the blackest crimes against God and society; and under the influence of their instruction, persuasions, and prayers, the wretches may be brought to peace with God by a penitentiary act of the mind, in view of the positive declaration of the scripture, saying, “The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, (who are idolaters,) nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of Christ and of God. Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things the wrath of God comes upon the children of disobedience”—Eph. 5:5, 6; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10; and, “no murderer hath eternal life abiding for him”—1 John 3:15—when the clergy of all sects teach practically such blasphemy of God as this, they are liars, and murderers of the people. When citizens in “Holy Orders” teach, that by reading from a book certain stereotyped prayers, and by sprinkling a few drops of water from a basin on the face of a baby, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, the creature is baptized, and regenerated, and become a member of the mystical body of Christ, they not only blaspheme, but they practice sorcery, in the name of Deity. And lastly, when Gentiles, by Act of Parliament, and by arms, as a Rathcormack, and Edinburgh, or by distraint as upon Quakers, compel men to pay them tithes of produce, church rates, and Easter offerings, they are thieves and robbers of the people; and though very classical and gentlemanly in their way, they are the children of Balaam, beguiling unstable souls, and having a heart exercised with covetous practices.

The general characteristics of the clergy are notoriously such as we have set forth. The exceptions may be said to establish the rule. There is this difference, however, between them and their “Fathers” of the first and second centuries—“the Fathers”—became the sons of Balaam with their eyes open. They knew “the right way;” but “forsook it, and went astray;” they were “children of God;” but became “cursed children;” they had been “bought” of the Lord; but they afterwards “denied the Lord who bought them.” All this made their offence inexcusable; they will, therefore, rise to the judgment of the Aion, and to the blackness of the darkness connected with it. But their clerical posterity are not so. These have not known the right way; and therefore cannot be said strictly to “have forsaken it;” they have never become “children of God;” and cannot therefore be styled “cursed children;” neither has the Lord bought them; so that they cannot be said to have denied him as their despotes or, Master. They have entered upon life finding the kosmial arena preoccupied by a Jezebel Institution, now styled “Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the Earth.” As youths, they are taught by their parents and tutors to call its dogmas and practices christianity; and its organization “Christendom,” or the Dominion of Christ! Deceiving and being deceived, their teachers indoctrinate them with theological sentiments which, acting upon Cautiousness, Conscientiousness, Veneration, and Marvellousness, develop a mystical pietism of flesh, which is known by the peculiar tone and grimace, or sanctimoniousness, that invariably accompany it. A youth pietized after this fashion is no longer master of himself. Yielding to the hallucination, mesmerically controlled by surrounding circumstances and opinions; and being also ambitious of professional rank and status in society; he gets a notion into his head that his pious ambition is a feeling wrought in him by the spirit of God; and conceits absurdly enough, that it is a call of God, such as Aaron was the subject of, for him to prepare himself for “the ministry!” Having got this crotchet into his young brain, he is haunted by it until he gets into the way of “duty,” in which he continues until he is enthroned the One Man of a community which recognizes him as the oracular expounder of its creed, a successor of the apostles, and a minister and ambassador of Jesus Christ, at five hundred, two thousand, or more or less, per annum, according to their ability to pay, and the market price his vanity or presumption, or it may be his humility, may place upon himself!!

Here, then, is a poor unfortunate creature indoctrinated, deceived, and ordained the spiritual guide of the blind, by a system he had no hand in creating. It has duped him, and installed him the dupe of others in turn. The system made him a clergyman, priest, or minister; and he, knowing no better, glorifies the system as “the Church,” and approved of God! He is a soul merchant. The souls of others are his stock in trade; and he undertakes to take care of them for their owners, so as to leave them leisure to devote themselves to trade, commerce, literature, and politics, provided they will make it worth his while; that is to say, profitable; otherwise, not. This is the true Balaam-principle. He thinks it just. Other men will not work for nothing, and find themselves; why should he? Especially as it is written, “Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn;” and “He that preaches the gospel should live of the gospel;”

and “If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?” He is very familiar with these texts, which when rightly applied are admirable. But, in quoting them he is somewhat inattentive to the conditions. The ox must tread out the corn before he is entitled to eat of it; the gospel must be preached before a preacher can scripturally claim to live of it; and the things ministered must be those of God’s spirit, ere a minister can lay claim to people’s carnal things in exchange. Now the treading of the clergy is the treading out of tares and thistles; therefore, tares and thistles should be the food of Balaam’s ass: they do not preach the gospel Paul preached, that is certain; neither do they minister the things of the Spirit of God: their claim, therefore, to a piece of bread, or a profitable living in ease and luxury, on the authority of these texts, is only an additional evidence of the imposition they are, perhaps unwittingly, practising on mankind. It is unquestionably just that a man should be paid for his labor. If a community of errorists want a man to preach their creed, and to defend it through thick and thin; if they want him to proselyte other men to it, and to make them feel comfortable about their souls—they ought to make it profitable, and very profitable too; for in proportion to the desperateness of the enterprize should be the magnitude of its reward. And what enterprize more desperate than cheating souls under pretense of curing them? It is spiritual assassination and homicide. But, we are charitable enough to think that with many of the clergy it is manslaying without intent to kill. With “the fathers” of the clergy in the first century, this consideration in mitigation of punishment, cannot be indulged. To blackness of the darkness, then, the clergy, ancestors and posterity, are doomed; but as the latter are not apostates from the right way, having never known it; yet are of the apostasy being ignorantly subjected to its authority and power—we apprehend that, dying in their ignorance, they will reap the corruption of the grave; and there remain among “the dead whom Yahweh remembereth no more”—“in the land of forgetfulness”—“the land of darkness, and the shadow of death; a land of darkness as darkness itself; of the shadow of death without any order, and where the light is as darkness”—Job 10:21; Psal. 88:5, 12. But, in regard to “the Fathers” of the “Holy Orders,” “a sorer punishment” awaits them. “It had been better for them,” says Peter, “not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them”—2 Epist. 2:21. They are therefore obnoxious to a sorer punishment—a resurrection to judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries—Heb. 10:27, 29.

In the twenty-three points already enumerated we have shown the identity of the clergy with the sons of Balaam in the apostles’ days; but, in order that the antichristian character of the clerical orders of all sects may be complete, we shall also enumerate the points, the principal ones at least, in which the clergy of our times and the apostles and their colaborers, are opposed.

1. The apostles preached “the wisdom of God in a mystery, the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the Aions to their glory—1 Cor. 2:7. The clergy know nothing of this;

2. When the apostles preached they “declared the testimony of God” contained in the writings of Moses and the Prophets; and their own personal testimony to the resurrection of Jesus, together with the revelation of the mystery made known to them by the Spirit—1 Cor. 2:1; Rom. 16:25, 26; Eph. 3:5, 9. This is all Sanscrit to the clergy—they cannot attain to it.

3. The apostles not only showed what was testified in Moses and the Prophets, but they reasoned upon it for its exposition, that the people might understand, and believe it; and they commended them for not taking what they heard for granted; but searching the scriptures daily to see if what they said were true; that their hearers’ faith might rest on the written testimony of God—Acts 17:2, 11, 12; 1 Cor. 2:5. The clergy have no taste for such a procedure: reasoning on things religious is with them a step towards infidelity. The less reasoning the blinder, or more implicit, the faith; and consequently the more passive obedience to clerical dictation and rule. In their system “ignorance is the mother of devotion;” so that in their flocks the most stupid are the most humble and devout.

4. The apostles proclaimed the return of the Lord Jesus to the Holy Land in power, to replant the Twelve Tribes of Israel therein; to unite them into one nation; to re-establish the kingdom and throne of David; having raised the dead, and changed the living, saints, to place them over Israel and the Nations as God's kings and priests to instruct and rule them according to his appointments: to give the world a righteous administration through them; and in a multitude of details, to bless them in Abraham and his Seed, as promised in the Gospel—Luke 1:31–33, 52–55, 68–75; Mat. 16:27; 19:28; 25:31, 34; Luke 14:14; Acts 3:25; 15:16; Rev. 2:26; 5:10; 20:6. All this is treated as fabulous by the House of Jezebel!

5. The apostles preached "the Gospel of the Kingdom" for the obedience of faith—Acts 20:24, 25; Rom. 16:26. They preached the same gospel Jesus proclaimed before his crucifixion—Mat. 24:14; and the same that was preached to Abraham, and his posterity in Egypt and the wilderness—Heb. 3:17; 4:2; Exod. 6:6–8; 23:20–33, Gen. 12:1–3; Gal. 3:7, 8, 9. All this to the clergy is as a story to a deaf man.

6. The apostles taught that "without faith it is impossible to please God"—Heb. 11:6. This the clergy in works deny, when they give sinners in the gripe of "the King of Terrors," ignorant, and therefore necessarily faithless, of the first principles of the oracles of God, but professing to be penitent, absolution, and what they term "the consolation of religion;" as if the doctrine of Christ had any consolation for villains whose existence has been a life of crime; and whose only repentance is sorrow at the stoppage of their career by conviction and retribution. By works the clergy deny the indispensability of faith, when they rhantize the face of a puling babe for the regeneration of its "immortal soul!" Surely if Balaam's ass were here, and a clergyman should bestride him on such a mission, the intelligent creature would break silence again, and with the voice of a man rebuke the madness of the seer!

7. The apostles taught that without resurrection there is no future life—1 Cor. 15:12–19. The clergy deny this in teaching that souls live in heaven and hell before it, if it ever occur, which some of them deny.

8. The apostles taught, that the obedient to the faith are sanctified by the Abrahamic Covenant dedicated by the offering of the body of Jesus—Heb. 10:9, 10. Clerical sanctification knows nothing of this. The clergy profess to be sanctified; but of sanctification in relation to a covenant made nearly 4000 years ago, and confirmed by the crucifixion, their ignorance and unbelief of the things covenanted, prove that they know nothing.

9. Jesus and the apostles taught, that the inheritance of the Saints is the earth, the world, and all things pertaining to them, with eternal life and glory; and to be possessed in the Day of the Lord Jesus after the resurrection—1 Cor. 3:21–23; 1 Thess. 2:12; 1 Pet. 5:10. The clergy teach that the saints' everlasting rest is beyond the skies.

10. The apostles taught men to believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ; and thereupon to be immersed in that name for remission of sins; and they did it—Acts 8:12; 2:38. But the clergy ignore all this, and say, "Believe and be saved;" and to babes, "Be saved without belief!" Hence, they teach two salvations; the one, salvation by faith; the other, salvation without it! By faith of what? "That Jesus died for you." This, and a penitentiary sorrow, will atone for a life of crime; and swing a soul from the gibbet into supernal and eternal glory!!! Oh Balaam, what wilt thou not teach for hire!

11. The apostles taught that Jesus was of the same flesh as the sons of Adam, having all the faculties and emotions common to them; and that, when he was crucified, sin was condemned "IN" that flesh—Rom. 8:3; 1 Pet. 2:24; Heb. 2:14, 16, 17. Balaam denies this. He taught in the life-time of the apostles, and maintains it in our day, that the nature called Jesus was not similar to that of Adam after the fall; but like a different flesh, such as they suppose he had before he fell—essentially a self-sustaining, incorruptible, and immortal flesh,—and that the body born of Mary was not derived from her substance, but the result of a fresh act of creation! This is denying that Christ came in flesh; a clerical heresy which destroys the apostolic doctrine of the condemnation of sin in our flesh; and abolishes Jesus, the crucified, a covering for sin.

12. The apostles taught that death had been cancelled, and immortality, that is, deathlessness, or life and incorruptibility, brought to light by Jesus Christ in the Gospel of the Kingdom,—that the writing of death against the saints had been crossed, or blotted, out; and incorruptibility of body and life for them procured by his resurrection as the earnest of theirs—2 Tim. 1:10. But Balaam and Jezebel ignore this. They teach the philosophy of their heathen forefathers concerning immortality; and by their tonguey deeds deny that immortality is for those only who believe the promises of God covenanted to the fathers; and yield obedience to the law of faith. Balaam's clerical posterity are "the children of disobedience," and totally opposed to all such doctrine as this.

13. "The World" is to-day precisely what it was in the days of the apostles. "Woe to the world," saith Jesus, "because of offences!" "The world," he continues, "hates me;" and then says to the apostles "because ye are not of the world, the world hates you. In the world therefore, ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." And again he saith, "I pray not for the world."

Their Lord having commanded them to go forth, and preach the Gospel of the Kingdom, left them. They soon after found that the persecution visited upon him came upon them, as he had predicted, saying, "If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you:" so that it became a rule experimentally verified, that wherever and by whomsoever the doctrine of Jesus Christ is believed and advocated, it is opposed, and its faithful adherents are reproached. This was Paul's experience, who says of the apostles, "We are made a spectacle for the world, even to angels and to men. Unto this present hour we hunger and thirst, are naked and buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place; and labor, working with our own hands; being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it; being defamed, we entreat; we are made as the filth of the world, the offscouring of all things unto this day."

Since that day the policy, but not the disposition, of the world, is changed in relation to the truth. This has been prevailed against for a time; even until Christ shall come to punish the world for its iniquity. The world hates the truth and its advocates and friends to this day, as every one who is of the truth knows by experience; and because, "all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father," whose the truth is. Now who does not know, that it is the world in whom the clergy live, and move, and have their daily bread? Is it not the lust of the eyes and the pride of life that build their temples? Is it not the pride of life that rents their pews, and fills them with flowery cones of purple and fine linen? Is it not the lust of itching ears that heaps to themselves pulpit-fabulists, who rebuke sins afar off they have no mind for; and wink at, or can not see, the pious wickedness that festers within their doors? The clergy are paid, and fed, and clothed, and honored by the world. The world invites them to its feasts; makes them priests and chaplains to its fleets and armies, and public institutions; it makes them princes in lawn, and rulers in the state. These are evidences of its love for the clergy; and it has ever been that "the world loves its own;" and they who, like Balaam, love the wages of unrighteousness, it will surfeit with favors and rewards.

It is manifest, then, that the apostles and the clergy, who presumptuously style themselves their "successors," and the "ambassadors of Christ to the world," occupy diametrically opposite relations to that world. The world is the enemy to the apostles and their doctrine; while it is the friend and patron of the clergy. This irrefutable truth is fatal to all their pretensions. "The friendship of the world," says James, "is enmity of God; whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." Therefore, another apostle saith, "Love not the world, neither the things in the world; if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

But we need not enumerate any more points of discrepancy between the apostles, and their rivals, the clergy. The antithesis is complete. We shall proceed now to make a few remarks upon the name which these sons of Balaam have appropriated to themselves.

They style their “Holy Orders” THE CLERGY. This name is derived from κληροῶ, kleros, a lot, portion, or heritage. The Balaamites apply it to themselves, on the assumption that they are the peculiar heritage of God! In countries where they are in political alliance with the world-rulers they refuse to recognize the Balaamites of dissenting communities as “clergy.” They regard them simply as “laymen,” or men of the people. But in the United States, where the world is in league with all sects, the heterogeneous and discordant elements which fill the pulpits of this Republican Christendom, are all massed together as “the clergy.” We certainly cannot congratulate the Lord upon his inheritance, if it be composed of all the popish priests, state-church parsons, and random outpourers of nonsense, that thump the cushioned desks of the sectarian conventicles of christendom! But we read of no such inheritance, or clergy, of the Lord in the Bible. We there find Moses saying to Israel, “Yahweh hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, out of Egypt, to be unto him a people of inheritance as at this day;” and in another place, “The portion of Yahweh is his people; Jacob is the lot (cord, or boundary line) of his inheritance.” But never did he say to the clerical leaders of the Gentiles, “Ye are my inheritance,” or clergy.

But when He was “wroth with his inheritance,” and “the Gentiles came into it,” the Balaamite Doctrinaires concluded, as they teach at this day, that he had “cast them off,” and substituted the bishops, presbyters, and deacons, of the christian nation in its stead. They regarded themselves as the spiritual Levi, the special treasure of Jehovah, above all others of the body, whom they styled the people. Being Levi’s successor, they claim his perquisites; and as Levi tithed Israel, they undertook to tithe the laity, and to tax them in other ways, persuading them that in giving to the clergy they were lending to the Lord! This imposition grew to such an enormity, that when the church and world became one, the clergy became the territorial lords of some of the finest tracks in Europe. They became a power in all its kingdoms, and by the rulers, were regarded as the pillar of their thrones.

“Yahweh,” however, “has not cast off his people; neither will he forsake his inheritance”—Psal. 94; 14. He has only broken off a dry branch from the Hebrew Cedar Tree. The tree remains, though in a very sapless condition. But is anything too difficult for God? “I will, saith he, take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon a high mountain and eminent: in the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it: and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell. And all the trees of the field shall know that I, Yahweh, have brought down the high tree, (as it was under Solomon and his successors,) have exalted the low tree, (above the Babylonish desolation,) have dried up the green tree (by the Roman power,) and have made the dry tree to flourish, (when Christ returns in power;) I, Yahweh, have spoken and have done”—Ezek. 17:22. When this is accomplished, there will be a state of things in the East such as has never yet existed there. For, “In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the land; whom Yahweh of armies shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and ISRAEL MINE INHERITANCE.” Then “shall Yahweh possess Judah his portion in the Holy Land, and shall choose Jerusalem again”—Isa. 19:23–25; Zech. 2:10–12.

The Hebrew Nation, then, re-set and flourishing in the Holy Land, is the clergy, or heritage, of God. It is the kingdom of the heavens, as a grain of mustard seed in its re-setting, which, when grown, is the greatest among kingdoms, and becomes a tree, so that the birds of the air, (the political aerial,) come to lodge in the branches thereof—Matt. 13:31. Of this kingdom, all who are Abraham’s Seed by being Christ’s, are joint-heirs with him. They are invited to become heirs of this kingdom through the gospel; and being heirs, that which makes them heirs, also makes them Israelites by adoption, and by consequence, a part of the nation itself. During the times of the Balaamized Gentiles, the Hebrew Cedar is a dry tree; and the inheritance of Yahweh is not the cedar in its dry state, but when it returns to a flourishing condition. He is, however, not without an inheritance in all these times. "The portion of Yahweh is" still "his people;" and this people is to be found in Jacob, which is the lot, or cord, of his inheritance. That is, He has no clergy in the times of the Gentiles, who are not Jews by adoption, through obedience to the law of faith. These are "the Israel of God" for the time current. All who do what Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews, commands them, become his friends, and Yahweh's people. This we have seen the sons of Balaam, who style themselves "clergy," and pretend to be specially appointed of God for his service, do not do. They are not his people consequently; and instead of being Jews, they are for the most part their enemies, and where they have political power, their oppressors.

But, what saith the scripture? Paul in writing to certain in Thessalonica who, before they had obeyed the gospel, were idolaters, says "God has called you to his kingdom and glory." Now to these, "the called," some of whom were walking unworthy of their call, the apostle James says, "Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and Heirs of the Kingdom which he promised to them who love him? But ye have despised the poor." To these poor expectant heirs of the Hebrew kingdom, another apostolic Jew addresses himself, saying, "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, A HOLY NATION, a people by purchase; who in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God." These are the words of Peter to men who had put off their Gentilism; and had become Israelites by adoption through Jesus Christ. They were all the people of God, and therefore his inheritance, or clergy. In writing to these he says, "The elders which are among you, I exhort." These were not clergy as distinguished from the people or laity. For he exhorts these elders to feed the flock of God with them, watching over it, not necessitously, but freely, not for filthy lucre, but liberally; neither ruling imperiously over the heritages, but becoming examples of the flock; and when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Thus, the christian people at large were "the flock of God;" and in their local societies, or ecclesias, "the heritages." The elders were a part of these, and not an order distinct from them. They did not shift about from one heritage to another, because they could get more tithes, a larger salary, or more abundant donation-party contributions, there than here. To have done this would have been to episcopize necessitously, or for filthy lucre, which Peter exhorted them not to do. No; although of "the poor of this world," they episcopized, or watched over, the flock of God in its several sheep-folds, "freely" or "liberally," that is, without any stipulated fee or reward. What they received leaped out of the purses of brethren, whose inner man was imbued with the truth, and whose hearts overflowed with gratitude to their elder-brethren for their kind and gratuitous vigilance in those times of tribulation and peril. There was no extorting of "church rates" from infidels and churls; or selling of pews by auction, or letting seats, to non-professors or the faithful, to pay the hire of bishops or presbyters. The people of God's flock would have scorned such extortion and meanness. Thus, in writing to a heritage, which he styles "a chosen lady and her children," concerning brethren of other lady-heritages who circulated about spreading abroad the truth, John says, "Beloved, thou dost faithfully whatsoever may have been done for the brethren and for the strangers; who have testified of thee for love before an ecclesia; whom having sent forward worthy of God, thou wilt do well. Because for the sake of the Name they have gone forth receiving nothing from the Gentiles. We ought therefore to welcome such that we may become colaborers for the truth"—3 Epist. 5–8. By this simple means the doctrine of Christ was diffused among the heathen; and the faith and love of the heritages were individually, collectively, and personally displayed. But when men arose from among these elder-brethren, "speaking perverse things to draw away the disciples after them," and whom Paul styles "grievous wolves," a transition period arrived in which “the simplicity that is in Christ” was corrupted, and the heritages turned into mistresses for the Sons of Balaam. Beguiled by them, as the Serpent through his subtilty beguiled Eve, (2 Cor. 11:3), they fell from their first estate, and played the harlot against the Lord; as abundantly appears from the letters of the Spirit to the Seven Lightstands of Asia; whose condition was representative of the apostasy, which was at that time establishing itself in all the heritages of the Lord. By A.D. 312, the desolation was complete. They who loved the wages of unrighteousness had gained the ascendancy. The disciples were Nicolaitanized, or conquered, by Balaam and Jezebel. A clergy, or heritage, had arisen, which became the inheritance of the Roman Emperors, and their successor the Image of the Beast, and the False Prophet, not Mohammedan, but Antichristian, in all the “Holy Orders.” The clergy of God now are the clericles, or heritages of God, whose faith and practice can be proved to be identical with those of his flock in apostolic times; and which have no other clergy, or heritage, than God; and which repudiate the clergy of christendom in all its diversity of popes, cardinals, bishops, priests, parsons, deans, ministers, pastors, evangelists, apostles, prophets, angels, and deacons, as the unscriptural and antichristian orders of the Kingdom of Sin.

The Balaamites in Pergamos, as well as the Nikolaitans, were the exceptions in the Antipas ecclesia, not the rule; for then it would have ceased to be “the faithful witness” there. But few as they might be, they were an evil leaven, which might work the corruption of the whole body. They sowed to the flesh in “forbidding to marry,” and therefore ordaining fornication. In this particular they became the fathers of the catholic priests, who are forbidden, and forbid to marry, and yet have more children than the married. The Spirit exhorted them to heartily change their views; to repent, or abandon “the teaching of the Balaamites and Nikolaitans, the covetous and vicious perverters of the gospel of the kingdom and name, and corrupters of the right ways of the Lord; who were extensively and actively working in all the regions of the habitable where the gospel had been proclaimed.

Now these things were not written solely for the sake of the Antipas in Pergamos; but for all faithful witnesses in other times and places. Therefore the Spirit says, “He that hath an ear, let him hearken to what the Spirit saith unto the ecclesias.” What he saith to the seven, for whose especial benefit it was communicated to John. They are in an evil world, whose principles are subversive of the truth; consequently, their position in it is belligerent, and their destiny the reward of victory. Therefore the Spirit says, “to the victor, to him will I give to eat from the Manna which has been concealed; and I will give to him a white pebble, and upon the pebble a new name that has been engraved, which no one knows but he that receiveth.” The manna, the pebble, and the new name, are here added to the wood of life in Paradise. They are symbols of blessings; or blessings disguised in symbols. Let us, then, examine them, and see what honey they contain. And first of the Hidden Manna.

8. The Hidden Manna.

“The Manna which hath been concealed” is a form of speech to be understood by comprehending the signification, first, of “the Manna;” and secondly, of its concealment; the latter of which will be found intimately connected with the gift of it to him that overcomes.

When the Twelve Tribes had arrived in the Wilderness of Sin, they murmured against Yahweh, because they apprehended that they would perish there from hunger; as if, had that been his intention, he would not have left them to die in Egypt. But the Spirit had heard their murmurings, which showed their want of confidence in his promises; for he had promised to plant them in the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey: but they let go this hope in saying to Moses and Aaron, “Would to God we had died by the hand of Yahweh in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh-pots and when we did eat bread to the full; for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger.”

These murmurings being heard, Yahweh said to them through Moses, “Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you.” Having made this promise, before it was fulfilled “the Glory of Yahweh appeared in a cloud,” as they looked toward the wilderness; and the whole congregation saw it. And the Spirit said, “At even ye shall eat flesh, and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread;” and ye shall know that I, Yahweh, am your Elohim.” And it was so.

But when the morning came they at first saw only “the Dew,” sparkling in the light of day. But “when the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness a small round thing small as the hoar frost upon the ground.” The people had seen nothing of the kind before deposited by the evaporation of the dew; therefore they inquired of one another, מָה הַזֶּה mahn hu, “What it? For they knew not what it was.” And Moses said to them, “This is the bread which Yahweh hath given you to eat.”

And at this point of the narrative it may be worthy of note and emphasis.

1. That Israel saw the glory of the Eternal before they received either flesh or bread;
2. That they received flesh first, that is, “at even;”
3. That they received bread the succeeding morning; so that there was an intervening night;
4. That they beheld the glory, and received the food in the wilderness, and forty years before they received the promised land.

Now, as we are taught in the New Testament, the signification of the things that happened to Israel in the wilderness was not confined to that generation. Their baptism into Moses, their eating of the Manna, their drinking of the Rock, their overthrow in the wilderness, the apostle Paul says, “were types of us.” Read what he says in 1 Cor. 10:1–10. After this enumeration, he adds in the eleventh verse, “Now all these things happened unto them for types, tupoi; and they are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the Aions (the Mosaic Aions) are come.”

The Flesh and the Manna then, according to Paul, were “spiritual meat.” In regard to the manna, it is styled in Psal. 78:24, “the corn of the heavens,” “the bread of mighty ones—“man did eat the bread of mighty ones.” This and the flesh, by which the life of Israel was sustained, was “spiritual meat;” it was, nevertheless, material and corruptible flesh and bread; for under certain conditions, it stank and bred worms. But it was “spiritual” in the sense of representing something else than its own material constituents; in other words, the flesh and the bread were types of something that was afterwards to descend from the heavens, and to become the life-sustaining principle of all that should receive it. What was that something?

This question has been answered by Jesus in John 6. The Jews had said, “Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, “He gave them bread out of the heaven to eat.” But in reply to this, Jesus said “Moses gave you not the bread out of the heaven; but my Father giveth to you the true bread out of the heaven. For the bread of the deity is He, who, descending out of the heaven, and giveth life to the kosmos.” This was as much as to say, that the manna was representative of a life-imparting agent from heaven; even the Logos speaking by Jesus. “In him,” the Logos, “was life,” says John; “and the life was the light of men.” The Logos, or Spirit of Deity, was the manna, or true bread. It was this Logos who said, “I am the Way and the Truth and the Resurrection, and the Life;” “I am the Bread of Life,” or the Manna; “I came down from heaven,” “this is the bread which descendeth from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die * * * if any man eat of this bread he shall live in the Aion: and the bread that I, the Logos, will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the Kosmos.”

Thus spake the Logos, who was in the beginning the Deity. He promised to give “His Flesh” for the sustenance of the kosmos. This flesh was the Son of Mary and David, named Jesus; and the Logos appointed that Jesus should be eaten, and his blood drank, in the even, by all who would become the subjects of resurrection to the life of the Aion. “Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.” This saying is fatal to the heathen dogma of an immortal soul in sin’s flesh; for they only eat the flesh and drink the blood of Jesus, who “discern the Son and believe into him;” and this can be affirmed only of an almost Noachic few in this evil generation. He that believes the written testimony of the Logos concerning Jesus, set forth in the prophets and apostles, and becomes the subject of repentance and remission of sins in his name, eats his flesh and drinks his blood, and “hath aion-life” in the sense of Rev. 22:14—“blessed they doing God’s commandments, that they may have the right to the Wood of the Life:” “and I will raise him up at the last day”—John 6:54. Thus, “he that eateth me, even he shall live by me,” and none else.

The Christ, then, or the Logos become flesh, is the “spiritual meat” represented by the flesh and manna in the wilderness. Hence, the apocalyptic manna is representative of the last Adam, whom Paul styles “a life-imparting spirit;” and to eat from this manna, is to be the subject of incorruptibility of body and life, which together constitute immortality in the thousand years’ Aion; which deathlessness is imparted by the Spirit which raised up Jesus from among the dead.

We may here recall the attention of the reader to the four points already before him. These were typical conditions, the antitypes of which may be thus stated in a corresponding order:

1. It was typically necessary that Israel see the Glory of Yahweh before they eat heaven’s flesh at even, and eat from the Manna in the morning;
2. That they eat the flesh first;
3. That they eat the bread afterwards;
4. That they eat both before they obtain Aion-possession of the land promised to Abraham and his Seed.

Under the first head I remark that Jesus Anointed was the Glory of Yahweh. This is proved by John’s testimony, that “the Logos became flesh, and dwelt among us, (Israelites,) and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace: for the law was given through Moses, the grace and the truth (represented by that law) came through Jesus Anointed.” This Glory of the Father was seen by “Judah and his companions” in the evening of the Mosaic Aion; and he was seen in the wilderness, as Isaiah had predicted, saying, “The Voice of him that proclaimeth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of Yahweh, make straight in the desert a highway for our Elohim * * * and the Glory of Yahweh shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see together”—ch. 40:3, 5. This was partially fulfilled in the evening of the Mosaic Aion, as related in regard to John the Baptizer. He was that voice; the Spirit descending in the form of a Dove was Yahweh, or the Logos; and Jesus, the Eloah of Israel, who, when anointed, became, as the voice of John proclaimed, “our Elohim,” or the Logos, the Eloah from heaven, become flesh in Jesus, the other Eloah of the house of David. These two Elohim dwelt among the Jews, as “the Only Begotten of the Father”—Son of Power and Son of Man—who hath declared the Invisible Deity to men. But “all flesh” have not yet “seen together.” Judah and his companions have seen; but Israel and his companion-tribes have not. Multitudes of the former have eaten the flesh, and drank the blood, of the Son of Man; and are now sleeping out of the intervening night, that in the morning they may come forth as dew, and when it hath gone up, they may be as manna upon the ground. But the Ten Tribes did not see the Glory of Yahweh in the days of John. It is, however, typically necessary that they do see it in the wilderness before the morning, that they also may eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Logos, before they eat of the manna hidden in the dew, preparatory to their admission into the covenanted land. The whole congregation of Israel must see the glory together; and, as Jeremiah saith, “thy words were found, and I did eat them;" so Israel has to come to the knowledge of "the truth as it is in Jesus," inwardly to digest it, and to feed upon it in the wilderness-probation that awaits them in the matter of their restoration.

In the morning, they who have seen the glory, and eaten the flesh "at even," or believed the gospel of the kingdom and name of Jesus Anointed, will behold "the Dew" before "it is gone up." The bread to be eaten was concealed in the dew, and did not appear until the fluid matter in which it was suspended was evaporated by the action of the sun. Now, the manna in dewy suspension is apocalyptically styled "the manna that hath been concealed." The manna concealed in dew is a type of the resurrection of the first-fruits of the Spirit. When they that now dwell in the dust awake and sing, they are at their awaking the Spirit's Dew; which the prophet saith is as "the Dew of herbs"—Isai. 26:19. They remain in this Dew-state until the Sun of Righteousness acts upon them, and transforms them into Manna; that is, makes them corporeally like himself—transforms the body that comes out of the grave into a like form to that with which he descends from heaven—Phil. 3:20. To be the subject of this transformation by the Spirit is "to eat of the manna which has been concealed."

But the concealment of the manna has also especial reference to Jesus who is himself the type of his companions. In the historical type, the manna appears in two forms—first, as susceptible of corruption; and secondly, as incorruptible. "If left until the morning it bred worms and stank." Ordinarily it would not keep from morning to morning; but in the manna gathered upon Friday this tendency was restrained, and it remained perfectly good; and "did not stink, neither was there any worm therein." Now Jesus, as we have seen, being the Logos become flesh, was both evening quail and morning bread. He was gathered by the nation on Friday, or the sixth day, when they crucified him. They gathered him in the morning, but they did not leave him on the cross till the following morning; still, they kept him laid up in the sepulchre on Saturday; nevertheless, he did not stink, neither was there any worm in his body. The Spirit "would not permit his Holy One to see corruption;" for the tendency natural to the flesh was restrained.

Israel gathered a double portion on Friday; so that when they went out on Saturday to look for it, "they did not find it in the field," as Moses said: so when they gathered the bread of heaven, and laid him in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, those who might go out to look, could find the Son of Man no longer sowing the words of eternal life in the field.

But some of the manna was incorruptible for a longer period than the sixth and seventh days. It was made to last for generations. Moses was commanded to put an omer, or tenth part of an ephah, of manna into a pot, and to lay it up before the Testimony, to be kept. Every day this was preserved, and it was kept for centuries, evinced the presence of the Spirit in the Most Holy; for ordinarily it would not keep. It was deposited in the chest, called the Ark of the Testimony, which was overlaid with gold; whose lid was termed the Caphporeth, propitiatory, or Mercy Seat; and upon which the Cherubim were based. This Ark of the Covenant contained the Tables of the Law, the pot of Manna, and Aaron's Rod which budded; things all representative of the Logos in his incarnate manifestation.

Now as Aaron laid up an omer full in a pot, and concealed it from view within the Ark of the Testimony there to remain for centuries; so the Eternal Spirit concealed in Jesus, the antitypical Ark of his Testimony, that deposit of Manna, from which it shall be given to those who overcome to eat. We feed upon this manna from day to day in feeding upon the truth. But what we eat to-day will not suffice for the morrow. We must keep it in memory. But though we thus feed, and rejoice in "the right to life," yet it is life-manna concealed; for "we are dead, and our life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory"—Col. 3:3, 4.

The night, then, of the Life-manna's concealment in the Spirit's Ark, is far spent; and the morning of its manifestation at hand. Jesus Anointed, who is the Glory of the Eternal, has been "hid in God"— concealed from human ken “at the right hand of Power,” for many generations and centuries. Though once like the daily manna, corruptible; during that long period he has been, and will ever continue to be, like the Manna in the Ark, incorruptible. We look for his appearing, that we who are dead, who are corruptible and mortal, and also by nature “dead in sins;” but pardoned, and therefore dead to the world, and buried with Christ in baptism, and risen with him out of its waters in hope of being planted in the likeness of his resurrection—we wait for his coming, that the spirit may be in us as in him; and that being made like him, we may eat of the manna that hath been so long concealed.

9. A White Pebble.

Besides the promises that the victor shall eat from the hidden manna, it is said by the Spirit, “and I will give to him a white pebble.” To eat from the manna would be to rise from the dead; but when risen, what then? “I will give him a white pebble.” This implies a blessing superadded to resurrection of life.

In the English version it reads, “I will give him a white stone.” In the original word is psephon not lithon. The latter word is used in 1 Pet. 2:5, where he says that the saints are the living stones of a building. It signifies stone in general as opposed to wood; while the former is something of a lithic nature which is small and receivable. The psephos was the pebble used by the ancients in voting, and which was thrown into the voting urn, or as we should say, into the ballot box. Hence it is used for the vote itself. But the voting by psephos, ballot, must be carefully distinguished from that by kuamos, or lot; the former being used in trials, the latter in the election of various officers. The psaphoi of condemnation or acquittal were sometimes distinguished by being respectively bored, or whole; but kuamoi never. In Acts 26:10, it is said of Paul speaking before Agrippa, “and when the saints were put to death, I paid down a pebble” psephon, rendered in the E.V. “I gave my voice against them.” His was a pebble of condemnation. The nature of the vote was determined by the color of the pebble; a white pebble denoted acquittal, a black one, condemnation.

A psaphos was also a token given to the victors in the public games.

Now it is written in Rom. 14:10, 12, “We shall all stand before the judgment seat of the Christ; and every one of us shall give an account of himself to the Deity:” and in 2 Cor. 5:10, “that every one may receive the things in the body according to what he has done, whether good or evil.” From this we learn, that after the life of Jesus is manifested in our mortal flesh (2 Cor. 4:11) be resurrection, we are to appear bodily before the Christ for the purpose of giving an account of ourselves; and of receiving certain things. These things are of two classes—good things; and evil things. The former are apocalyptically represented by the excellent promises made by the Spirit to the faithful belonging to the seven ecclesias. The approved shall eat of the arboretum of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of the Deity; he shall not be hurt of the Second Death; he shall eat of the hidden manna, and receive a white pebble with a New Name engraved upon it; he shall receive power over the nations, and rule them; he shall receive the Morning Star; he shall walk with the Spirit in white raiment; he shall not be blotted out of the Book of Life; and shall be confessed before the Father and his Angels; he shall be a permanent pillar in the temple of the Spirit’s Deity; the name of the Spirit’s Deity, and of his City, New Jerusalem, and the Spirit’s New Name, shall be inscribed upon him; and the Spirit will come into him, and sup with him, and he with the Spirit, with whom he shall be enthroned. These are truly “exceeding great and precious promises,” which are all consequent upon the candidate receiving a white pebble with a New Name engraved upon it. If he were to receive a black pebble he would be black balled from the society of the redeemed; he would be condemned as unworthy of the New Order of Things; and fit only to be expelled into outer darkness.

For the Spirit, then, to pay over a white pebble to a resurrected saint, is for him to give a verdict in his favor from the judicial throne. And this is the verdict, or pebble,—“well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.” Therefore, “Come, ye blessed of my Father, take possession of the kingdom having been prepared for you, from the foundation of the State:” possess it with eternal life—Matt. 25:21, 34, 46; 19:29.

I shall defer the consideration of the engraving upon the white pebble until I come to expound the promises made to the ecclesia in Philadelphia recorded in Rev. 3:12. But in so doing I would remark that whatever it may import, it is a name “which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth.” This, however, is an apocalyptic saying, which does not imply that it can not be verbally defined. The name possessed by the Faithful and True One is said to be known to no man, but himself; yet, in the fourth verse after, that name is declared to be “KING of kings and LORD of Lords”—Rev. 19:12, 16. The meaning is that no man knows experimentally the name but he who answers to the name. If a man be not the King of kings, he does not know the name or title. It does not fit him. So in respect to the New Name of the white pebble; for a man to know it, he must be a subject of the verdict. The new name will then declare what he is, and he will know it experimentally. He and the name will be identical. It will not be like the names of Christendom, which have no adaptation to the “miserable sinners” who rejoice in them; for instance, “Charles of Naples, King of Jerusalem,” “His Apostolic Majesty, Francis Joseph of Austria,” “His Holiness the Pope;” and so forth. These are names of blasphemy assumed by the Diabolos and Satan, to gratify their own pride and vanity, and to impose upon fools. The world is full of “right honorables” over the left; and of “right reverend fathers in God,”—that is the God called Mammon. A saint cannot know these names; for they are descriptive of the things they illustrate,—pride, hypocrisy, and superstition.

SECTION 4.

TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA AMONG THYATIRANS.

18. “And to the Angel of the Ecclesia among Thyatirans write; These things saith the Son of the Deity, having his eyes like a flame of fire, and his feet like to incandescent brass. 19. I have known thy works, and thy love, and service, and faith, and endurance; and that thy works even the last are more than the first. 20. “But I have a few things against thee, because thou permittest the woman Jezebel, who calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to fornicate, and to eat idol sacrifices 21. “And I gave her time that she might heartily turn from her prostitution; but she turned not. 22. Behold, I cast her into a bed, and them committing adultery with her into great tribulation, unless they may have heartily turned from their works. 23. And I will slay her children with death; and all the ecclesias shall know that I am he that searcheth reins and hearts; and I will give to you, to each one, according to your works. 24. “But I say to you, and to the rest among the Thyatirans, as many as do not hold this teaching, and who acknowledged not the depths of the Satan as they speak; I will cast upon you no other burden. 25. “Moreover that which ye have, hold fast to the time that I may have come. 26. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my appointments until an end, I will give to him dominion over the nations; and he shall govern them with an iron sceptre: (as the potters’ clay vessels it is breaking to pieces) as also I have received from my Father. 28. And I will give to him the Morning Star. 29. “He that hath an ear, let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias”—Rev. 2:18–29.

This writing concerning “the things that are” affords additional evidence, that “the Angel of the Ecclesia,” represented by a Star in the right hand of the Spirit, is not an individual teacher or elder; but an order in the ecclesia composed of a plurality of persons, many or few. Thus, the Spirit addresses the Angel in verse 23, doso humin, ekasto, I will give to you, to each one, where the word humin to you is plural, and ekasto, to each one, is in the singular number. Hence the sense is, “I will give to each one of you, composing the Star-Angel of the Ecclesia, according to your works.”

1. Topography of Thyatira.

THYATIRA stood forty-eight miles east of Pergamos. It was a city of Lydia on the Lycus, a branch of the Hyllus, anciently called Pelopia, but now Akhissar by the Turks: that is, “the White Castle,” from the great quantity of white marble there abounding. Only one ancient edifice is left standing. The rest, including the clerical bazaars, or “churches,” are so destroyed that no vestiges of them are to be found. The principal inhabitants are Turks, who have eight mosques in Akhissa, while the Greeks, calling themselves Christians, have no edifice indicative of the former pre-eminence of their mistress, “the woman Jezebel,” among Thyatirans. So effectively has “the Son of the Deity, whose eyes are as a flame of fire, and his feet like to incandescent brass,” fulfilled the threatening, saying, “Behold, I cast her into a bed, and them committing adultery with her into great tribulation; and I will slay her children with death.” The only vestige of Christianity there is a few ignorant and superstitious Greeks calling themselves by the name “Christian,” to which they are no more entitled than the Turks.

In the inscriptions of these apocalyptic epistles, none of the cities are addressed, as if each city were an ecclesia. In the English Version, that to the Ephesian saints is inscribed “to the Angel of the Church of Ephesus.” This style of address is in accordance with the notions which prevail in the synagogue of the Satan, where a city or a nation are regarded as synonymous with a church. Hence, in the nomenclature of “the Satan, as the speak,” we have the titles, “the Church of Rome,” “the Church of England,” “the Church of Scotland,” “the Church of Ireland,” and so forth; so that all born of the flesh, and of the will of man, in these places, not avowing themselves dissenters, are regarded and claimed as bona fide members of “the church by law established”—established by the law of flesh and blood, which is the Devil. But the scriptures recognize no such churches. They contain no epistles addressed to such. These are the several branches of the Synagogue of the Satan, whose angels are the men constituting the “Holy Orders” of the apostasy. The apocalyptic epistles are severally addressed “to the Angel of the Ephesian ecclesia,” “the ecclesia of Smyrneans,” “the ecclesia in Pergamos,” “the ecclesia among Thyatirans,” “in Sardis,” “in Philadelphia,” and “the ecclesia of Laodiceans,” but, whether saints of Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, or Laodicea, they were all, who held fast the name and denied not the faith of the Spirit, the ecclesia, or invited ones, “in the Deity, the Father, and the Lord Jesus Anointed.” They boasted not in the ecclesiasticism of their native cities or countries, but in the Lord.

2. Origin of the Ecclesia in Thyatira.

The Christian faith was, doubtless, introduced into Thyatira by Lydia, whom Paul and his companions first became acquainted with at Philippi, a city of Macedonia. She was “a worshipper of God” belonging to Thyatira, but for the time being sojourning at Philippi as “a seller of purple.” Paul met her at the proseuche, by the river side, beyond the city walls. She had gone there with other devout women to offer prayer to the living and true Deity. It was “on the day of the sabbaths,” or, as we say, on Saturday, by which we may infer, that Lydia was a devout Jewess, or Gentile proselyte, belonging to the synagogue in Thyatira. Luke, who was present, says, that “the Lord opened her heart to assent to the things being spoken by Paul;” and the result was, that she was baptized. Thus, Paul planted, but the Lord gave the increase; and the case shows under what conditions the increase was given. Certain things were being spoken by Paul. The things being spoken were “the truth,” or “Gospel of the Deity, which he had before promised by his prophets in the holy scriptures” (Rom. 1:1, 2); and that truth, “as it is in Jesus.” Paul could speak no other things, and none other would have opened Lydia’s heart, or understanding to an affectionate comprehension such as the Lord would have acknowledged. The truth spoken is the Lord's instrumentality for the opening of men's hearts; and where the truth is neither heard nor read, there the hearts of mankind remain unopened, and are found to be occupied by all "the depths of the Satan, as they speak."

The reader will observe, that before the Lord opened the heart of Lydia, she was already "a worshipper of God." This fact proves that a belief in, and sincere worship of, the true God is not sufficient for salvation; if it is, why did the Lord open the heart of his worshipper to receive Paul's teaching? But it is not sufficient; for since the resurrection and ascension of Jesus, salvation is predicated on believing the things concerning the kingdom of the Deity, and the name of Jesus Anointed, and being baptized into that name. Any teaching in opposition to this, belongs to the departments of the synagogue of the Satan, apocalyptically designated as "Balaam," and "the woman Jezebel."

Lydia's heart, or understanding and affections, were opened. She desired that others should share with her in the benefit she had received. She therefore introduced Paul to "her household." We are not informed whether these were worshippers of God as well as Lydia; or whether it was composed of men and women, or exclusively of the latter. The probability is, that as she had come with purple goods from Thyatira, she had a retinue of male and female attendants and friends. The men of her company would look after the goods in their transshipment, and exhibition for sale in the bazaar, while the females would assist in the sales, and render any personal service she might require. Hence, "her household" may have been quite numerous; for visiting cities for the sale of goods in those days was a more onerous affair, and required more personal service, than in these, when companies supply the place of private enterprise. Her household may have been Jewish, or mixed; probably purely Jewish, as she was of that faith; be this as it may, she introduced Paul to them, that he might speak the same things for the opening of their hearts which he had for the opening of hers. "As his manner was," he declared the testimony of God, and reasoned with them out of the prophets concerning the expected Son of David, and King of Israel, called the Christ. His testimonies and arguments commended themselves to their honest hearts, which opened through the force of conviction to the obedience which the faith enjoins. As the result of the whole, Luke tells us in Acts 16:15, that "her household was baptized." Lydia and her household were thus, by faith and baptism, added to the name of Jesus Anointed, or "the Lord the Spirit," and an ecclesia of Thyatirans was created, so that when they should return to that city, they would become the nucleus of the apocalyptic ecclesia to which the Spirit writes; and "the house of the Deity, which is the ecclesia of the living Deity, the pillar and the foundation of the truth"—1 Tim. 3:15.

But after this Paul visited Anatolia, or Asia Minor, in which Thyatira was situated and flourished, and, although we have no account of his visiting that city, there is every reason to believe, that multitudes from Thyatira visited him. In Acts 19:8–10, it is expressly said, that Paul while at Ephesus disputed and persuaded the things concerning the kingdom of God, first, for three months in the synagogue there and afterwards daily in the school of one Tyrannus for two years, "so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks." No doubt many of these were immersed by Paul or his companions, and on their return to Thyatira received into the ecclesia already there.

The creation of the ecclesia among the Thyatirans after this manner occurred about thirty-five years before the dictation of this epistle to their "angel," or eldership, by the Spirit. Ample time had, therefore, been granted them for the development of Christian character. In the general, it appears to have been commendable, though in a certain particular, they were reprehensible. The spirit of the Lord in the gifts he had bestowed had dwelt among them, and in their eldership, during the period of their ecclesiastical existence. The Son might therefore well say, "I have known thy works." Though the resurrected and anointed Jesus was invisible to them, the gifts of the spirit they possessed had been sent by him, and as long as they continued, were a perpetual memento of his existence at the right hand of power, and of his perception and cognizance of all that was transpiring in all the ecclesias of the Habitable. "The grace and the truth," says John, "came by Jesus Anointed," who as David predicted, and Paul testified, "ascended on high, and received gifts for men." Hence, wherever those gifts were, there also were the presence and power of the personal, or individual, Son of the Deity, who speaks in these epistles as "the Spirit," on the principle that "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," and therefore God, or DIVINE POWER. The works of the Angel were conspicuous for "love, and service, and faith, and endurance." Such an eldership must have been in the general in a spiritually healthy and efficient state; and which argued also a wholesome condition of the Spirit's servants, called in the letter "my servants;" or, in the nomenclature of the synagogue of the Satan, "the laity." It is "the leaders of the people cause them to err;" but where the leaders are faithful, this cause of error is wanting. The leaders corrupt the people, and when the people are corrupted, the seducers are enthroned and flourish; and the people come at length to delight in the corruption that destroys them.

The ecclesia among the Thyatirans became an arena upon which the two classes of leaders displayed themselves. The one class were characterized by a more abundant love, service, faith, and endurance in the days of John, than in the days when they were originally constituted the Star in Thyatira; while the other class was characterized by the idolatrous, meretricious, and murderous wife of Ahab. "the woman Jezebel," who slew the prophets of Yahweh. The former were the Antipas in Thyatira whose devotedness sustained the truth against the machinations of all its enemies, heretical or pagan. Their "love" was not like that of the Satan's—a love of "divine things" as far as agreeable to our animal instincts, and compatible with our worldly prosperity and peace. The love of the Antipas was the fulfilling of the law; the doing whatsoever Jesus had commanded, by which they evinced that they were his real friends. Many of the Satan's synagogue who rejoiced in Jezebel, possessed spiritual gifts, and could speak with tongues, and prophesy, and understand mysteries, and had the knowledge, and the faith to remove mountains, and bestowed their goods to feed the poor; and not only in some cases gave their bodies to be burned; but in crowds rushed to martyrdom, till the pagan authorities refused to kill them; and told them to become their own executioners. Still, as Paul intimates, they were nothing; for they were destitute of "love." So it is now. Though papists and protestants, Jezebel and her children, have not the gifts, yet they largely bestow of their goods to feed the poor, and in many instances have, and would again, sacrifice their lives for what they call "the gospel;" still like their predecessors in apostolic times, they are nothing but sounding brass, and a tinkling cymbal, because they are destitute of the love commended in the Thyatirans. This was "long suffering and kind," even to an excess rebuked by the Spirit in the letter before us; for they permitted Jezebel-teachers and seducers to speak, instead of putting them to silence at once. These were envious, boastful, puffed-up, of unseemly behaviour, seeking their own, easily provoked, evil thinkers, who rejoiced in the mystery of iniquity, which was finally established by their means. These were the characteristics of Jezebel and her children, John's clerical contemporaries, and the official fathers of the professional soul-savers of modern christendom. Their co-apostolic predecessors like themselves were destitute of "love," without which men cannot be saved. "Love," says Paul, "rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." Paul's clerical contemporaries did not rejoice in the truth; but relinquished their original hold upon the name and denied the faith of the Spirit. Our clerical contemporaries are in the same condemnation. They cannot, if their lives depend on it, inform the public what "the truth as it is in Jesus," consists in. They are ignorant of its system in toto, and therefore cannot "believe all things and hope all things," and consequently have not the love of which this faith and hope are constituent parts. The eiservice of the Star-Angel in Thyatira, like its love, had increased. Their last works were more than their first. They contended earnestly for the faith originally delivered to them; like the Antipas in Pergamos, they held it fast, and were therefore in a position to overcome; for the power of victory is our firm and hearty belief of the truth. They were the pillar and support of the truth in Thyatira, where it might have flourished to this day if their successors in office had been “faithful men able to teach others.” But this unfortunately was not the case, so that the fountain being poisoned at the head, the waters became bitter, and the people died. The evil had begun to work by A.D. 98, the epoch at which the Spirit addressed them through John. Forty years before that the Mystery of Iniquity was at work; but it had not yet triumphed in Thyatira. It was, however, hard at work there professedly opposed to Paganism, and at the same time doing its best to paganize christianity. The Mystery of Iniquity had its apologists in all the ecclesias. In Ephesus, they falsely styled themselves “apostles;” in Smyrna and Philadelphia “Jews;” and in Laodicea, they said, they were “rich, and increased in goods, and had need of nothing.” But the Spirit pronounced them “liars,” “vanquishers” and “wasters of the people,” the Satan, “wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked,” and, as in the letter under consideration, the Woman Jezebel.

3. The Woman Jezebel

As we have shown in our exposition of the apocalyptic “Balaam” and “Nikolaitans,” there existed a class of teachers calling themselves “christians,” contemporary with the apostles, who taught “another gospel,” and set forth a Jesus, which Paul styled “another Jesus;” both of which, that is, the Jesus and their gospel, were different from the real Jesus and the true gospel, proclaimed by the apostles; and subversive of the divine teaching concerning them. This class of teachers, styled by Peter “false teachers;” and by John, “false prophets” and “deceivers who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh;” which heresy, or falsehood, he says, “is the Deceiver and the Antichrist” wherever found—2 Pet. 2:1; 1 Jno. 4:1; 2 Epist. 7:—this class, I say, had become numerous and influential by the end of the first century; and were to be found sowing tares in all the field of the apostolic labors. They were the “reverend divines” and “D.D.’s” of the Nineteenth Century in embryo—the self-styled “apostles” to whom “the Clergy” of our day are the undoubted “successors.” They taught the same doctrine as our clergy, and therefore they are unquestionably the same class.

Now false teachers, prophets, and deceivers are aggregately represented in the scriptures of the Old and New Testament, by a woman of vicious and profligate character. Thus, the Spirit in Ezekiel 22:25, in speaking of the leaders of the people in Jerusalem, says, “there is a conspiracy of her prophets in the midst thereof; like a roaring lion ravening the prey, they have devoured souls; they have taken the treasure and precious things. Her priests have violated my holy law, and have profaned my holy things. Her prophets have daubed souls with untempered mortar, seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith Yahweh Elohim, when Yahweh hath not spoken.” These priests and prophets, who were princes in Jerusalem and Samaria, are represented in the next chapter by two lewd women, “the Daughters of One Mother,” Aholah the elder, and her sister. “Thus were their names,” says the Spirit; “Samaria is Aholah, and Jerusalem, Aholibah.” Then follows the indictment against them, in which their apostacy from the Mosaic Law in its simplicity, in their blending it with the abominable customs and principles of heathenism, is likened to the intercourse of harlotry and adultery. The priests and prophets of Samaria were Aholah the harlot daughter of the comely and delicate woman, Zion under the law (Jer. 6:2); and the same class in Jerusalem were Aholibah, the younger harlot of the same mother, “more corrupt in her inordinate love than Aholah.”

In the New Testament, the disciples of Jesus Anointed, who, though not all “elders,” “apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers,” are all “living stones built up a spiritual house, a holy and royal priesthood, a holy nation, a purchased people”—Eph. 4:11; 1 Pet. 2:5, 9; Rev. 5:9, 10. And so long as they held fast the name, and did not deny the faith, of Jesus Anointed, they are styled apocalyptically “the Woman,” and “the Woman of the Lamb”—Heb. 3:6, 14; Rev. 12:6, 14, 16, 17; 19:7, 8. But when a schism of this one body was elaborated by false teaching, the teachers and those who followed the teaching, ceased to be of “the Woman of the Lamb;” but became “a woman,” or an adulteress.

Such had become the situation of affairs by the close of the first century. There were two women in the Roman Habitable claiming to be the Spouse of Christ; the one, “a Chaste Virgin, begotten and espoused to one husband, the Christ, by the word”—2 Cor. 11:2; 1 Cor. 4:15; Eph. 5:26: the other, a woman, drunken and adulterous, and the Mother of a progeny of Harlots, and of the Abominations of the earth—Rev. 17:1–6; 14:4—all of them, mother and daughters, begotten of the traditions and commandments of men, making void the word of God. Between these two women there was rivalry and indignation. The adulteress proclaimed, that she was rich, and increased in goods, and had need of nothing; and invited the world, in all its filthy garments, to her embrace. This is what is proverbially styled “the World and his Woman,” called by his friends and boon companions, “THE CHURCH.” Scripturally, they are Ahab and Jezebel, the adversaries and destroyers of the saints; and wherever any of their prophets are found ministering before the people, there the principles of the flesh, and the gospel-nullifying traditions of men, are glorified and prevail; because, “being of the world, therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them”—1 Jno. 4:5. This is an unmistakable criterion. The world will not listen to the counsel, and support any women, but Jezebel and her daughters. Whatever “preacher” will present himself in the name of Jezebel, him will the world listen to with open mouth and ears; for the principles he inculcates are what the flesh approves.

The apocalyptic woman that had been manifested in John’s day was styled “Jezebel,” because the character of the class of false teachers was analogous to that of the wife of Ahab, known in Jewish history by that name. Hence, the literal Jezebel was made the type, or pattern, of the class, which became the figurative Jezebel. There was no literal woman named Jezebel in Thyatira claiming to be a christian, any more than there was a literal Antipas and Balaam in Pergamos of these names; at least history gives no account of any. Therefore the typical Jezebel must be that Jezebel of the Old Testament. The study of her history and circumstances must be virtually the study of her antitype, and that antitype is the adulteress, or pseudo church, of false teachers, in which the abettors of Balaam’s teaching were embodied; and who differs from Balaam in this that she is the adulterous exhibition of what Balaam taught. Her name in Hebrew is זִיבּוּל

Izabel, which is compounded of aie, not zebul, she dwells. As if the Spirit had said, she dwells not with me; that is, the teachers and their disciples who teach and seduce to commit prostitution, and to eat idol sacrifices, are not my spouse. Thus by conferring this name upon them, the real spouse of Christ in those days was vindicated by the Spirit. No wonder the Apocalypse was unpopular with those who held the doctrine of Balaam in those days, as it hath also been to this day with the same class. They know they do not teach the word, and that they can define neither the name nor the faith of the Spirit; and they know that they teach for the hire paid them by the house of Ahab, or the world; and that they love the wages of unrighteousness. How then can a book be popular with such which proclaims them to be not the spouse of the Spirit; but the harlot community prostituting itself for hire to an ignorant, superstitious, and besotted world.

But Izebel or Jezebel, is not only etymologically an appropriate type of the clerical orders of Christendom, whose constituents are “the prophets” of the world; the origin, and character, and fate of the woman are also typical of the origin, character, and fate of the “reverend divines,” and doctors of divinity, who minister to the itching ears of those who heap up to themselves teachers after their own lusts, and are turned aside to fables. Jezebel was the daughter of Ethbaal, the idolatrous king of the Zidonians, whose name imported dedication to Baal the false god, the lord of the people; whom Balaam had before taught the Israelites to serve with fornication and idolatry. Now the origin of the clergy is analogous to this. They were begotten in idolatry, or in Baal. “The Lord saw folly in the prophets of Samaria; they prophesied in Baal, and caused his people Israel to err”—Jer. 23:13. Peter also testifies this of certain prophets, styling themselves christian teachers, in his day. In writing to the elect he says, “there will be false teachers among you, who privily will bring in damnable heresies. These, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption. They have eyes full of an adulteress (full of Jezebel) and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls; a heart have they exercised with covetous practices; cursed children, who have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the Way of son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness. They are wells without water, clouds that are carried of a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever.” Such were the clergy in their origin. The generation of the clerical Jezebel in our day, however, differs from the generation of their brethren and fathers in the days of Peter in this, that our clergy never were the children of God and were never in the right way; therefore, though the accursed preachers of other gospels than the true one, they are not “cursed children,” and have not “forsaken the right way,” because they were never in it. “The Way of Balaam” is emphatically the Way of the Clergy in all post-apostolical and pre-millennial generations. Their eyes are full of Jezebel, whose original practice is proverbially “the ministerial sin.” They speak evil of the things they do not understand; and they undertake to teach what they know nothing about; and therefore, they are “wells without water.”

These clerical prophets in Balaam, and therefore in Baal, in undertaking to speak to the edification, exhortation, and comfort of souls, being of a class represented by a woman, “called herself prophetess.” They became an ecclesiastical woman prophesying deceits. She was begotten of falsehood, so that the father of the clergy is “the Devil, who was a liar from the beginning.” “Except ye be circumcised and keep the law of Moses, ye cannot be saved.” This was the first element of the falsehood enunciated to christians by teachers in the presence of the apostles. They set up the dogma, that a Gentile must believe the gospel, be immersed, be circumcised, and keep the law, in order to salvation. This was the first lie taught for truth after the ascension of Jesus; and those who taught it, constituted in themselves, and therefore originated the anti-apostolic order, familiarly known in our day as “the clergy.” Hence, the clergy are Judaizers to this day—commanding to fast, to abstain from meats, to keep holy days, and sabbaths.

But the falsehood which generated their order was not complete till the principles of heathen philosophy were commingled with the Judaic dogma. This was effected when they denied the resurrection of the body in affirming, as Justin testifies they did, that what they call “souls” went immediately to heaven at death. This Judaized Heathenism constituted what Paul calls “a lie,” and “the Mystery of Iniquity”—a system of falsehood formative of the clerical order, which gave them a parentage like that of Jezebel. The principles styled Baal, (for Baal; having no real existence, was only a system of ideas, so called, that lorded it over those who acknowledged it;) gave origin to the clergy who worship Baal and preach him everywhere. The Sidonians believed in immortal souls, in their going to heaven at death, and in a place of torment, where the wicked burned in fire eternally. They also believed in sacrifice to propitiate the Deity, and in making long and noisy prayers, by which to induce him to hear them. Our clergy have not advanced one step beyond this since the days of Jezebel. She believed these things, and were she personally in existence now, she could have no scruples in becoming a member of any clergyman’s church in this city, Catholic or Protestant. It is true, the clergy now hold a few principles, or rather opinions, unknown to Jezebel and her clergy, the original prophets of immortal-soulism. They believe in a Jesus of whom she had never heard; but their belief in this other Jesus whom Paul did not preach, does not at all interfere with their hearty adhesion to the Baal-System of Ideas. Their eyes are full of Jezebel, and she was full of Baal.

Prostitution, and eating the sacrifices offered to the idol-representations of the dead, whose souls were said to be alive, were institutions of Baal-Religion. When Israel were seduced by the Moabitish women to worship Baal, at the suggestion of Balaam, they committed whoredom with them, and ate the sacrifices of their gods. The Balaamite clergy were guilty of the same thing. They privily introduced idolatrous practices among christians. They taught them to eat of the sacrifices sold as holy meat, by which they became partakers of the idolaltars, and propitiated the heathen, for in so doing, they contributed to the support of the pagan priesthood. But Paul objected to this sort of compromise in toto. His argument was, that the things the Gentiles sacrificed they sacrificed to demons, to the ghosts of dead men, and not to God; and that in eating of them knowingly, they had fellowship with their imaginary demons. He told them that when they went to the butcher's they should ask no question, but just buy whatever came to hand. They would then buy in ignorance, having no knowledge whether there was sacrificed meat or not. But if any one said, "this is offered in sacrifice to idols," he told them not to eat it, for the eating then involved a principle of fellowship with deified ghosts, in the judgment of him who invited to eat.

Paul's anxiety was that the Corinthian brethren should "not have fellowship with demons," or deified imaginary ghosts, called "immortal souls." These demons had a table and a cup, as well as the Lord; and Paul taught that they could not partake of both without sin. The same demons have a table and a cup now, modified, however, in this, that bread cut up into pieces, emblematic of the divisions of antichristendom, is substituted for meats offered to the demons. The table spread by the clergy, and called by them "the sacrament," is the modern table of the demons. It is the table of those who believe in deified immortal souls, who are the gods of the clerical system. It is Jezebel's table, at which a saint cannot eat without having fellowship with the demons she funeralizes to glory, which is sin. Her churches are a synagogue of unbaptized "miserable sinners," as they proclaim themselves to be in their prayers, and consequently, her table cannot be the Lord's, for his teaching has no place for such there—the miserable patrons of demons belong to Jezebel, not to the spouse of Christ.

Again, prostitution, literal and figurative, is a notorious clerical vice, and characteristic of Jezebel. She forbids to marry, and in so doing, "teaches to commit fornication." The priests of the Romish Jezebel are literally a body of whoremongers and adulterers, and their nunneries houses of ill fame; and though, on account of the marriage of the Protestant clergy, this is not the case to the same extent, yet spiritually they are in the same condemnation; for "fornication," in its figurative sense, imports unhallowed union with the world, and blasphemy against God. They are all guilty of this. If they knew the truth, and told the world the truth, the world would not support them. Now, "all that is of the world is not of the Father;" and "he that is the friend of the world is the enemy of God;" they pretend to be God's servants, to be his church or spouse, and yet they serve the world for hire. They are therefore prostitutes and men-pleasers, and consequently, cannot possibly be the servants of Christ, whose name they blaspheme in all their institutions.

The literal Jezebel was a persecutor and slayer of the prophets of Yahweh; and the antitypical, or clerical, Jezebel has been preeminently so. The clergy from their origin until now, have always been opposed to the truth; and have always had a hand in stirring up persecution for its suppression. The civil power, or the Diabolos, has been the instrument of their malevolence and cruelty; and though they cannot inflict personal violence in this country, they still retain much power for evil in the territory of the Beast. But the fate of Jezebel awaits them. She was hurled from her high and queenly estate with violence, and devoured by dogs so completely, that they found not of her what to bury. Jezebel has not yet come to this. She is still in her glory, rioting in drunkenness and prostitution.

It was a fault charged upon the presbytery of the ecclesia in Thyatira, that they permitted some of the Jezebel class to teach the servants of Christ there. It was the duty of an eldership not to allow error to be inculcated. They appear to have been too tolerant. Teaching which led to practices and conclusions subversive of morality and the gospel ought not to have been allowed. They had the truth, which had been divinely planted among them, and all things not according to that, they ought to have authoritatively suppressed. This course would have been an effectual barrier against Jezebel, and her Balaamite and Nikolaitan progeny. But this course was not pursued. She obtained a foothold, and the consequences has been the extinction of Antipas in Thyatira, where none are now to be found who hold fast the name and the faith of Jesus Christ as his faithful witnesses.

"I gave Jezebel time," saith the Spirit, "that she might heartily turn from her prostitution; but she turned not." As we have said, Jezebel still lives, and she lives in sin. In the days of John she was without political sovereignty; she was the daughter of Ethbaal the idolater; but she had not been married to the Greco-Latin Ahab. The Judaizing and Gnostic clergy were actively working the Mystery of Iniquity into authority; they had organized it into a synagogue, and were privily insinuating it into the elderships; but they had not yet succeeded in allying themselves to the State. The apostles, while living, warned them and exhorted them to turn from their evil course; but, as John says, "they hear us not;" and went out from fellowship with them, and circumvented them in every possible way. Referring to these whom he calls "the Satan" after whom some had turned aside, Paul says, in writing to Timothy, "this thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia be turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes." These were two clergymen, friends of Balaam and Jezebel the prophetess, who taught the inherent immortality of the soul of the flesh; and therefore, with two other clergymen named Hymenaeus and Philetus, said that the resurrection is already past; and that, consequently, there is no future resurrection of the dead; resurrection being unnecessary upon the Jezebel principle of the immortal soul of sinful flesh going immediately to heaven at the death of the body. Paul argues ably against this heathen absurdity in 1 Cor. 15. But it had no effect upon Jezebel the prophetess; for "seducers waxed worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived;" and she still went on in her vicious course. "I gave her time," says the Spirit, "that she might heartily turn from her prostitution." Instead of slaying every deceiver in communion with her, as he had Ananias and his wife Sapphira, he gave her time. That time has not yet expired; for Jezebel lives, but has not repented; but instead thereof, "sits as a woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the witnesses of Jesus," upon an association of ensanguined and blasphemous powers, represented by "a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy"—Rev. 17:3, 6.

The writers of the second, third, and fourth centuries, styled by the clergy of our day "the Fathers," with probably an exception or two, were all of Jezebel. In the letter before us, they are styled "her children;" they were such, because they were unfaithful to the truth; and though they suffered death by the pagan power for their opinions, it was, in the providence of God, a present punishment for their iniquity. "Behold," saith the Spirit, "I cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into a great tribulation, except they may have heartily turned from their deeds. And I will kill her children with death, and all the ecclesias shall know that I am the searcher of reins and hearts." In reading the history of these centuries the student of ecclesiastical history must not suppose that all called "christians" who died by the hand of the executioner, were put to death for their adherence to the name and faith of Jesus Christ. Multitudes had a rage for martyrdom, and gave their bodies to the fire in expiation of iniquity, transgression, and apostasy. These were "those who committed adultery with Jezebel," the clerical fathers, and "her children," who looked up to those fathers as the deluded people of "the religious world" look up now to the clergy who deceive them, regarding them with awe as their "spiritual guides" and "fathers in God." The tribulation that came upon the body indiscriminately regarded as "christian" by the pagan authorities, an apostle terms “judgment beginning at the House of God.” “If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye,” says Peter; “for the Spirit of glory and of the Deity resteth upon you; on their part (on that of the persecutor) he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or an evil-doer, or as a busy body in other men’s matters. Yet if any man suffer as a christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. For the time is come that judgment begin at the house of God: and if first at us, what shall the end be of them who obey not the gospel of the Deity? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?”—1 Epist. 4:14–18. Many suffered “as evil-doers” under the name of “christian”. Thus Milner observes, “many heretics, who wore the name of christians, were guilty of the most detestable enormities; these were indiscriminately charged by the pagans on the christians in general.” And again, “the abominations of heretics, whom ignorance and malice will ever confound with real christians, furnished the enemies of Christ with some tolerably specious pretensions. Probably these were much exaggerated; but whatever they were, the whole Christian Name was accused of them.” “The injudicious conduct of apologists,” says Gibbon, “betrayed the common cause of christianity, to gratify their devout hatred to the domestic enemies of the church. It was sometimes faintly insinuated, and sometimes boldly asserted, that the same bloody sacrifices, and the same incestuous festivals, which were so falsely ascribed to the orthodox believers, were in reality celebrated by the Marcionites, by the Carpocratians, and by several other sects of the Gnostics. Accusations of a similar kind were retorted upon the church by the schismatics who had departed from its communion, and it was confessed upon all sides, that the most scandalous licentiousness of manners prevailed among great numbers of those who affected the name of christians.” The apocalyptic letters plainly testify to the existence of this state of things in the christendom of the close of the first century. There were two classes—the Antipas, or faithful witnesses, who held the truth in righteousness; and the Nikolaitans, or children of Jezebel, who held the doctrine of Balaam, and seduced the servants of Jesus Christ to the practice of deeds which he detested. Against these judgment is threatened in the words, “I will kill Jezebel’s children with death; and all the ecclesias shall know that I am he who searches the reins and hearts.” To kill with death is to destroy with violence—by judgment through the magistrate, who wielded the sword of office for the execution of the law. To kill with death was not to permit the offenders to die a natural death. All such, who gave their bodies to be burned, or to be thrown to the wild beasts, or to any other form of martyrdom, were mere “sounding brass and tinkling cymbals;” and heirs of the vengeance to be revealed in “the Second Death.” They had not faith to give them the victory over the world; so the world overcame them by its seductions, and exposed them to be “hurt of the Second Death,” which is manifested after the resurrection of the flesh. When this time arrives, the “bed” will have been prepared for Jezebel, and she will then be “cast into it;” and not she only, but with her them that commit adultery. This bed is the “great tribulation,” or “sorrow,” in which the antichristian apostasy is to be destroyed at the apocalypse of Jesus Christ in “the Hour of Judgment;” when Babylon, the Great City, falls because of her having prostituted and debauched all the nations with her blasphemies and abominations. The ecclesiasticism of the earth and of the whole habitable, with all the clerical orders by which it is upheld, will be utterly abolished by the wrath of the Deity poured out without mixture, which they will be compelled to drink with great torment in the presence of Jesus and the Saints—Rev. 14:7–11; 18:2. Into this bed of tribulation Jezebel is at length cast, with all her antichristian and clerical adherents, who, in the text last quoted, are typified by “demons,” “foul spirits,” and “hateful birds;” for the Thyatiran Jezebel is but the germ of that Babylon which, as a mighty Upas banded with brass and iron, now overshadows all nations with its pestiferous and besotting influence.

Now this “great tribulation,” which is yet antitypically to come upon “Babylon, the Great, the Mother of Harlots,” was typically poured out upon the Thyatiran Jezebel previous to the taking of the pagan hierarchy out of the way, which prevented the manifestation of the Lawless One, who would be set up as the head of Jezebel, and as a substitute for Christ upon earth. As Christ is the Head of the true Woman, the body of the faithful; so the Pope is the present Head of Jezebel, the Mother of Harlots, and of all her family. But, before Christ appears in power, his woman passes “through much tribulation to enter into the kingdom of the Deity”—Acts 14:22; and so, before Antichrist (the power which set up as Christ’s substitute, and is now incorporated in the chief styled “the Pope”) appeared in power, the Thyatiran Adulteress was made to pass through “a great tribulation” ere she could enter into the kingdom of this world; and mount the scarlet-coloured beast; and sit a Queen, and no widow,” and, intoxicated with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the witnesses of Jesus, say with complacency, “I shall see no sorrow”. She had to pass through the “Ten Days,” which the Spirit forewarned the Smyrneans they would be tried with, when the Diabolos should cast of them into prison, or the house of death. The reader is here referred to what has been written about the “ten days’ tribulation” on page 240. “All the ecclesias” in the proconsular Asia were afflicted by this; and Thyatira’s, consequently, among the rest.

But the Ten Day’s tribulation of Trajan’s reign was but an earnest, as it were, of the great tribulation to which the christian name would be subjected before the Jezebel Apostasy from apostolic teaching should attain to political sovereignty over the nations, and be “spued out of the mouth of the Spirit.” They had to pass through that “Hour of trial, which,” the Spirit forewarned the Philadelphians of, “should come upon the whole habitable, to prove them that dwell upon the earth”—Rev. 3:10. Judgment the most terrible would befall her, which “all the ecclesias” would perceive was the hand of God punishing her by the sword of the ruler for her abominations.

And so it was. Ecclesiastical historians inform us, that in the third century the pure light of the gospel was much clouded and depraved by an unhappy nurture of philosophical self-righteousness and superstition. With the exception of three years, the christians had enjoyed a long peace of thirty-seven years to A.D. 248. This, it appears from one of Origen’s homilies, was followed by a great degree of lukewarmness, and even of much religious indecorum. The declension seems to have been remarkable. “Several,” says he, “come to church only on solemn festivals; and then not so much for instruction as diversion; some go out again as soon as they have heard the lecture, without conferring, or asking the pastors any questions; others stay not till the lecture is ended; and others hear not so much as a single word, but entertain themselves in a corner of the church.” “Elsewhere,” says Milner, “he complains of the ambitious and haughty manners of pastors, and of the improper steps which some took to obtain preferments.” At this time, the reigning emperor, Philip the Arabian, who murdered his predecessors, is styled by Eusebius a christian; “and indeed, that he was so by profession,” says Milner, “seems well attested by the concurrent voice of antiquity;” and he adds, “there is no doubt but in the fourth year of his reign, A.D.247, he allowed and conducted the secular games which were full of idolatry.”

This Philip was slain and succeeded by Decius, A.D.248. His enmity to Philip conspired with his pagan prejudices to bring on the most dreadful persecution ever yet experienced by christians. It was evident that nothing less than the destruction of the christian name was intended. The persecution raged with astonishing fury both in the East and West. Cyprian, an overseer in “the church” at Carthage during the persecution, recognizes it as a chastisement for sin. In a treatise of his concerning “the Lapsed,” is an account of the declension that had taken place before his conversion, and which moved God to chastise “the church.” “If the cause of our miseries,” says he, “be investigated, the cure of the wound may be found. The Lord would have his family to be TRIED. And because long peace had corrupted the discipline divinely revealed to us, the heavenly chastisement hath raised up our faith, which had lain almost dormant; and when, by our sins, we had deserved to suffer still more, the merciful Lord so moderated all things, that the whole scene rather deserves the name of A TRIAL than a persecution. Each had been bent on improving his patrimony; and had forgotten what believers had done under the Apostles, and what they ought always to do. They were brooding over the arts of amassing wealth. The pastors and the deacons each forgot their duty; works of mercy were neglected, and discipline was at the lowest ebb. Luxury and effeminacy prevailed. Meretricious arts in dress were cultivated. Fraud and deceit were practised among brethren. Christians could unite themselves in matrimony with unbelievers; could swear not only without reverence, but even without veracity. With haughty asperity they despised their ecclesiastical superiors. They railed against one another with outrageous acrimony, and conducted quarrels with determined malice. Even many bishops, who ought to be guides and patterns for the rest, neglecting the peculiar duties of their stations, gave themselves up to secular pursuits. They deserted their places of residence and their flocks: they travelled through distant provinces in quest of pleasure and gain; gave no assistance to the needy brethren; but were insatiable in their thirst of money. They possessed estates by fraud, and multiplied usury. What have we not deserved to suffer for such a conduct? Even the Divine Word hath foretold us what we might expect, saying. ‘If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments, I will visit their offences with the rod, and their sin with scourges.’ These things had been denounced and foretold, but in vain. Our sins had brought our affairs to that pass, that because we had despised the Lord’s directions, we were obliged to undergo a correction of our multiplied evils, and a trial of our faith by severe remedies.”

The foregoing extract will illustrate the saying of the Spirit, “and all the ecclesias shall know that I am the searcher of reins and hearts.” There were those in the ecclesias, crowded as they were with worthless pastors and people, who discerned the signs of the times. The faithful deplored the evils, and justified God in his chastisements, which were “according to their works.” Exhortations to duty would have made no impression upon them; nothing but the sword could arouse them to a due perception of their position. Avarice, under the teaching of Balaam, had taken deep root among them; and, as soon as the times became dangerous, vast numbers lapsed into idolatry immediately. Even before men were accused of being christians, “many ran to the forum and sacrificed to the gods as they were ordered; and the crowds of apostates were so great that the magistrates wished to delay numbers of them till the next day, but they were importuned,” says Cyprian, “by the wretched suppliants to be allowed to prove themselves heathens that very night.” If Cyprian had lived in the nineteenth instead of in the middle of the third century, he could not have given a more accurate description of the pastors and people who call themselves christians, than is contained in the foregoing extract; and if tribulation such as the Decian were to come upon “the church” now, the multitude of professors would be as hasty and importunate as his contemporaries to protest that they belonged to any thing else than the sect proscribed by the ruling power.

4. The Depths of the Satan as they Speak.

But all among the Thyatirans were not impressible by the arts and blandishments of Jezebel and her children. “The rest” were a faithful remnant who repudiated her teaching, and “the depths” which they prescribed. We need not repeat here what has been already adduced concerning “the Satan,” but we may add to this, that the sentence, “the depths of the Satan as they speak,” shows that “The Satan” is not a solitary individual, but representative of a plurality of speakers, whose speech is enunciative of deep things, called “depths.” These depths were adverse to the “Name,” “Faith,” and morality, or “works,” styled by the Spirit “his,” and therefore they were Satanic Depths; and those who taught them “the Satan;” and those who received them, both teachers and disciples, “the Synagogue of the Satan;” “Jezebel the prophetess” and the holders of Balaam’s teaching, who styled themselves apostles, and said they were Jews, being the clergy of that synagogue, clerically termed “the Church of God;” but in reality “the habitation of demons, the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird.”

Antipas, or the faithful witnesses, were the rest among the Thyatirans who had not acknowledged the “depths of the Satan as they speak.” Antipas still retained his original position in “all the ecclesias,” which, although teeming with “false brethren” both in the presbyteries and among the multitude, had not yet been “spued out of the mouth of the Spirit.” Antipas was the remnant of the Woman’s Seed contending earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints against all “the depths of the Satan as they speak;” which in their logical effect upon the minds of Christians perverted the gospel; and made it of no effect in regard to justification and practice. The Star-Presbytery in Ephesus had fallen from its first estate; still it had not fallen to the lowest “depths,” for Antipas was among them as “those who could not bear them that are evil; but tried them who pretended they were apostles, and are not, and found them liars.” Antipas was also among the Smyrneans as “the rich,” because faithful in works, tribulation, and poverty; also among the Sardians as “the few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments;” and in Philadelphia, as the “little strength” of the ecclesia there; which the Spirit says had “kept my word and not denied my name.” But among the Laodiceans the Antipas are not found. Their existence is a supposition, as, “If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.” The Satan was triumphant there, and the faithful witnesses reduced to such an insignificant minority as to be noticeable in the prophecy only as an hypothesis. They were “a contemptible few” not submerged in “the depths of the Satan as they speak;” but not enough of them to save the ecclesia from being spued out of the Spirit’s mouth. A few did hear the Spirit’s voice among the Laodiceans, and became fugitives in consequence. They were no longer found in “the churches,” but in their own peculiar place, “in the wilderness;” where, as “the Woman” and “the Remnant of her Seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Anointed,” they were “nourished” for 1260 Years “from the face of the Serpent,” become a Catholic of the Laodicean type—Rev. 12:14, 17, 9, 10.

The extract from Cyprian sufficiently illustrates “the depths of the Satan as they speak,” in the practice of the so-called Christians of the middle of the third century. He says that “the long peace,” or time given for Jezebel to repent of her prostitution, instead of being attended with the result desired by the Spirit, produced a contrary effect,—“it corrupted the discipline divinely revealed to us.” In this Cyprian and the Spirit agree; for the latter says, “and she repented not.” “Our faith,” says Cyprian, “was almost dormant;” and his details of practice must have made them an object of contempt even to the pagans. But, though good practice will not always result from sound teaching, owing to the perverseness of the flesh; bad practice is the certain consequence of Satanic teaching. The depths of the Satan spoken, produced the depths of the Satan wrought. The energy, or “working of the Satan,” was elaborated by the teaching of “the Fathers” of the second and third centuries. These fathers were the “they” of the text before us; as, “the depths of the Satan as they ‘the Fathers,’ speak.” Irenaeus, Tertullian, Pantaenus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, Cyprian, and so forth, are a specimen of these clerical fathers whose teaching “corrupted the discipline divinely revealed.” Of Irenaeus history testifies that “his philosophy had its usual influence on the mind, in darkening some truths of scripture, and in mixing the doctrine of Christ with human inventions:” “in general, however, notwithstanding some philosophical adulterations, he certainly,” says Milner, “maintained all the essentials of the gospel:” that is to say, what Milner regarded as “the essentials.” He is said to have been instructed in “Christianity” by Polycarp of Smyrna, and Papias of Hierapolis, contemporaries of the apostle John. Irenaeus became overseer of the ecclesia at Lyons in France about A.D. 169. One of his sentiments left on record is certainly sound. “If man,” says he, “had not been united to the Deity, he could not have been a partaker of immortality:” another also is perfectly scriptural; speaking of Jesus, he says, “He had flesh and blood, not of a different kind from what men have; but he gathered into himself the very original creation of the Father, and sought that which was lost:” and again, “The Word of God, Jesus Christ, on account of his immense love, became what we are, that he might make us what he is.”

He has left on record a testimony to the corruption of the faith already prevalent in his day in a letter to Florinus, a person of rank in the emperor’s service, whom he had known in early life. Florinus had been seduced into heresy, concerning which Irenaeus says, “Those doctrines, they who were presbyters before us—those who had walked with the apostles—did not deliver to you. For I saw you when I was a boy in the lower Asia with Polycarp; and you were then (though a person of rank in the emperor’s service) very desirous of being approved by him. * * * I can describe the sermons which he preached to the multitude, and how he related to us his converse with John, and with the rest of those who had seen the Lord; how he mentioned their particular expressions, and what things he had heard from them of the Lord, and of his miracles, and of his doctrine. As Polycarp had received from the eye-witnesses of the Word of Life, he told us all things agreeable to the scriptures. These things, then, through the mercy of God visiting me, I heard with seriousness; I wrote them not on paper, but on my heart; and ever since, through the grace of God, I retain a genuine remembrance of them, and I can witness before God, that if that blessed apostolical presbyter had heard some of the doctrines which are now maintained, he would have cried out, and stopped his ears, and in his usual manner have said, ‘O good God! to what times hast thou reserved me, that I should endure these things!’ And he would immediately have fled from the place in which he had heard such doctrines.” Polycarp suffered death A.D. 167. At one time he and Irenaeus lived together at Smyrna, and held the same opinions. One Evaristus wrote an account of Polycarp’s martyrdom, which was adopted by the Ecclesia at Smyrna, and sent to that sojourning at Philomelium, a city of Lycaonia. The sentiments therein contained may or may not be regarded as those also of Polycarp their late teacher, and of Irenaeus his disciple. Speaking of martyrs in general, the letter says, “they despised the torments of this world, and by one hour redeemed themselves from eternal punishment. The fire of savage tormentors was cold to them; for they had steadily in view a desire to avoid that fire which is eternal and never to be quenched.”

Now the dogma of redemption from eternal punishment by an hour’s burning is nowhere taught in scripture. If Polycarp and Irenaeus taught this, they certainly held a depth of the Satan. As to “the fire which is eternal and never to be quenched,” it depends upon the sense of the original, whether it be classed with “the depths of the Satan,” or not. In the modern clerical sense of the words it is a depth; but in the scriptural sense, which is not the clerical, it is not a depth of the Satan; but one of “the deep things of God.” I apprehend that the Smyrneans, at least the Antipas among them, certainly would have used the expression in the sense of the Apocalypse which had been sent to their StarAngel, or Presbytery, some sixty-nine years before. There “the fire which is eternal” is “the fire and brimstone in the presence of the Holy Angels, and in the presence of the Lamb,” styled by Jesus to pur to aionion; and which he says, has been then “prepared for the Diabolos and for his agents;” apocalyptically styled, “the Beast and his Image, and the receivers of the mark of his name”—Mat. 25:41; Rev. 14:9–11; 19:20. This fire is AIONIAN because it is kindled when “the Times of the Gentiles are fulfilled,” and at the epoch termed “the Hour of Judgment,” which immediately precedes the AION which continues 1000 years. This Aionian Fire cannot be quenched. It is like that fire kindled in Jerusalem in the days of Jeremiah, which Yahweh Elohim said shall burn and shall not be quenched—Jer. 7:20; 17:27: nevertheless, the fire went out when its work was done; and Jerusalem was rebuilt, and continued for several hundred years, until it was again consumed in another unquenchable fire, which has also in like manner ceased to burn for ages past—Mark 9:43, 44. This I believe to be the sense of the Smyrneans; not an eternal fire in the sense of the Satan—a fire whose continuance is measured by the years of God.

Polycarp in his last words prayed “for resurrection to eternal life, both of soul, and body in the incorruption of the Holy Spirit.” He looked for life after resurrection of soul and resurrection of body, that they might both then become incorruptible by the Holy Spirit. But those who adopted the letter of Evaristus, and styled themselves “the Catholic Church of Smyrna,” apocalyptically “the Synagogue of the Satan,” declare therein that “he was now crowned with immortality and the prize of unquestionable victory.” This was equivalent to saying, that something called Polycarp had gone direct to heaven, and had obtained the prize. This was one of “the depths of the Satan” so pointedly condemned by Justin as unchristianizing those who held it. Polycarp and they evidently disagreed upon this vital question, although they styled him “an apostolical and prophetic teacher, the bishop of the Catholic Church of Smyrna.” If Irenaeus agreed with them that his instructor Polycarp had obtained the prize of immortality without resurrection; if this “philosophical adulteration” formed a part of his philosophy, “the essentials” he maintained would be of little worth. We suspect Irenaeus was infected with this depth of the Satan, for he speaks of “the martyrs” hastening to Christ; as though they would enter into his presence before the resurrection! Nay, we are now sure of it; for further on, in his account of the persecution at Lyons and Vienne, he says of Vettius Epagathus who suffered death, “he was, and is still, a genuine disciple of Christ, following the Lamb whithersoever he goeth”—a quotation seventy years after John’s death, from Rev. 14:4. Now Vettius could only “follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth” after his death, upon the principle of immediate translation to heaven, which was styled “the birthday of martyrdom.” In another place, he speaks of “eternal fire in hell” for the apostate. But enough of Irenaeus, who suffered death A.D. 210.

Tertullian wrote much, but of little account. Pantaenus was the first master of a catechetical school established at Alexandria, in Egypt; which piqued itself on its superior erudition, and whose taste was ruled by the Platonic philosophers. Pantaenus was much addicted to the sect of the Stoics, a sort of romantic pretenders to perfection. The combination of Stoicism with Christianity, in the system of Pantaenus, was a depth of the Satan that very much debased the truth, and beclouded the light of the gospel. The Antipas, composed of the simple and unlearned, happily escaped the infection, and preserved unadulterated the genuine simplicity of the faith of Christ. The Stoicized Christianity of Pantaenus laid more in the way of the learned, who are always ready to be caught by any bait that flatters intellectual pride. Pantaenus always retained the title of the Stoic Philosopher after he had been admitted to eminent employments in the church. Eusebius highly commends him for his philosophy—a blasting wind as it was; a depth of the Satan, highly destructive of Christian vegetation in all infected by it. He died soon after the commencement of the third century, being at the time Catechist of the Alexandrian School for the indoctrination of youthful Satans in “the depths as they speak.”

Clemens Alexandrinus was a disciple of Pantaenus, and of the same philosophical, or Satanic, cast of mind. He was of the eclectic sect. He succeeded Pantaenus in the school, and became the preceptor of Origen, and other eminent perverters of the truth. Besides the office of Catechist, he filled that of a presbyter in the ecclesia in Alexandria. He was what is styled in our day a “Reverend Divine,” and “Professor of Divinity.” His course of instruction, he tells us, was this: “As the husbandman first waters the soil, and then casts in his seed, so the notions which I derive out of the writings of the Gentiles serve first to water and soften the earthy parts of the soul, that the spiritual seed may be the better cast in, and take vital root in the minds of men.” This was putting the flesh above the Spirit. Milner well says upon this, that “the apostles neither placed Gentile philosophy in the foundation, nor believed that it would at all assist in raising the superstructure of Christianity.” On the contrary, they looked on the philosophical religion of their own times as so much rubbish; but in all ages the blandishments of mere reason on such subjects deceive us—“vain man would be wise.” Clemens’ Christianity was Nikolaitanism; and the “divinity” he taught “the depths of the Satan” derived from the writings of the Gentiles, commingled with ideas received from the scriptures, which the philosophy rendered void.

The next clerical constituent of the Satan we have named is Origen. He was Preeminently a child of the woman Jezebel, and floundered notably in all the depths as the Fathers speak. He was of a most presumptuous spirit, which incited him to philosophize with great audacity in things religious; and permitted him never to content himself with plain truth, but to hunt after something singular and extraordinary. Demetrius the bishop committed the school in Alexandria to him alone; and he converted it wholly into a school of religious information, or, as it would be styled in our time, a “theological seminary.” He was a courageous, self-denying, learned, exceedingly austere, and pious member of “the Synagogue of the Satan.” “Heretics and philosophers,” says Milner, “attended his lectures; and he took, no doubt, a very excellent method to procure regard to himself at least; he instructed them in profane and secular learning, and obtained among the Gentiles the reputation of a great philosopher. He encouraged many persons to study the liberal arts, assuring them that they would, by that means, be much better furnished for the contemplation of the Holy Scriptures. He was entirely of opinion, that secular and philosophical institutes were very necessary and profitable to his own mind. Does it escape the reader how much in the course of the christian annals we are already departed, though by insensible degrees, from christian simplicity? Here is a man looked up to with reverence at least by the Eastern Church, as a great luminary; a man who, in his younger days, was himself a scholar of the amphibious Ammonius; who mixed together christianity and pagan philosophy, and who, by reading his motley lectures, drew over, in form at least, many of the heathen philosophers to embrace the religion of Jesus. These mention him often in their books; some dedicate their works to him, and others respectfully deliver them to him as their master. All this Eusebius tells us with much apparent satisfaction. To him the gospel seems to have triumphed over Gentilism by these means. There is no doubt but in a certain sense Origen’s success was great, but, in return, the pure gospel suffered greatly by an admixture of Gentilism. What can this extraordinary teacher and author mean, by asserting the utility, and even the necessity of philosophy for himself as a christian? Are not “the scriptures able to make a man wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work?” Suppose a man of common sense, perfectly unacquainted with all the learned lore of Ammonius, to study only the sacred books, is it not conceivable that he may acquire a competent, nay, even an eminent knowledge of the scriptures? But what are all Origen’s labors but vain attempts to mix things which the Holy Spirit has declared will not incorporate? The mischief which actually followed was to be expected: characters were confounded; and henceforward among the learned, the distinction between christian godliness and human philosophy is but faintly marked. If Origen had simply and plainly expounded to his learned auditors the peculiar and vital truths of the gospel, I cannot but suspect that many of them would have ceased to attend his instructions. “The famous Porphyry, than whom christianity had never a more acrimonious enemy, takes notice of Origen’s allegorical mode of interpreting scripture, observes that he was acquainted with him when young, and testifies to his rapid improvement under Ammonius. He asserts, what indeed Eusebius contradicts, that Ammonius, though brought up a christian, turned afterwards a Gentile. He says “that Origen continually perused Plato, Numenius, and the rest of the Pythagoreans; that he was well versed in Chaeremon the Stoic, and in Cornutus; and that from all these masters he borrowed the Grecian manner of allegorical interpretation, and applied it to the Jewish Scriptures.” Thus, he introduced such a complicated scheme of fanciful interpretation, as for many ages after, through the excessive respect paid to this man, much obscured the light of scripture. He died about A.D. 260, aged 70 years, a teacher and seducer of the servants of Christ from the simplicity of their faith into “the depths of the Satan, as they,” the Fathers of the Jezebel apostasy, “speak,” and their children, unto this day.

Now, if the reader compare “the depths” excavated by Origen and his patristic coadjutors in the corruption of the primitive faith and discipline delivered to the saints by the apostles, with “the depths” of the “divinity” taught by the clergy, or spiritual guides of the people, of “every name and denomination,” he will find that they are as intimately related as cause and effect. “The depths of the Satan as they spoke” in apostolic times, were the speculations of Hymeneus and Philetus, and of the many other false prophets that had gone out into the world, acuminated in Origen and others—2 Tim. 2:17; 1 John 4:1, whose “word,” or teaching, Paul said would “eat as doth a gangrene.” This is known by all pathologists to be destructive of all organization, and consequently of life. The word-gangrene of “the Satan” has consummated its work upon the theory and practice of christianity apostolically delivered. This is obvious to all scripturally enlightened observers of the spiritual system of the world. The word is not preached by the clergy who are ignorant of the first principles of the oracles of God. They preach the dogmas they have traditionally received from the “false prophets” they style “the Fathers”—the fathers of their “Holy Orders,” at the head of which is “the Holy Father” they term “the Pope.” These fathers were the perverters of the gospel Paul preached, by their inventions, which substituted sacramentalism for faith; nullified the doctrine of a resurrection of judgment; abolished the kingdom; transmuted the great mystery of godliness into scholastic jargon about “trinity;” destroyed the sacrifice of the christian passover by affirming the immaculateness of Christ’s flesh; in short, totally abolished the faith, and instead thereof, set up a system of RHANTIZED HEATHENISM, which may be defined, the sacramental deliverance of immortal ghosts from Plutonic fire and brimstone, and consequent translation into an Elysium beyond the realms of time and space!!! This definition is the symbol of “the depths of the Satan as they speak” now from the pulpits of Satandom in all the world. The Satan’s ministers, transformed, as Paul says, into ministers of righteousness, all proclaim the heathen dogma of a soul or spirit in man capable of disembodied existence in eternal weal or woe; and all the religion or pietistic invention they have patented proposes or professes to do, is to save this phantom from the flames of their Tartarus, and land it in Elysium, which they call Paradise! It is this pagan dogma which lies at the bottom of all their “depths.” Abolish this, and the religion of the clergy is abolished too; for their religion, which is “a cure” for such “souls,” can be of no use to the people if it be proved that there are no such souls in them to be cured. Hence the clergy, when they find courage enough for the conflict, fight hard for hereditary immortality—an immortality derived hereditarily from the earthy Adam, the first sinner upon whom the sentence of death was pronounced by the Judge of all the earth. A man under sentence of death is as a dead man. Immortality derived from a dead man by natural generation, is the immortality for which the clergy contend in all their “depths.” Without it, their craft is destroyed and their occupation gone. It is the great sand-bag of their system, which, when removed from the foundation-corner of their temple, leaves it without support, and in its fall, reveals to the contempt of all observers the shallowness of “the depths as they speak.”

5. The Reward Promised.

While the Jezebel, or clerical party, which had obtained a footing in the Thyatiran ecclesia, was denounced by the Spirit, and threatened with great tribulation and death; “the Rest in Thyatira” were encouraged to perseverance in their opposition to the clergy by exceeding great and precious promises. “I will cast upon you,” saith the Spirit, “no other burden.” The “great tribulation” that would come upon the ecclesia, and “the death,” which were to fall with pain upon the head of the wicked clergy, would more or less be cause of affliction to the whole body; but with this exception, “the rest among the Thyatirans,” who protest against all “the depths,” and “hold fast to the time that I may have come,” shall be rewarded. The words in italics show that the Spirit who uttered them considered that there would be a class of people concurrently existing with the Jezebel and her children until the coming of Jesus Anointed, who would answer to “the rest among the Thyatirans”—“the Remnant which keep the commandments of the Deity, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ”—Rev. 12:17. “The time” of his appearance is not quite yet. “The depths of the Satan as they (the clergy) speak” are still in the ascendant; and all the world hears, or gives heed to them, because they are of the world—1 Jno. 4:5. But we also see that there exists a remnant in this Thyatiran “Christendom,” which “does not hold this teaching,” and repudiates “the depths.” This remnant was to exist as a standing protest against the clergy, or “Sin-spirituals of the wickedness in the heavenlies,” until the Lord come. It does exist, and will exist till then; and at that time, now not far remote, will have the great and glorious satisfaction of witnessing and assisting in the overthrow of Jezebel, and the everlasting discomfiture of “her children” in the face of all the nations they have deceived.

We, then, who are of this remnant, are exhorted by the Spirit to “hold fast what we have till he come.” This exhortation presupposes that we have “the truth”—“the things concerning the Kingdom of the Deity and of the Name of the Anointed Jesus”—Acts 8:12. We are to hold fast these things “till he may have come,” be that in what age or generation it might; and are informed that the reward shall be great. This, in addition to what is promised in the writings addressed to the Star-Elderships of the ecclesias in Ephesus, Smyrna, and Pergamos, is dominion and government over the nations, delivered from the power of the sin-spirituals and world rulers; and the possession of omnipotence. This great promise is expressed in the words of the Spirit, saying, “He that overcometh and keepeth my appointments until an end, I will give to him DOMINION OVER THE NATIONS; and he shall govern them with an iron sceptre (as the potter’s clay vessels it is breaking to pieces) as also I have received from my Father. And I will give to him the MORNING STAR.” This is promised to the faithful and obedient remnant—to them who overcome the seductions of the world by faith, and keep the appointments of the Spirit; or those things appointed for faith and practice as delivered by the apostles—Mat. 28:20; 10:20. These appointments are to be observed achre telous “until an end”—not until “the end,” but “until an end.” These two “ends” are a thousand years apart. Alluding to the one, Paul says, “all in the Christ shall be made alive at his appearing;” and to the other, says, “afterwards the end.” The appearing to make alive, is at the end of “the times of the Gentiles;” but the end afterwards to telos he characterizes by “the delivering up the Kingdom” of the Millennial Period to the Father when he shall have put down all enemies, and destroyed death, which is the last of them. Hence, between “an end” and “the end” there is an important distinction; the former marks the beginning of the restoration of the Kingdom; and the latter, of its surrender to the Father, with a long interval of time between the two epochs.

The appointments to be observed are “until an end” indicated by the words of Jesus and Paul, saying, “Thus do in remembrance of me till I come.” Faith, hope, baptism, and the Lord’s supper, are appointments to be observed till he come. When he comes, those will be superseded by other appointments more suitable to the altered condition of the world. The new dispensation will bring with it new appointments; sacrifice will take the place of the Lord’s supper; and the feast of tabernacles, the sowing in tears by the side of all waters. “Come,” shall many people then say, “and let us go up to the mountain of Yahweh, to the house of the Elohim of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of Yahweh from Jerusalem.” “And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from the year to year to worship THE KING Yahweh of armies, and to keep the Feast of Tabernacles: and they shall sacrifice”—Isai. 2:3; Zech. 14:16, 21. The apostolic appointments will not be modified or repealed till then. Jezebel and her children have in effect abolished them all. As Daniel predicted they would, they have “thought to change times and laws;” they have substituted their own Catholic and Protestant clericalism for the precepts and institutions of the apostles; but it will be found to have been all to no purpose; for there is no salvation for any kind of pietists, however approved by their spiritual conscience-keepers, save by an intelligent and affectionate belief of the gospel of the Kingdom, and immersion into and for the Divine Name—“He that believes the gospel and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believes not shall be condemned;” these are the wholesome words of the Lord Jesus; and every one that consents not to them, Paul says, is foggy, knowing nothing. Let the clergy thing of this.

And who of these “reverend gentlemen,” if he were sent for by the dying to give them what he calls “the consolations of religion,” would talk to his “penitents” in the words of the promise before us? If unrepentant, would he exhort them to repent that they might have “dominion over the nations;” and therefore, over Britain, France, Spain, Italy, and so forth, when Jesus Christ should come to raise them from the dead? On the contrary, do not the clergy regard such doctrine as the ravings of the insane? Yet what else can a rational man make of the words before us? The Eternal Spirit declares, that the class he defines shall have “dominion over the nations; and shall govern them with an iron sceptre.” The clergy and their peoples do not believe this. They deny it, and call it madness; and tell their deluded worshippers that there is no reward for them in the earth, which is to be burned up with all the nations upon it; that the reward is in a heaven beyond the realms of time and space, where their souls will be for ever with the Lord. Unquestionably the clergy are infidels and blasphemers. When they open their mouths it is “in blasphemy against God to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in the heaven”—Rev. 13:6. This is affirmed of them who constitute “the Mouth” of the peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues, symbolized in their spiritual and temporal organizations, by the Beast of the Sea “full of Names of blasphemy.” It is objected, that they are very learned, respectable, pious, and sincere gentlemen. We admit all this under certain modifications; but we have nothing to do with their learning, respectability, piety, and sincerity; our argument is, that they do not speak the words of truth as any man, not an idiot or a fool, can read them in the scriptures. They speak one thing, and the Eternal Spirit another; and what they speak is a point-blank contradiction and denial of the words of God; so that, if a man believe their dogmas, he must of necessity make God a liar, which is to blaspheme him, his truth, and all who heartily believe it. They scoff at the idea of some poor shoemaker, or mechanic, who may be a true believer, taking a position over the nations after the lapse of a few years, to govern them for God in place of Queen Victoria, and the Kings of the earth, who now possess the dominion. They assume the posture of “laughter holding both his sides,” at the very statement of so preposterous a conceit. No wonder they discourage and discountenance the study of the Apocalypse; and if any of them should venture upon an exposition of it, that they should invariably give these letters to the Seven Ecclesias the go-bye. The promises appended to each are anticlerical, and find no counterpart in their systems. If it were reported that a certain clergyman had consoled a dying penitent with the hope of Christ’s speedy advent to raise him from the dust; and to give him dominion with himself over the strong and powerful nations of christendom, which he should govern with omnipotence and heaven-descended wisdom; a shout of derision would be yelled forth from the throats of his “brethren in the ministry” and their people, (or they would feel like so-doing,) that would cause him, as reported of the pastor of “the Holy Apostolic Catholic Church” in Sixteenth Street, to suppress the doctrine, and to fall back into the ways of orthodoxy, for very shame; but specially for fear of the consequences to his stipend, his position, and his fame.

But, scoff as the learned, respectable, and pious gentlemen of “the cloth” may, it is the doctrine of the Eternal Spirit, that “the poor in this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him,” and who show their love by doing whatsoever he commands them, shall have “dominion over the nations and govern them” with almighty power. This remnant that overcomes will have the honor of breaking up and abolishing forever the kingdom of the clergy with all its ignorance, superstitions, and blasphemies; for “the nations of those who are being saved shall walk in the light,” which they, as the New Jerusalem, shall shed upon them—Rev. 21:24. Where the nations to be governed with an iron sceptre are, there is the dominion of the Saints; who in their resurrection-state, sing a new song saying to the Lamb, “Thou wast slain, and hast purchased us for God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation; and hast made us for our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth;” “with thee a thousand years”—Rev. 5:9, 10; 20:4, 6. This promise to “the rest among the Thyatirans” is that in Daniel apocalyptically reproduced; that “the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High Ones,” whom all nations and rulers shall serve and obey—Dan. 7:18, 27.

They are to be ruled, the Spirit saith, “with a rod of iron.” Iron is the symbol of subduing power; and a rod, or sceptre, of regal authority. The word here rendered rule or govern is poimanei to feed, tend, direct, and so forth; which occurs also in Rev. 19:15. In this text, Christ is said literally to “feed the nations with a rod of iron” with the power of a royal conqueror. The position this sentence occupies shows, that thus to feed or rule them is to smite them, and to tread them in the winepress of almighty wrath and indignation. Thus it is written there, “Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he might smite the nations; and he shall govern them with an iron sceptre; and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of the all powerful Deity.” This is what is to be done by the King of kings and Lord of lords in his victorious career. Now the Spirit saith to the Thyatiran remnant, that he will give to them “even as I received of my Father.” Chap. 19:15 and Psal. 2:8, 9, show how the Spirit made flesh hath received of the Father-Spirit. Hence, for the remnant to feed, or rule, the nations with an iron sceptre, is for them, in concert with the Christ, to smite and conquer them, and so to inaugurate their royal authority over them.

This appears also from chap. 2:27. Here is a parenthesis after “rod of iron,” which indicates what is transpiring while the remnant is receiving dominion over the nations. In the original the parenthesis reads, “As the clay vessels of a potter it is breaking to pieces.” This differs from the English Version, which translates the word suntribetai by “shall they be broken to pieces.” This is incorrect, for the verb is in the third person singular of the present indicative passive, and not in the future plural. The version of the American Bible Union corrects the Tense but not the person of the verb. It follows the old version, and persists in giving a plural nominative to a singular verb. It renders the parenthesis by the words “as the vessels of the potter are shivered.” This, though good English, is an ungrammatical rendering of the Greek. The revisers err in looking for an expressed nominative of the verb. The sentence does not contain one. The nominative to suntribetai must be supplied from Dan. 2:34, 35, 44, 45. The verb signifies “it is breaking to pieces,” and the prophetic answer to the question, “What is breaking to pieces?”—is the nominative to the verb. “It,” the Image of Nebuchadnezzar, “is breaking to pieces as the clay vessels of a potter.” This breaking to pieces of the gold, the silver, the brass, the iron, and the clay together, is consequent upon its being smitten by the STONE-POWER upon its clayey feet—its clay-vessels, or ten Horn-kingdoms confederated with the Eighth Head in the hour of their breaking in pieces, and becoming the kingdoms of Yahweh and of his Christ. The remnant among the Thyatirans, and the Pergamean Antipas, and the Smyranean “rich” in faith, and Ephesian laborers for the Spirit’s Name, and the few names in Sardis, and the Philadelphian keepers of the word of his patience—these all, with Christ at the head of them, are the New Testament constituents of the Stone-Power. Authority will be given to them to break in pieces the political fabric of the world of nations as established in church and state. The operation is a conjoint one. It is to be effected, not by Jesus alone, not by his joint-heirs in his absence; but by all in concert. They follow him whithersoever he goeth—ch. 14:4; and therefore accompany him in all his wars of “the Great Day of the almighty Deity”—ch. 16:14: so that, when he encounters the Ten Horns, they are with him as “the called, and chosen, and faithful”—ch. 17:14; and when the worshippers of the Beast are tormented, it is in their presence as “the holy messengers” with the Lamb—ch. 14:10; and when he judges the Italian Harlot they reward her as she rewarded them, and double unto her double according to her works—ch. 18:8, 6; and when he goes forth to smite the nations, they follow him as the war-clouds of the heaven, clothed in fine linen, white and clean, which is representative of their righteousness in him—ch. 19:14, 8.

The New Version renders the passage before us thus: "I will give him authority over the nations; and he shall tend them with an iron rod, as the vessels of the potter are shivered." This gives utterance to the idea I have expressed above—that the tending, feeding, or ruling of this text consists in breaking them to pieces. This is an improvement upon the old version; but still defective in the particular already noted.

6. The Morning Star.

The Morning Star is also promised to him that overcomes,—“I will give to him the Morning Star,” saith the Spirit. To appreciate the importance and value of this great promise we must know what is signified by the phrase.

The Morning Star, ton astra ton proeenon, is the star belonging to the morning. This morning is alluded to in Gen. 49:27, where it is written concerning the tribe of Benjamin, styled “a wolf,” “he shall tear in pieces; in the morning he shall devour the prey; and at the evening he shall divide the spoil.” In these words of Jacob’s prophecy of “what shall happen with Israel in the last of the days,” we are instructed to look for a period in which Benjamin will devour his enemies instead of being himself devoured, as for the last eighteen hundred years. This is styled “the morning”—an era of triumph and conquest for Israel, as indicated by their devouring “the prey” and dividing “the spoil.”

Now, the morning is the beginning of the day, or the time of the sun’s rising. This is true whether the sun be the “Day Star” of the material or political heavens. The morning referred to by Jacob in his prophecy, is manifestly the time of the rising of a sun in the political heavens; because he is treating of a great political revolution in the affairs of Benjamin and the rest of the tribes. Israel can not now “devour the prey” and “divide the spoil” among the people; because, as Moses says in Deut. 32:36, “Yahweh sees that power hath departed, and none retained or left.” It is this perfect powerlessness of the tribes before their enemies, that excites the indignation and compassion of Yahweh. The scattering of their power having attained its climax, (Dan. 12,) the morning of their deliverance arrives; “for Yahweh will plead for his people, and show pity upon his servants, when he shall see that power is departed, and none retained or left.”

But the tribes of Jacob are not the sun, or Day Star, of this morning of their glory. In the antitype as in the type, “in the morning they shall see the glory of Yahweh appearing in a cloud”—Exod. 16:7, 10; and they who behold are different from the thing beheld: this is the Sun who in his rising makes it morning time. He will then give them bread to the full; and his dew will lay round about the host. The life and power of Israel is not in their own prowess; but in the Eternal Spirit, Yahweh, manifested in Messiah and his brethren,—the one Yahweh Elohim of Israel. It is he that makes “their latter end” glorious; and turns the weeping of their long and dreary night into the joy that cometh in the morning. This Eternal Spirit in his multitudinous manifestation is the Sun, belonging to the morning of that great day in which the world shall be ruled in righteousness; and Yahweh’s glory shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. The Spirit in David contemplating this ek pollon eis, and vice versa, the One-in-Many, the future ruling body upon earth, says, “There shall be a Ruler over mankind, a Just One, ruling in the righteous precepts of Elohim. And as brightness of morning, He shall rise the Sun of an unclouded dawn shining forth after rain upon tender grass out of the earth”—2 Sam. 23:4.

This One Ruling Body, the mystical Christ, is the Shiloh, to whom shall be the gathering of the peoples, as the Sceptre of Judah. This is the King that shall be higher than Agag, and whose kingdom shall be exalted,—the Star out of Jacob, and the sceptre or rod of iron, that shall smite the princes of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth. Jesus of Nazareth is the Head of this “One Body;” and the Head of Jesus is the Eternal Power, whence is effused the anointing of all”—1 Cor. 11:3.

Now the Eternal Wisdom is the revealer of the Apocalypse. He gave it to Jesus, “whom he anointed both Lord and Christ.” Hence, when the anointed Jesus speaks in the apocalypse, it is the Eternal who speaks. For this reason it is, that at the end of each epistle the hearer is reminded that it is the Spirit speaking to the ecclesias. Thus we see the same rule maintained in the Apocalypse as in the Testimony of John. There, in ch. 7:16, Jesus saith, “My doctrine,” or teaching, “is not mine, but HIS that sent me. If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of Deity, or I speak of myself.” And in ch. 12:49, “I have not spoken of myself, but the Father who sent me; He gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak.” The rule of the apocalypse is the same—the Eternal Wisdom speaking through Jesus, himself become spirit in being begotten and born of the Spirit from among the dead.

It is the Eternal Spirit, then, who, through Jesus, says in Apoc. 22:16, “I am the Root and the Offspring of David, the bright and MORNING STAR.” The Spirit, apart from Jesus, could not say this. The Spirit is the Root of David, because David and all mankind sprung from the Spirit who created them; but apart from flesh and blood, He was not “the Offspring” of David. It was necessary for the Spirit to become flesh of Judah and David’s line, as John teaches in ch. 1:14, to become “the offspring of David.” When he raised up the dead body named Jesus, he transformed it into spirit-body. This became the Bright Star—the bright particular star—of that galaxy of stars pertaining to that morning when “Israel shall do valiantly,” and the wolf, Benjamin, shall devour the prey; and the Beloved of Yahweh shall dwell in safety by him, shall cover him all the day long, and he shall dwell between his shoulders—Deut. 33:12.

The Bright and the Morning Star, then, the Eternal Spirit glorified in Jesus, promises to give the morning star to him that overcomes. In other words, that he shall become a glorified constituent of the “One Body,” when it is adopted at the manifestation of the Sons of Deity—Rom. 8:19–24. He will, then, be a star pertaining to the Millennial Dawn—a morning star; for “they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars לְעוֹלָם וְעַד le-olahm wah-ed, IN THE Olahm AND BEYOND;” or, as Jesus said, “Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun IN THE KINGDOM OF THEIR FATHER,” which belongs to “the Olahm and beyond”—Dan. 12:4; Matt. 13:43. The redeemed will then be, in the aggregate, Cloud of Morning Stars, “equal to the angels,” themselves “the Morning Stars that sang together, and the Sons of Deity that shouted for joy,” when the corner-stone of earth’s foundation was laid by the Eternal—Job 38:7. We look for the Bright and Morning Star from heaven, that he may “change our vile body, and fashion it like unto his glorious body”—Phil. 3:21; and we know that “we are now the Sons of Deity, and that when he shall appear we shall be like him”—1 John 3:2. This is equivalent to saying we shall be Morning Stars—stars that come forth as dew from the womb of the morning, shining in all the glory of the resurrection state—1 Cor. 15:41; Ps. 110:3.

Of all the Stars of the New Heavens, Jesus will be the brightest; for in all things it is the Father’s will and pleasure, not only that all the fulness shall dwell in him, but that he also shall have the preeminence. “There is one glory of the Sun,” and that is his; and “there is another glory of the Stars,” and that is the glory of his brethren individually; and “there is another glory of the Moon,” and that is the glory of his companions collectively. As his Bride, they “look forth as the morning, fair as the Moon, clear as the Sun, and terrible as an army with banners”—Cant. 6:10. He that overcomes, to him it shall be given to be one of these—a splendid one sparkling in the glory of the great and fearful Name of Yahweh Elohim.

CHAPTER 3.

EPISTLES TO THE THREE ANGEL-STARS OF THE ECCLESIAS IN SARDIS, PHILADELPHIA, AND LAODICEA.

SECTION 1. TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA IN SARDIS.

1. ALSO TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA IN SARDIS WRITE: THESE THINGS SAITH HE HAVING THE SEVEN SPIRITS OF THE DEITY AND THE SEVEN STARS: I HAVE KNOWN THY WORKS, THAT THOU HAST THE NAME THAT THOU LIVEST, BUT THOU ART DEAD.
2. Become thou vigilant, and strengthen the things remaining which are about to die: for I have not found thy works perfected in the sight of the Deity.
3. Be mindful therefore what thou hast received, and heard, and strictly keep it, and be changed. If then thou have not been vigilant, I shall be come upon thee as a thief, and thou mayest not at all have known at what hour I shall be come upon thee.
4. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments: and they shall walk with me in white robes, because they are worthy.
5. The victor, he shall be clothed in white garments; and I will not at all obliterate his name from the scroll of the life, and I will openly confess his name in the presence of my Father, and in the presence of his angels.

He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias.

In this writing the Revelator introduces himself to the Star-Angel, or Eldership, of the ecclesia in Sardis as “HE having the Seven Spirits of the Deity and the Seven Stars.” He that hath these spirits and stars in possession and at his absolute disposal is the resurrected, exalted, and glorified Jesus, who at his last interview with the apostles said, “All authority hath been given to me in heaven, and upon earth.” This was not so before his crucifixion, for he was not then “in the right places of the power divine,” or “on the right of the Majesty in high places;” or, as it is also expressed by Paul, “sitting on the right of the throne of the Deity;” all of which are kindred to that of Stephen’s who said, when the heavens were opened to him, and he saw God’s glory, and Jesus who had stood out from the right (or heavenly places—Eph. 1:20) of the Deity (estota ek dexion tou Theou,)—“I see the heavens opened, and the “Son of Man who has stood out from the right places of the Deity”—Acts 7:55, 56; Mat. 26:64; Heb. 1:3; 12:2.

“All authority hath been given to him,” although “the power” of the Deity, or Theos, has not yet been exerted to put all things in the heavens and earth political in subjection under him. This was very plainly taught by Paul some thirty years after Jesus declared that all authority was given to him, in Heb. 2:6–9, where, in commenting upon part of the eighth psalm, he says, “We see not yet all things put under the Son of Man; but we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of the death, crowned with glory and honor.”

The possession of all authority and power (exousia and dunamis) though not necessarily exercised because possessed, is intimated in the writing before us by the declaration that “he hath the Seven Spirits of the Deity” at his command. As we have seen elsewhere, “seven” is the symbol of perfection; and consequently expressive of the omniscience, omnipresence, and omnipotence of the Spirit—the Holy Spirit—in inseparable combination with the exalted Jesus; who has thereby become “the Image of the invisible Theos;” the Image, in whom “all the fulness dwells;” “the Anointed in the Theos,” or Deity; the “Theos manifested in Flesh “by the Effluent Logos; and the “King of kings and Lord of lords.” All these sayings are apocalyptically represented by “the Lamb that had been slain, having Seven Horns, and Seven Eyes;” which are interpreted as representing “the Seven Spirits of the Deity sent forth into all the earth.”

The exalted Jesus then, is now the embodiment of the Seven Spirits, also represented by “Seven Lamps of Fire burning before the throne”—Apoc. 4:5. Hence also, “he holds the Seven Stars in his right hand.” These seven stars, the reader will not need to be informed, are no longer upon earth. The Embodied Seven, in present individual development, has exercised his authority, and withdrawn them from the corrupt and faithless constituents of the defunct presbyteries of the ecclesias. The starry fires have been extinguished as threatened in the epistle to the Star-Angel of Ephesus. "Be changed, and do the first works," said the Spirit; "but if not, I come to thee speedily, and will remove the lightstand out of its place except thou alter"—ch. 2:5. But instead of an alteration for the better, the pre-Constantinian Christendom became worse and worse, until it attained the condition typified in that of the ecclesia in Sardis, which had only "a few names who had not defiled their garments." There are now no presbyterial stars in Asia, nor elsewhere. "The Spirits," or gifts, have been withdrawn by him who gave them, when he had ascended and received gifts for men; and will be withheld until "christendom" arises from the death into which it has sunk to the life of the coming Aion.

The Spirit still shone in the angel of the ecclesia in Sardis, to which John was ordered to write. But, though "the Angel" had the gifts, these did not perfect the works of the members of "the Angel," nor preserve them from death in trespasses and sins. The Angel-Presbytery had "the name," or reputation, among its contemporaries, of being alive, but, in the estimation of the Eternal Spirit they were pronounced to be "dead." There must have been a very general corruption, and departure from first principles, at the close of the first century, for the Eldership of the ecclesia in Sardis, which was really in a dying state, to be regarded as living in health and power. This was, doubtless, the opinion of Nikolaitanes, false apostles, Baalamites, and the children of Jezebel, constituents all of the synagogue of the Satan, whose "depths," "teaching," and seductions, had swamped the truth in Sardis. They proclaimed "the Angel" there to be a star of living brightness; for had not they of the angel the gifts; and if they had not a living name before the Deity, would he not withdraw them? But these spiritual gifts only remained because of "the few names which had not defiled their garments;" with these exceptions, "the Angel" was dead. The presence of this few constituted it a body "about to die," or a dying body, so that in their absence, it was "dead." They were the only living element in it, and when they should be removed, the extinction of the Spirit-Light in their midst would come upon them "as a thief."

How different is the Deity's judgment of men and things from that of the thinking of the flesh. The case of the Star-Angel in Sardis proves it. The general christian public regarded it as flourishing in spiritual life, while the Spirit pronounced it to be actually dead. This diversity has obtained ever since. In our day, the dead bodies of "the religious world," styled "names and denominations of christians," all consider themselves to be in the enjoyment of the health and vigor of spiritual existence, and high in the favor of the Most High. They call themselves "the churches of the living God," and their temples, the houses of God. They glorify themselves as the especial favorites of heaven, and their clergies as the ambassadors and ministers of the Lord. But, were the Spirit to write to them as he did to Sardis, he would say, "I know thy works, that thou hast the name that thou livest, but art dead." They do, however, differ from "the Angel" in Sardis in this, that whereas the Sardian body was once alive, they never were. However, so much the worse for the Sardians, for, as Peter says, "It had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them." They "had received and heard" what the clergies and peoples of the pious world of this day have no conception of. They had "received" "the things of the kingdom of the Deity, and the name of Jesus Anointed;" and had heard them to "the obedience of the faith" in immersion into and for the name of the Holy Ones. But "it had happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again, and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire"—2 Pet. 2:21. The moderns are "dogs" that have never turned from their vomit, and "sows" that have never been "washed" from their native mire. Their end will therefore be less bitter than that of "the Angel" in Sardis. This body has passed away, and so will our contemporary names and denominations, by the judgments of the Lord; but the professors constituting "the Angel" must rise again, and stand in the presence of the Deity, who will condemn their works as “not perfect,” and expel them from his presence, to be “hurt of the Second Death”—ch. 2:11. Not so, however, the constituent members of the sects and parties of this day. These have never lived. They have always been “dead in trespasses and sins,” and, however pious, have been always hopelessly ignorant of the truth. The people and the “reverend” Sin-spirituals who “guide” them, are a region of the shadow of death, into which the light cannot shine, so as to dispel the darkness, until “the Lord the Spirit” is revealed in his glory. Like the helpless heathen in Paul’s day, who found the God of Israel without seeking after him, because he forced himself upon their attention, the moderns are living under “times of ignorance,” which “God winks at.” They have the scriptures, it is true, but the traditions of the schools, dogmas and institutions, imposed upon our generation by its darkminded progenitors, have enslaved the minds of clergy and people, so that they cannot and dare not think in opposition to established opinions; and being so thoroughly imbued with these, the scriptures to them have become sealed and unintelligible. They are dead, and consequently “alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them.” The Angel in Sardis was “twice dead,” and since “plucked up by the roots;” but the moderns, never having had spiritual existence in God, will be less sorely dealt with; yet will they not rise to life, the primary sentence upon our race binding them hard and fast with chains of darkness in the dust—Gen. 3:19; Isa. 26:14; 38:18, 19. Sardis was once a great and splendid city, but now as dead as “the Angel-Presbytery” through which the light of the Seven Spirits shone for the divine illumination of its Jewish and Gentile inhabitants. It was the renowned capital of Croesus and the rich kings of Lydia. It was about thirty-three miles to the south of Thyatira. It is now no more than an ignoble village of low and wretched cottages of clay, with no other inhabitants than shepherds and herdsmen, who feed their flocks in the neighboring plains. The Turks call it Sart, or Sard. The surrounding ruins are of great extent and grandeur, and abundantly show how large and splendid a city it was formerly. There are a few living in the place called “christians” by their Turkish masters. They do not, however, represent “the few names which have not defiled their garments,” but contrariwise, the “dead” after “the things remaining which were about to die” had actually become defunct. Even their temple has become a Mohammedan mosque, and they, with senseless stupidity, sustain a miserable servitude. Their predecessors contemporary with the apostle John, were exhorted by the Spirit to “become vigilant, and strengthen the things remaining which are about to die, or he would be come upon them as a thief.” Had they done so, and continued faithful in all future generations, Sardis would doubtless have been a bright exception to the surrounding desolation. But the fate of the city is indicative of the persistency of their apostasy from what they “had received and heard.” The Saracen locusts and the succeeding Euphrateans, have consummated the evil which began to afflict them in the extinguishing of the Spirit-Lightstand in the primitive ecclesia of the city. In the desolation, moral and material, which exists in the Turkish Sard, we have an illustration of what are the consequences of the Eternal Spirit “having come upon” a people “as a thief.” Gloom, misery, and death, ignorance and superstition, now reign over this once populous, wealthy, and enterprising capital of the Lydians. The Spirit came upon them as a thief, and swept them with desolation, because they would not be mindful of his word. And such is the fate prepared for all who similarly offend.

The presbytery in Sardis was exhorted to “become, vigilant.” This implies that it was not so when the Spirit caused John to write. It was even then “about to die,” but, from the exhortation, evidently not so far gone but that it might recover. Their “works” were not such as the Deity approved. Heretical opinions subversive of the faith had crept in. Though the particular heresies are not specified as in former epistles, whatever they were they were of a nature to defile. This appears from the fact, that they who “kept strictly” what they had originally “received and heard,” had preserved their garments from defilement. Others had not been mindful to do this; but had received and heard something else, so that their garments were defiled. Whatever the dogmas were, though it might gratify curiosity to know, it matters not; this, however, is certain, that they worked death in those who received them. This is the sure influence of all thinking not in strict accordance with “the law and the testimony.” Whatever is not of the truth is defiling before God. Every “reasoning,” lofty conception, and thought not according to the knowledge of God, is polluting, and engenders disobedience and apostasy. The faith is perverted, and the practice marred. Such was the condition of the presbytery in Sardis—defiled by human tradition and dead; a type of all “christendom” at this day.

But even in this city of the dead there were “a few” living ones—a remnant, that “contended earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints,” and kept it. These were of the same class as “the rest among the Thyatirans” who held not the teaching of Jezebel; nor had acknowledged the depths of the Satan as they taught. They watched and kept their garments, that they might not walk naked, and be exposed to shame, at the coming of the Lord—ch. 16:15. “Blessed” are such; for, saith the Spirit, “they shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy.”

1. “Walk with Me in White”

The reader is requested to refer to what has been already written on the clothing of the constituents of the symbolic “Son of Man” at page 169, under the caption of “Clothed to the Feet,” in illustration of the promise of the Spirit to the few undefiled in Sardis. To walk with him in white robes is to be the subject of a union with the Spirit such as obtains now between Jesus and the same. Jesus now walks with the Spirit; for “whithersoever the Spirit goeth” he, as the preeminent of the Cherubim, also goes—Ezek. 1:12, 20. Hence, as this obtains with respect to him, it will also with them; for it is written, that the redeemed from among men “follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth,” which is equivalent to walking with the Spirit—in material and personal union with him.

But they shall walk with him “in white robes,” en leukois. Those who walk with the Spirit must be “worthy.” The “few” in Sardis are declared to be such—“they are worthy,” saith the Spirit. Their robes must be of moral and material whiteness. Their character being pure and unstained, their nature must be made to correspond. In the present state, the saints are invested with holy garments, termed “their garments” in the writing before us. Having “put on Christ” by faith in the kingdom and name, and by immersion, he is for them a robe of righteousness; and by walking in him according to the truth received and obeyed, and so yielding the fruit of the Spirit, they “keep themselves unspotted from the world,” which is as a garment of “fine linen, clean and white,” which symbolises the righteous actions—dikaionomata—of the saints—Rev. 19:8. These premises constitute the basis of their exaltation to holy spirit nature. This is “white,” or pure. It is the incorruptible and deathless body, undefiled by the affections and lusts of our present nature, “in which dwells no good thing.” Hence, then, he that walks with the Spirit in white robes is a righteous, incorruptible, and deathless man. To “clothe” the undefiled few in Sardis, “in white garments,” is for the Spirit from heaven to reorganize their dust, and having modeled it after his own image as “the Heavenly Man,” to give it life with incorruption, glory, and power. Thus will the resurrection-life of Jesus be manifested in their mortal flesh; and thus will they “be clothed upon with their house which is from heaven;” by which operation their “mortality will be swallowed up of life”—1 Cor. 15:42; 2 Cor. 4:11; 5:2–4.

2. “They are Worthy”

Belief of the gospel of the kingdom and immersion, while they are indispensable to worthiness, do not alone constitute men “worthy.” The constituents of the Angel-Presbytery had all believed the gospel and been immersed, yet they were pronounced by the Spirit “dead.” This faith and obedience gave them an orthodox standing among contemporary Christians, who supposed that they were enjoying spiritual life; but the Spirit, who sees not as men see, declared that they were unworthy of his favor, because “their works were not perfected in the sight of the Deity.” They were in the case of a man who says “he hath faith, but hath not works.” This is the reason why the Spirit testified that they were “dead;” for he had said by James, that “faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.” The Angel in Sardis said they had faith; while “the few” in the same city “had works.” They are claimed to have faith; they had all believed the gospel and been immersed; for in the time of the apostles none were recognized as Christians who had not thus consented to “the wholesome words of the Lord Jesus.” But how were the “worthy” to be distinguished from the unworthy? By their professions? No; the “dead” undertook to “show their faith without works;” but the Spirit rejected their claim, and gave his approbation to “the few,” who “showed their faith by their works,” as Abraham their father did, “whose faith” in the promises of the Deity “was perfected by works,” whereby he obtained the honorable and exalted title of “The Friend of the Deity.”

Contemporary with the apostles was one named Clement, who for nine years was a member of “the Angel” of the ecclesia in Rome. He wrote an epistle to the ecclesia in Corinth for the purpose of healing schisms that had arisen there after Paul’s death; and which he terms a quarrel with their pastors from a weak partiality for one or two persons. There is a paragraph in this epistle, much approved by “the evangelists” of our day, which, if taken in the sense they put upon it, place him in fellowship with the class in Sardis, termed by the Spirit “dead.” His words are these:

“All these,” he is speaking of the Old Testament worthies, “were magnified and honored, not through themselves, not through their own works, not through the righteous deeds which they performed, but through HIS WILL. And we also by his will being called in Christ Jesus, are JUSTIFIED not by ourselves, nor by our own wisdom, or understanding, or godliness, or by the works which we have wrought in holiness of heart, but by FAITH; by which the Almighty hath justified all, who are or have been justified from the beginning.”

Milner, the ecclesiastical historian, introduces this passage by saying that “the distinguishing doctrine of Christianity, without which indeed the Gospel is a mere name, and incapable of consoling sinners, is doubtless justification by the grace of Christ THROUGH FAITH ALONE. See the testimony of this in Clement. It deserves to be distinctly remembered, as an unequivocal proof of the faith of the primitive church”—Vol. I p. 79.

From certain passages in this epistle, we apprehend that Clement was one of those “pious pastors” living at the close of the first century, who passed current for “ministers of righteousness,” like the many in Sardis; but was in reality “dead,” having to a considerable extent acknowledged “the depths of the Satan as they taught.” Speaking of Peter, he says, “having suffered martyrdom, he departed to the due place of glory,” and of Paul, he says, “having suffered martyrdom from princes, he left the world, and reached the shore of a blessed immortality.” This is Platonism, and stamps the faith of Clement with reprobation. If anything had gone to “the due place of glory” after Peter’s death, it must have been, in Clement’s opinion, what the heathen term his “immortal soul;” and if “the due place of glory” and “the shore of a blessed immortality” be somewhere arrived at before resurrection, the promises covenanted to Abraham and David are nullified as superfluous. A man holding such unscriptural notions is a very unfit exponent of “the faith of the primitive church.”

But in relation to justification, we rather think that “the evangelists” have misunderstood Clement. What he says above is true enough of the justification of sinners. These are justified by faith in baptism, if they believe the gospel of the kingdom in its mystery, their faith without regard to their previous works, good, bad, or indifferent, is counted to them for justification, at the time when they are in the act of obeying the truth, in being immersed. This is not the clerical idea of justification by faith alone. This consists in a sinner attaining to a persuasion that Jesus died for him; and that in having reached this conviction, the blood of Jesus is thereby applied to his immortal soul, and he is justified. This may be an instantaneous operation, and totally independent of all knowledge of the scriptures, as evinced by “conversions” every day. We do not believe that even Clement, who believed in the resurrection of the fabled Phoenix from its own ashes, had any idea of such a justification by faith alone as this; and sure we are, there is no such justification taught in the bible from one end of it to the other. Clement was treating of the justification of sinners; not of the justification of saints. Sinners are justified from all their past sins in the way stated, and so become saints. As saints, “faith alone” will not save them. James teaches this clearly. “By works a man is justified, and not by faith only.” He is writing of a man, who, like Abraham, had already become a saint. The saints are justified by works, but the saint who seeks to be justified by, or to be pronounced “worthy,” by faith alone, is like his faith, “dead;” for “faith without works is dead”—dead as that of the many in Sardis.

But, however heathenish some of his creed evidently was, Clement cannot be classed with the dead faiths in Sardis, upon the ground of denying the necessity of good works to the perfecting of a previous faith. He evidently believed it necessary for all saints, who would “be accounted worthy” by the Spirit, to be rich in good works. “Shall we,” says he, “neglect good works? Does it hence follow that we should leave the law of loving obedience? God forbid; let us rather hasten with all earnestness of mind to every good work; for the Lord himself rejoices in his works. Having such a pattern how strenuously should we follow his will, and work the works of righteousness with all our might.”

They who pursued this course were pronounced “worthy.” They “received” the gospel, and “heard” it by obeying it; and thenceforth, “patiently continuing in well-doing,” sought thereby “glory, honour, incorruptibility and life” in the Aion—Rom. 2:7. Thus, their faith was perfected by their works; and, as Jesus taught, “they were accounted worthy to obtain that Aion, and the resurrection from among the dead,” after which “they can die no more; for they are equal to the angels; and are the Sons of the Deity being the children of the resurrection”—Luke 20:35. In this way they are “clothed in white garments,” and “walk with the Spirit in white robes; for they are worthy.”

3. “The Book of Life”

Even the few names in Sardis had to save themselves by their perseverance, upon the principle that “he who perseveres to the end shall be saved.” Hence, the Spirit saith, “the victor, he shall be clothed in white garments.” This is positive. But in order that he may be assured of the perpetuity of his clothing, that it shall never wax old, as garments are accustomed to do, it is added, “And I will not at all obliterate his name from THE SCROLL OF THE LIFE.” In the English Version, this is rendered “book of life” without the definite article; but in my translation I have prefixed it to life as in the original. It is the scroll of THE life, that is, of a special life.

The first place in the New Testament where this phrase occurs is in Phil. 4:3. Here Paul mentions certain “whose names are in a book of life”—en biblo zois; among whom is Clement, one of his fellow-laborers; but, whether the same Clement, who wrote about “the due place of glory,” can only be conjectured.

It next occurs in Apoc. 13:8 and 17:8. In the former it is styled “the Scroll of the Life of the Lamb slain;” and in the latter, simply “the Scroll of the Life.” It is next found in ch. 20:12, 15. In the former of these verses, it is termed “another Scroll which is of the life;” and in the latter as elsewhere. In ch. 21 it is “the Scroll of the life of the Lamb;” and in ch. 22:19, the phrase is “a Scroll of the life,” the article the being omitted before “Scroll.” These are all the places where it occurs in the New Testament.

This is the most important of all books; for if a man’s name have not been inscribed upon it, he cannot possibly be saved; for it is written that whosoever of the dead, small and great, standing before the Deity at the opening of the Scrolls, shall not be found written in the Scroll of the life, shall be cast into the lake of the fire. These are those who worship the Beast, by whom the saints have been overcome.

From these testimonies there would appear to be two scrolls,—the one styled A scroll of the Life, and the other THE scroll of the Life. These two scrolls are opened at the setting up of “THE GREAT WHITE THRONE” of judgment, at the epoch of resurrection. Certain things having been written in these scrolls, the resurrected are judged from them. These things are their works. One of these scrolls will present a very unseemly aspect—a sort of EVERY-DAY BOOK OF LIFE, in which names of believers are inscribed with very disreputable mementoes appended to each. These will find no admission to “the other scroll which is of the life”—THE LEDGER OF THE LIFE, to which those names may be supposed to be transferred from the Every-Day Book, that are now condemned to obliteration. The dead constituents of the Angel of the ecclesia in Sardis, together with the few undefiled ones there, had all been written in the Every-Day Book of the Life; and their works inscribed under their respective names: and the general record of this scroll is read in the writing penned by John. He shows that the works therein recorded resolved themselves into two classes; the one signalized by the words “thou art dead” after their names, and the other by the sentence, “their garments undefiled.” Now of these classes, the names of the latter alone will be transferred to the Ledger; while the names of the former will be obliterated or excluded. The confession of names in the presence of the Father and in the presence of his messengers, will be read, not from the Every-Day Book, but from the Ledger of the Lamb’s Life, which contains the register of names inscribed there, apo kataboles kosmou, from the foundation of the order of things extant. This is styled the scroll of the life in allusion probably to the custom of oriental monarchs, who, as they had several books for the record of things, so they had a peculiar book, in which they entered the names and actions of all those who did them any special service, that they might reward them in due time. See Esther 6:1–3, where it is styled “the Book of Records of daily affairs.”

The Scriptures make very early mention of the existence of such a book before the Lord. Moses refers to it in Exod. 32:32, saying, “If thou wilt, forgive thou Israel’s sin; if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written. And Yahweh said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book.” The Spirit in David says, “Are not my tears in thy book?” that is, “Are not my sorrows in thy remembrance?” Hence “book” and “remembrance” are associated in Mal. 3:16, where it is styled “a book of remembrance,” as, “They that feared Yahweh spake often one to another; and Yahweh hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared Yahweh, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith Yahweh of armies, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will have compassion upon them as a man hath tender affection for his own son that serveth him.” This is evidently the book of the life, or the Ledger; for all written in it are precious with God in a day when the wicked are trodden down. Daniel also refers to the same book in testifying that, in the time of trouble when the books shall be opened, “every one of his people (the Saints) shall be delivered that shall be found written in the book”—12:1.

The ledger book of the life is styled apocalyptically “the Scroll of the life of the Lamb slain”—Rev. 13:8; 21:27. It is contrary to the law of symbol-writing to regard this as a book in the vulgar sense. There is something in the real thing to which a book of record has some resemblance or analogy. Such a book is for remembrance of deeds. Hence the name given to the book of life in Malachi (which in the Old Testament includes both the Day Book and the Ledger) “a Book of Remembrance.” Scroll, then in this relation, is symbolical of remembrance by whatever system of means it may be compassed. “I will remember their sins no more,” which is equivalent to, “I will blot out the record of their sins from the book of my remembrance;” or I will pardon them. Hence to pardon is equivalent to inscribing the name of the subject in the Day book of the life; or to placing him in God’s remembrance for resurrection unto life even for the life procured by the sacrifice of the Lamb of God, if found to be “worthy.”

But, how is a man's name inscribed on the memory of God for resurrection? In answer to this, it must be remarked, that the Spirit of THE INVISIBLE ONE is the remembrance of His dominion. Whatever the Spirit remembers is written, so to speak, in the book of remembrance before God. "God is Spirit; and they who worship him must worship him in Spirit and truth"—John 4:24. Pardon is the result of Spirit-and-truth worship. Now the relation subsisting between the Spirit and the Truth is one of intellectual and moral identity; so that he who hath the truth hath in him the mind, the thinking, and teaching of the Spirit: but he that hath not the truth, is destitute of the Spirit, and not a true worshipper. It is the Spirit-Word that quickeneth; and therefore Jesus says, "It is the Spirit which is life making; Spirit is and life is the words which I speak to you"—John 6:63. And again, he says, "The Spirit of the truth proceedeth from the Father"—6:26; and, "The Spirit of the truth shall guide you into all the truth"—16:13; and bring all things to your remembrance"—14:26; and John, the beloved disciple of Jesus, adds, "the Spirit is the truth"—1 John 5:6. We are considering things mental, not physical. The Spirit in its physical relations is the divine power that creates, fashions, and sustains all things; and will raise the dead, and subdue all things to God. But in opening men's eyes, and turning them from ignorance to knowledge, and from the service of the adversary to God; and in recording them in his remembrance, it is the truth believed and obeyed that is the agency employed. The Spirit is the Remembrancer; or symbolically, "the Scroll or Book."

It is by the truth, called "the word of the truth of the gospel of the kingdom," (Acts 20:24, 25; Col. 1:5,) believed and obeyed, that relations are established between men and God. This is the spiritual connecting medium that links them to his throne in their present state; and, though men in the general think very little of "the truth," because they are natural liars and ignorant of it; yet His eyes are ever upon it, and he has "magnified it above all his name." "Sanctify them by thy truth; thy word is truth"—John 17:17; and, "Ye have purified your souls in the obedience of the truth through Spirit." Hence, the truth is sanctifying and purifying; and, as the truth is God's, and precious to him, and always before his mind, the sanctified are his peculiar treasure. Their names are therefore inscribed in his book of remembrance by their union to the truth in the obedience it enjoins.

Paul styles the baptized believers in Corinth, "an epistle of Christ written with spirit of the living God." The writing, he says, was done through him and Timothy, as the instruments. God, Paul, spirit, and Corinthian hearts held a similar relation to each other in the writing of the epistle, (and all similar churches collectively, made, as it were, a Book of Epistles,) that head, pen, ink, and paper, do to an ordinary letter. The mentality of God was by the process stamped upon Corinthian hearts, so that they became part of his thoughts; and while he is written upon their memory, they are also written upon his, who is the way, the truth, the resurrection, and the life. Hence, to be written in the scroll of the life, is to be "in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ," and they in him by the Spirit—truth dwelling in their hearts—2 Cor. 3:3; 1 Thess. 1:1; Eph. 3:17; John 6:54, 56.

God, or the Father, manifested through his Sons by the Spirit, which is the one God-manifestation to us, (see 1 Cor. 8:5, 6) is the Arboretum of the lives. Wherefore, to be in the book of the life is to be part, and to have part, of the tree of life, as it is styled in the English Version. This understood, will account for a various reading in the Greek text of Rev. 22:19. Book of Life and Tree of Life are different symbols related to the same thing. The oldest manuscripts extant read, "God shall take away his part from the tree of life;" but more recent ones "out of the book of life."

4. "The Life of the Lamb"

The life of the book is peculiar. It is "the life of the Lamb slain." The present life is hereditary and natural. It comes to us based upon the sympathies of flesh, which "profits nothing" in relation to that which is "the Lamb's." He gave his life as a price for the purchase of life for many brethren—Matt.

20:28. It is therefore styled “the life of the Lamb slain;” and a right to it is predicated on a “justification unto life” which results to a believer from the obedience of faith, or doing the commandments of God—Rev. 22:14. The dead enter upon this life, then, by resurrection, because of righteousness. Sin was the original cause of their death, for “the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit (gives) life because of righteousness”—Rom. 8:10. From the very nature of things, therefore, the righteous, or the Saints, they who are sanctified by the truth, they only can be on record in God’s remembrance for the life of the Aions. All others inherit the life of flesh because they are flesh; and have an existence bounded thereby, because they walk after the flesh, in the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life. Thus, death and corruption are the horizon of the flesh; incorruptibility, life, honor, and glory, the boundless expanse to them who sow to the Spirit of God. “If ye live after the flesh ye shall die, but if, through the Spirit, ye do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit (or the truth) of God, they are the Sons of God”—Rom. 8:13, 14; Gal. 6:8, 9.

But “the scroll of the Lamb’s Life” is not yet opened. When the Lord God shall have judged the Woman Jezebel, who sits upon the Scarlet Beast of the many waters; when he shall have killed the beast with the sword (Rev. 13:10,) and have utterly burned her with fire, (Rev 18:6–8,) he will have “prevailed,” and, in prevailing, have opened the Book of Epistles, the Book of Seals, and the Little Book of Vials. But in order to open these, he must first open the Book of the Lamb’s Life. It is as necessary to the opening of the first three books, that “truth should spring out of the earth,” as that “righteousness should bow down from the heavens”—Psal. 85:11; for the Lord Jesus above, and the Saints, his brethren, at present in the earth beneath, are the associates to whom it is appointed to cooperate with the Spirit in the execution of “the judgment written”—Psal. 149:5–9. He who was dead, but now is living for the Aions, has the keys of the invisible and of death which reigns there—Rev. 1:18, so that until he appears, “the Gates of the Invisible”—Matt. 16:18, will remain closed upon the Saints, and the Book of the Life will be unopened. Their resurrection is the opening of the Book of Life, or God’s remembrance of them practically demonstrated in their deliverance from death. Spirit-truth inscribed them on his memory, and Spirit-power, the same Spirit of God that revealed the doctrine through prophets and apostles, raises them from the dead, or opens the gates of the invisible, by Jesus; and then will be verified the words of Paul, who says, “If the spirit of him who raised up Jesus from among the dead dwell in you, he who raised up the Christ from among the dead shall make alive your mortal bodies by means of his spirit indwelling among you”—Rom. 8:11. “I am always bearing about the putting to death of the Lord Jesus in the body, that the life also of Jesus, (the Lamb’s life,) may be manifested in our body. For we, the living, are always exposed to death on account of Jesus, that the life also of Jesus may be manifested in our mortal flesh.” And, “he who raised up the Lord Jesus shall also raise us up by Jesus, and shall present us with you,” when “mortality shall be swallowed up by life”—2 Cor. 4:10, 11, 14; 5:4. This is the Lamb’s life—immortality of body, a living incorruptible body, evolved from the ashes of the former body by the Spirit of God, therefore a Spiritual Body, or SPIRIT, which are equivalent terms in the case; born from the invisible by resurrection, which is the opening of the house of death. Thus, “that which has been produced from the Spirit is spirit”—John 3:6. The resurrected spirit-body is one of “the invisible things” of the Aion to come, and therefore aionian, in the Common Version termed “eternal.” It is the aionian house—the house aionian from heaven, and in the heavens—which is explained in the words, “Our commonwealth subsists in heavens, out of which also we wait for a deliverer, the Anointed Lord Jesus, who shall remodel, the body of our humiliation, that it may become conformable to the body of his glory”—2 Cor. 5:2–4; Phil. 3:20, 21. The beginning of the citizenship is the putting on Christ as the righteousness of the adopted. Hence it is written, “as many of you (believers) as have been immersed into Christ, have put on Christ”—Gal. 3:27. Christ Jesus who is in the heavens, is “put on” by individuals on earth, who “believe the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, and are immersed”—Acts 8:12. In doing this, their citizenship begins; and it begins in the heavens, because Christ, whom they put on, is in the heavens. In so becoming citizens of Israel’s Commonwealth, their citizenship is recorded in the Every-Day Book of the Lamb’s Life—their names are borne on his breast, after the type of the names of the twelve tribes of Israel being borne on the breast of Aaron, when he wore the official breastplate on which they were engraved. In other words, the Lord Jesus Christ, the High Priest after the Order of Melchizedec, (Psal. 110:4; Heb. 5:6; 6:20; 7:17, 21; Zech. 6:13,) though personally absent from earth, is, by the Spirit, not far from every one of us (Acts 17:27, 28.) He is still as observant and forecasting of the truth as he was in the days of the apostles, although, indeed, he abstains from direct miraculous interposition in its behalf. When one believes and obeys the truth, he becomes “known of God,” and therefore of Christ—Gal. 4:9; for to come in obedience of faith to the knowledge of God in Christ-manifestation, is to be known and acknowledged of him. Christ is in his heart by faith, (Eph. 3:17,) and he is in Christ’s heart, or breast, on the same principle—Christ in the believer, the believer in Christ, and Christ in God: and therefore, the believer “in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ.” This is what “the obedience of faith” accomplishes for a man in the present state.

Now such a citizen is in a waiting position. His faith lays hold of Christ within the vail. His thinking concentrates there. On earth bodily, his mind is anchored with the vail—Heb. 6:19; for the “anchor of his soul” is the hope of Christ’s departure from the far country where he now is; and that he may unveil himself, the vail of mortal flesh being no longer a curtain excluding the believer from “seeing him as he is”—1 Jno. 3:2. His hope is, the manifestation of Jesus ex ouranou, out of heaven. Thus, he is looking, or waiting, for him, that he may come and remodel or transform him in the twinkling of an eye—1 Cor. 15:51, 52; or, if he may have been previously “laid aside” in the earth, that he may build him up, and convert his mortal remains into “a house not made with hands,” that it may become a habitation for God, who shall dwell in it by Spirit—Eph. 2:22;—a habitation produced by Jesus Christ, the life-imparting Spirit, at his appearing and therefore styled, to oiketerion hemon to ex ouranou, our habitation from heaven.

The putting on additionally (ependusasthai, aor. 1. infin, mid., the word used by Paul 2 Cor. 5:2, and rendered in the C.V. “to be clothed upon”) the present nature of Christ, as it was added to his mortal body; or the clothing of our flesh with incorruptibility and life, is “presence with the Lord.” When the body of our humiliation is conformed to the body of his glory, “we shall be like him,” and “see him as he is;” and not before. Till this corporeal transformation is effected, we are “absent from the Lord.” It cannot possibly be otherwise; for until “the books are opened,” none are delivered; for until then judgment is not declared;” nor can any man “enter into the temple till the seven vial-plagues are fulfilled”—Rev. 15:8; and much of the seventh remains to be fulfilled by the conjoint operation of Messiah and the Saints. The temple in the heaven is undeveloped. It does not exist in the “far country” where Jesus is now; but belongs to his Aion on the earth. He comes to cooperate with the Saints in its development. When the work is finished they will be with him “in the heavens;” and no more plagues will afflict the world for a thousand years. The books are not yet opened. This being indisputable, it is certain that no dead saint is with the Lord, or in heaven. No reward is given till the book of life is opened: and that book will not be opened until all have been recorded there, who may yet obtain right to the wood of life composed of many trees. “Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just”—Luke 14:14; and “the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and THEN (after this event) He shall reward every man according to his works”—Matt. 16:27; and again, “When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, THEN (after this coming) shall he sit upon the throne of his glory”—Matt. 25:31. These are “the wholesome words of the Lord Jesus” published to Israel in his proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom; and they define with great exactness the time of the opening of the book of his life—at the resurrection when he comes to sit upon the throne of his glory; this is the great epoch of judgment and reward.

It is the Lamb's life as opposed to the first Adam's life; and to that hypothetical existence, fabricated by the philosophizings of Sin's flesh. Adam's life is flesh sustained in action by blood, air, and electricity, or by digestion and respiration; and transmitted by natural laws. The fabulous existence elaborated by the unenlightened thinking of Sin's flesh, is that theory upon which all superstition is based—the conceit of an inborn ghost, deathless and having independent existence, apart from all corporeality. This incorporeal abstraction the Devil, that is, Sin's Flesh, has denominated "THE IMMORTAL SOUL." This serpentine philosopher, whose pious lucubrations "deceive the whole world"—Rev. 12:9; 20:2, 3—teaches, that it is "the vital principle," the real man, and the true image and likeness of his Maker! Religion, he says, is for the preventing of all immortal ghosts who sincerely repent of their sins from falling into eternal torments, to which they are all liable by an eternal decree; and for their emigration from earth on angels' wings to kingdoms beyond the skies! This is the gospel of the Archdeceiver of the world; and preached substantially by all the "Holy Orders" of his establishment; and all mankind, in their Names and Denominations of Blasphemy, go "wondering after" the abomination. So long as the serpent in the flesh can charm them with such vanity they will remain unregistered in the book of the Lamb's life, and be obnoxious to the plagues of the Little Book in which it is written, that "for the fearful, and UNBELIEVING, and the abominable, and murderers, and harlotists, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and for all the liars (the "clergy") their part is in the lake burning with fire and brimstone," being there "tormented in the presence of the holy messengers, and in the presence of the Lamb"—Rev. 21:8; 14:10; 19:20; 20:14, 15. The life purchased by Jesus for his brethren has no affinity with such a fiction. He purchased life for dead bodies; not happiness for immortal ghosts. "This is the testimony, that God gives aionian life to us, and this life is in his Son; he who hath the Son, hath the life; he who hath not the Son of God, hath not the life"—1 Jno. 5:11, 12; and "shall not see life; but the wrath of God abides upon him" Jno. 3:36.

5. "Confess His Name."

It is promised to him who shares in "the victory," that he shall, not only "be clothed" with incorruption, and "his name" remain perpetually inscribed among the deathless; but that his name shall be honorably mentioned in the august presence of the Eternal Majesty of the Universe, and before his angelic hosts. This promise to the undefiled, whether in Sardis or elsewhere, at that time or in previous and after ages and generations, reads in the English Version, "I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels." The word in the original is emphatic. It is not simply omologesomai, but the same word with the preposition ex prefixed "I will confess his name from out of" something. The import of this is, "I will connect myself with his name as one selected from among others, whom I reject, because their works have not been found perfected in the sight of the Deity." This is the renewal of the promise given by the Spirit through Jesus, and found in Matt. 10:32, and Luke 12:8. In these places, he says, "whosoever shall confess in me before men, in HIM will I also confess before my Father who is in heaven;" and "whosoever shall confess in me before men, the Son of Man also will confess in him before the angels of the Deity." These, it will be seen, differ from the English Version, which makes no account of the proposition en, twice repeated in both of the original texts. In these it is en emoi and en auto, which I have rendered in me and in him, according to the primary signification of the word. The Spirit in Jesus promises here to be also IN ALL who are in him, on condition of their confessing him before men. This excludes the notion, that the promise applies to men not in Christ who with their lips say, that they believe that Jesus is the Christ. Such a confession as this was made by the demonized; or men who, in the nomenclature of Luke, had each “a spirit of an unclean demonion.” Under the influence of this affection, they confessed, that Jesus was the Christ, the Holy One, the Son of the Deity—Luke 4:34, 41. But this confession availed them nothing; for, he rebuked them, and put them to silence. This, nevertheless, was confession before men; but it was a confession that did not proceed from men of the right class, the class defined in the text. The demonized were not in the Spirit, nor was the Holy Spirit in them. The spirit in them was the spirit of their flesh insanely excited. They were madmen “in the flesh,” whose confession the Eternal Spirit would not accept.

And to descend from the first to the nineteenth century, we find society almost entirely constituted of the demonized. The Spirit testifies this in the saying, that “all the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of the Great Harlot’s prostitution”—Apoc. 17:2. The people and their spiritual guides are thoroughly imbued with “an unclean spirit,” by which they are bewitched in all their parts and faculties. They are all, as Paul predicted they would be, in apostasy “from the faith, giving heed to deceiving spirits, even to the teachings of Daemonia, falsely speaking in hypocrisy: their own conscience having been cauterized; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats”—1 Tim. 4:3. Such are the DEMONIA defined by Paul. Society is full of them; for every occupant of a pulpit that does not preach the gospel of the kingdom which he proclaimed, is a deceiver teaching falsely, and therefore, as Paul styles him, “a deceiving spirit,” or “Daimonion.” When these, and the multitudes they call “their people,” confess that “Jesus is Christ, the Son of God,” it is the unsanctified confession of the demonized. They are not “in Christ,” for they have neither “received” his doctrine, nor “heard,” or obeyed it in the obedience it prescribes. The promise of the Spirit, then, that He will confess in them in the Father’s presence, and in that of his angels, is not to individuals clerically demonized. The promise is to those “IN” the Promiser. The testimony in Matthew and Luke was spoken primarily to the disciples in the presence of Jesus; and, secondarily, to all disciples in Christ in after times. In the discourse, he alluded to the persecution they would have to endure on his account. That it would be persecution unto death; which, however, they might escape, if they would deny him and the truth. But, being in him, he exhorted them to steadfastness; so that, if they should lose their soul or life (tin psuchen) for his sake, they should find it, in the Spirit’s confessing in them before the Father and his angels. Many in Christ apostatized, or “departed from the faith,” when they were brought to the test of “confessing before men” in authority and power, at the risk of property, liberty, and life. Like Demas, they forsook Christ, “having loved this present world;” and will, consequently, be denied hereafter. It may not be amiss to remind the reader here, that to be in the Spirit who speaks to the undefiled in Sardis, is to have the faith, which is “the substance of things hoped for, and the conviction of the things unseen;” and to have it so as to love it, that the faith may work in him by love, and purify his affections; and that being thus prepared, to be immersed into the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. When he has been the subject of this transforming operation, by which his moral nature and state have been changed, the words of the apostle, in Gal. 3:26–29, are applicable to him: “Thou art a son of the Deity in Jesus Anointed through the faith; for as many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ: and if Christ’s, then Abraham’s Seed, and heirs according to promise.” Such an one is “in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Anointed,” and therefore in the Spirit—1 Thess. 2:1; and competent to confess in him before men.

Having shown this, it remains to define how the Spirit will himself confess such a confessor before the Father and the angels. “I will confess his name before my Father.” This is the apocalyptic equivalent for “I will confess in him.” In John 17:22, Jesus prays to the Father that all his brethren “may be one, even as we are one; I IN THEM, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect IN ONE.” To be made perfect is to be raised from among the dead, and made incorruptible and deathless. Thus Jesus was “perfected the third day”—Luke 12:32; Heb. 5:9; and became the Author of aion-salvation to all who obey him. A saint made perfect in this sense is as much “spirit” as Jesus now is; for John, speaking of what the saints shall be when made perfect, says, “we shall be like him, and see him as he is”—1 John 3:2. Then the prayer of the Logos, ascending from the mouth of Jesus to the Theos from whom it emanated, will be answered—that “I,” the Logos, may be “in them,” the saints. When he is thus in them, their names will STAND OUT CONFESSED—exomologized—before the Father of the glorified Jesus—“the Spirit”—and the angels. Hence, when this unity is established, whatever the Spirit confesses is confessed in them and in their midst; and he whom they have praised and honored in word and deed, in the present state, will celebrate their excellency in the future.

6. “His Name.”

A name is representative of a person. It is a word or term by which an individual is designated. That which is inherited or bestowed at birth, indicates the relationship and attributes of flesh and blood to certain specialties. John Smith, by proving that he is the heir at law of the deceased William Smith, may inherit his estate; but in relation to “the life of the Lamb slain,” there is nothing in the name “John Smith” that gives him any claim upon it.

The scriptures, which treat of all things pertaining to life and godliness, have delineated the character to which all must be conformed who would be inscribed in the book of the Lamb’s life. John Smith may have the name, or reputation, of being conformed to that character, while he is only so in pretence, or not really. He is, then, like the members of the Star-Angel in Sardis, who were “dead;” he has “a name that he lives,” but it is good for nothing.

The name to be confessed before the Father is one that is “holy, unblameable, and unreprouchable in his sight.” It is representative of one who has “continued in the faith, grounded and settled, and not moved away from the hope of the gospel.” This suggests a time when the subject received the name. It was not when he was born, or sprinkled according to the formula of the catechism children are taught by rote. It has no relation to human “godfathers and godmothers,” who have been introduced by ignorance and superstition, as substitutes for the divine. The name is called upon the subject when faith is manifested in the obedience it prescribes. James styles it to kalon onoma, the honorable, excellent, or distinguished name, which had been called upon those to whom he wrote—ch. 2:7; and Peter, in answer to the inquiry of the believing multitude on the day of Pentecost, told them to be “every one of them immersed upon the name of Jesus Anointed into remission of sins.” Thus they were grafted, as it were, “upon the name,” which became their designation before the Father.

The subject having been called by this name in baptism, it became “his name”—the name to be confessed if preserved undefiled, and were duly illustrated by him who had been ennobled by it. Many inherit the name of a distinguished ancestry, which is brought into contempt by their misdeeds; so there have been many who have disgraced the name, more exalted than any other name, to the privileges of which they have been introduced. Their character has not been conformed to the divine example incarnated in Jesus; “who, though he were a son, learned obedience by the things which he suffered;” having been obedient even unto death, his name became illustrious; but in their keeping after being named upon them, it became a by-word and reproach. But the undefiled in Sardis were not such. They preserved it unsullied; and in the name confessed, and kept it as their own to be celebrated by the Spirit in the presence of his Father and in the presence of his angels, the messengers of his power. “He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias.”

SECTION 2. TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA IN PHILADELPHIA.

7. ALSO TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA IN PHILADELPHIA WRITE; THESE THINGS SAITH THE HOLY ONE, THE TRUE ONE, HE HAVING THE KEY OF THE DAVID, OPENING AND NO ONE SHUTTETH, AND HE SHUTS AND NO ONE OPENETH: 8. I HAVE OBSERVED THY WORKS; BEHOLD, I HAVE PLACED BEFORE THEE A DOOR WHICH HATH BEEN OPENED, AND NO ONE IS ABLE TO SHUT IT; BECAUSE THOU HAST A LITTLE STRENGTH, AND HAST KEPT MY WORD, AND HAST NOT DENIED MY NAME.
9. Behold, I give up out of the synagogue of the Satan them who say that they are Jews, yet are not, but do lie; behold I will cause them that they come and have prostrated themselves before thy feet, and that they may have known that I have loved thee.
10. Seeing that thou hast kept the word of my awaiting, I also will keep thee from the hour of the trial being about to come upon the whole habitable to prove them who dwell upon the earth.
11. Behold, I come quickly; hold fast what thou hast, that no one may have seized upon thy coronal wreath.
12. The victor, I will make him a pillar in the temple of my Deity, and he shall not at all go away out more; and I will write upon him the name of my Deity, and the name of the city of my Deity, the New Jerusalem, which descendeth out of the heaven from my Deity, even my new name.
13. He having an ear to hear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias—ch. 3:7–13.

This epistle of the Spirit, like all the rest, is to the ecclesias, or associations of the called, in all the habitable of the Fourth Beast dominion, through the Angel-Presbytery of the ecclesia in Philadelphia. How many ruling and gift-possessing brethren the Philadelphian ‘Angel’ consisted of, cannot be told. We may conjecture, however, that there were not fewer than seven; to each of whom was given grace, or a spiritual gift, “according to the measure of the gift of Christ.” This official seven may be enumerated as constituted of an apostle, a prophet, a teacher, an inworker of power, a healer of disease, a helper or discernor of spirits, a linguist, and an interpreter. These ranked in the order I have stated them, and being all inspired men constituted a “A STAR” of divine brightness to all in Philadelphia disposed to avail themselves of its light. They were what Paul styles in his letter to the Philippians, the Episcopoi and Diakonoi, the overseers and servants of the flock; and it is worthy of remark, that no accusation is brought against them, as in the case of the angels of Ephesus, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, and Laodicea; which were troubled with pastors of ambitious and haughty manners; and others who sought to figure as such as a means of emolument at the general expense—merchandizers of souls, who saw no more in godliness than the lucre to be gained.

1. “The Holy and True.”

In the epistle before us, the Spirit presents himself as “the Holy One and True One:” as the Holy One of whom the prophets spake. In the vision which Isaiah saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem, he styles Yahweh, the Holy One of Israel—ch. 1:4. He predicted that Judah would turn his back upon him; and that if “a very small remnant” had not been left, the nation would have become like Sodom and Gomorrha, and would have partaken of their fate. This “remnant” is that portion of the Jews which accept Jesus of Nazareth as “the Holy One of Ail;” who in Apoc. 1:18, says, “I am the First and the Last and the Living One; and I was dead, and behold I am living for the Aions of the Aions: the Amen.” This is the AIL GIVBOR, the Hero-Power, or “Mighty God,” to whom Shearyahshuv, or the “remnant shall return,” called the remnant of Jacob, “which shall stay upon Yahweh the Holy One of Israel” Isa. 10:20, 21.

If the reader peruse this prophet attentively, he will see that the Eternal Spirit, who styled himself Yahweh at the bush, identifies himself with “the Holy One,” as in the form quoted, “Yahweh the Holy One of Israel.” But in Hos. 11:9, the Spirit saith, “I will not RETURN to destroy Ephraim; for I am AIL, and not man, the Holy One in the midst of Israel.” Now in Isai. 10:17, a distinction is apparent between Yahweh and the Holy One. Yahweh is there presented as “the Light of Israel for a fire;” and the Holy One as “HIS Holy One for a flame:” but in ch. 43:3, 11, he saith to Israel, “I am Yahweh thine Elohim, the Holy One of Israel, thy savior: I even I, Yahweh, and beside me there is no savior.” Yet the Spirit saith to AIL, concerning his “flesh” or his “soul,” “MY flesh shall dwell in confidence; for thou wilt not leave MY soul in Sheol (the place of the dead) nor wilt thou permit THY godly one to see corruption”—Ps. 16:9. Here the “godly one” in death, the Spirit styles his flesh, or his soul. That dead flesh, or soul, was not the Holy One; but when that mortal and corruptible flesh, or soul, was made alive by the Spirit of AIL, it became the “Yahweh Elohim, the Holy One of Israel;” or Yahweh, and his Holy One—the Light, the Fire, and the Flame of Israel.

“That which has been born out of the Spirit is spirit.” The Spirit Logos first became flesh; and at its resurrection, that flesh became spirit; and therefore, “the Holy One and the True One;” for the Spirit is holiness and truth.

The glorified Jesus is the Logos or Divine Spirit, in Holy-Spirit flesh—pneuma hagiosunes—the Holy and True One. Before he was “perfected by Spirit,” in speaking the words of the Spirit, he said, “I am the Way, THE TRUTH, and the Life;” and “he that hath seen me hath seen the Father;” and the reason he gave was that he was “in the Father, and the Father in him”—John 14:6, 9, 10. In reference to this Elohal manifestation of the truth, John says, “We know that the Son of the Deity hath come, and hath given to us understanding that we may know THE TRUE ONE—and we are in THE TRUE ONE in His Son Jesus Anointed: the same is the true Deity and the Life of the Aion;” or Aion Life—1 Ep. 5:20. To be “in him” is “the Way;” therefore he is “the Way:” the True Deity is the Anointed Logos in flesh, styled “Jesus Anointed;” and therefore “the Truth;” and the Aion-Life is “Christ our life;” and therefore “the Life.”

“The law was given through Moses, the gracious gift and the truth came through Jesus Anointed”—John 1:17. He that saw Jesus did not see that “gift and truth,” which was DEITY. John plainly declares this in the next verse, for he says, “No one hath seen Deity (or the Godhead, the Fountain and Origin of all things) at any time: the only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath revealed him.” Paul also testifies the same thing in 1 Tim. 6:16, saying, “No man hath seen, nor can see him.” The Revealer, then, is the Faithful and True Witness, and what he saith about the Deity, his purposes, and so forth, is “the truth;” and that truth in its power, wisdom, and fulness, was deposited in Jesus; for “it pleased that all the fulness should dwell in him.” The law contained the form of the knowledge and of the truth. It was only a shadow of future things; a figure for the time then present; the patterns of the things in the heavens; the antitypes of the true—but the knowledge and the truth, and the heavenly things themselves, constituting “the body” or substance, are of “THE ANOINTED.” Without the anointing there is nothing.

2. The Key of the House of David

The Holy and True one is the possessor of the Key of David. He holds this, and the Keys of Hades and of Death; and the Key of the Abyss—ch. 1:18; 20:1. A key is symbolical of power to open and shut; hence, the Anointed One saith in this writing, that he openeth and shutteth, and no one can prevent him. The key is styled “of the David,” because there is a something connected with David to be opened and shut. This something is revealed in the prophets. There it is styled “the Key of the House of David,” that is, of his kingdom—Isai. 22:22. In this chapter, two states of the Kingdom of David are prefigured by the names of two of Hezekiah’s Officers—SHEBNA and ELIAKIM. The former, derived from shavah, “to lead captive,” represents the kingdom in a dispersed and ruined condition; and the latter from AIL, God, and yahkim, “shall set up,” indicates the restoration of the kingdom by Divine Power. Hence, Ail- yahkim, or Eliakim, is a typical name for the restoration power, which is Deity in David's Son, or the Christ. Of this Eliakim, the Spirit in Isaiah saith to Shebna, Hezekiah's treasurer, "I will call him, and clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand; and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah. And the Key of the House of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open. And I will fasten him as A NAIL in an established habitation: and he shall be for a THRONE OF GLORY for the house of his father. And they shall hang upon him all the glory of the house of his father, the earth-products and the shoots, all vessels of the small from vessels of the wash-troughs, even to all vessels of the skins."

This is a very interesting typical prophesy. We presume, that no one will be so obtuse as to suppose that the things written were fulfilled in Eliakim the son of the Hilk-Yah. Very little is left on record concerning him in the bible. From this we learn, that while Shebna was Secretary of State and Treasurer, Eliakim was over the King's Household in Hezekiah's reign, and at the time of the destruction of the Assyrian host by a blast from Divine Power, and the consequent deliverance of Jerusalem and Judah from the oppressor. His name, the peculiar circumstances of the time, and his position in David's kingdom, all combined to make him a very fit person for a Messianic representative. Shebna was officially identified with the law which was to vanish away; while Eliakim was officially identified with the kingdom of David which Divine Power will set up when the time arrives to deliver the remnant of the captivity.

The Ail-yakim, or Eliakim, typified, then, is "MESSIAH THE PRINCE," in whom all is to be accomplished that was typically spoken of Eliakim. Shebna's robe, girdle, and government, are all to be transferred to the Christ; who will be both scribe and treasurer when Divine Power, or Ail, shall set up, yakim (or Eliakimize) the tabernacle of David which has fallen down, "and set it up as in the days of old"—Acts 15:16; Amos 9:11. Then will he be "a Father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah."

Isaiah remarks, that the Eliakim should wear his key upon his shoulder, as a mark of office, of his power to open and shut with authority; thereby indicating that he is the Grand Master and Chief of the House of David. Callimachus says, that Ceres carried a key upon her shoulder; a custom that appears very strange to us; but the ancients had large keys in the form of a sickle, and which from their weight and shape, could not otherwise be carried conveniently.

For the key of the house of David, then, to rest upon the Eliakim's shoulder, is equivalent to the government of that house, or of Israel, resting there. This is evident from the prophet's allusion to "the shoulder" in ch. 9:6. In this place, speaking of the "Son to be given" to the house of David, who should be called Ail-Givbor, the Mighty Power, AVI-AD, Father of Futurity, SAR-SHAHLOM, Prince of Peace, the Spirit says, "the government shall be upon his shoulder." This can mean nothing else than that the government then on the shoulder of Ahaz the reigning prince of Judah, should at some future time rest upon the shoulder of a Divine Son of David's house, named IMMANUEL or "God with us," as typified by one of the prophet's family: and this idea is symbolically expressed by the apocalyptic phrase, "I have the Key of the David, opening and no one shutteth, and shutting and no one openeth." "The key of the David" is an elliptical phrase. The words to be supplied are indicated by Isaiah: according to him, "house of," in the sense of kingdom of, should intervene between "key of the" and the name "David." Thus, the Spirit-Man who was dead and is living as the Holy One and the True God, in speaking to the Star-Angel in Philadelphia, and through them to all the ecclesias, declares that he is the Eliakim; and that the government of the kingdom of David is with him; and that holding the keys, he will "set it up as in the days of old."

But furthermore, the Spirit-Man being the AIL-yakim, is also "the Nail" and the "Throne of Glory."

“The words of the wise are as fastened nails given from one shepherd.” The word of the only wise Deity when incarnated, is therefore fitly represented by “a nail fastened in a sure place.” Of this nail, the Spirit in Zechariah said, that it should come out of Judah—ch. 10:4. The “sure place” in which it is to be fastened, Ezra designates as “Yahweh Elohim’s holy place,” in which he and the remnant of the captivity returned from Babylon, were then sojourning; that is, in Jerusalem. This accords with the true import of מִקּוֹם נָאֻם!

, mahkom neamahn, which signifies an established habitation. This is the “sure place” in which THE NAIL is to be fastened—in Jerusalem then a peaceable, quiet, and established habitation —Isai. 32:18; 33:20.

The Spirit-Man is also to be for “a Throne of Glory.” A throne is an elevated seat with a canopy and hangings which cover it. Hence, the Eliakim in the passage before us, is styled metaphorically kissai, from the root kahsah “to cover.” “He shall be for a Cover of Glory for the house of his Father;” for “He shall bear the glory, and sit and rule upon his throne”—Zech. 6:13; he shall be “a wall of fire round about, and the Glory in the midst of Jerusalem”—ch. 2:5. As the glory sat enthroned between the Cherubim in the times of the law, so it shall be seated upon the Eliakim and his brethren in the apocalyptic Aion of a thousand years.

Isaiah saw this throne of glory in a vision, in the year that king Uzziah died. He tells us that it was an exalted throne, and that the King, Yahweh Tz’vaoth, was sitting upon it. Around it stood the Seraphim, who proclaimed superlative holiness, and announced that the whole earth was full of his glory—ch. 6:1–5. This vision has been reproduced in Rev. 4, of which we shall treat more at large when we arrive at that chapter in our exposition.

Isaiah tells us in regard to “the Nail,” that all the glory of the house of the Eliakim’s father shall be suspended upon him; and appositely informs us, that this glory consists of what in the Common Version is termed, “the offspring and the issue.” These are in the original הַצְאָזַיִם וְהַצְפִּיּוֹת hatzeatzaim we-hatzphioth; literally, earth-products and shoots; in other words, those who, “sown in dishonor,” are “raised in glory.” They are styled also “all vessels of the small,” that is, “the poor of this world rich in faith, who are heirs of the kingdom,” and termed “the small” in Rev. 11:18, in relation to “the great”—the small, being compared to wash-troughs; and the latter, to the vessels made of skins to hold wine, and other choice fluids.

Such is to be the glory that is permanently to cluster around the Eliakim. But before that glorious consummation is developed, the Spirit declared that “the Nail fastened in an established place shall depart: and it shall be cut off, and fall; and that suspended upon it shall be cut down: for Yahweh hath spoken.” This cutting off the Nail, and his departure, occurred in the nailing of Jesus to the cross, and his subsequent assumption. The apocalypse symbolizes in “the Lamb slain” this cutting off, and in the tribulation or trial then “about to come upon the whole habitable,” the cutting down of that suspended by faith upon the Nail.

The Eliakim who hath the key of the house of David informs all of the Philadelphian class of saints, that he opens and shuts, and none can hinder. He reminds them that an open door had been set before them. He had sent Paul to Ephesus, where he continued, “disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of the Deity,” for two whole years; “so that all they that dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord, both Jews and Greeks”—Acts 19:8–10. Hence, the Philadelphians, being inhabitants of Asia, had heard it among the rest.

During all that time he opened his mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the Gospel. The result was that they came to the understanding of “the word” and confessed “the name,” which, owing to the “little strength” they still retained when the apocalypse was written, they had “kept” and “not denied.”

They had learned “the things of the Kingdom” or “the word,” and “the things of the Name.” That kingdom was the subject-matter of “the word,” styled by Isaiah “the law and the testimony;” and which is the rule of speaking for all who walk in the light. They knew that it was the Kingdom of David to be set up by the Deity of the heavens in the land of Israel; that it was to consist of the twelve tribes grafted into their own Olive Tree upon their acknowledgment of Jesus as King of Israel; and that, although they were by nature aliens from the Commonwealth of Israel, the “Strait Gate” and “Narrow Way” had been “set before them as an open door, which no one could shut.” Peter had opened the door or gate which gave admission into “the way” which leads to the Kingdom. He had opened it to the Jew on Pentecost, and to the nations at the house of Cornelius; not, indeed, by his own power, but by His which descended upon him in baptism of spirit, even by the power of Him “who openeth and no one shuts, and shuts and no one opens.”

“The keys of the kingdom of the heavens” having been thus apostolically employed, the Philadelphians were all alive to the Spirit’s allusion to the key of the house of David in his possession. This announcement would fall powerless upon the ear of modern clerical assemblies. These have no more interest in David the son of Jesse than had the revolters against David’s house in the days of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to go a whoring after the calves at Bethel. Not so the Philadelphians. They had kept the word of the kingdom treasured up in their affections; so that any mention of the Key of David would be responded to with heartfelt and abiding interest and joy. But, they had not only kept the word of the Spirit, they had also “not denied his Name.” They were not contaminated with the current heresies which denied that he had been manifested in Sin’s flesh. They kept the word of the kingdom against those who made it of none effect by teaching that souls went to kingdoms beyond the skies at death; and they held fast to the Spirit’s name against those who abolished it by their gnosis and oppositions of science, falsely so called; which were the pith and poison, or “divinity” of the Synagogue of the Satan, as at this day.

The Synagogue of the Satan with its clergy were arrayed against those who kept the word and held fast the name, in every city. The Satanists, as they have done ever since, contended that they were the true Jews; the genuine Israel of God. They contended for the ascendancy, and at length attained it; and when they had established their usurpation over the faithful, they aimed at supremacy in the Roman State, and acquired it also; upon which they turned round upon their former brethren, and persecuted them to bonds, imprisonment, and death. They scorned the idea of the humble poor in Christ being the special objects of his affection; and not such men as Origen and Eusebius, “the transformed ministers of the Satan.” But, “the seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of the Deity, were gone forth into all the earth.” He had observed their works. He saw that they were irreclaimable; therefore he said, “Behold, I give up out of the Synagogue of the Satan them who say that they are Jews, yet are not, but do lie.” The Spirit would abandon them to their own delusions, as Paul had predicted in 2 Thess. 2:10, saying, “Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved, the Deity for this cause shall send upon them Strong Delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be condemned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness”—that system of doctrine they style “orthodoxy.” They were not Jews. The true faith was not in them; and consequently, although immersed, they were not in Christ; and not being “in him” they could not be Abraham’s Seed, and were not therefore “heirs according to the promise.”

But though to be given up as reprobates, they were not to go unpunished. They were to be subjected to “an hour of trial being about to come upon the whole habitable to make proof of them who dwell upon the earth.” This was a proximate visitation. A remoter and ultimate one was in store for them, which would result in their acknowledgment of those who kept the word, and denied not the Spirit’s name, as his beloved; and not only so, but that they shall come up, and prostrate themselves at the feet of those they have despised. “Behold, I will bring upon them,” saith the Spirit, even calamity, when they shall “be tormented in the presence of the holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb”—“that they may have come and prostrated before thy feet, and may have known that I have loved thee.”

3. The Hour of Trial.

But while they of the synagogue of the Satan were to be subjected to great calamity in all the Roman Habitable, the Star-Angel and ecclesia of Philadelphia, contemporary with the apostle John, together with all the ecclesias who “kept the word of the patient waiting for Christ,” were to be preserved from it. The words of the Spirit to the ecclesias are, “Seeing that thou hast kept the word of the patient waiting for me, I also will keep thee from the hour of the trial being about to come upon the whole habitable to make proof of them who dwell upon the earth.” This “hour of trial” was not to arrive in the lifetime of that generation of saints. It was an hour “being about to come;” that is, in their future, or, as the event proved, in A.D. 248; about one hundred and fifty years after the apocalypse was revealed. This afforded time for the Satanists to fill up the measure of their iniquity, and for the faithful to depart to their graves in peace; for a long peace of thirty-seven years preceded the outbreak of the fiery trial under the emperor Decius. During this tranquility, historians testify that “a deep declension from Christian purity had taken place, not only in the East, where false philosophy aided its progress, but also in the West, where the operation of no peculiar cause can be traced beyond the common influence of prosperity on human depravity. This is completely evident from Cyprian’s account; and it deserves to be remarked, that the first grand and general declension after the primary effusion of the Divine Spirit, should be fixed about the middle of the Third Century—Milner Eccl. Hist., p. 165.

As we have said, a hundred and fifty years had elapsed from the writing of this epistle to the Philadelphians, to the beginning of this judgment upon the House of God, for the ecclesias in general, or collectively, were still “his habitation through the Spirit,” inasmuch as he had not then as yet “spued” the delinquents “out of his mouth.” During this period of a century and a half, the state of things exhibited in the New Testament grew worse and worse; and it may be generally remarked, that the same opposition to the Name of the Spirit, termed by historians “the Deity of Christ or his manhood,” and the same insidious methods of depreciating or abusing “the word of the kingdom,” or “the word of the patient waiting for Christ,” continued in all this period, which had begun in the time of the apostles, with this difference, that they were now multiplied, varied, complicated, and refined by endless subtleties and fancies, in which the poverty of taste and genius, so common in a period when letters are declining, discovers itself no less than the christian doctrine. Nevertheless, in the midst of this wide-spread and general corruption of faith and practice, the faithful still kept themselves separate and distinct, and preserved their garments from defilement.

The elevation of Decius to supreme power was fatal to multitudes of professing christians, who were unable to stand the trial of their principles; and in their fall proved themselves to be of the synagogue of the Satan, and not Jews, but liars. The enmity of Decius to his predecessor Philip, (whom Eusebius styles a christian, although a murderer and profligate, who had not obeyed the truth,) conspired with his pagan prejudices to bring on the most dreadful persecution christianity had yet experienced. The Hour of the Trial had arrived, and it was evident to its contemporaries, that nothing less than the extermination of the christian name was intended. “The chronology,” says Milner, “is here remarkably embarrassed.” He therefore conjectures that the period extended to A.D. 260. The persecution raged with astonishing fury, beyond the example of former persecutions, both in the East and West, or, in the words of the Spirit, epi tes oikoumenes holes, upon the whole habitable. In a treatise by Cyprian concerning “The Lapsed,” there is an affecting account of the declension from christianity, which had taken place before his conversion in A.D. 246, and which moved the Deity to chastise the body. “If the cause of our miseries,” says he, “be investigated, the cure of the wound may be found. The Lord would have his family to be TRIED. And because long peace had corrupted the discipline divinely revealed to us, the heavenly chastisement hath raised up our faith, which had lain almost dormant; and when, by our sins, we had deserved to suffer still more, the merciful Lord so moderated all things, that the whole scene rather deserves the name of A TRIAL than a persecution”—a peirasmos rather than a thlipsis, a distinction which obtains in Rev. 2:10, and ch. 3:10.

Cyprian then proceeds to narrate the manifest cause of this trial that was to try, or put the professions of the christians of previous peaceable and prosperous times to the proof. “Each,” says he, “had been bent on improving his patrimony; and had forgotten what believers had done under the apostles, and what they ought always to do. They were brooding over the arts of amassing wealth. The pastors and their deacons each forgot their duty. Works of mercy were neglected, and discipline was at the lowest ebb. Luxury and effeminacy prevailed. Meretricious arts in dress were cultivated. Fraud and deceit were practiced among brethren. Christians could unite themselves in matrimony with unbelievers; and could swear, not only without reverence, but even without veracity. With haughty asperity they despised their ecclesiastical superiors; they railed against each other with outrageous acrimony, and conducted quarrels with determined malice. Even many bishops, who ought to be guides and patterns to the rest, neglecting the peculiar duties of their stations, gave themselves up to secular pursuits. They deserted their places of residence and their flocks. They travelled through distant provinces in quest of pleasure and gain; gave no assistance to the needy brethren, but were insatiable in their thirst for money. They possessed estates by fraud, and multiplied usury. What have we not deserved to suffer for such conduct? The Divine Word hath foretold us what we might expect, saying, ‘If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments, I will visit their offences with the rod, and their sin with scourges.’ These things had been denounced and foretold, but in vain: our sins had brought our affairs to that pass, that because we had despised the Lord’s directions, we were obliged to undergo a correction of our multiplied evils and a trial of our faith by severe remedies.”

Even Origen, as worldly a professor of the faith as any of his day, intimates that the long peace which the body—with only the short interruption of Maximin’s persecution—had enjoyed, was followed by a great degree of lukewarmness and even of much religious indecorum. “Several,” says he, “come to church only on solemn festivals; and then not so much for instruction as diversion. Some go out again as soon as they have heard the lecture, without conferring or asking the pastors any questions; others stay not till the lecture is ended; and others hear not so much as a single word, but entertain themselves in a corner of the church.” But, “like priest like people.” These were what their leaders had made them; for it is “the leaders of the people that cause them to err.” The ability faithfully to dispense the truth had become rare, as well as the taste for such employment; and Origen complains of the ambitious and haughty manners of pastors, and of the improper steps which some took to obtain preferment.

During the trial frequent communications passed between the christians in Rome and Carthage to which Cyprian belonged. The Roman brethren represent the conflict as very important, and one which God had now permitted for the trial of his servants. They said, it was the express purpose of God to manifest both to angels and men, that the conqueror shall be crowned, and the conquered, that is, the faithless apostate, be self-condemned. This was doubtless an allusion to the testimony in the letters to Smyrna and Philadelphia; in the former of which, it is written, “Be faithful until death, and I will give thee the coronal wreath of the life;” and in the latter, “Hold fast what thou hast, that no one take thy coronal wreath,” stephanon, or “crown.” In speaking of the effects of the trial, they say, “Behold, almost the whole world (or habitable) is laid waste: fragments of the fallen lie in every place. With one and the same counsel, with unanimous prayers and tears, let us—who seem hitherto to have escaped the ruins of this visitation, as well as those who have not stood entirely faithful during the persecution, entreat the Divine Majesty, and beg peace, in the name of the whole church.”

“The management of this persecution,” says Milner, “seems to have been the whole employment of the magistrates. Swords, wild beasts, pits, red hot chains, wheels for stretching human bodies, and talons of iron to tear them; these were at this time the instruments of pagan vengeance. Malice and covetousness in informing against christians were eagerly and powerfully set to work during this horrible reign: and the genius of men was never known to have had more of employment in aiding the savageness of the heart. Life was prolonged in torture, in order that impatience in suffering might effect at length, what surprise and terror could not.” It was not a local or intermitting, but an universal and constant persecution. The lightning of the Decian rage refined and cleared the whole christian atmosphere. No doubt, the effects were salutary in preventing the extinction of the truth, which was rapidly expiring. The storm proved fatal to many who could not stand the trial, but apostatized; and christianity was in that way, cleared of many false friends; who, in the time of peace, said “they were Jews, but were not, and did lie; but were of the synagogue of the Satan.”

4. “The Patient Waiting”

The ground of escape from “the hour of trial,” which was to be so terrible, was stated to be “the keeping of the word of the patient waiting for the Spirit.” The importance of this word may be estimated by the severity of the chastisement for its neglect. The coming of the Spirit-Man is the thing waited for; and the teaching which creates this expectation is “the word of the patient waiting for.” Wherever the truth was received as the result of divine teaching, the earnest and joyous expectation of the return of the glorified Jesus became a prime article of faith. This appears from many places in the New Testament. When Paul went to Thessalonica he proclaimed the royalty of Jesus, and his return to rule the whole habitable—that there is another King than Caesar, even Jesus. Many of Caesar’s subjects believed him; and, in consequence, threw away their idols, and waited for his coming. In writing to these in after years, Paul said, “Ye turned to the Deity from the idols to serve a living and true Deity; and to wait for his Son from the heavens, whom He raised from among the dead, even Jesus, who delivers us from the coming wrath.” This became to them a matter of hope. They waited for it, and were taught to do so with patience and endurance. It is, therefore, termed “the patient waiting of the hope of our Lord Jesus Anointed,” in 1 Thess. 1:3. In both these epistles the apocalypse of Jesus occupies a prominent place. It is expressly mentioned at the end of all the chapters of the first with many important accompaniments; and, in 2 Epist. 3:5, he says, “the Lord direct your hearts into the love of the Deity, and into the patient waiting for the Anointed.” They had become impatient, supposing that the day of his appearing was at hand. But Paul corrected this error by telling them that it would not come to pass until the consummation of an Apostasy, which would be perfected under the Man of Sin: and that, when this power should be fully matured, then the Lord Jesus would be apocalypsed to destroy it, and be glorified in his saints. All who are “taught of God” understand this, and earnestly desire the event; because they know that there is no salvation till He appears. The promises are to those who love his appearing. Paul teaches this distinctly. “There is laid up,” says he, “a coronal wreath of righteousness for all them who love his appearing;” and in another place he says, “to them who look for him he shall appear a second time without sin for salvation”—Heb. 9:28. Only those who are watching and prepared will share in this salvation.

5. “I Come Quickly”

“Behold, I come, tachu, quickly,” or soon. This does not refer to the “coming in clouds” of ch. 1:7; but to the coming to execute the threatening of the previous verse. “I, the Spirit-man, will come soon to bring the hour of trial upon the whole habitable.” In ch. 2:5, he threatened to come quickly to the Star-

Angel of Ephesus, if they did not resume their original position, and take from them the gifts, by which their darkness would become complete. Nor is it the coming quickly, though it may be typical of it, indicated in Rev. 22:12. This has reference to our future, and not to a past time. I conclude thus, because in this text the time of the coming is marked by the bringing of the reward, and the giving every man according to his works. Then will be the time for the prostration of all the Satanists and spurious Jews at the feet of the Philadelphians. They will then know that these are the beloved whom they have long despised and abused. If it be a quick, or soon, coming at the fall of Babylon the Great, it was certainly a quick coming at “the hour of trial” in A.D. 248.

The Philadelphians were exhorted to “hold fast what they had.” They had the word of the kingdom and name. They were to hold fast to this, or, if they did not, they would lose their crown. Every reader can understand this; and he may easily know if he have any claim upon this crown, by examining himself and seeing if he be in the faith. If he be ignorant of the doctrine of the kingdom and name, he has nothing worth holding on to; and, though he may know all mysteries, if he have not been immersed into Christ, he is not in the faith. This is the condition of “the religious world” at this day. In the time of the Philadelphian Star Angel the christian community, the religious world of that day, had the word of the patient waiting for the Spirit-Man; and was then in a position to hold fast or let go. Many now have a traditional idea that Christ will come again; but of “the word,” which teaches how to wait, and how to be accepted of him as holy, un-blameable, and without rebuke at his appearing, the clergy and their peoples have not the least conception. They can not therefore “hold fast what the Angel in Philadelphia had;” and consequently have no right or title to the coronal.

6. Coronal Wreath.

In the English Version, stephanos is rendered “crown.” There are two words in the Apocalypse so rendered,—diadema and stephanos. The latter is used in Mat. 27:29, “they platted a crown of thorns;” and in 1 Cor. 9:25, “to obtain a corruptible crown;” and in 1 Pet. 5:4, “a crown of glory that fadeth not away.” In the Apocalypse, when un-associated with other words, it signifies a garland, chaplet, or wreath, encircling the head from the crown to the back thereof at its junction with the neck. Such was the stephanos, or coronal wreath, with which the victorious athletoe, or combatants, in the public games of antiquity were decorated. These combatants were runners, wrestlers, and pugilists, who agonized, or contended earnestly, for the glory, honor, and recompense of victory. Paul alludes to them in saying, “Know ye not that they who run in a race all run, but one receives the prize? So run that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible coronal wreath; but we an incorruptible.”

Elliott, in his Horie Apocalypticoe, has the following remarks upon the stephanos. “By the imperator or emperor, up to the time of Augustus, was meant, as is well known, simply the victorious Roman general, saluted with that title by his soldiers on the field of battle, and with the triumph and its coveted honors and insignia following. Now, though with Augustus and his successors the most absolute monarchical power attached to their emperorship, yet it was their policy to veil it under the old military or imperial badges. Hence their public insignia (of which the mock robing and crowning of Jesus by the Roman soldiery is an affecting remembrancer) were still the laurel crown and purple robe. The assumption of the diadem, or broad white fillet set with pearls, viewed as it was by the Romans as a badge of oriental despotism, and of the servitude of subject vassals, these emperors carefully shunned. The remembrance long remained with them of the feelings exhibited by the Roman people on its being offered by Antony to their great ancestor, Julius Caesar; insomuch that it was considered an act of madness on the part of Caligula (and the act was quite isolated) to attempt to assume it. Abundant memorials exist to show that all through the time to which the first Seal refers, the crown remained the badge of Roman emperors, the diadem of barbarous kings. In fact, not till about the time of Diocletian, near 200 years after John's banishment to Patmos, was the diadem adopted by Roman emperors: the innovation being accompanied both with the other insignia, and even the adoration too, attendant on eastern royalty. The change constituted an epoch in Roman history; and one markedly noticed, as will afterwards appear, in the Apocalypse. Thus, then, about Diocletian's time, and thenceforward, but not till then, the diadem was the imperial badge;—for a century or more conjointly with the laurel, then I believe exclusively. So that whereas, with reference to such a period as the close of the fourth century, it would have been an impropriety, and with reference to the sixth an anachronism, to represent the stephanos, or laurel crown, as a badge of empire on an imperial or royal head,—just as much, and indeed more, it would have been an anachronism to represent a Roman emperor of the two and a half first centuries with a diadem”—Vol. 1. p. 126.

In the Apocalypse the diadem is peculiar to the Seven-Headed Dragon and the Ten Horns of the Beast. It is true, that in Rev. 19:12, “many diadems” are represented on the head of the Spirit-Man; but then these are the diadems which he wrests from the Ten Horns when he conquers them, and takes possession of their kingdoms.

The stephanos was a very appropriate device for association with life, honor, glory, rejoicing, and righteousness. It was constructed of the laurel, which is evergreen, and therefore emblematic of the Aion-Life which is perennial; still when plucked from the living tree it is corruptible, and fades away. So with the believer; as long as he holds fast to what he has, retains his hold upon Christ, by His dwelling in his heart by faith in the word of the patient waiting for him, and not denying his name; Christ, who is the Wisdom of the Deity, is to him a living and unfading tree; and he, as a leaf thereof, does not wither: but if, having received “the word, he does not hold it fast, or denies the name of the Spirit-Man, he is as a leaf plucked from its parent stem; he fades, and another has snatched from him his stephanos, which nought enriches the persecutor, and makes him that loses it poor indeed. Hence, the high importance of the exhortation to the Philadelphian saints, “Hold fast what thou hast that no one may have seized upon thy coronal wreath.”

In “the Hour of Trial” there were many examples of this seizure of the stephanos. The following will afford an illustration of others. There were at Antioch a presbyter and an unofficial member of the ecclesia, the former named Sapricius, the latter Nicephorus, who, through some misunderstanding, after a remarkable intimacy, became so completely estranged, that they would not even salute each other in the street. Nicephorus after a time relented, begged forgiveness of his fault, and took repeated measures to procure reconciliation, but in vain. He even went to the house of Sapricius, and throwing himself at his feet, entreated his forgiveness for the Lord's sake; but the presbyter continued obstinate.

In this situation of things “the Hour of Trial” came suddenly upon them. The Spirit-Man had come, as he had forewarned them. Sapricius was carried before the governor, and ordered to sacrifice to the gods in obedience to the edict of the emperors. “We christians,” replied Sapricius, “acknowledge for our king Jesus Christ, who is the true God, and the Creator of heaven and earth. Perish idols, which can do neither good nor harm?” The Prefect tormented him a long time, and then commanded that he should be beheaded. Nicephorus hearing this, ran up to him as he was led to execution, and renewed in vain the same supplications. The executioners derided his humility as perfect folly. But he persevered, and attended Sapricius to the place of execution. There he said further, “It is written, Ask and it shall be given you.” But not even this appeal to the word, so suitable to Sapricius' own circumstances, could affect his obstinate and unforgiving temper.

Sapricius, however, suddenly recanted, and promised to sacrifice to the idols. Nicephorus amazed, exhorted him to the contrary; but in vain. He then said to the executioners, “I believe in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ whom he hath renounced.” The officers returned to give an account to the governor, who ordered Nicephorus to be beheaded; who may be said to have seized the coronal Saprificus had thrown away.

When the combatants in the public games obtained the coronal evergreen, it was because they had contended according to the regulations, which justified the awarding of the crown to the victor. It was therefore a coronal of justification. He was in a state of right; and therefore entitled to all the honor, glory, and rejoicing due to successful combatants. The laurel wreath was therefore a crown of righteousness, a crown of glory and honor, and a crown of rejoicing, in a gymnastic sense. Upon the principle of analogy, then, the Spirit has chosen the stephanos in preference to the diadem, as the symbol of the glory, honor, rejoicing, and incorruptible life, he has promised to those who are found in that state of right—of moral right—he has organized, and defined in “the word.” They who come up to the regulations he has ordained in this, are righteous; and being thereby justified, when the day of coronation arrives, “glory, honor, incorruptibility, and life” will be to the resurrected righteous,” “a crown or stephanos, that fadeth not away. The diadem is inherited; the stephanos is the prize of ”him that overcomes.”

But, though the stephanos of the public games was of laurel, still they would fade. Hence, the stephanos in its literality is not introduced into the apocalypse. It stands there analogically, as something that encircles and is bestowed upon victors, but with the material changed. Thus, in Rev. 4:4, John sees the twenty-four presbyters with golden stephans upon their heads, which they cast before the throne, indicating thereby that “the glory, honor, and power” represented by the stephanos, are derived from the Lord who sits thereon. They are of gold, because they are acquired by faith—by that faith which is symbolized by fine gold, as the most precious of metals. The most precious metal, in other words, is the emblem of the most precious attribute of a christian. Hence, a tried faith is likened by Peter to gold tried with fire. This is the analogy which he expresses, saying to certain under persecution, “Ye are in heaviness through manifold trials; that the putting to the proof of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory in an apocalypse of Jesus Anointed”—1 Ep. 1:7. Faith like fine gold is a “precious faith,” embracing “exceeding great and precious promises;” by faith in which when duly appreciated, “THE DIVINE NATURE” is created and cherished in the hearts of men. To such, the apostle addresses himself, saying, “To them who have obtained like precious faith with us in the righteousness of the Deity, even of our Saviour Jesus Anointed; grace to you and peace be multiplied in the exact knowledge of the Deity, even of Jesus our Lord.” How little faith must there be in the world if the faith of the apostles is to be regarded as the standard! The faith extant is not comparable to theirs in kind nor in degree; consequently, but few of this generation will enter into the symbol of the twenty-four wearing “golden stephans upon their heads.”

“Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the stephanos of life.” Such was the promise to the Smyrneans—a promise equivalent to that to the Philadelphians. To be faithful unto death is to hold fast the word of the patient waiting for Christ, and not to deny his name; and to receive the stephan of life is to rise from the dead and to live forever.

7. “A Pillar in the Temple.”

After exhorting the faithful to hold fast the gospel of the kingdom and name, the Spirit-Man proceeds to assure them of reward. In addressing the victor who shall have overcome in the public games which he patronizes and conducts, the Spirit saith, “I will make the victor A PILLAR in the Temple of my Deity.” In this saying, “Phillar” evidently is representative of a saved person. Therefore to make such a pillar in a temple of Deity is to make him an integral part thereof; and for a saint to be part of the temple, indicates that the temple itself is composed of persons. Now a temple is a dwelling; not a common dwelling, but a habitation of Deity. A temple composed of the saints is a habitation of Deity, which the Lord pitches and not man.

Upon this principle the pillars and the house, temple, dwelling, or habitation, become identical and inseparable. But obvious as this may be to the enlightened, we propose to make it equally so to others; and to unfold the significancy and beauty of the phrase in the remarks which follow.

The idea of a pillar being a house of Deity is traceable to the conception of Jacob, who, doubtless, initiated it under the inspiration of Deity. The history of its origination is told in Gen. 28, as follows. Isaac called Jacob into his presence, and told him to go to Padanaram, and select for himself a wife there, from Laban's daughters. On his departure he blessed him saying, "Ail-Shaddai bless thee, and give thee the blessing of Abraham, to thee, and to thy Seed WITH THEE; that thou mayest inherit the land, wherein thou art a stranger, which Elohim gave to Abraham."

On his way thither, Jacob came to a certain place where he passed the night, making his pillow of the stones. While asleep, the vision of the Ladder appeared to him. This ladder seemed to connect the earth and heaven; and by it ascended and descended upon him angels, or messengers of Elohim. Above the ladder stood Yahweh, known to Jacob by the name Ail-Shaddai, who said to him, "I am Yahweh Elohim of Abraham thy father, and Elohim of Isaac; the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy Seed. And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the west and to the east, and to the north and the south; and all the families of the earth shall be blessed in thee, and in thy Seed. And behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places where thou goest, and I will bring thee again into this land; for I will not leave thee until I have done what I have spoken to thee of."

The gospel of the kingdom having been thus announced to Jacob, as it had been before to Abraham, (Gal. 3:8,) he awoke, and under the vivid impression of what he had seen and heard, took the Stone upon which his head rested, and set it up for a pillar—a monumental pillar—and poured oil upon the top of it. This was the nearest approach he could make to the matter of the vision. The stone resting upon the earth and pointing upwards might represent the ladder; and the oil poured on the top of it, the Spirit, or Deity, who stood above it. Thus, the Stone was converted into a pillar or monument, which, to the mind of Jacob, would suggest the promise he had heard in his dream. His recollection of this promise would be the monumental inscription of this pillar of Stone.

But when he awoke in a typical resurrection, he exclaimed, "Verily, Yahweh is in this place, and I knew not;" and he was afraid, and said, "How awful is this place! This is nothing else but a house of Elohim, and this a gate of the heavens!" Hence, that this idea might be perpetuated, he said, "Yahweh shall be to me for Elohim, and this Stone which I have set for a pillar shall be a House of Elohim."

Jacob's stone pillar, then, was typical of a House of Elohim to be set up after he awakes from his sleep of centuries. When he awakes, he will find himself in an awful time and place, the gate of heaven opened, and the house of Elohim in manifestation, but he, nevertheless, without dismay. What he saw in vision he will then see in fact—"Heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man"—John 1:51.

But there is a sense in which Jacob's pillar of the stone exists as a house of Elohim even now, and in intimate connection with the house he will see when he awakes from his present know-nothing state. Paul presents to us this sense in the saying, that "a House of Deity is an ecclesia of living Deity, a PILLAR and material habitation, (hedraioma from hedra, a habitation of gods,) of the truth"—1 Tim. 3:15. This pillar and habitation is "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Anointed being chief-corner"—Eph. 2:20. As a monumental pillar, the inscription upon it is "the exceeding great and precious promises" believed by each saint, or "living stone," of which the pillar is composed—"promises" concerning the kingdom and name made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as narrated by Moses. This pillar was anointed on the top of it on the Day of Pentecost, when the spirit was poured upon the apostles. That anointing was perpetuated in "the testimony for Jesus" which has reached even to us, and with which every true believer is anointed. An ecclesia, however, is not only a pillar inscribed with the truth, but is a hedraioma of the truth. It is a material thing made up of "gods," as David styles them or of "children of Deity," according to 1 John 3:2; Psal. 82:6. These are anointed with the truth, and therefore they are a god-habitation, or hedraioma of the truth.

In regard to this word hedraioma, it may be remarked here, that it occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, nor in any classical author. The word is derived from hedra, which signifies "a seat, habitation, especially of gods, a temple, altar, &c." Hence, the expressiveness of the word, and its peculiar and exclusive application to a habitation of the truth constituted of gods, or children of Deity, who are, as represented in the Apocalypse, "the Altar," "the temple," "the Holy City," or, as Paul expresses it, "an habitation of Deity by spirit—Eph. 2:22.

The ecclesia in the aggregate is the Pillar of the Stone to be placed in Zion, and a hedraioma, or House of Elohim, as Jacob termed the type he set up at Bethel. But while the saints collectively are an Elohal Pillar and House of the truth, this house also contains two classes of pillars, and many individual pillars in each class. This is seen in type and antitype. Typically, the two classes are represented in the Two Brazen Pillars in the Porch of Solomon's temple, the one on the right hand being named Jachin, and that on the left, Boaz. These names were significative of the things represented by the pillars, which were of brass, eighteen cubits, or about thirty-two feet, in the shaft, which was twenty-one feet girth, and surmounted with a chapter nine feet high. Here were loftiness and strength. The chapters were ornamented with nets of checker-work, wreaths or stephans, of chain-work, pomegranates, and lily work, all of which were representative of things pertaining to the pillars. As a whole, they were styled yahkin, and boaz, or in plain English, He shall establish by strong ones.

In Canticles, Solomon, who had much to do with lily work and pomegranates, and fragrant and choice woods, in the building of the temple, makes the Bridegroom term the Bride "the Lily;" and speaking of herself, she says, "I am his, feeding among lilies;" and, "a rose of Sharon, a lily of the valley." And in another part of this Song of Songs, the bridegroom says of the saints forming collectively the Bride, "A garden enclosed is my sister spouse; a spring locked up, a fountain sealed. Thy shoots are plants of Paradise, pomegranates with delicious fruits." Moses styles Palestine "a land of pomegranates," so that they came to be used as a similitude for those who shall inherit the land. They therefore constituted the hem of the typical robe of Aaron, being of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and alternating with golden bells. These plants of Paradise typifying the two classes of saints from Israel and the Gentiles, are concretely the †]

, or, "strong ones, by whom HE, Yahweh, will establish" the kingdom of David. They are, therefore, Yahkin and Boaz, the brazen pillars of the porch.

But while these pillars of fine brass represented "the Feet" of the Eternal Spirit, which in their progress are as "pillars of fire" glowing in a furnace, (Rev. 1:15; 10:1; Ezek. 43:7,) there are other representative pillars, which typified the same agents in a different position. Within the tabernacle were "four pillars" upon which was suspended the Veil inwrought with Cherubim—Exod. 26:32. These pillars were of wood overlaid with gold. Brass pertained to the Porch and Court of the Priests; Gold to the Holy and Most Holy compartments of the tabernacle. These four cherubic-veil pillars answer to the Four Living Ones of Rev. 4 and 5. These, who are the redeemed, have entered the temple, "the smoke from the glory and power of the Deity" having altogether passed away—Rev. 15:8. To be "a pillar in the dwelling of the Deity," is to be a constituent of these four cherubic-veil pillars, and an element of Jachin and Boaz, the diversity of metals having reference not to different classes of saints, but to the same individuals in different states. As brass, they are glowing in the furnace of divine wrath, "executing vengeance upon the nations and punishments upon the peoples; binding their kings with chains and their nobles with fetters of iron:" in short, "executing upon them the judgment written," in the time appointed for them to possess themselves of the kingdom under the whole heaven—Psal. 149:7; Dan. 7: as brass, they are "standing upon the sea of glass mingled with fire," and treading down the wicked as ashes under the soles of their feet—Rev. 15:1; Mal. 4:3; but as gold, they stand upon the sea, sounding their harps to the song of the victory they have achieved over the kingdoms and empires of the world.

The saints in the execution of judgment in the approaching "hour of judgment," are also typified by the sixty pillars of brass, pertaining to the court of the tabernacle—Exod. 27:9–17. This dwelling in Cant. 3:7, "is styled "His litter which is for Solomon." It is seen "ascending out of the wilderness as pillars of smoke." The Bride asks "Who is this?" Her attendants reply that it is "His litter which is for Solomon himself. Sixty valiant men surround it, the stoutest heroes of Israel; every one of them grasping a sword, being expert in war; the Commander his sword upon his thigh without fear in nights." This scene is introduced in Rev. 19:14. Here the Commander and his sixty heroes, or brazen pillars, are in battle array, and prepared to smite the nations, and to tread the winepress, without fear or apprehension of defeat.

In Exod. 24:4, the Twelve Tribes of Israel are typified by twelve pillars surrounding the altar. Jeremiah was made "a fortified city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land." This represented an antagonism between him and the state; but as he was likened to iron and brass, he was thereby shown to be unconquerable. It is therefore added, "and they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee, for I am with thee, saith Yahweh, to deliver thee"—ch. 1:18, 19. James, Peter and John were also pillars in the hedraïoma, being with the rest, as the twelve pillars of Moses around the altar, and the future rulers of the pillar-tribes—Gal. 2:9; Matt. 19:28. From these premises, then, we perceive quite an array of pillars pertaining to the house, or kingdom, of Elohim. They are Wisdom's pillars. They are being "hewn out." The work of hewing is not yet complete; but when the work is finished, and the pillars are all set up, or established, in their proper places, they will then constitute "her Seven Pillars." It will then be said that "Wisdom hath builded her house, and she hath hewn out her seven pillars"—Prov. 9:1. The wisdom that was with Yahweh "before the earth was;" and called by John "the Word that was Deity." Wisdom's house is the house of the Deity, who is "the builder of all things," commonly styled "the kingdom of God." Those who are to possess this are the "pillars of the earth," which in Ps. 75:4, the Spirit in Asaph says, "I have established." This testimony is worthy of particular attention in connection with the promise to the Philadelphians. "When I take the congregation I, by righteous ones, מִיִּשְׂרָאֵל maisharim, will judge. The earth and all its inhabitants are dissolved; I have fixed its pillars." In this we are pointed to the time when "the Great Congregation" of Israel, consisting of its Twelve Pillars, shall be taken possession of by the Deity, who says, he will judge "by righteous ones;" that is, by Messiah and his Brethren, the Saints, who then constitute the Deity in corporeal manifestation—"pillars in the Temple of my Deity." The idea of the Deity ruling the habitable in or by others was announced by Paul to the Athenian Areopagus. He called upon the members of this body to abandon the idols and embrace the true Deity "because He had appointed a Day (of a thousand years) in which he will rule the habitable in justice in a man whom he hath ordained, having offered assurance to all, having raised him from among the dead." Deity in Man the future ruler of the nations; and that man the Spirit-Man of Multitude, symbolized in Rev. 1:13. This is a grand idea—a multitudinous Spirit-Man, every individual member of which will have been either raised from among the dead like Jesus; or transformed, like Enoch and Elijah. This is the "One Body the Ecclesia," which is the pillar-house of Elohim; the Christ. This is the Seed of Abraham, or the Christ, that rules the world for a thousand years—a Christ, or Anointed Body, consisting of Jesus and the Saints, every one of whom is "a pillar;" and collectively, "the temple of Deity” from which “he shall not at all go away out more.”

But before this post-resurrectional state can be attained, “the earth and all its inhabitants” must be “dissolved.” Its constitution, as symbolized by the beasts of Daniel and John, must be abolished. This is the work of Jachin and Boaz in the Porch, which, as we have seen, typify omnipotence in the saints in the execution of judgment. When they shall have become “victors,” they will pass from the brazen into the golden state. They will then be fixed, or established, as the golden pillars of the earth under its millennial constitution. Once a pillar in the house of wisdom in the golden state, he will “not at all go away out more.” To perceive the force of these words we must remember that “the Temple of Deity” exists in two states—the present, and the future. Paul, addressing the saints in Corinth, who were as we are, of the present, or flesh and blood, state, says to them, “Ye are a building of Deity—a temple of Deity, and the spirit of the Deity dwells in you.” But they have all “gone away out” of “the tabernacle in which they groaned being burdened”—2 Cor. 5:4: “the earthly house of the tabernacle,” formerly the temple of Deity in Corinth, is all “dissolved;” and its constituents are all sleeping in the dust of the earth unconscious of every thing. There they lie awaiting the action of the power which shall raise them from the dead; and constitute them “a building, a house not made with hands, an AION-HOUSE in the heavens.” Then they shall become pillars in this house where they will continue fixed. Death will affect them no more, and consequently, being then immortal they will “not at all go away out more”—exo ou me exelthe eti.

8. My New Name.

THE DEITY speaking of “the Victor” says, “I will make him a pillar in the temple of my Deity * * * I will write upon him the NAME of my Deity, and the Name of the City of my Deity, the New Jerusalem, which descendeth out of the heaven from my Deity, even my New Name.” In this, the temple, name, and city are all affirmed of “My Deity.” The reason of this is because of the principle laid down in the words eis theos ho pater este, ex ou ta panta, kai emeis eis auton “there is One Deity the Father out of whom are all things, and we for him.” Does, then, the Deity desire a temple, a Name, or a city upon the earth? Doth he desire all these things? Then “out of” himself they must all proceed; for He is “the Father,” or fountain and origin of all existences. When, therefore, he speaks of a temple, name, and city elaborated out of his spirit, He styles them emanations “of my Deity;” as if he were to say, the temple, name, and city are emanations from, and manifestations of, my divine power, and glory. I, the Father, desire to dwell among men; but I will not dwell in a temple or house built by men; I will dwell in a habitation every stone and pillar of which shall be Deity in immortal flesh. Such is Paul’s teaching in 2 Cor. 6:16, saying, “Ye are a temple of a living Deity, as the Deity hath said, “I will dwell in them and will walk, and will be of them Deity;” and this temple of Deity in all its parts shall be “swallowed up of life”—2 Epist. 5:4—a temple of everliving stones.

But the manifestation of the Deity is not merely for habitation purposes, but for glory and dominion. This is indicated by “the Name,” and “the Name of the City,” or “New Name.” Thus it is written in Psal. 79:9, “Help us, O Elohim of our salvation, in the matter of the Glory of the Name, and deliver us: and cover over our sins for the purpose of thy Name.” Moses styles it “the glorious and fearful Name, Yahweh Elohekhah”—Deut. 28:58; concerning which David says in Psal. 72:19, “Blessed by Yahweh Elohim, the Elohim of Israel * * * and blessed be the Name of his Glory for Olahm; yea, all the earth shall be filled with his glory.”

The glory of the Deity is intellectual, moral, and physical, all of which is covered by his name, which expresses what he really is. Thus “His name is Jealous;” that is, “He is jealous;” “His name is holy;” that is, “he is holy;” and “His name is Yahweh Tzavaoth;” that is, He who spoke to Jeremiah is He who shall be of armies, which is the meaning of the Name. Thus, “the Name of the Deity” in scripture signifies every thing that He is as revealed therein. When Moses said, “I beseech thee, show me thy glory?”—it was replied, “I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim Yahweh before thee by Name. When we read the proclamation, we therefore read the name or character, of the Deity—Exod. 34:6. He knows all things, and there is nothing too hard for him to do. This is what he is abstractly and essentially. As he is, so he has always been from everlasting, and will be without end.

But will he be thus abstract forever? This is the question, and one which can only be answered from the scriptures. This answer is in the negative, and finds a very pointed illustration in Jer. 13:11. In the parable of the girdle buried by Euphrates, the Spirit says, “For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel and the whole house of Judah, saith Yahweh; that they might be unto me for a people, and FOR A NAME, and for a praise, and for a glory; but they would not hear.” Now the argument contained in this testimony is, that if Israel and Judah had hearkened to Yahweh, they would have been to him “for a Name.” But they would not hear; so they became like the girdle when dug up—a name good for nothing. In consequence of this national worthlessness, Isaiah predicted, that “Adonai Yahweh should slay them, and for his servants proclaim another name; that he who blesseth himself in the earth shall bless himself in Elohim of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by Elohim of truth; because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes”—Isai. 65:15.

Here we have the idea presented of the whole Hebrew nation being a name of the Deity. But through the iniquity and falsehood of the tribes the idea was not perfected. The development of the idea was placed in abeyance. He had brought them out of Egypt under Moses “to make for himself a Name of Olahm,” he led them as a horse in the wilderness, “to make himself a Name of Honor,” and to no other people was the name proclaimed: but, although they were called gods, and all of them Sons of the Most High, yet they were not “Elohim of truth,” therefore the Spirit in David said, “Surely as Adam ye shall die; and as one of the princes ye shall fall,” but to his faithful and truth-loving servants, he saith, “Arise, O Elohim, judge the earth; for thou shalt inherit among all the nations”—Ps. 82:6; Isai. 63:12–19.

But though Israel and Judah under the law judged themselves unworthy of having the Name of the Deity written upon them, Yahweh did not abandon his purpose. “Behold, saith he, I will bring Jerusalem health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them abundance of peace and truth. And I will cause the captivity of Judah, and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them as at the first,”—Jer. 33:7. In performing this work he also says, “I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and I will be to them for Elohim, and they shall be to me for a people. * * * And they shall all know me from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith Yahweh; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more”—ch. 31:33, 34.

When this is accomplished, they will be a truthful and righteous nation, and filled with the spirit as the apostles were of old. Thus anointed, they will be intelligent and wise, and the mightiest of the nations of the earth. The Hebrew nation has never attained to so high a position as this yet; nevertheless, it is the destiny that awaits their repentance, and acknowledgment of Jesus Anointed, as their Lord and King.

But “another name” was to be proclaimed to Israel and Judah than any they were acquainted with in the days of Isaiah and Jeremiah. These both prophesied concerning it. The former says of the child born and son given, “He shall call his name Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty Power, Father of Futurity, Prince of Peace * * * upon the throne of David:” and the latter says of him, “the Great, the Mighty Power, Yahweh of armies, his Name”—ch. 32:18; and in chap. 23:5, says furthermore concerning it, “Behold, the days come, saith Yahweh, that I will cause to rise up unto David a righteous branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and he shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this his Name which he shall call him, Yahweh-tzidkainu—He shall be our righteousness.”

This is certainly a name of glory, honor, power, dominion, wisdom, and holiness. It is the name for the Olahm emanating from Deity; who shall bear it? Shall it be borne wholly and solely by Jesus; or shall a multitude share it with him? We, who have confessed that he is Lord to the glory of the Divine Father, rejoice that he hath already received it in part, which is an earnest of the whole. The name of the Deity hath been written upon him; for he hath received a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow: the name of the New Jerusalem, which is his new name, has also been inscribed upon him; for he is the glory, the light, the wall, and the temple thereof. The gospel of the kingdom was preached to Israel and the nations, that by faith in it a people might be separated from them for this name. All who accept it are baptized into this name and for it. All such are in this name, and anxiously looking forward to the time when the “New Name of the Deity” will be written upon them by the resurrection-power of the Father. What Jesus now is they will become; for they are joint-heirs with him of all he inherits. He is Deity manifested in flesh; and so when those who are now in the name shall rise from among the dead, and put on incorruption, they also will be the Deity manifested in immortal flesh—the “New Name” of glory, honor, incorruptibility, life, and power, will be written or engraved into their new nature—incarnate focalizations of spirit-emanation from the substance of the Eternal Father. “I Yahweh, will be to Israel and Judah for Elohim.” The resurrected saints are these Elohim, who arise to judge the earth; and to rule Israel when they become a righteous and truth-loving people. They are the Elohim of Truth—elohaiamen—in whom Israelites will bless themselves in the earth; to whom—that is, to Israel and their Elohim—the name of Israel, under the law and to this present, comparable to Jeremiah’s good-for-nothing girdle, will be a by-word and a curse.

9. The Name of the City Written.

To write the Name of the City of the Deity upon one already inscribed with the Name of the Deity, is indicative of all such constituting a Body Politic—a Divine Municipality. It is called “New Jerusalem” in contradistinction to the Old Jerusalem under the Mosaic constitution, “in bondage with her children.” The latter was the mother of those whose name was good for nothing, but the former is the mother of all who believe the promises concerning the glorious things spoken of her approaching future. At present she is barren and desolate, having no children, nevertheless, this same shall break forth and cry, and become he ano Ierousalem, the higher Jerusalem, “the free city,” which is the mother city, or metropolis, of the kingdom and dominion of the Millennial Aion. Jerusalem under Solomon the Second will be “higher,” or more exalted, than Jerusalem under Solomon the First, because the Municipality—THE INCORPORATE DEITY—will be her glory. In the time of Solomon her state and municipal corporations were mortal men, and the glory of the Deity was confined to the temple between the cherubim; but in the coming reign, the administration from the King to the least in the kingdom, will be immortal and greater than all that are born of women, and of such excellency in the estimation of Deity as to be compared to “gold and precious stones”—Gal. 4: Rev. 21.

But in the writing before us, it is said to “descend out of the heaven from the Deity.” The reason of this is, because He in whom the fulness dwells is there, and the city will not be manifested until he descends. The Holy City consisting of the saints, is at present trodden under foot of the Gentiles, and will so continue to be until the end of the forty and two months of day-years—1260 years. Its fortunes are parallel with those of the city under the Turks, and the tribes scattered abroad. The Holy City lies in the dust, with only here and there a stone monumental of its ruin. But when power descends from the heaven with Jesus, he will by that power refashion the ruins, and bring them forth for a Name and City of his Deity—a name and city composed of the Sons and Daughters of Omnipotence. Thus the city is “out of the Deity,” for it can have no existence apart from his wisdom and power. The ashes of its dead would never be refashioned spontaneously. If this were possible, the city might be said to ascend from the dust; but this is not possible, therefore the city is represented apocalyptically, as “descending out of the heaven from the Deity,” to indicate the direction from which the formative energy is derived, and to connect the operation with the appearing of Jesus Christ. But, in relation to the New Jerusalem, I shall defer the further consideration thereof until I come to consider John’s vision of its descent in Apoc. 21.

10. A Clerical Exposition.

I shall conclude this exposition of the epistle to the Angel-Presbytery at Philadelphia, by reproducing what the Church of England Bishop Newton has said upon the subject. It will afford the reader a specimen of high orthodox apocalyptic interpretation, of which the humblest among the saints would be thoroughly ashamed.

“Philadelphia, so called,” says he, “from Attalus Philadelphus its builder, is distant from Sardis about twenty-seven miles to the southeast. It is called by the Turks Allah Shah, or the beautiful city, on account of its delightful situation, standing on the declivity of the mountain Tmolus, and having a most pleasant prospect on the plains beneath, well furnished with divers villages, and watered by the river Pactolus. It still retains the form of a city with something of trade to invite the people to it, being the road of the Persian caravans. Here is little of antiquity remaining besides the ruins of a church dedicated to St. John, which is now made a dunghill to receive the offal of dead beasts. However, God hath been pleased to preserve some in this place to make confession of the Christian faith, there being above two hundred houses of christians, and four churches, whereof the chief is dedicated to Panagia, or the Holy Virgin, the other to St. George, who is of great fame among the oriental christians, the third to St. Theodore, and the fourth to St. Taxiarchus, as St. Michael the archangel is called by the Greeks. Next to Smyrna, this city hath the greatest number of christians, and Christ hath promised a more particular protection to it. See Rev. 3:8, 9, 10. Than which, as Dr. Spon saith, what could be said more formally to foretell the coming of the Turks, the open enemies of christianity, who seem to be sent on purpose for the punishment of our crimes, and to distinguish the faithful from the false christians, who pretend to be so, and are not?”

This is all the bishop has to say in exposition of the letter before us; and his remarks upon all the other letters are rapid and shallow as the specimen here given. He evidently knew more of geography and archaeology, than of the christian faith; and evinces a very low conception of the divine character in supposing a special preservation of the worshippers of the Virgin and the saints “to make a profession,” which makes the name of christianity a stench in the nostrils of the followers of Mohammed, who justly regard them as a set of contemptible idolaters.

SECTION 3.

TO THE ANGEL OF THE ECCLESIA OF THE LAODICEANS.

14. Also to the angel of the ecclesia of Laodiceans write: These things saith the Amen, the Witness faithful and true, the Beginning of the creation of the Deity: 15. I have known thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot. Would that thou wast cold or hot!

16. Thus because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I am about, to vomit thee out of my mouth.

17. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and have abounded in wealth, and have need of nothing, and hast not known that thou art the wretched, and pitiable, and poor, and blind, and naked one.

18. I counsel thee to buy from me gold which has been refined by fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white garments, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness may not be apparent; and anoint thine eyes with salve, that thou mayest see.
19. Whomsoever I love I discipline and admonish; be zealous, therefore, and change.
20. Behold, I have stood at the door, and I knock: if any one may hear my voice, and open the door, I will enter in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.
21. The victor, I will give to him to sit with me on my throne, as I also vanquish and sit with my Fattier on his throne.
22. He that hath an ear let him hearken to what the Spirit saith to the ecclesias.

1. Typography of Laodicea.

Laodicea, the city of the seventh ecclesia addressed by the Spirit, lay south of Philadelphia, in the way to return to Ephesus, so that it will be found, upon an inspection of the map of Asia Minor, that the seven ecclesias, laid in a kind of circular form, so that the natural progress was from Ephesus to Smyrna, from Smyrna to Pergamos, from Pergamos to Thyatira, from Thyatira to Sardis, from Sardis to Philadelphia, from Philadelphia to Laodicea, and from Laodicea round to Ephesus again, (from which it was distant about forty-two miles south,) which is the method and order the Spirit hath observed in addressing them. That there was a flourishing association of believers at Laodicea in the first century, is evident from Paul's letter to the Colossians. In ch. 4:15, he exhorts them to "salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, even Nymphas and the ecclesia which is in his house." He appears also to have written especially to the Laodiceans, for he tells the Colossians to read the epistle obtainable from them.

The ruins of the city shew it to have been very large, situate in a volcanic region upon seven hills, and encompassing a large space of ground. Some notion may be formed of its former greatness and glory from three theatres and a circus which are remaining, one of which is very fine, as it was capable of containing above thirty thousand men, into whose area they descended by fifty steps. Laodicea is now called EskiHissar, or the old castle. In its apostasy, the ecclesia in this city became the metropolitan, or Mother Church, of sixteen bishopricks, yet it is now desolate, and not so much as inhabited by shepherds, but is become a habitation only for wolves, foxes, and jackals, a den of dragons, snakes, and vipers. Thus we have in the ecclesia of the Laodiceans in the fulness of its apostasy, a Mother of Harlots sitting upon seven hills; and because of its spiritual misery, poverty, blindness, and nakedness, reduced, with the city of its habitation, to utter desolation and irrecoverable ruin, and its site become the den of ferocious beasts, and the hiding place of reptile abominations.

Laodicea was long an inconsiderable place, but it increased towards the time of Augustus Caesar. The fertility of the soil, and the prosperous circumstances of some of its citizens, raised it to greatness. Hiero, who adorned it with many offerings, bequeathed to the people more than two thousand talents; and though an inland town, it grew to be more potent than the cities on the coast, and became one of the largest towns in Phrygia, as its present ruins prove.

Chandler, in his "Travels," p. 25, says, that "Laodicea was often damaged by earthquakes, and restored by its own opulence, or by the munificence of the Roman emperors. These resources failed, and the city, it is probable, became early a scene of ruin. About the year 1097 it was possessed by the Turks, and submitted to Ducas, general of the emperor Alexis. In 1120, the Turks sacked some of the cities of Phrygia by the Meander, but were defeated by the emperor John Comnenus, who took Laodicea, and repaired and built anew the walls. About 1161, it was again unfortified. Many of the inhabitants were then killed with their bishop, or carried with their cattle into captivity by the Turkish sultan. In 1190, the German emperor Frederick Barbarossa, going by Laodicea with his army toward Syria, on a crusade, was received so kindly, that he prayed on his knees for the prosperity of the people—which prayer, as the future proves, was of no avail in heaven; for about 1196, this region with Caria was dreadfully ravaged by the Turks. The sultan, on the invasion of the Tartars in 1255, gave Laodicea to the Romans, but they were unable to defend it, and it soon returned to the Turks. We saw no traces of houses, churches, or mosques. All was silence and solitude. Several strings of camels passed eastward of the hill; but a fox which we first discovered by the ears peeping over a brow, was the only inhabitant of Laodicea.”

2. The Amen.

This seventh epistle, like the others, is from the Spirit, who styles himself “The Amen, the Witness faithful and true, and the Beginning of the creation of the Deity.” We have already expounded the title indicated by “the Amen” on page 187. Jesus, by the transforming energy of the Father-Deity, became Spirit, and is now “the Lord the Spirit.” Speaking some sixty years and upwards after the event of transformation, he said to John in Patmos, “I am the First and the Last, and the Living One; and I have been dead, and behold I am living for the Aions of the Aions, AMEN.” He was the individual Amen—the incarnation of faithfulness, and therefore “the Witness faithful and true”—the Amen-Witness; “for,” saith Paul, in 2 Cor. 1:19, “the Son of the Deity, Jesus Anointed, who was preached among you through us, through me, Sylvanus, and Timothy, he was not yea and nay, but in him was yea: for all the promises of Deity in him are the yea, and in him the Amen, to the Deity with glory through us.” All the promises of the Deity in Jesus are the Amen. This is the definition of the individual Amen contained in this passage from Paul. Now, if only some promises were fulfilled in Jesus, such as those pertaining to the sufferings of the Anointed One; and some others, such as those relating to the good things promised to Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem, and the glory consequent thereon, are never fulfilled in and through him, then, instead of Jesus being “the Amen,” he would be “the yea and the nay;” and if the promises concerning the sufferings and glory are not at all fulfilled in him, then he would be to ou “the Nay.” But some have been fulfilled in him, and all the rest of the promises will yet be accomplished in him, and therefore he is to nai, “the yea,” and to Amen, “the Amen,” or the truth and faithfulness itself. When, therefore, the glorified Jesus says to the Star-Angel Presbytery of the ecclesia of the Laodiceans, and through it to all that generation of ecclesias, and to us of these later times in fellowship with them through belief of the same things they received—when He says, he is “the Amen,” it is equivalent to saying, that all the promises not fulfilled in his first coming, will assuredly be accomplished when he comes again; and that this advent with glory is as certain as the existence of the Deity, which none but a fool would call in question. All the promises fulfilled in and through Jesus are the Amen. All who do not recognize this, do not accept him as “the Amen,” and therefore in effect charge the Deity with unfaithfulness; for apart from Jesus Anointed they will never be performed. “I am the truth,” said Jesus; that is, all the truth spoken by the Eternal Spirit received incarnate fulfilment in, by, and through him; and all this “to the Deity with glory”—to the manifestation of the Deity in his Sons with glory, styled by Paul elsewhere, “the manifestation of the Sons of the Deity,” which is the full development of the great mystery of godliness, “Deity manifested in flesh.”

3. The Witness Faithful and True.

As all the promises are to be fulfilled in and through Jesus Anointed, according to the testimony he gave in the day of his weakness, he is endorsed also as “the Witness faithful and true.” He was “the Witness” by eminence. When standing at Pilate’s bar, he said, in answer to Pilate’s question, “Art thou King then?” “Thou sayest, for I am King. I have been born for this; and I came into the world for this, that I might bear witness to the truth. Every one being of the truth, hearkeneth to my voice.” He bore this witness before the people, and at the bar of Caiaphas as well. Before these he testified, that he was the Anointed One, the Son of the Deity;” and that his enemies should “hereafter see the Son of Man sitting in right places of the Power, and coming upon the clouds of the heaven”—Matt. 26:64. But, as he told Nicodemus, “We, (that is, the Father and Himself,) speak what we do know, and testify what we have seen; and ye receive not our witness.” His contemporaries in the flesh rejected him as a false witness; for John the immerser speaking of him, says, “What he hath seen and heard that he testifieth, and no man receiveth his testimony.” There were but few exceptions to this, yet sufficient of them to be noted, for John also said, “He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true. For he whom the Deity hath sent speaketh the words of the Deity”—John 3:32. These words were set forth in “the Gospel of the Kingdom of the Deity,” which Jesus declared he was sent to preach—Luke 4:13, 19, 43; and if it might then be said that “no man received his testimony,” it might with great propriety be said so now, and for the same reason, because the pious and others seek honor one of another, and “not the honor which cometh from the Deity only.”

Jesus admitted, that “if he bore witness of himself his witness was not true.” This was incontrovertible. The Mosaic law, under which Jesus lived, required two or three witnesses for the establishment of truth, so that if Jesus could have adduced no other evidence than his own, the people of Judah would have been guiltless in rejecting his claims to the Messiahship, and in repudiating the gospel of the kingdom to be manifested through him. No man of himself can demonstrate his own parentage. Jesus claimed to be the Son of the Deity, a claim which could only be established, in view of the natural untruthfulness of humanity, and the frailty of woman, by the Deity himself. This was publicly and notably done before the multitude on Jordan’s banks, when the Spirit of the Deity descended upon Jesus in the form of a dove, and the voice came from the excellent glory in the heaven, saying, “This is my Son the Beloved, with whom I am well pleased.” Thus the Father attested him; and afterwards, John the immerser, who heard and saw the wonder; and all the apostles who were present, and especially Peter, James, and John, who afterwards, in the presence of Jesus, Moses, and Elijah, heard the same declaration on the mount, with the addition of the words, “HEAR YE HIM!”

Here, then, were John the baptizer, “a burning and a shining light;” “the Father himself;” the scriptures of the prophets; the multitude at his baptism; the apostles; and the sanction of the heavenly host which announced his birth to the shepherds; to say nothing of Joseph, Mary, and their immediate kin, who might be suspected of false testimony from interested motives—all testifying that he was “a witness faithful and true.” In the salutation in ch. 1:5, John introduces this characteristic of Jesus: “Grace,” says he, “unto you, and peace * * * from Jesus Anointed, the Faithful Witness.” There has been none upon earth more faithful than he; therefore, he is preeminently the faithful one—faithful to the truth, and to him that sent him; “faithful as a Son over his own house”—Heb. 3:6; faithful unto death, as an example for all in him to follow. He styles himself “faithful and true” because his sayings are such. He testifies the truth in this apocalypse. The Lord God, or Adonai Yahweh, of the holy prophets—that is, Jesus Anointed—sent his messenger, to show unto his servants, through John, the things which must be shortly done: “and he said unto me,” saith John, “these sayings are faithful and true”—ch. 22:6. In ch. 19:11, the word “witness” is dropped, and the Lord the Spirit, who speaks to the Laodiceans, is styled “the Faithful and True, who judges and makes war in righteousness.” He does not come, then, as a witness, but to perform all the things which have been promised from of old—to destroy the Apostasy, and to bless all nations in Abraham and his Seed.

4. The Beginning of the Creation of the Deity.

The third designation by which the Spirit characterizes himself, in his address to the ecclesia of the Laodiceans, is, that he is “the Beginning of the creation of the Deity”—

Now, this phrase might be supposed to mean that Jesus, and Jesus Anointed, were the beginning of the creation of which Moses treats in Genesis; or that they were the chief of that creation. But these suppositions cannot be admitted; and for the sufficient reason that Jesus unanointed, or Jesus Anointed, had no existence in the era of the Adamic creation. The anointing Spirit existed then, and was the creating energy; but at the same time an uncreated agent, and therefore not the first of a creation. In the passage before us the Lord the Spirit, or Jesus Anointed, refers to another creation—to a NEW CREATION. He is the beginning of that new creation of the Deity; even of that referred to in Rev. 21:5, in which Jesus Anointed says, “Behold I make all things new.” When all things are made new there will be a new creation upon the earth, adapted in all its elements to the new population prepared in the previous seven thousands of years to inhabit it. Jesus Anointed is the creator of this new creation; and himself also the first element of it that has been created without human intervention. Enoch, Moses, and Elijah were glorified men before his creation; but they were not a direct creation of the Deity; for their paternity was human. Jesus had no human father; but was created by the Spirit as independently of the will of the flesh as Adam, the Beginning of the Animal Creation of the Deity, was before him.

It is revealed that the Eternal Spirit will create from the dust, and establish upon the earth, a population, every individual of which shall be like Jesus is now—glorious, incorruptible of body, and deathless; the Deity bodily manifested in each of them—Rev. 21:3, 4; and that such a constitution and order of things will obtain in relation to them, as will be suitable to pure and immortal beings—to a world of gods, or elohim. This order, or kosmos, is styled “a New Heaven and New Earth”—a New Government and New People; a phrase which indicates that, although all men then upon the earth are immortal and free from all evils of the present state, yet are not all of equal rank and authority; and that government is designed for the purpose of affording scope for a diversity of honors, that he who has distinguished himself more than his followers in the cause of truth and righteousness in the previous animal existence, may be a more distinguished and brilliant star in the firmament “beyond” the Millennial Aions. This principle of diversity obtained in the kingdom of the Deity when David and Solomon occupied the throne of Yahweh in Jerusalem. Though all were Israelites and a holy people, all were not equal in rank and authority. The principle also obtains in all the kingdoms of the world; all Englishmen are not dukes and princes; nor are all noblemen of equal rank, influence, and wealth, but the diversity in their original patents of nobility is predicated upon what the Devil, who promotes them, considers their merits in his service. No Englishman can become a member of the royal family who is not born such. It is an hereditary distinction, and eminently exclusive. So in respect of the New Government of the Post-millennial Aion, it will, we believe, be restricted to the Saints raised and transformed at the advent of the Amen. Jesus and the Saints anointed will rule the nations as kings and priests during the Millennium; at the end of which the priesthood will be abolished, but not the royalty. This will continue for ever, in an illimitable sense. But the Millennial Earth is to be abolished as well as the priesthood; not the globe, or planet, called Earth, but the world of nations, consisting of mortal men, over which Jesus and his glorified brethren reign during the thousand years. “Though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee, O Israel”—Jer. 30:11. All non-Israelitish nations are to be abolished. That is, there will be no national diversities in the post-millennial ages. All will be righteous, deathless, and citizens of Israel’s Commonwealth, which will continue eternally under a new constitution. There will then be no English, French, Spaniards, Italians, and such like; but all will be Israelites by the adoption or redemption from death, or the mortal state.

The Millennial Earth will then be purged of all sinful elements, and the remnant transformed; so that it will be essentially “a New Earth,” or population, subordinate to Jesus and the Saints, who will constitute the luminaires of the “New Heaven,” as they will have done of the heaven become old, and called by John “the former heaven.” The position of these is fixed; they are the sun and fixed stars both of the Aions of the Aions, and Beyond. “They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the Stars for the Olahm and Beyond”—Dan. 12:3. Here is a marked difference, the generality of the saved being as “the brightness of the firmament;” but those who have distinguished themselves in the service of the truth, stand out from the diffused brightness as brilliant particular stars. But one star differs from another in glory in the celestial arch; so will it be in the New Heavens of the Olahm and Beyond—וְלֹא יָעֵד]

. There are places on the right hand and on the left in the glory “for whom it is prepared;” and there is a place for the Sun of Righteousness; and for the Twelve on the tribal thrones of the kingdom; and many situations in the royal house for the saved in general. A place for every one, and for every one a place; but each for the place as appointed. The apostles will certainly shine as a bright constellation, which can be constituted of no other stars than themselves—a constellation of twelve bright orbs, each one upon a throne of Israel—the thrones of the house of David. Yet is the least in the kingdom of the heavens greater than the greatest of all the prophets unglorified; so that while there is greatness for all, there will exist the least among the great.

Now this new creation, wonderful in its development and consummation began with the formation of a babe in the womb of the Handmaid of Yah; and ends with the cessation of “every curse”—Rev. 22:3. The power of the Deity overshadowed the daughter of Heli, and in the set time was born Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews. Here was a creation of the Deity; but it was only the “beginning of the creation” hereafter to be effected by the same power. When created and anointed, this new creation was Eternal Power manifest in flesh; and when resurrected and glorified, that flesh was transformed into Spirit, or Deity—a substantial corporeal entity, called by Paul a “Quickening Spirit,” and “the Lord the Spirit.” Hence, viewing him thus, and not as a body of death lying in a sepulchre, the apostle says of him, “who is an image of the invisible Deity, first-born of all creation” (pases ktiseos). He then gives the reason why this first-born image of the Deity is preeminent over all; “because,” saith he, “were created by him the all things; the things in the heavens and the things upon the earth, the things seen and the things unseen, whether thrones, or lordships, or principalities, or authorities; the all things have been created through him and for him; and he is before all things, and the all things by him hold together; And he is the Head of the Body, the ecclesia, who is the beginning, first-born from among the dead, that among all he might become preeminent; for in him it pleased that all the fullness should dwell”—Col. 1:15–19. Compare this with Gen. 1:2, where the creation of the material world is attributed to Spirit of Elohim—רוּחַ אֱלֹהִים

5. “I Know thy Works.”

After the Spirit’s introduction of himself by stating certain of his characteristics having some special adaptation to the Star-Angel Presbytery addressed, he forthwith declares to each of the seven, “I have known thy works”—oida ta erga sou; and then proceeds to point them out, and to approve or reprobate them, as the case may be. None of them seem to have been in so disgusting a state as this of the Laodiceans. The Ephesian was remarkable for labor, patience, and intolerance of evil doers; though they had some “liars” among them who said they were apostles, but were not. The Smyranean was tribulated, poor in this world, but rich in faith; but not without blasphemers of the synagogue of the Satan. The Pergamian held fast the name, and had not denied the faith; yet had in it the holders of Balaam’s teaching and that of the Nikolaitans. The Thyatiran was noted for love, service, faith, patience, and works more abundant than in their beginning; yet they tolerated teachers of the Jezebel type. The Sardian was dead, and the things pertaining to it ready to die; because their works were not perfect before the Deity. The Philadelphian had a little strength, had kept the word, and had not denied the name. All these had something to work upon by which the evils among them might be corrected; for even Sardis is exhorted to “strengthen the things that remain.” But in regard to the Laodicean Star-Angel Presbytery it appears to have been in such a perfectly self-satisfied condition—in so thoroughly lukewarm a condition—that there was no possibility apparent of restoring it to health. There is no redeeming excellence cited in its favor. It was lukewarm. In an anti-amen state, unfaithful and untrue; and without zeal for the manifestation of the new creation, and therefore “removed from the hope of the gospel.”

Being destitute of these qualities of the true believer, they delighted in the things that perish. Like professors of the nineteenth century, they said that they had need of nothing. They were rich in the wealth of the world, and high in favor with the powers that be. Being rich, they were influential in the state; and being lukewarm, they were not troublesome in bearing witness for the truth against the superstitions of the world. Hence, the world ceased to persecute them, because the world loves its own, and they had become the world’s, in ceasing to testify against it. But, though they regarded themselves so complacently, the Lord the Spirit, who seeth not as man seeth, contemplated them with great nausea and disgust. He told them that they were ignorant of their true condition; as ignorant of it as our contemporaries are of theirs. “Thou knowest not,” says he, “that thou art the wretched, and pitiable, and poor, and blind, and naked one.” They were “wretched,” being under condemnation; they were “pitiable,” being really wretched while they deemed themselves in bliss; they were “poor,” and “blind,” being weak in faith and alienated from the life of the Deity through the ignorance that was in them; and they were “naked,” being in their sins.

6. “I am about to vomit thee out of my Mouth.”

What was to be done with a generation of such apostates from the faith and hope of the gospel? Were the gifts of the Spirit to be continued with them, by which they had been as in the mouth of the Spirit speaking to the world for the conversion of sinners; and for the building themselves up in the knowledge of the Son of the Deity? Should the light of the Spirit still burn in the lampstand, and be regarded with indifference or as useless, to so rich and prosperous a community of christians, as they esteemed themselves? The sun may shine, but the blind do not see him; so anointing spirit which taught them all things (1 Jno. 2:27) was in their lampstand, but they were so deluded by traditions that they could not discern it. Even as it is now. The Bible which teacheth all things necessary for wisdom and salvation is in all “the churches,” and read from the pulpits; but so perverted is the public mind by clerical theology, that when the truth is read, the people cannot discern its import. The Angel of the ecclesia of Laodiceans was emphatically “the wretched, pitiable, poor, blind, and naked one.” They were in spirit, as was Balaam, who strove to prophesy against Israel for the wages of unrighteousness which he loved. They had been baptized or immersed, “into the Name of the Holy Spirit,” and had received the gifts of the Spirit; but the first generation of the Angel-Presbytery had diminished; and men speaking perverse things to draw disciples after themselves had got in among them as “successors,” and by their teaching had created a lukewarmness towards the things of the name and faith of the Anointed Jesus. They had therefore become as the incompatible ingesta of an irritable and nauseated stomach. This was their relation to the Spirit in whom they were for the time. If they had been cold they would have been refreshing; for “as the cold of snow in the time of harvest, so is a faithful messenger (or angel) to them that send him; for he refresheth the soul of his masters”—Prov. 25:13. “Would,” saith the Spirit, “that thou wert cold!” for them, as it was a harvest time, the Father and the Son would have been refreshed in beholding their faithfulness. But they were not cold, in other words, they were not a faithful angel-presbytery. Neither were they hot. They had no zeal for the truth, therefore they did not speak it forth. “They needed nothing,” they said; they were rich, and had made their fortune. They were transformed into a hierarchy of clergymen, and had become more potent in Laodicea than the priests of the idol temples, which were closed for the want of worshippers. They were looked up to by the wealth and fashion of the city as the ambassadors of the Deity, and the inspired mediators between heaven and earth; and were respected and honored by the plaudits and largesses of the rich, in whom, as we have seen, Laodicea did greatly abound. The rich ministered to them abundantly in temporals, so that they had need of nothing;" and in return they ministered to them "smooth things" after the fashion of the ministrations of the intensely pious, respectable, sleek, and downy "ministers of grace," who now abound on every side, even of "The things that mount the rostrum with a skip,

And then skip down again; pronounce a text:
Cry hem! and reading what they never wrote,
Just thirty minutes, huddle up their work,
And with a well-bred whisper close the scene."—COWPER.

They said "they had need of nothing." Much is implied in these words when uttered by an eldership contemporary with an apostle. When "the gospel of the kingdom" first visited Laodicea in the first half, or middle, of the first century, its population was divided between the Jews and Pagans. The latter had become like the Papists of France and Italy in our time, worshippers from habit of the objects they despised; while the Jews were more zealous for mere human tradition than the righteousness of the law. Here, then, was a great work to be performed—the turning of these Jews and pagans from the Satan to the Deity, as manifested in the Anointed Jesus. So long as a minority remained to be converted, there was work to be done, and the party appointed to do it could not say "they had need of nothing," while their work remained unfinished. That work was never accomplished; for when it had progressed to a certain point, the christian body in Laodicea became "lukewarm;" they ceased to be "hot;" their meditation upon the word ceasing, the fire also ceased to burn; and they no longer spoke with their tongue the glorious and wonderful works of the Deity—Ps. 39:3. They had vanquished the temples and the synagogues in the argument; they had reduced them to silence, and had no longer in Laodicea an open enemy to contend with; the pressure from without was removed, and taking the lead in Laodicean society, as the clergy do now, with traditions to suit all comers, they were infected with the spirit of the world which hearkened to them, because of the compact which had been established by their unfaithfulness. By way of illustration, ask the divines who officiate in the odor of sanctity in the fashionable pulpits of New York City, London, and so forth, well paid, and pampered with all the luxuries of life, honored by a delighted world, arrayed, if not in purple, in the glossiest black, and fine linen, and splendidly lodged in elegantly furnished abodes—ask such if there is any thing they need? They believe they are the elect; the successors of the apostles, and "the ambassadors of Jesus Christ;" they say they are christians, and ministers of righteousness, and that their rich and prosperous flocks are "the Church of God," the very kingdom of heaven itself—what, then, can they possibly need? Do they desire a large attendance of the ill-clad poor in their gorgeous and pillared temples? Is it for the great unwashed, the bone and sinew of society, they have caused to be erected their "houses of God," tricked off with carpetry and plush? It is notorious, that "immortal souls" in the rough and sordid exterior of poverty, are not wanted in the fashionable "churches," the clerical synagogue of the Satan. Having, therefore, all they desire, the language of their condition is, "I am rich, and abound in wealth, and have need of nothing." They are perfectly satisfied with what exists, and are unwilling that it should be disturbed. They are surrounded by society in festering rottenness, and in profound ignorance of the prophets and apostles; but they do nothing beyond the pale of their own little respectabilities. True, a society may send hirelings to visit the dens of poverty, but they are needy adventurers, not the well to-do pastors of fashionable and wealthy flocks, who get a hom-missionary birth for a piece of bread. Such is the system originating in and worked out by Sin's Flesh, which was the same in the first century that it is in the nineteenth. Hence, when professors of christianity in these two centuries say, “we are rich, and abound in wealth, and have need of nothing,” it is because the same temporal and spiritual condition is characteristic of each.

This wretched, pitiable, poor, blind, and naked one of Laodicea, is regarded as being symbolically in the mouth of the Spirit. This must be admitted, or it will be altogether inconceivable how she could be “vomited out” of his mouth. As we have said, the Star-Angel Presbytery had been “immersed into the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit” upon the belief of the gospel of the kingdom, which entitled them to be addressed in the same language as their brethren in Thessalonica, whom Paul describes as “IN the Deity the Father, and IN the Lord Jesus Anointed”—1 Ep. 1:1. To be “in the Lord Jesus Anointed” was the same as being “in the Son, and the Holy Spirit,” for it required the Son and the Holy Spirit to constitute the Lord Jesus Anointed. The Laodicean Angel was therefore in the Lord Jesus Anointed, or in the Spirit; and there was no way in which they could be expelled, ejected, or vomited forth, but by the mouth of the Spirit. Now, if one man in his indignation say to another, “I vomit, or spue, you out of my mouth,” the saying imports, that he henceforth repudiates all association with him with extreme loathing. The Spirit did not say that he had done this, or there would have been no scope for counsel, discipline, and admonition. A community pretending to be christian, but in fact repudiated by the Spirit, has no communion with the Christ, is the subject of no discipline, and receives no admonition, or fatherly instruction. “Whom the Lord loves he chastens,” and where there is no chastening, as in the case of “the Names and Denominations” of “christendom,” professors are bastards, and not sons—Heb. 12:5–8. The Spirit said, “I am about—mello—to vomit thee out of my mouth, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot.” There is, however, no evidence that the gifts of the Spirit were withdrawn, and the light of the presbyterial lampstand extinguished, in the generation contemporary with the publication of the Apocalypse. It is possible that discipline and admonition operating upon some of them may have resulted in a change, and a renewed manifestation of zeal, to which they were exhorted by the Spirit; for if he had no people among them capable of being saved, the exhortation would have been entirely useless; “be zealous, therefore,” said he, “and change.”

7. The Counsel of the Spirit.

As long as an ecclesia is a called-out association, the Lord the Spirit waits to restore it from the lowest conceivable ebb of faith; so that if she of Laodicea had taken the warning of the ejection prepared for her in the future, she might have recovered, and not been spued out at all. It was to save her from this catastrophe that the Spirit counselled her to buy gold and garments of him, and to anoint her eyes with salve.

“Gold refined by fire” is the symbol of a tried faith. This appears from the comparison in 1 Pet. 1:7, where the faithful are said “for a season to be in heaviness through manifold persecutions; that the trial of their faith, being much more precious than of gold which perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Anointed.” The condition of which they boasted, in which they were rich and abounding in wealth, and needing nothing, could not develop faith of this character. A tried faith comes forth of tribulation, not of worldly prosperity, which is only calculated to pervert, weaken, and corrupt. The Spirit, therefore, counselled them to buy a tried faith, which could only be purchased in those days at the cost of “much tribulation,” which “worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed.” To become subject to the tribulation, they had only to “contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints,” which would put them into antagonism with the world without, and the lusts of the flesh within. They would not then be able to say that they had need of nothing, for they would most likely find themselves stripped of every thing, and reduced to an humble dependence on the goodness and bounty of God. To buy a tried faith, then, would be the fruit of zeal, and of a change of mind, and the cause of their justification, or investment with the “white garments” of righteousness.

But to arrive at this most desirable anti-Laodicean state, it was necessary that the eyes of their understandings be anointed with the unction of the Spirit, that they might perceive what, with all their piety and wealth, they were perfectly blind to. The Spirit’s eye-salve is the word of the testimony contained in the writings of the prophets and apostles. If they would work this into their eyes, “inoint” them well with it, they would be brought to see how wretched, pitiable, poor, blind, and naked they really were. They would discover that instead of having need of nothing, they were in need of every thing; and “needed that one teach them again the first principles of the oracles of the Deity; and had become such as had need of milk, not of strong meat.” Possessed of a tried faith, and invested with righteousness, with the gifts of the Spirit, they would have been rich indeed, and well clothed, and enlightened, and fit to appear before the Anointed Jesus with praise and honor and glory at his apocalypse; for God hath chosen, not the rich and increased in goods, who have need of nothing, with poverty of faith, but “he hath chosen the poor in this world, rich in faith, to be the HEIRS of that kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him”—James 2:5.

8. “I have stood at the Door, and I Knock.”

The door here referred to is evidently the ears collectively of those addressed. This appears from what follows, as, “If any one hear my voice and open the door, I will enter in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.” “Let Christ dwell in your hearts by faith,” says Paul. Now for Christ to enter in to dwell there, and consequently to banquet there, his voice, which is the truth, must first knock at, or sound, upon the ears of a man. If a man do not hearken to the truth, he keeps the door which leads to his heart, or understanding and affections, shut; and a faith-appreciated Christ cannot enter. The Greek sentence, which I have expressed in the translation, is idou, esteka epi ten thuran, kai krouo, “I have stood at the door, and I knock.” How long he had been standing there is left to inference; but in now sending this epistle to them through the apostle John, he knocked audibly. Some of them would probably not accept the epistle as genuine, especially as it was so little flattering to their vanity; but would give it the go by, and attribute it to some pretender to inspiration, as many do in our day, paying the Apocalypse little or no respect. Others, however, among them might discern in it the voice of the Spirit, as we do, and give heed to it. In so doing they would set diligently to work as poor, blind, and naked men, to recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, and not rest content “until,” by close study of the scriptures, “Christ be formed in them;” and when so formed, they would hold that heart-satisfying communion with him expressed in the words, “I will sup with him, and he with me.”

The topography of Laodicea, given on page 401, is a standing monument of the impenitence of this seventh Star-Angel. Had it gained the victory over the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, and maintained the gospel and its institutions in their apostolicity and purity, Laodicea would not now be a mere habitation for wolves, foxes, and jackals. The existing desolation was initiated because “they changed the truth of God into a lie;” turned the grace of God into lasciviousness, and denied the only Lord God, even the Lord Jesus Anointed. For this cause, “God sent upon them strong delusion,” that they should believe the lie they had invented; and which has been traditionally transmitted to our generation, and constitutes the “Christianity” in which the world delights—a christianity which is the glory of the Satan; but as nauseating to the true believer, and as provocative of emesis, as the Laodicean Angel, which was at length spued out of the mouth of the Anointed Jesus.

It is probable, however, that there was a remnant even in Laodicea; that all the members of the ecclesia did not share in the lukewarmness of the generation coeval with the Apocalypse. Some probably sorrowed over the faithlessness of the Eldership, and the declension of the generality. If they succeeded in maintaining their position as faithful witnesses of the name and faith of Jesus Anointed, till the ejection of the Angel from the Spirit's mouth, they would themselves become a distinct and separate party, characterized as "keeping the commandments of the Deity, and having the testimony of Jesus Anointed;" while the others who were spued out as an utter abomination, are known on the page of history as "THE CATHOLIC CHURCH," the Mother of Romish and Protestant Sectarianism—Rev. 12:7; 17:5.

9. The Promise to the Victor.

To the remnant who should "overcome the Great Red Dragon—that old Serpent, surnamed the Devil and the Satan—by the blood of the lamb, and by the world of their testimony, not loving their lives unto the death," (ch. 12:11, 9,) it is promised in this epistle that they shall become the joint occupants of the throne of Jesus Anointed; "I will give to the victor to sit with me in my throne." In the letter to the Thyatirans, the same class had been promised dominion over the broken and conquered nations; and in this they are told they shall reign with Christ; for to share in his throne is to reign with him.

Christ attains to dominion by conquest; so must all who share with him in his reign. This is expressed in the words, "as I also vanquish and sit with my Father in his throne." In the English Version, this reads, "even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." The Greek of this is, hos kago enikesa kai ekathisa meta tou patros mou en to throno autou. In this sentence the verbs enikesa and ekathisa are both of the aorist tense; that is, they express actions without fixing the time of the actions; for the word aorist signifies without boundaries, indeterminate, indefinite. In the translation I have rendered them by the indefinite present, which is always flowing. "I vanquish" is a simple fact, which, in the present tense, does not affirm that the action is complete. The action continues, it may be for a long or short time, until it merges into the perfect, when it may be said "I have overcome," or "I overcame." If the Spirit had meant that the overcoming process was completed, he would have used the word nenikeka, "I have overcome;" but as he did not, we are to understand that enikesa is prophecy and not history; that is, an action to be accomplished in the future.

It cannot be affirmed that Jesus Anointed has overcome the enemies to this throne and kingdom, and that affirmation be in harmony with the word. Jesus claimed the throne of David, or sovereignty over Israel, and the world; and argued his rights before the people and other rulers. But he did not overcome; on the contrary, they overcame him in putting him to death. True, he was raised by the power of the Deity; but when raised, he did not obtain what he claimed. He was even then like a man in the midst of a crowd of enemies too strong for him. Some friends perceiving it, rush in, and rescue him from their grasp; so the Father interposed and extricated him from their snares, and carried him off to heaven, where he is secure against their attack, until the time arrives to renew the conflict; and for the Lamb to overcome in the war of that great day of the Almighty, spoken of in Rev. 16:14; 17:14; 19:11–21—an overcoming, by which the book is opened and the seals loosed, and its contents read and looked upon—ch. 5:1–5.

But Paul settles the question whether Jesus has overcome or not, very distinctly. He tells us plainly and positively that he has not. In laying this conclusion before the reader, he quotes the eighth psalm, to show that the Son of Man was to be made a little lower than the angels: that he was to suffer death: that he was to be crowned with glory and honor; and that things were to be put in subjection under him. He then argues that the phrase "all things" is so comprehensive as to leave no exception. Having declared this, he directs attention to the facts in the case; from which, it is evident, that the subjection of the all things does not obtain. He wrote about thirty years after Jesus said, "all authority edothē (1 aor. ind. pass.) is given to me in heaven and upon earth—Matt. 28:18; and yet he said, "but now we see not yet all things put under him.” What do we see then? “We see Jesus,” says Paul, “who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor.” That is all we see accomplished. Although “all things are di on, on account of him,” yet all the things are to be di ou through him—through his instrumentality. All the thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers of the existing order of things are developed on account of him. This is the reason of their existence. He is to possess them all; as it is written, “the kingdoms of this world become our Lord’s and his Anointed’s; and he shall reign for the Aion of the Aions”—Rev. 11:15. But, it is very obvious, that they are not in his possession now, any more than they were in Paul’s day. Even after a lapse of eighteen hundred years we can say with him, “but now we do not yet see all things put under him;” nor shall we see them so subject until they are subjected “through him,” as represented in Rev. 19:11–21. When this conquest is perfected he will be able to say, nenikeka I have conquered; but till then, it can only be said prophetically enikesa, I conquer, at some future time.

But it is affirmed by some, that Jesus is now sitting upon that throne of his Father of which he is the heir; and that therefore, he hath overcome. To this I object, that the throne of the Father of which Jesus is the heir does not yet exist; and therefore, of course, he cannot be sitting upon it; and has, consequently, not yet conquered, or overcome his enemies.

When Jesus ascended to heaven, “he sat down at the right hand of the Majesty in high places”—Heb. 1:3, which, in Heb. 10:12, is styled “the right hand of the Deity;” and in Heb. 8:1, the phrase is extended to, “he sat down at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens.” Treating of this subject in Eph. 1:20, Pauls says, that the Deity raised up the Christ from among the dead, and “set him at his right hand in the heavenlies.” Thus he hath highly exalted him indeed, having placed him there above all terrestrial governments, or, in the words of the apostle, “far above every principality, and authority, and power, and lordship, and every name that is named, not only in this AION, (or Course of things,) but in the future. And puts all things (panta hupetaxen—1 Aorist,) under his feet.” And again in Col. 3:1, “Seek the things above, where the Anointed is, sitting at the right hand of the Deity”—the life, the honor, the power, the glory, the salvation, the grace, to be brought you at the apocalypse of Jesus Anointed—1 Pet. 1:13; all of which is harmony with Ps. 110:1, “Sit thou at my right hand,” said Yahweh to David’s Lord, “until I shall make thy foes a stool for thy feet,” or until I conquer them for thee; and then thou shalt sit upon my throne. For it is so written in the next verse, in these words, “The sceptre of thy strength shall Yahweh send out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies;” and in the second psalm, “I have anointed my King upon Zion, the mountain of my holiness.”

We have said that the throne of the Father that Jesus is heir to does not yet exist. He is King elect, but without throne or kingdom. This may be thought strange, but it is not more strange than true. Jesus is not heir of the throne at the right hand of which he is now sitting. That is not the apocalyptic throne, but the throne of the boundless universe, “in the light which no man can approach unto.” The Father intends to have a throne on earth, as well as that now in the light. He has had a throne on earth formerly, which continued for several ages; but he caused it to be overturned superlatively more than twenty-four hundred years ago, and it has ceased to be ever since. While it was standing, David and Solomon, and their posterity, sat upon it, governing the twelve tribes of Israel for Jehovah. “Of all my sons,” says David, “Jehovah hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of THE KINGDOM OF JEHOVAH over Israel”—1 Chron. 28:5. So when David was about to die, Solomon was anointed, and “sat on THE THRONE OF JEHOVAH as king instead of David his father, and prospered; and all Israel obeyed him”—ch. 29:23.

But in the days of Zedekiah, the last of David’s posterity that ever occupied the throne of Yahweh or Jehovah, it was overturned by Nebuchadnezzar. This catastrophe was predicted before it came to pass, in Ezek. 21:25–27. In this passage, the prophet addressing Zedekiah, then reigning in Jerusalem, says, “Thou profane, wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come for the punishment of iniquity at the end; thus saith Adonai Yahweh, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown, this shall not be that; exalt the low, and abase the high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and this shall not be until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him.” Thus the reigning king was to be uncrowned and deposed, and the throne and dynasty of David set aside, until the Messiah having been manifested, should at some subsequent period be apocalypsed for the purpose of receiving what of right belongs to him—the throne and kingdom of Jehovah, formerly occupied by his ancestors, David and Solomon.

Hence there must of necessity be a restoration of the throne and kingdom of Yahweh. Nothing can be more evident than this. Jeremiah, who was contemporary with the subversion of the kingdom and destruction of the city and temple by the Chaldeans, looked forward to a time when Israel would think nothing of the Ark of the Covenant of Yahweh, and would not visit it. That time has not yet come, for, though they cannot visit it, because it does not exist, still “it comes to mind,” and “they remember it.” Now, speaking of this future when they shall not regard it, he says, “At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of Yahweh; and all nations shall be gathered to it, (as the seat of government,) to the Name of Yahweh to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north, to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers”—ch. 3:16–18.

This, then, is the Father’s throne, of which Jesus and the Saints are the joint-heirs. In the promise to those who shall buy gold and white raiment of him, and become victors over the blandishments and seductions of the Laodicean Apostasy, he assures them, as he did the faithful in Thyatira, that what he received of the Father they should partake in—“even as I have received (the promise thereof) from my Father.” But before this promise can be verified in deed, Jesus and his brethren must vanquish their enemies. Jerusalem and the Holy Land must be wrested out of the power of the Gentiles, and Israel must be restored. When this is accomplished, or rather, in the accomplishment thereof, “a door is opened in the heaven, and a throne is set up therein”—Rev. 4:1, 2; and Jesus will then sit down with his Father on his throne, and not till then.

SECTION 4.

THE SEVEN EPISTLES TYPICAL OF THE COMPLETE AND MANIFOLD DEVELOPMENT OF THE APOSTASY.

THUS, HAVING BROUGHT TO A CONCLUSION THE PARTICULARS OF THE PRIMARY VISION OF THE APOCALYPSE, AND OF THE EPISTLES, THEREIN DICTATED BY THE LORD JESUS THE SPIRIT TO THE SEVEN ECCLESIAS OF THE PROCONSULAR ASIA, WHICH WE HAVE FOUND, AS MR. ELLIOT REMARKS IN HIS APOLOGY FOR NOT UNDERTAKING THE EXPOSITION OF THEM, “OF MATTER SUFFICIENT IN ITSELF TO CONSTITUTE A VOLUME”—I SHALL PROCEED TO CONSIDER BRIEFLY, THE IMPORT OF THE SEVEN MORAL SKETCHES OF THESE SEVEN ECCLESIAS.

The question has been extensively mooted by those who have attempted to expound the Apocalypse, whether these moral sketches had a prophetic application, besides and beyond their primary and literal application to that particular circle of Asiatic Ecclesias then existing; and signified further seven several phases that would be presented by the general assembly of professing christians to the all-seeing eye of the Spirit in its progress through coming ages, down to the consummation? Such is the view taken by not a few—by Vitringa in the last century; and among others, by Fidus in the Morning Watch, and a Mr. Girdlestone, in the present. “To myself,” says Mr. Elliott, “the view seems quite untenable,” for he cannot see any indication of such a prospective meaning in the descriptions.

Which then of these two theories is correct?—the one affirming that the seven epistles cover the whole of the times of the Gentiles; and the other, that their moral sketches refer exclusively to the particular ecclesias whose names they bear? My conviction is that they do not exclusively refer to either; but that they are descriptive of

1. The things existing in the seven particular ecclesias at the time of the revelation to John;
2. The things existing in the christian societies generally throughout the Roman Habitable, at the same time.
3. The state of the pre-Constantinian christendom in the periods related to those of the Seven Seals.

1. "WRITE," said the Spirit to John, "the things which thou hast seen, the things which are, and the things which shall be after these." When these words were uttered, he had seen the vision of the Son of Man in the Holy Place, or in the midst of the seven golden lightstands, with the Seven Stars in his right hand. This was related to things then existing in connection with the One Body; yet nevertheless, also referring to what shall be in the crisis of Christ's apocalypse in glory. Thus, John had seen in vision before writing the epistles, "his eyes as a flame of fire"—ch. 1:14; and among the things pertaining to the end, he sees the Son of Man surrounded by a multitude with "eyes as a flame of fire"—19:12; in the first chapter he had seen him with a sharp sword proceeding out of his mouth; and in the nineteenth, he sees him with the same, and making use of it. There are other correspondences which we have elsewhere pointed out. Now this primary vision is separated into portions, and with these the seven epistles are introduced; thereby giving the reader a hint that while they treat of the things existing, they relate also to the things that shall be after them.

The perusal of the several letters will show that they not only describe their moral state at the time of writing, but refer to a state of things to which they were tending. Thus, the Ephesian ecclesia was not in its original state; but in a fallen state, having left her first love. Yet in this then present state she was far from being Laodicean. She still labored, and was patient, and could not bear them that were evil; and had tried impostors and proved them to be liars; and had not fainted; and hated the deeds of the Nikolaitans. Yet the Spirit foresaw that they were tending to a lower state of degradation in which he would have to come and remove the lightstand out of its place; which would be to take from them the spiritual gifts; or, as he said to the Laodicean Star, "vomit thee out of my mouth." This would be for the Ephesian to become identical with the Laodicean ecclesia; which we shall not err in affirming was the case at the era of Constantine.

2. WHILE the seven epistles are descriptive of the state of christianity in each of the seven ecclesias; these seven were representative of the state of christianity throughout the Roman Habitable. In the days of John's exile, the ecclesias throughout this dominion constituted the "christendom" of the age. It was not sovereign in the state, as the modern "christendom" is; but oppressed, contending with the pagan authorities; and struggling for existence in the world. Still, though the apostolic christendom was so diverse from the modern christendom, the apostolic element being ascendant, all the seeds were sown in it, and had sprouted above the soil, which are now matured in the Italian Mother, and the Harlots and Abominations of Protestantism which she has borne.

Each epistle sets forth elements of the pre-Constantinian christendom contemporary with John's exile. As Paul testified thirty years before, "the Mystery of Iniquity" was "already" at work, and showed itself in the "false apostles" at Ephesus; the spurious Jews of the Synagogue of the Satan, at Smyrna; the Balaamites and Nikolaitans at Pergamos; the children of Jezebel and the Satan, at Thyatira; the twice dead, at Sardis; the but little strength, at Philadelphia; and the wretched and pitiable, and poor, and blind, and naked, at Laodicea. These were tares, which in two hundred and eighty years from the day of Pentecost, A.V.E. 33, choked the good seed, so that a separation had to ensue.

But while the Mystery of Iniquity was thus developing “after the working of the Satan” with all power, and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they “received not the love of the truth that they might be saved”—there existed a class, who not only knew the truth, but loved it. This was “the salt” of the first three centuries, which gave savor to the pre-Constantinian christendom. It was the redeeming and antagonizing element of the period; and was found concurrent with the tares already mentioned, in the Ephesian haters of the deeds of the Nikolaitans; in the Smyranean rich in faith; in the Pergamian Antipas; and in the Thyatiran remnant; in the Sardian few; and in the Philadelphian faithful. Among the Laodiceans no salt is characterized. A few grains may have been found; but not sufficient to preserve it from that corruption which finally caused its ejection.

The Apostolic Christendom, then, to which John wrote, was divisible into these two sections, which were more or less commingled in the ecclesias generally—real and nominal christians. The real christians were “Israelites indeed, in whom was no guile;” “Jews inwardly;” and “Abraham’s Seed, because they were Christ’s;” but the nominal christians of the ecclesias generally, “blasphemers,” “liars,” false Jews, members of the synagogue of the Satan, and so forth. It would from the very nature of things be utterly impossible for these two classes to remain together forever. If the real christians had the rule, the nominals would become impatient of their restraint and withdraw, or band together to subvert or corrupt the rule they disliked; and if they got the upper hand, the real christians would soon be persecuted and expelled in disgrace; a consummation which obtained in the era of Constantine.

Now according to the epistles, these nominal christians of all shades and colors of error and absurdity, were viewed by the Spirit as in a state of embryo organization. That is, the christendom of that day, even of A.D. 98, was pregnant with the Mother of Harlots, the Satan and their corrupt progeny. The Mother of Harlots, now enthroned in Rome, in the days of John, was seated in Thyatira as Jezebel. The Thyatiran Jezebel was a harlot as well as the mother of them; for the Spirit says, “I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.” She committed fornication with the Satan of Pergamos; as the modern Jezebel is said to have done with the kings of the earth, who are regal elements of “the Devil and the Satan”—Rev. 18:3; 20:2. Jezebel was the name given to a class of teachers and seducers, who claimed to be God’s Lot, or inheritance, in an especial sense. Hence our term “clergy,” from kleros, lot or inheritance. The Romish idea to this day is that “the church” is composed of the clergy; and that the people or laity, are to “hear the church,” that is, the clergy. Jezebel, then, because of its being the name of the Queen-Mother Patron of Idolatry in Israel, is apocalyptically bestowed upon the clergy.

Jezebel was begotten in the christian Body by “the Satan” composed of the Pergamian teachers, who held the doctrine of Balaam, and the Nikolaitans, whose tenets and speculations are called “the depths of the Satan as they speak.” They had a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge; so that the Spirit repudiated their labors, and designated their establishment “the Synagogue of the Satan.”

3. CONSTITUTED as human nature is, it was impossible that these elements of the iniquity could remain stationary. They were bound to progress. “The Devil,” who cast some of the Smyrneans into prison, was an outward pressure that restrained the too rapid development of the Apostasy. This Devil, or Pagan Roman Power, hindered the heading up of the apostasy in the Lawless One “until the time came for him to be “taken out of the way.” The development was therefore progressive. It required two hundred and fourteen years from the communication of the apocalypse to mature the Ephesian Declension into the Laodicean Lukewarmness; at which it finally and permanently arrived through the intermediate Smyranean, Pergamian, Thyatiran, Sardian, and Philadelphian, periods.

The Apocalypse may be compared to a telescope, which, when shut up, is all contained in an outer case.

The outer case is the primary vision of the Son of Man, &c., the Seven Epistles, the vision of the throne and Cherubim, to the end of the fifth chapter. These all relate to the Saints and their internal affairs; and that with especial reference to the consummation in the promised kingdom. To them the Spirit saith, "I will give to those of you who are faithful, and keep my word, and do not deny my name—I will give to you to eat of the arboretum of the life which is in the midst of the Paradise of the Deity; I will give you the wreath of the Life; I will give you to eat of the hidden manna, and a white pebble inscribed with a new name, known only to him who receives it; I will give you power over the nations, and ye shall rule them with a rod of iron; I will give you the Morning Star; ye shall walk with me in white; I will not blot out your name from the Book of the Life; but will confess it before my Father, and before his angels; I will make you pillars in the temple of my Deity, and ye shall go no more out; I will write upon you the name of my Deity, and the name of the city of my Deity, the New Jerusalem, which descendeth out of the heaven from my Deity, and my new name; and I will give to you to sit with me in my throne, even as I conquer and sit with my Father in his throne."

Having brought the promises to this climax—the possession of dominion over all nations with glory, honor, incorruptibility, and life in the Aions of the Aions—the Spirit next brings up the throne in vision, and shows the believer the victorious Saints in their relation to the throne under the symbols of the twenty-four elders and the four living ones, ready for action, or the execution of judgment, as the result of which they shall "possess the kingdom and dominion under the whole heaven," which Daniel says "is the end of the matter"—ch. 7:27, 28. In view of this result they sing "a new song," which terminates with the assured conviction that they "SHALL REIGN ON THE EARTH." Nor do they deceive themselves in this; for the "lightnings, and thunderings, and voices" of the war of the great day of the Almighty Deity, which "proceed out of the throne," (ch. 4:5,) being expended, their dominion is universally acknowledged; "any every creature which is in the heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, I heard saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for the Aions of the Aions," or thousand years. Here, then, is a continuous discourse in relation to the Heirs of the Kingdom, or the Saints, the which is diffused over the seven epistles and two succeeding chapters, and brings us in its consummation to "the blessing of all nations in Abraham and his Seed." But why were the promises diffused over seven epistles, and not all summed up in one? Because the period from John to the opening of the heaven at the hour of judgment, when the Saints rise and meet the Lord, was a long interval subdivided into periods, to the divisions of which the whole writing of the apocalypse was made to conform. Those who read the book fresh from John's pen were perfectly familiar with the consummation it portrayed; for it was the gospel of the kingdom they had believed and obeyed, symbolically exhibited. But when they had read to the end of the fifth chapter, the question would arise, but when shall these things be? We see that there is to be a "ten days' tribulation," and "an hour of trial upon the whole habitable, to try them that dwell upon the earth;" this will take time; but how long to the taking him that letteth out of the way; and how long shall the Lawless One continue; all of which must ensue before the consummation is established? The epistles do not answer this inquiry. It was all shut up. This, however, might be seen, that in default of further revelation, the first five chapters must be regarded as covering the whole ground from A.D. 98 to the Millennium; and as their contents were resolved into sevens, so the period might be subdivided into sevens likewise.

But the arrangement of these sevens would be the difficulty. This, however, is very much mitigated by the structure of the Book of the Seals. Like the Book of the Seven Epistles, it consists of Seven; and the last of the seven seals contains within it, upon the telescopic principle, other sevens, which, when drawn out to the right focal distance, extend to the subjugation of the nations, and their ascription of blessing to their conquerors. Thus, then, though the first six seals were all opened, and fulfilled in the subversion of the constitution of Pagan Rome, a period of two hundred and fourteen years, the seventh seal covers the whole period from the Era of Constantine to the termination of the war of the Great Day, a period as far as hitherto elapsed, of about 1550 years. Hence, the seventh seal contains the seven trumpets; and the seven vials also, inasmuch as the seventh trumpet contains them.

We conclude, then, after the analogy of this arrangement respecting the affairs without, through which the consummation is to be wrought out, that the state with respect to affairs within, or pertaining to the relation of the saints to things ecclesiastical or spiritual, is similarly subdivided. In other words, that the seven ecclesias, in their moral or spiritual condition, were each representative of the state of “christendom” at seven distinct epochs, approximating to the periods of the seven seals. According to this, the Ephesian state of the ecclesias would be introductory of the first seal; the Smyranean, of the second; the Pergamian, of the third; the Thyatiran, of the fourth; the Sardian, of the fifth; the Philadelphian, of the sixth; and the Laodicean, of the seventh.

Now, another reason for this arrangement may be found in the fact that “all things are for the sake of the saints;” and that the seals, consequently, were arranged on their account. That is, that the moral, or spiritual, condition of the Christian section of the Roman people was the Spirit’s reason for organizing the judicial visitations upon them represented in the seals. This view of the matter explains why there were any seals at all, and why the sixth seal was not the first; nor the first the sixth. In the Ephesian state of christendom there was strength, labor, patience, no faint-heartedness, hatred of Nikolaitanism, and intolerance of evil-doers; therefore the Typical Horse of the first seal was white, and the government that rode it, prosperous. But in the Philadelphian state of spirituality, there was only a little strength; and therefore the sixth seal was opened upon the community, which had become Christian in name, and was on the eve of insurrection against the constituted authorities of the state, who still clung to paganism and its vested interests; and therefore, in its terrible developments, they said to the mountains and the rocks, “Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, for the great day of his wrath is come”—Rev. 6:12–17. This is the language not of pagans, or idolators, that regarded Christianity as a fable, but of those wretched, and pitiable, and poor, and blind, and naked, composing the Laodicean professors, who were about to be vomited out of the mouth of the Spirit in this and the succeeding periods; for the judgments of the seals, though they began successively, did not each terminate before its successor began, but intermingled their events.

I do not undertake, nor is it necessary, to draw the exact lines of demarcation between the seven degrees of declension from the purity of faith and practice to the establishment of the strong Laodicean delusion, in which professors of Christianity said “they had need of nothing.” Paul said “evil men and seducers would wax worse and worse.” This was true of the seven states of pre-Constantinian christendom. They all of them waxed worse and worse under the influence of seducers, until there was no scope for repentance. In all these states the number of the faithful diminished, until, when the time came for the Spirit to spue the nothing-needing mass out of his mouth, only A REMNANT remained to keep the faith alive among mankind.

Increased declension always preceded the opening of a seal; so that, for example, the Ephesian state of morals did not commence with the opening of the first seal in A.D. 98; for, taking this as the date of the apocalypse, the Ephesian Angel was in a fallen state, compared with its first love. Hence, the Smyranean spiritual declension would be maturing under the first seal; the Pergamian under the second; the Thyatiran under the third; the Sardian under the fourth; the Philadelphian under the fifth; and the Laodicean under the sixth; so that the judgment of the sixth seal would be the judicial energy by which the spuing from the Spirit’s mouth would be effected; and the Laodicean Apostasy thus ejected would become the spiritual order of the seventh seal.

The same principle obtained in the superinduction of the trumpets. The increasing iniquity of the Laodiceans, in all parts of the Roman Habitable, made the world obnoxious to the judgments they symbolized. The west seems to have transcended the east in idolatry and abomination; and therefore their judgment by the barbarians, who sacked Rome, and desolated Italy and the adjacent countries, was earlier and complete; and when the east became ripe, the fifth and sixth trumpets tormented them, and suppressed the sovereignty of the Laodiceans. In the west, these had converted their barbarian conquerors to Laodiceanism. They formed a church and state alliance with them, and became “the Great Harlot with whom the Kings of the Earth committed fornication.” All the western habitable worshipped this spiritual and civil power, except the Remnant and the Witnesses. These two classes were the subjects of great oppression and cruelty at the hands of the Laodiceans; who did their utmost to exterminate them. Because of this, the thunders (of the sixth trumpet) pealed against them; and when this storm, by which Laodicean Protesantism was established as an antagonism in the very camp of the Apostasy, had subsided, the seventh trumpet began to sound, and is still sounding; and will continue to sound, until the Seven vials, which are the blasts, as it were, of the trumpet, and in which is contained all the wrath of the Deity that remains to be poured out upon mankind for a thousand years, shall be exhausted; the result of which will be the spuing forth of political and spiritual Laodiceanism in all its Romish and Protestant modifications, by Jesus and the saints, after the type of the ejection of Paganism from place and power by the male offspring of Jezebel, A.D. 324: and the setting up of the throne seen of John in the vision of the fourth chapter. The following chronological scheme (on page 428) will exhibit to the reader at one view my idea of the antitypical spiritual states of the pre-Constantinian christendom in their several relations to the seven periods of the Seals. Thus, from the Day of Pentecost A.D. 33, according to the Vulgar Era; or correctly 35 years, 4 months, and 20 days from the birth of Jesus;—to his appearing in power to establish the kingdom—a period, as far as already elapsed, of nearly 1828 years—we have eight ethical or moral states or conditions of things related to christianity. I say eight—seven apocalyptic states, and one by which they were preceded. This was the Apostolic State of Christendom.

The spiritual condition of the ecclesias in this state of things may be learned from the writings of the apostles and others as extant in the New Testament. Their faith in the “things of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ” was unmixed with Nikolaitanism, or “philosophy and vain deceit after the tradition of men, and the elements of the world;” and it worked by love and purified the heart—Gal. 5:6; Acts 15:9. There was among christians, as the rule, a perfectly unselfish devotion to the interests of the truth, and to the well being of one another. Their works, labor, and patience, were without rebuke. They labored for the name, and did not faint, although the labor endangered their lives, liberty, and goods. The rule was “poor”

Chronological Tableau of the Apostasy

EPHESIAN STATE

Existing before the opening, and extending into, the period of the First Seal. Christians fallen from their first love and works—Rev. 2:4, 5.

Ignatius A.D. 107

First Seal

The White Horse. From A.D. 96. Roman people in peace, and prosperous, Paganism declining. Nominal Christianity on the increase with balsphemy.

Justin, 165; Polycarp, 167 Martyrs of Lyons and Irenaeus 177.

SMYRNEAN STATE

The Ephesian ethics assuming the Smyranean Phasis—Rev. 2:9.

Second Seal

The Red Horse. From A.D. 185. Civil wars and bloodshed—Rev. 6:4.

Tertullian, Pantaenus, Clemens Alexandrinus; and first Divinity school at Alexandria in Egypt.

PERGAMIAN STATE.

The Smyranean State become Pergamian. Holders of the doctrine of Balaam and the Nikolaitanes—Rev. 2:14, 15. Celsus objected, that Christians were now so split into sects, that the name only remained to them in common.

Third Seal

The Black Horse. From A.D. 217. Distress—Rev. 6:5

The emperors Alexander, A.D. 222; and Philip 244, nominal Christians. Origen. Cyprian Felicissimus.

THYATIRAN STATE

The Pergamian with all its evils merging into the worse Thyatiran. Christians intensely nominal. The prophetess Jezebel and “the Satan”—Rev. 2:20, 24.

Fourth Seal

The Pale Horse. From A.D. 248. Sword, famine, pestilence, wild beasts—Rev. 6:8. Decian persecution. End of the world thought to be at hand.

Dionysius of Alexandria: Paul the first hermit. A.D. 250 Paul of Samosata, 264 Gregory Thaumaturgus. Anthony the Egyptian. funder of Monks, A.D. 270.

SARDIAN STATE

Spiritual death resulting from long peace and Platonism—Rev. 3:1, 2. The Thyatiran, or Jezebel and Satan, ethics, workign death, or becoming Sardian.

Fifth Seal

The community of “fellow-servants and brethren,” which had become Sardian, or “ready to die,” intensely persecuted by Diocletian, from A.D. 303. The Spirit comes upon them in this judgment like a thief—Rev. 3:3.

Eusebius the Ecclesiastical Historian and the following are Laodiceans. Arius, Sthanasius, constantine the Great, Ambrose, Basil, Chrysostom, Augustine, Jerome, et td genus omne. Wicliff, Huss Jerome of Prague, Luther, Melancthon, Zuinglius, Erasmus, Calvin, Knox, Cranmer, Ridley, the Nonconformists, Whitfield, Wesley E. Irving, cummings, Scott, Campbell. Himes, Miller, Joe Smith, Marsh, Spurgeon, and such like. The Laodicean State extends from the Sixth Seal to the Millennium, or, concurrent with the Seventh Seal.

PHILADELPHIAN STATE

Only “a little strength” remains in the christian commonwealth. Superstition prevalent on every hand, and Christianity in a decayed state. A little benefited by the severe trial. Fast becoming Laodicean.

Sixth Seal

A great political earthquake, and departure of the haven as a scroll, from A.D. 311. Dissolution of the pagan Constitution of the Roman Government; or that which hindered the revelation of the Lawless One taken out of the way—Rev. 6:12; 2 Thess. 2:7–8.

LAODICEAN STATE

The “little strength” of the Philadelphian exhausted. Laodiceanism fully established. Persecution having ceased, and “THE CATHOLICS,” as nominal Christians were now called, being in high faovr with the authorities, they say, “We are rich and increased in goods, and have need of nothing”—Rev. 3:17. Spued out.

Seventh Seal

Opened A.D. 324. “Silence in the heaven about the space of half an hour”—Rev. 8:1 The Laodicean “strong delusion,” becomes “THE HOLY ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH,” or religion of the Roman State “by law established.”

LAODICEAN STATE

The LAODICEAN STATE continues to the approaching advent in this world, rich in faith;” the reverse of this was the exception. When they received the word, they received it gladly and were immersed; and then “continued steadfastly in the apostle’s teaching and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers;” and while in their “first love,” “the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; and great grace was upon them all.” In this primitive condition of affairs, the ecclesias were all the heritages, hoi kleroi, or clergy, of God, constituting “the flock;” while “the rulers” or “elders” were its feeders under the supremacy of the Chief Shepherd at the right hand of the majesty in the heavens. These ruling brethren took the oversight of the flock, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; and they demeaned themselves, not as lords and reverends, but as examples to the generality of their brethren in the faith. What precise number of years “the heritages of the Deity,” continued in this happy and uncorrupted condition, it is impossible to define. We know when the state began, but cannot tell the first year when the devil, or the flesh, began to pervert the truth. We may remark safely, that there is no well defined chronological line between the Apostolical State and the Ephesian State, by which it was succeeded. There was “One Body,” consisting of many ecclesias, pertaining to the Apostolical State; and before that body could be said to have passed into the Ephesian State, the Angel Presbyteries of the ecclesias or heritages generally must have responded to the apocalyptical description of the angel at Ephesus. This transition would therefore be gradual; for on the supposition, that “men speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them,” first arose in the Ephesian Angel, it would have taken several years to leaven all or a majority of the ecclesias extant with their tradition so as to give character to the Body. The entrance of the body into a new phase would be progressive; the process would be insidious; a change would come over it, and be discerned, not so much in the growing from month to month, as in the growth accomplished after a lapse of years.

Now, in the Apostolic State, which had not entirely passed till the destruction of Jerusalem, A.D. 72, the “first love” of the Angel-Presbyteries began very early to be impaired at different points. The agents of this unholy enterprize emanated from Judea, and began the work of “subverting souls” at Antioch and Syria and Cilicia. These were of the sect of the Pharisees, who enjoyed the fellowship of the apostles, and consorted with them in their meetings. They had, therefore, ample means and opportunities of knowing the truth. Aware that it would be useless for them to broach dogmas in their presence, “they went out from them and troubled the Gentile brethren with words.” What they dared not teach in Jerusalem they taught in Antioch and other places; and “as the serpent through subtilty” sought to corrupt their minds “from the simplicity that is in the Christ.” But, although this attempt was opposed, and apostolically denounced, the enterprize was not abandoned by the christianized Pharisees. They determined to popularize christianity so as to make it palatable to the Jews, in the hope that it would cause them to cease persecuting those who believe in Jesus as the Christ. They therefore taught that men should believe the gospel, be immersed, then be circumcized, and keep the law of Moses, if they would be saved. This was Judaizing and “inventing a lie.” The apostles taught no such doctrine as this; and in the decree they published, declared all beyond believing the gospel and being baptized, was unnecessary and vain.

The invention of this lie was the beginning of troubles to the body of Christ. Its inventors found their advantage in propagating it in defiance of the apostles. They made proselytes to their tradition both among the elders and private members of the flock; and wherever they succeeded in establishing their influence, there, and to the same extent, the authority of the apostles was set aside. They became the adversaries of these holy and self-denying men, and are therefore styled in the Apocalypse “the Satan,” and their “church,” “the Synagogue of the Satan,” of which we have spoken at large elsewhere. But others arose after these, and added new elements to “the lie.” Truth is fixed, but lies never diminish in circulating, but always increase. Pious Jews began the work of corrupting the faith; and pious Gentiles, who had been subverted, added some of their “philosophy” and “gnosis,” or “science falsely so called,” to the original stock, and in their combination, produced what Paul styles, in 2 Thess. 2:7, mysterion tes anomias, THE MYSTERY OF INIQUITY. This, he says, was “already working;” and in its working through Judaizing and philosophizing teachers, gave him all the trouble and mortification he laments in the several epistles.

While, then, christendom was, as we have described it in the beginning, pure and uncorrupt in faith and practice, it had sadly degenerated at the time when the apostles had all finished their course, except John. The Apostolical State of the Body was not, therefore, all rose-colored, but was defaced by many unsightly blemishes. The seeds of death and corruption had been sown in it by the enemy; the germ of a Body of Death had been deposited in its womb; even of that Body Ecclesiastic styled popularly in our day “THE CHURCH,” and apocalyptically, “the Mother of Harlots and of all the Abominations of the Earth.” A thoughtful perusal of the epistles will convince the reader that by the time of the apostles’ decease, the One Body was in a fallen or Ephesian State, and that consequently, the Apostolical State of things was pregnant with the Ephesian, as the Ephesian afterwards was of the Smyranean, and the Smyranean of the Pergamian, and the Pergamian of the Thyatiran, and the Thyatiran of the Sardian, and the Sardian of the Philadelphian, and the Philadelphian of the Laodicean, and the Laodicean of vomiting, corruption, and death.

The Mystery of Iniquity, then, had its beginning in the Apostolical State. The seeds of it were then sown broadcast by the enemy. But they did not ripen as soon as sown; they only began to grow. The fruit was to be “the Lawless One.” But fruit, when first formed, is not mature. Considerable time passes from the first appearance of the fruit to the time of ingathering because of ripeness. So with the Lawless One, he had to appear as the fruit of the Mystery of Iniquity; but after his appearing, he had to grow and ripen for the vintage, when he should be “consumed with the spirit of the Lord’s mouth, and destroyed with the brightness of his coming.”

Now the matter of the apocalyptic epistles in part consists of accusations, which, when put together, form a formidable indictment against the professing Christian community. These charges, as they increase, show also an increase in crime, until a climax is reached, which exposes the criminal to the most ignominious and condign punishment. The following ordinal summary will make this apparent to the reader. The Spirit accuses the Christian Body, saying, I have against thee—

1. That thou hast left thy first love;
2. That thou hast them that hold the teaching of Balaam, and the teaching of the Nikolaitans, which thing I hate;
3. That thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, who calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols;
4. That thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead;
5. That thou hast little strength; and,
6. That thou art wretched, and pitiable, and poor, and blind, and naked.

Paul said that there would be “a falling away,” and here we behold it. As years rolled on, things waxed worse and worse, until the false apostles of the Synagogue of the Satan gained the ascendancy, and their chief, the Man of Sin, was brought forth of their mother Jezebel, as Constantine the Great. The falling away, or apostasy, was obviously progressive, and its progress may be clearly traced in the writings of the men whose names occupy the third column of the Chronological Tableau of the Apostasy, already before the reader. In concluding, then, my exposition of the seven ethical states and stages of the falling away, I shall furnish specimens of the notions current as indicative of each. And first of the

1. Ephesian State.

Ignatius was an elder of the ecclesia at Antioch, but possessed of a fanatical desire for martyrdom, which was contrary to the instruction of the Lord Jesus, who said, “when they persecute you in one city, flee to another.” But instead of this, when the Emperor Trajan came to Antioch, about A.D. 107, in his way to the Parthian war, Ignatius voluntarily delivered himself up to Trajan, into whose presence he was introduced. “What an impious spirit art thou,” said the emperor, “both to transgress our commands, and to inveigle others into the same folly to their ruin!”

Ignatius. Theophorus ought not to be called so, forasmuch as all wicked spirits are departed far from the servants of God. But if you call me impious because I am hostile to evil spirits, I own the charge in that respect. For I dissolve all their snares, through the inward support of Christ the heavenly King.

Trajan. Pray, who is Theophorus?

Ignat. He who has Christ in his breast.

Trajan. And thinkest thou not that gods reside in us also, who fight for us against our enemies?

Ignat. You mistake in calling the demons of the nations by the name of gods. For there is only one God, who made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that is in them; and one Jesus Christ, his only begotten son, whose kingdom be my portion.

Trajan. His kingdom, do you say, who was crucified under Pilate?

Ignat. HIS who crucified my sin with ITS AUTHOR; and has put all the fraud and malice of Satan under the feet of those who carry him in their hearts.

Trajan. Dost thou, then, carry him who was crucified within thee?

Ignat. I do; for it is written, "I dwell in them, and walk in them." Upon this Trajan said, "Since Ignatius confesses that he carries within himself him that was crucified, we command, that he be carried bound by soldiers to Great Rome, there to be thrown to the wild beasts, for the entertainment of the people."

The brethren in Rome hearing of this sentence upon him, met him on his arrival at Ostia, a few miles from the city. They had written to him before, proposing to intercede on his behalf. But he would listen to no such thing, but determined to be devoured at all events. Referring to this, Milner remarks, "I fear the example of Ignatius did harm in this respect to the church. Martyrdom was, as we know, made too much of in the third century." Having shown how contrary was the course of the apostles, he says of Ignatius, "I suspect there was not an equal degree of calm resignation to the Divine Will."

Besides his excessive desire of martyrdom, which was a species of suicide, Ignatius advocated an unscriptural supremacy of one whom it had become fashionable to style "the Bishop." When the New Testament exhorts the faithful in relation to their rulers, it says, "Obey them that have the rule over you;" and these are particularized as "apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers;" and were all "bishops," or episkopoi, which means "overseers." But Ignatius adopted a different style in speaking of these functionaries. "Let us," says he in writing to the Ephesians "study obedience to the Bishop, that we may be subject to God." And again, "Since ye are subject to the Bishop as to Jesus Christ, ye appear to live, not after man, but after Jesus Christ." And, "it is not lawful, without the Bishop, to baptize, or to make a love feast;" and lastly, "It behoves the married to enter into that connection with the consent of the Bishop, that the marriage may be after the will of God, and not to fulfil the lusts of the flesh." These passages show that in that early day one man in each congregation had been set up above all the other elders of the presbytery, who, in proportion as he was aggrandized, were diminished, and caused to assume the position of his inferiors. These notions of Ignatius and his contemporaries laid the foundation of martyrolatry, episcopal usurpation and lordship, the invalidity of ordinances ministered by an unofficial brother, and of matrimony as "a sacrament of the church." A mind running in this current of ideas, had evidently fallen a notch or two below the scriptural standard which characterized the apostolical state in its beginning. Yet Ignatius was more scriptural in his thinking upon religious topics, than any of the writers that succeeded him. He belonged to the fallen Ephesian State, the works of which were not so acceptable as the first.

2. Smyranean State.

The representative writers of this state were particularly Justin Martyr, and Irenaeus. Justin, surnamed Martyr, which signifies a witness, but in after times restricted exclusively to those whose witness was sealed with their blood, published an Apology or defence of the faith he professed, and presented it to the emperor Antoninus Pius, about A.D. 140. He was a pagan philosopher before he was converted to christianity; but, as he says, "having found the Divine Scriptures to be the only sure philosophy," he became a christian. He was put to death about A.D. 163. One would suppose that, having testified himself that Gentile philosophy was false, he would thenceforth have abandoned it altogether. But this he did not do. He continued to dress in the garb of a philosopher, and to persevere in the profession of it; "hoping," as Milner thinks, "to conciliate the affections of philosophers, and allure them to christianity. To draw gentlemen and persons of liberal education to pay attention to christianity, appears to have been his chief employment." A right view of things would have convinced Justin of the futility of his expedients. It is "the poor in this world," and the simple hearted, not "gentlemen" and "philosophers," that God hath chosen to be heirs of his kingdom. In this policy Justin shows a departure from the true apostolic mind so prominent in Paul's writings. Justin's example was pernicious in giving sanction to the union of heathen philosophy with the teaching of Christ and his apostles. There is no agreement between them; and where the union is tolerated, it invariably results in the corruption or extinction from the mind, of the spirit and teaching of the word. Towards the close of his Second Apology, he declares that the doctrines of Plato were not heterogeneous to those of Christ; but only not altogether similar. And he seems to assert that Plato, and the Stoics, and the Pagan writers in prose and verse, saw something of truth from the portion of the seed of the Divine Word, which he makes to be the same as the Word, the only begotten Son of God. But Paul never allows unconverted men to have any portion at all of that light which is peculiarly christian. But Justin had lost sight of the guard, which cannot be too often repeated against philosophy. Not long after him, mystics and heretics and platonizing christians jumbled these things together entirely; and tried to incorporate the philosophical doctrine of the to en with the Gospel. Justin gave them a handle for this; and though philosophy had made its inroads upon the faith in the apostolic age, Milner may not be entirely wrong in saying, that “Justin was the first sincere christian who was seduced by human philosophy to adulterate the gospel though in a small degree. It should ever be remembered, that christian light stands single and unmixed; and will not bear to be kneaded into the same mass with other systems, religious or philosophical. We may here mark the beginning of the decay of the first spiritual effusion among the Gentiles through false wisdom.”

In the year 167, the ecclesia of Smyrna in writing an account of the martyrdom of Polycarp to the ecclesia at Philomelium seems to reflect upon the martyrdom of Ignatius in saying that it was “perfectly evangelical.” “He did not precipitately give himself up to death, but waited till he was apprehended, as our Lord himself did, that we might imitate him. We do not approve of those who offer themselves to martyrdom; for we have not so learned Christ.” But, though right in this, they seem to have acquired the notion that martyrdom atoned for sin; for speaking of those who suffered, they say, “thus they despised the torments of this world, and by one hour redeemed themselves from eternal punishment. The fire of savage tormentors was cold to them; for they had steadily in view a desire to avoid that fire which is eternal and never to be quenched.” In the translation from which we quote, it reads thus; which may not express their idea. If it does they had gone astray respecting the punishment of the wicked, and must have been infected with immortal-soulism. But, I rather think, they had allusion to certain apocalyptic passages in the book sent to them as one of the seven ecclesias. The kolasis aionios they refer to was probably the Aion-punishment of “the Hour of Judgment,” which cannot be quenched till its purpose is accomplished; and which is for the especial destruction of Babylon the Great, the conquest of the kingdoms, and the punishment of all their adherents and supporters. This occurs after the resurrection; and is provided also for the punishment of all who shall be raised to suffer it—Rev. 14:6–11. Its effects are permanent; but the execution of judgment does not transcend “the hour” appointed.

Polycarp who suffered and the Smyrneans who witnessed his death did not agree in their convictions. In his prayer Polycarp said, “O Father, I bless thee that thou hast counted me worthy to receive my portion in the number of martyrs, in the cup of Christ, for the resurrection to eternal life both of soul and body in the incorruption of the Holy Spirit; among whom may I be received this day before thee as a sacrifice well savored and acceptable.” His mind was fixed upon the resurrection, but when they tell the story of his death, and speak of his state after it while they were writing, they say, “the envious, malignant, and spiteful enemy of the just, observed the honor put upon his martyrdom and his blameless life; and knowing that he was crowned with immortality and the prize of unquestionable victory, studied to prevent us from obtaining his body, though many of us longed to have communion with his sacred flesh.” They gathered up his bones, however, which they term “more precious than gold or jewels,” and deposited them in a proper place; “where, if it be possible,” say they, “we shall meet in gladness and joy to celebrate the birthday of his martyrdom, both in commemoration of those who have wrestled before us, and for the instruction and confirmation of those who come after.” This was the beginning of shrine-pilgrimage and relic-worship. The Smyrneans did not probably then visit the shrine and bones in the spirit of idolators; but what might be innocent in their celebration, in after times became a grossly superstitious and idolatrous observance.

Irenaeus belonged to the Smyranean State of christendom. He was a presbyter of an ecclesia at Lyons in France. He was instructed by Polycarp, who had been personally acquainted with John. About the year 169, Irenaeus became the “Bishop” of the congregation. “Never,” says Milner, “was any pastor more severely tried by a tempestuous scene. Violent persecution without, and subtle heresies within, called for the exertion at once, of consummate dexterity and of magnanimous resolution. Irenaeus was favored with a large measure of both; and he weathered out the storm.” His views of doctrine are of the same cast as those of Justin, whom he quotes in his Book of Heresies. His philosophy had its usual influence on the mind—in darkening some truths of scripture, and in mixing the doctrine of Christ with human inventions. Now that things had not improved at the close of Irenaeus’s career, but had become worse, may be gathered from his letter to Florinus, in which he says, “I can witness before God, that if that blessed apostolical presbyter had heard some of the doctrines which are now maintained, he would have cried out, and stopped his ears, and in his usual manner have said, “O good God, to what times hast thou reserved me, that I should endure these things.” And he would immediately have fled from the place in which he had heard such doctrines.”

Irenaeus was the author of “the epistle of the ecclesias of Vienna and Lyons to the brethren in Asia and Phrygia,” giving an account of the persecution there. Speaking in this of Vettius Epagathus who had been put to death, he says, “He was, and still is, a genuine disciple of Christ, following the Lamb whithersoever he goeth.” This is a quotation from Rev. 14:4; and by the use he makes of it, would indicate that his mind had been platonized with the dogma of immortal-soulism, which his instructor Polycarp did not believe. The Smyranean State was certainly a degeneration from the Ephesian.

3. The Pergamian State.

This state of the christian community is illustrated by the writings of Tertullian, Pantaenus, Clemens Alexandrinus, and the Alexandrian School of “Divinity.”

Tertullian, the first Latin writer among christians, flourished in the latter part of the second, and in the former part of the third century, at Carthage. But were it not for some light which he throws on the state of christianity in his own times, he would scarcely deserve to be distinctly noticed. Tradition with him was authoritative, and among the customs which it sanctioned in the Roman Africa was the very frequent signing of themselves with the sign of the cross.

He did not approve of flight in persecution, in direct contradiction of Christ’s instructions. He disapproved of second marriages, and called them adultery.

Human philosophy after the rudiments of the world formed the prominent corruption of the times of Tertullian and his contemporaries, and immediate successors. In the third century its effects appeared very distinctly.

Alexandria in Egypt was at this time the most renowned seminary of learning. A sort of philosophers appeared there who called themselves Eclectic, because they chose what they thought most agreeable to truth from different masters and sects. Ammonius Saccas, a famous Alexandrian teacher, reduced the opinions of this sect to a system. Plato was his principal guide, but he invented many things of which Plato had no idea. He was educated a christian, but of so doubtful a kind that he was claimed by Porphyry for a pagan, and by Eusebius for a saint. Ammonius fancied that all religions, vulgar and philosophical, Grecian and barbarous, Jewish and Gentile, meant the same thing at bottom. He undertook by allegorizing and subtilizing various fables and systems, to compound a coalition of all sects and religions; and from his labors, continued by his disciples, his followers were taught to look on Jew, philosopher, vulgar pagan, and christian, as all of the same creed.

Our more distinct information of christianity in this respectable city of the Roman Habitable begins with what is evil. It is said that a christian catechetical school was established there in the apostolic age; be this as it may, Pantaenus is the first master of it of whom there is any account. He was much addicted to the sect of the Stoics, a sort of romantic pretenders to perfection. The combination of Stoicism with Christianity in the system of Pantaenus very much debased the truth; and clouded must have been the light imparted by such an instructor to his disciples. He always retained the title of the Stoic Philosopher, after he had been admitted to eminent employments in the church. For ten years he laboriously discharged the office of Catechist, and freely taught all that desired him. He died not long after the beginning of the third century.

Clemens Alexandrinus was a disciple of Pantaenus, and of a mind blasted by the same wind of philosophy. He was of the eclectic sect. But let us hear what he says of himself: "I espouse neither this nor that philosophy, neither the Stoic nor Platonic, nor the Epicurean, nor that of Aristotle; but whatever any of these sects hath said, that is fit and just; whatever teaches righteousness with a divine and religious knowledge, all this I select; and call it philosophy." But what was there even of good morals in all the philosophers he could not have learned in the New Testament; and much more perfectly, and without the danger of pernicious adulterations. Clemens as a Christian, should have known that it was no part of the business of philosophical writers to dictate to the believer: "the world by wisdom knew not God," and "Beware of Philosophy." The christian community was gradually learning to neglect the scriptures and their cautions; and to develop theology into a science so called.

Clemens succeeded Pantaenus in the catechetical school, and under him were bred the famous, or rather infamous, Origen, and other eminent perverters of the gospel of the kingdom of Christ. Their preparation under his tuition may be learned from the following statement. "As the husbandman first waters the soil, and then casts in his seed, so the notions which I derive out of the writings of the Gentiles serve first to water and soften the earthy parts of the soul, that the spiritual seed may be the better cast in, and take vital root in the mind of men."

This was not speaking according to the oracles of God. The apostles neither placed Gentile philosophy in the foundation, nor believed that it would at all assist in raising the superstructure of christianity. On the contrary they looked at the philosophical religion of their own times as so much rubbish; but in all ages, the blandishments of mere reason on such subjects deceive us;— "vain man would be wise."

This man, Clemens, besides his employment in the office of catechist, was made a presbyter in the ecclesia at Alexandria. Little is known of his life, and the time of his death is uncertain; and certain it is, that little else than evil could accrue to the saints from the ministrations of such a perverted mind.

He undertook to delineate a perfect christian, which, being the creation of his pago-christian eclecticism was just such a christian as would please the carnal mind, full of stoical rhapsodies, and the crotchetty asceticism of the flesh. After he had created him, he called him GNOSTICUS; but the Spirit in the writing to the presbytery at Pergamos, styled him Nikolaitos, or a vanquisher of the people, like his great prototype Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteousness, and placed stumblingblocks in the people's way, by which they were caused to fall. The Rev. Nikolaitos Gnosticus is the beau ideal of a modern "divine."

4. Thyatiran State.

The apostasy from "the truth as it is in Jesus" must have progressed very far when two such chiefs of the Roman Dragon, as the emperors Alexander and Philip, could be recognized as christians.

Alexander, the son of Mammaea, styled by Eusebius "a most godly and religious woman," although she had not received the faith, began to reign in the sixteenth year of his age, A.D. 222. It is true, he was esteemed one of the best moral characters in profane history; and never persecuted, but approved and countenanced the christians, such as the multitude of them had now become; but still he was a philosophical worshipper of the shadows of the departed great. He had a domestic chapel, where, every morning, he worshipped those deceased princes whose characters were most esteemed; their statues were placed among those of the gods; and into this company he introduced Apollonius of Tyana, Jesus Christ, Abraham, and Orpheus. He had a desire to erect a temple to Christ, and to receive him regularly into the number of the gods.

While residing in Antioch, A.D. 229, he and his mother sent to Origen, then teaching his paganized christianity in the academy at Alexandria, and invited him to visit them. He obeyed the summons, and continued with them a while, conversing with them upon the things for which he had become famous. On returning to Alexandria, he left them in state and views similar to his own, and consequently with no clear and striking comprehension of the faith. "In truth," says Milner, "a number of christians, so called, at this time, were much of the same religion with Alexander himself." He seems to have learned, in some measure, the doctrine of the Divine Unity, and by the help of the eclectic philosophy, to have consolidated all religions into one mass. He and his mother were assassinated, A.D. 235, by Maximin, who reigned in his stead.

Pupienus and Balbinus, the successors of Maximin, being slain, they were succeeded by Gordian, who, after six years, were assassinated by Philip the Arabian, who ascended the throne A.D. 244. Eusebius, a christian of the Laodicean type, "the bishop" of Nicomedia, and companion of Constantine the Great, tells us, that this Philip was a christian. "That he was so," says Milner, "by profession, seems well attested by the concurrent voice of antiquity." He is said to have submitted to certain ecclesiastical censures by a bishop. There is no doubt but in the fourth year of his reign, A.D. 247, he allowed and conducted the secular games, which were full of idolatry. Origen wrote an epistle to this emperor and his wife Severa, which was extant in Eusebius' time. Philip was slain A.D. 248.

Origen, who had received christianity hereditarily, became catechetical tutor at the school in Alexandria at eighteen. He was a man of very presumptuous spirit, which impelled him to philosophize to the destruction of the faith. He was never content with plain truth, but ever hunting after something singular and extraordinary. He converted the school into a theological academy, which became the Collegiate Alma Mater of the Apostasy—the Mother of all future Divinity Schools. He maintained himself by the sale of the profane books which he had been wont to study. The christians of the unfallen ecclesia at Ephesus would have burned them—Acts 19:19. But the times had changed; and Origen was a Thyatiran of the house of Jezebel, and a disseminator of "the depths of the Satan as they teach." He was "a perfect christian" after the type of his master's Gnosticus. He mutilated himself for the kingdom of heaven; made no provision for the morrow; inured himself to cold, nakedness, and poverty; abstained from wine and in general lived so abstemiously as to endanger his life. Many persons imitated his excessive austerities, and were at that time honored with the name of "philosophers;" and some of them patiently suffered death. The reader is referred to Col. 2 for a comment on the conduct of Origen and his Alexandrian converts. One of these, a female named Potamiaena, told a soldier who protected her from the insolence of the mob on her way to execution, that after her departure she would entreat the Lord for him. Some time after her death, the soldier was imprisoned on the charge of being a christian. The Origenites visited him, and on being questioned as to the cause of the sudden change, he declared that Potamiaena, three days after her martyrdom, had appeared to him by night, and informed him that she had performed her promise, and that he should shortly die. After this he was put to death.

This anecdote of the times, shows the prevalence of fanatical philosophy, will-worship, and the like. The soldier, Basilides, is converted by a fiction, is ignorant of the word, and dies without baptism; nevertheless he is called "a christian." We have a multitude of such christians in our day, but what are they worth? They only illustrate a delusion, and adorn a tale.

The Thyatiran State of the christian community was in part parallel with a long period of peace, or absence of persecution. For the space of thirty-eight years—from the death of Severus to the reign of Decius—if we except the short turbulent period of Maximin, the church enjoyed a continued calm. During this period of tranquility christianity was fatally paganized; and according to Origen himself, who had been ordained a presbyter, was followed by a great degree of lukewarmness, and much religious indecorum. Let the reader only notice the difference between the scenes he describes and the conduct of christians in the first century, and he will be convinced of the greatness of the declension.

“Several,” says he, “come to church only on solemn festivals; and then not so much for instruction as diversion. Some go out again as soon as they have heard the lecture, without conferring, or asking the pastors any questions. Others stay not till the lecture is ended; and others hear not so much as a single word, but entertain themselves in a corner of the church.” But the ability, as well as the taste for the conquest of this careless spirit, had much declined in the eastern part of the christian community. Origen complains elsewhere of the ambitious and haughty manners of pastors, and of the improper steps which some took to obtain preferments.

When Origen was about sixty years of age, he had a discussion with certain in Arabia who denied the inherent immortality of “the soul.” Being a professor of paganized christianity, it was natural enough for him to oppose them, and for both him and Eusebius to style the denial “a false opinion.” Eusebius says, that the Arabians asserted, that “the human soul, as long as the present state of the world existed, perished at death, and died with the body, but that it would be raised again with the body at the time of the resurrection.” This, as we have seen, was Polycarp’s view also. But Polycarp was not heathenized as the contemporaries of Origen and Eusebius were. A considerable council was therefore held by the philosophizers, for the support and sanction of their darling opinion; and as Origen was an expert sophist, they requested him again to discuss the point, which he did, “and with so much force,” says Eusebius, “that those who had been led astray, completely changed their opinions.”

Origen died during the Decian persecution aged seventy; and when he was about passing from the stage of life, that is, about five years before, the more excellent Cyprian was converted to the faith, A.D. 246. He was a professor of elocution in the city of Carthage, in the Roman Africa, and a man of wealth, quality, and dignity. About twelve years comprehended the whole scene of his christian life—from A.D. 246 to A.D. 258. He was converted under the reign of Philip, and put to death under that of Valerian. Two years after his conversion, he became “the Bishop” of the ecclesia in Carthage, a dignity which, through the growth of superstition, was advancing to excess. Though expressions savoring of haughtiness and asperity are to be found in his writings, excited by particular provocations, ambition was not his vice; his zeal was fervid, and sustained by a temper remarkably active and sanguine, yet allied with the milder qualities of gentleness, love, and humility. He was a very different and superior character to Origen; and a remarkable consequence of which was, that while Origen, among the pagans, succeeded in gaining the favor of the great, and was heard by them with patience, Cyprian could not be endured in his preaching and writings, except by real christians.

But my purpose in the introduction of Origen and Cyprian to the reader, is not a biographical sketch and comparison of the men, but simply as representatives of their times. Persecution reigned with astonishing fury in the beginning of Cyprian’s pastorate; and he recognizes in it a punishment upon the church for the iniquity of professors. In a treatise of his upon “The Lapsed,” is an affecting account of the falling away of the generality from the spirit of christianity, which had taken place before his conversion, and which moved God to chastise them. “If the cause of our miseries,” says he, “be investigated, the cure of the wound may be found. The Lord would have his family to be tried. And because long peace had corrupted the discipline divinely revealed to us, the heavenly chastisement hath raised up our faith, which had lain almost dormant: and when by our sins we had deserved to suffer still more, the merciful Lord so moderated all things, that the whole scene rather deserves the name of a trial than a persecution. Each had been bent on improving his patrimony; and had forgotten what believers had done under the Apostles, and what they ought always to do. They were brooding over the arts of amassing wealth. The pastors and the deacons each forgot their duty. Works of mercy were neglected, and discipline was at the lowest ebb. Luxury and effeminacy prevailed. Meretricious arts in dress were cultivated. Fraud and deceit were practiced among brethren. Christians could unite themselves in marriage with unbelievers; could swear not only without reverence, but even without veracity. With haughty asperity they despised their ecclesiastical superiors. They railed against one another with outrageous acrimony, and conducted quarrels with determined malice. Even many bishops, who ought to be guides and patterns to the rest, neglecting the peculiar duties of their stations, gave themselves up to secular pursuits. They deserted their places of residence, and their flocks. They travelled through distant provinces in quest of pleasure and gain; gave no assistance to the needy brethren; but were insatiable in their thirst for money. They possessed estates by fraud, and multiplied usury. What have we not deserved for such a conduct? Even the Divine Word hath foretold us what we might expect—‘If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments, I will visit their offences with the rod, and their sin with scourges.’ These things had been denounced and foretold, but in vain. Our sins had brought our affairs to that pass, that because we had despised the Lord’s directions, we were obliged to undergo a correction of our multiplied evils, and a trial of our faith, by severe remedies.”

From this testimony of Cyprian it is evident that the falling away from the apostolic standard had become intense in the middle of the third century. It was the very type itself of what exists in our day. Pastors and people were all commingled in the same deep declension from the faith and morals of the gospel. Justin and his philosophical admirers had caused them to commit fornication with Gentilism; and the Spirit had given them space to repent of it in the long peace they had enjoyed. But Pantaenus, and Clemens, and Origen, had only led them on from bad to worse: and now, in the Decian persecution, they were cast into a bed of great tribulation, in which they were killed with death; so that all the ecclesias were brought to know, as Cyprian declares, that the Spirit is he who was searching their reins and hearts; and giving to every one of them according to their works—Rev. 2:21–24.

5. Sardian State.

The state of things deplored by Cyprian was that which resulted in the Sardian, characterized by the Spirit as a death-state. By the generation of professors contemporary with it, it was not so considered. Peace and prosperity reigned, as they regarded it; and they flattered themselves that they were in the enjoyment of great spiritual life—“thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.” The Deity did not see as they saw themselves. He pronounced them dead. That is, christianity was on the verge of extinction; or, as the Spirit explains in the next verse, “ready to die.” Very little of genuine apostolic christianity could be found among the christians in the last half of the third century. The Platonism of the Alexandrian school had corrupted every thing, and eaten out its vitals as a cancer; so that the christian mind was prepared for any absurdities and follies in the name of true religion, as in our day.

Valerian reigned A.D. 253, and for upwards of three years was the friend and protector of the christians. His palace was full of them, and he appears to have had a strong predilection in their favor, which was not at all promotive of spiritual health and vitality.

During the tranquility under this reign, a council was held in Africa by sixty-six bishops with Cyprian at their head. They came together to consider certain questions in agitation. In a letter to Fidus, Cyprian informs the reader of things which will convince him how far they had now departed from the genius, spirit, and principles of the faith. Fidus had denied that infants should be immersed within the second or third day after birth; and maintained that the ancient law of circumcision should be so far adhered to that they ought not to be immersed till the eighth day. But Cyprian and the Sixty-Six were all of a very different opinion. He calls infant immersion “spiritual circumcision;” and says it ought not to be impeded by the law of carnal circumcision; for that it was essential to the salvation of the soul, which would be lost if death ensued before the second or third day. The following is his argument, upon which the “divines” of our century have made no advance. “If even to the foulest offenders,” says he, “when they afterwards believe, remission of sins is granted, and none is prohibited from baptism and grace; how much more should an infant be admitted, who, just born, hath not sinned in any respect, except that, being carnally produced according to Adam, he hath, in first birth, contracted the contagion of the ancient deadly nature; and who obtains the remission of sins with the less difficulty, because not his own actual guilt, but that of another, is to be remitted.

“Our sentence, therefore, dearest brother, in the council was, that none, by us, should be prohibited from immersion and the grace of God, who is merciful and kind to all.”

In these few lines from Cyprian, what a striking illustration of the Sardian state of spiritual death is here! We learn from them that the leaders of the ecclesias believed, and therefore taught,

1. The immortality of the soul according to Plato;
2. That said soul, if but two or three days old, would be lost, if the infant owner were not immersed;
3. That immersion and grace, without faith, imparted remission of sins to infants;
4. That infants were damned for a sin committed by Adam over four thousand years before;
5. That immersion and grace in the case of infants was not for the remission of their own sins, but for that of another—of Adam. Hence, Adam must have been pardoned every time an infant was dipped and regenerated by “grace!”
6. That infant immersion was “spiritual circumcision.”

Such were the dogmata gravely affirmed by this African Council, A.D. 253, all its members pious professors of christianity, who had recently emerged from the horrors of the Decian trial. “They had a name to live.” We know what this means when we look at the clergy around us, and their dupes on every side. All these believe with Cyprian and the Sixty-Six, excepting that they think the Roman Africans used too much water. Our Cyprianites have substituted the sprinkling of the face for the immersion of the infants, in obedience to the See of Rome, on the plea that a few drops of water with “grace” is as good as an ocean; and so it is in the case before us; for water, much or little, is of no account at all, for infant or adult, where faith exists not in the subject; as it is written, “without faith it is impossible to please God; for he that cometh to him must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.”

“They had a name to live,” and are thus spoken of by a Cyprianite historian. “Here is an assembly of sixty-six pastors, men of approved fidelity and gravity, who have stood the fiery trial of some of the severest persecutions ever known, and who have testified their love to the Lord Jesus Christ, in a more striking manner than any Antipedobaptists have had an opportunity of doing in our day; and, if we may judge of their religious views by those of Cyprian—and they are all in perfect harmony with him—they are not wanting in any fundamental of godliness.” Thus Milner commends them, and pronounces them christians of a holy and vital sort! But the Spirit gives a very different judgment in the case; and saith to the presbytery of the Sardian state, “I know thy works, that thou has a name that thou livest, and art dead. I have not found thy works perfect before the Deity. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent.” In 253, they had let slip the gospel originally preached by the apostles. The majority of professors, as in our day, had become oblivious of the truth; and only “a few names” in the Sardian state remained “who had not defiled their garments” with Origenism and Cyprianism.

Another dogma started about this time was, that “those whose weak state of health did not permit them to be washed in water, were yet sufficiently baptized by being sprinkled.” Cyprian observes, that “the virtue of baptism ought not to be estimated, in a carnal manner, by the quantity of external apparatus.” All “christendom,” now called “orthodox,” is essentially agreed with Cyprian; for even baptists admit the christianity of Quakers who repudiate the use of water altogether.

Dionysius of Alexandria, a pupil of Origen, flourished at this time. He opposed the truth that the Millennium is introduced after the resurrection; and finding how much use had been made of the Apocalypse in supporting the doctrine, he gave his thoughts upon it, and confessed, that though he revered its contents, he did not understand their scope.

Paul of Samosata was another Sardian. He flourished A.D. 264, as bishop of Antioch, and instructor of Zenobia, the Queen of the East, in his own notions of christianity. He taught, that Jesus Christ was by nature a common man like others. He was artful, eloquent, deceitful, and otherwise immoral. He was deposed A.D. 269 by a council of seventy bishops whose indictment against him argues an awful degeneracy from the truth in this primitive arena of the labors of Saul of Tarsus and his companions in the gospel.

By this time Monkery, introduced by Paul the first hermit, received considerable impetus through Anthony the Egyptian. The spirit of Paul the Hermit was first incorporated by Anthony A.D. 270, whose biography was written by Athanasius, who was contemporary with monasticism in full blast. Anthony’s austerities were excessive, and the most ridiculous stories are told of his contests with the Devil, which forcibly illustrate the self-righteous pride and vain-glory of his disposition. But, as we are not writing a history of monkery, but only citing examples illustrative of the “falling away” in the successive stages of its development to the revelation of the Man of Sin-Power, we shall leave this celebrated monk busily engaged in the Sardian state of Christendom propagating the monastic disposition, and extending its influence not only into the fourth century, but for many ages after. We therefore dismiss him with the remark, that “the faith and love of the gospel received towards the close of this century a fatal blow from the encouragement of this unchristian practice.”

6. Philadelphian State.

In the apostolical state of the christian community the faith, hope, and love of the brethren was conspicuous and strong. But after the One Body had passed through the Ephesian, Smyranean, Pergamian, Thyatiran, and Sardian, states, it was greatly enfeebled in all its primitive forces; so that when it was fairly established in the Philadelphian, its brightest examples, who had kept the word and had not denied the name of the Spirit, constituted but “a little strength” for the whole. This “little strength” was the succession of the “few names” of the Sardian state which had not defiled their garments—the few grains of salt that preserved the body from utter, or Laodicean, corruption.

“An open door” was set before those who constituted this little strength of the christian community, which “no man could shut.” The emperor Valerian, who for the first three years of his reign, had been the friend and protector of christians, in the year 257, became their enemy. A magician, named Macrianus, a man of diabolical wickedness and folly, having gained an ascendancy over the mind of Valerian, induced him to persecute them with deadly animosity. The persecution lasted three years and a half, when Valerian was taken prisoner by Sapor king of Persia, who detained him the rest of his life, and made use of his neck in mounting his horse; and at last commanded him to be flayed and salted.

After Valerian’s captivity a door was opened to the christian community, through which entered rest and peace, which continued forty years. About the year 262, Valerian was succeeded by his son Gallienus, who proved a sincere friend to the christians, though in other respects, an emperor of no repute. By edicts he stopped the persecution, and gave the bishops letters of license to return to their pastorates. One of these letters, as preserved by Eusebius, runs thus:

“The emperor Caesar Gallienus to Dionysius the bishop of Alexandria, and to Pinna and Demetrius, with the rest of the bishops. The benefit of our favor we command to be published through the world: and I have, therefore ordered every one to withdraw from such places as were devoted to religious uses; so that you may make use of the authority of my edict against any molestation; for I have sometime since, granted you my protection; wherefore Cyrenius the governor of the province will observe the rescript which I have sent.” He directed also another edict to certain bishops, by which he restored to them the places in which they buried their dead.

Thus the Spirit set an open door before the little strength, which no man in power could shut for forty years. Gallienus, the instrument in the hand of Providence through which this opening was effected, seems to have been more like a modern than an ancient sovereign—a man of taste, indolence, and philosophy—disposed to cherish everything that looked like knowledge and liberty of thinking; by no means so kind and generous in his constant practice as his profession might seem to promise; he was the slave of his passions, and led away by every sudden feeling that seized his imagination. The christians appear to have been considered by him as a sect of new philosophers; and as he judged it improper to persecute philosophers of any sort, they found a complete toleration under a prince, whose conscience seems to have been influenced by no religious attachment whatever.

We now behold in the full development of the Philadelphian state, a new scene—Christians legally tolerated under a pagan government for forty years! How they must by this time have approximated in their principles to those of the tolerating power. The tolerance of Gallienus was adopted as the policy of the succeeding emperors to the end of the third century. It was violated only in one instance; the effect of which was presently dissipated by the Spirit who would not permit the door to be shut. The moral influence of this long peace was, how ever, exceedingly disastrous. “This new scene,” says Milner, “did not prove favorable to the growth of grace and holiness. In no period since the apostles was there ever so great a general decay as this; not even in particular instances, can we discover during this interval, much of lively christianity”—so very small was the “little strength.”

The profession of christianity was now becoming fashionable. Dioclesian began to reign A.D. 284. For the space of eighteen years he was extremely indulgent to its professors. His wife Prisca, and his daughter Valeria were in some sense christians secretly. The eunuchs of his palace and his most important officers were also “christians;” and their wives and families openly professed the faith. Christians, so-called, held honorable offices in various parts of the empire; innumerable crowds attended christian worship; the old buildings could no longer receive them; and in all cities wide and large edifices were erected.

If Christ’s kingdom were “the church,” and had been of the pre-Constantinian ages; and if its strength and beauty were to be measured by secular prosperity, the era of its greatness might be fixed in these earlier ages of Dioclesian. But, on the contrary, it was preeminently an era of great declension. During the whole of this third century the work of faith in purity and power, had been in rapid decay. The connexion with philosophers was one of the principal causes, outward peace and secular advantages completed the corruption. Discipline was now relaxed exceedingly; bishops and people were in a state of malice; endless quarrels were fomented among contending parties; and ambition and covetousness had, in general, gained the ascendancy in the christian body. Some there, doubtless, were who mourned in secret, and strove in vain to stop the abounding torrent of the evil. They were the “little strength, who kept the word, and denied not the Spirit’s name;” but with this exception, all the rest called “christian” were “of the Synagogue of the Satan who said they are Jews, and are not, but do lie.” The hour of temptation was concurrent with this period of forty years; a trial, from which the generation of believers in Philadelphia contemporary with John, were kept; as well as this “little strength” coeval with the embryo formation of the Laodicean consummation of the Apostasy. For the space of thirty years there was an extreme dearth of real christian excellencies. No bishop or pastor eminent for intelligence, faith, zeal, and labor, appears in the history of the times. But notwithstanding this decline of zeal and principle, still christian worship was constantly attended; and the number of nominal converts was increasing; but the faith of Christ itself was now an ordinary business.

Eusebius, the ecclesiastical historian, who was born about the year 259, flourished in the transition of the Philadelphian into the Laodicean state, in which last he died A.D. 340. He was the most learned of all the christians, whose learning and philosophy were inimical to the simplicity which is in Christ. Plato and Origen were the masters in the school of his divinity.

In this Philadelphian state, which merged into the Laodicean fully developed at the opening of the Seventh Seal, “TERMINATED, or nearly so, as far as appears, that great first effusion of the Spirit of God which began at the day of Pentecost. Human depravity effected throughout a general decay of goodness; and one generation of men elapsed,” says Milner, “with very slender proofs of the spiritual presence of Christ with his Church.”

Eusebius confesses this declension in the following words:—“The heavy hand of God’s judgments began softly, by little and little to visit us after his wonted manner. The persecution which was raised against us, took place first among the christians who were in military service; but we were not at all moved with his hand, nor took any pains to return to God. We heaped sin upon sin, judging, like careless Epicureans, that God cared not for our sins, nor would ever visit us on account of them. And our pretended shepherds, laying aside the rule of godliness, practised among themselves contention and division.” He goes on to observe, that “the dreadful persecution of Dioclesian was then inflicted on the church (A.D. 303–13,) as a just punishment, and as the most proper chastisement for their iniquities.” This persecution will be treated of in illustration of the Fifth Seal

7. Laodicean State.

The “little strength” of the Philadelphian state of the christian community was now exhausted, at the end of the “little season” of ten years, during which the “fellow-servants and brethren” were being killed by Diocletian, Galerius, and Maximin, as foretold in the prediction of the Fifth Seal. The revolution of the Sixth Seal had taken that which hindered the revelation of the Man of Sin out of the way, and had consequently restored peace and worldly prosperity to “the Church,” of which the emperor Constantine had become the Head. The Laodicean state, which had been forming previous to and during the Diocletian persecution, was now fully inaugurated, and emblazoned in the legislative union which Constantine decreed. Henceforth, appears before the world, not the “One Body” of the faithful in Christ Jesus, but a new thing, or wonder in the heaven, styled by its admirers “THE HOLY CATHOLIC CHURCH.” In contemplating this Laodicean institution, the spirit of pure and undefiled religion, which is unspotted by the world, is not seen. Pompous apparatus, augmented superstitions and unmeaning forms of piety, much show and little substance appear. This is the impression which the account given by Eusebius leaves upon the mind.

The following extract from Milner strikingly illustrates the Laodicean character of the time. “If we look at the external appearance of christianity,” says he, “nothing can be more splendid. An emperor full of zeal for the propagation of the only divine religion, by edicts restores to the church every thing of which it had been deprived, indemnifies those who had suffered, honors the pastors exceedingly, recommends to governors of provinces to promote the gospel; and though he will neither oblige them nor any others to profess it, yet he forbids them to make use of the sacrifices commonly made by prefects; he erects churches exceedingly sumptuous and ornamental, with distinctions of the parts corresponding in some measure to those in Solomon’s temple; discovers with much zeal the Sepulchre of Christ at Jerusalem, real or pretended, and honors it with a most expensive sacred edifice. His mother Helena fills the whole Roman world with her munificent acts in support of religion; and after erecting churches, and travelling from place to place to evidence her zeal, dies before her son, aged eighty years. Nor is the christian (properly the catholic) cause neglected even out of the bounds of the Roman empire. Constantine zealously pleads, in a letter to Sapor, king of Persia, for the christians of his dominions; he destroys idol temples, prohibits impious pagan sights, puts an end to the savage fights of gladiators, stands up with respectful silence to hear the sermon of Eusebius, bishop of Caesarea, the historian; furnishes him with the volume of the scriptures for the use of the churches; orders the observation of the festivals of martyrs; has prayers and reading of the scripture at his court; dedicates churches with great solemnity; makes christian orations himself, one of which, of considerable length, is preserved by the historian, his favorite bishop; directs the sacred observance of the Lord's day, to which he adds that of Friday also, the day of Christ's crucifixion; and teaches the soldiers of his army to pray by a short form made for their use.

"It may seem invidious," continues Milner, "to throw any shade upon this picture; but though the abolition of lewd, impious, and inhuman customs must have been of great advantage to society, and though the benefits of christianity compared with paganism, to the world, appear very strong by these means, yet all this, if sound principle be wanting, is but form and shadow"—a mere improvement on paganism. "As it was difficult to clear Origen of depreciating the divinity of Christ, so it is still more difficult to exculpate Eusebius, with whom he was a favorite author. There seems to have been both in Eusebius and some of his friends, and probably in the emperor himself, a disposition, of which, perhaps, they were not conscious, to lessen the honors of the Son of God. His sermons breathe little of christianity, so far as I have seen them; and is so rhetorical and indistinct in his theological discourses, that it is difficult to extract any determinate propositions from his writings.

"It was to be expected that great defectiveness of doctrine would not fail to influence practice. External piety flourished, monastic societies in particular places were also growing, but faith, love, heavenly mindedness, appear very rare; yet among poor and obscure christians there may have been more godliness than could be seen at courts, and among bishops and persons of eminence. The doctrine of real conversion was very much lost, or external baptism was placed in its stead; and the true doctrine of justification by faith, and the true practical use of a crucified saviour for troubled consciences, were scarcely to be seen at this time. There was much outward religion, but this could not make men saints in heart and life. The worst part of the character of Constantine is, that as he grew older he grew more culpable, oppressive in his own family, oppressive in the government, oppressive by eastern superfluous magnificence; and the history of the times shows how little true humility and charity were now known in the christian world, while superstition and self-righteousness were making vigorous shoots, and the real gospel of Christ was hidden from men who professed it."

Such was the pass at which christianity had arrived at the opening of the Sixth Seal, A.D. 311. Laodiceanism had extinguished the "little strength" of the Philadelphian state which preceded it. In this, the Spirit had "come quickly," or suddenly, upon them in the judgments of the Fifth Seal for the abominations of the existing and previous states. Christianity was now paganized; and as ministered by the bishops and presbyters of the churches, was ineffectual for the salvation of men. It was no longer of use in their hands for the taking out of a people from among the Gentiles for the Name—Acts 15:14. The time had therefore come to spue them out of the Spirit's mouth. As Milner says, "their external appearance was splendid;" and they imagined that, being enriched and increased with goods by Constantine's munificence, "they had need of nothing;" but the Spirit declares, that they were ignorant of their true spiritual condition; and that they were really "miserable, and pitiable, and poor, and blind, and naked." For the great mass of them, he had no love. They preferred to bask in the imperial sunshine, and to enjoy the favors of the glorious emperor. He therefore left them to their own folly; and as they had set their affections upon things that perish, "God sent upon them a strong delusion unto their believing in the lie; that all might be condemned who believe not the truth, but have pleasure in the unrighteousness”—2 Thess. 2:11. “As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten;” but these Laodiceans, of what had become under Constantine’s patronage “the Holy Roman Catholic Church,” were without chastisement, and were therefore “bastards, and not sons.” The sons were still a people subject to tribulation; and we see them in Rev. 12, as a fugitive woman fleeing for refuge into the wings of the Great Eagle, far removed from the presence of the new Imperio-Episcopal Despotism—a tyranny constituted by the unhallowed union of church and state.

Let the reader understand then distinctly, that the Constantinian era was that in which the Apostasy from true christianity as originally set forth by the apostles, was perfected; and that being perfected, the Spirit withdrew himself from it entirely. It became as completely separated from the Anointed Jesus and his love, as the loathsome ejecta vomited from the stomach of the person vomiting. The Holy Catholic Church so-called, is a mere spue; and all the churches of which she is “the Mother,” are “the Abominations” that have effervesced from its putrefaction. They are mere forms of Laodiceanism—the genuine progeny of the Roman Jezebel. Since the period of the Sixth Seal, the true believers of the gospel must be sought for in a different channel. They are not to be found among catholics, Greek or Latin; nor among any that recognize catholics in faith, practice, and spirit, as christians. They are not to be found among infant sprinklers of any “name” or “denomination;” nor among adult-immersionists, who understand not “the gospel of the kingdom” preached by Jesus and the apostles. Christians are a separate and distinct class from all these, who are but Laodiceans in faith, spirit, state, and practice. These have been the persecutors of the saints in all ages; that is, from the time the Spirit vomited them out of his mouth in the beginning of the fourth century to the time in which I am now writing; and they will continue to persecute in word or deed, or in both where they are able, “until the Ancient of Days come;” for the Laodicean State being concurrent with the Seventh Seal, the judgments of which have been appointed especially for the punishment and tormentation of the Laodiceans, not for their chastisement as sons beloved, but for their destruction as despised bastards—it does not terminate till “the wrath of God” contained in the Seventh Vial section of the Seventh Seal, is poured out to the last drop—Rev. 15:1, 8. In my “Chronological Tableau” I have, in the third column, inscribed certain names which are familiar to the readers of history.

They are by no means all that might have been appropriately inserted there. They are but a specimen of an immense multitude who have figured in the arena of the Laodicean Apostasy in its internal strifes and agitations. I have inscribed them as names illustrative of the principal genera and species of the class, APOSTASIA; which Paul taught was to precede and extend to the epiphany of Christ’s parousia, or manifestation of his presence. All the popes from Constantine, and their cardinals, bishops, priests, and so forth; and all in fellowship with them; and all the several orders of monkery; and the hierarchies of protestantism, which is but a modification of Romanism, might have been detailed. But such an enumeration is unnecessary. The few we have selected will illustrate the whole, and stand as the representative of those who boast in them as the stars, and constellations of their pietism. Many of them have been useful in their day and generation. Justin, Origen, Clemens, and others, though corruptors of the faith, were useful in transforming paganism into Laodiceanism; which, though intrinsically contemptible and worthless as a means of salvation, is an improvement upon paganism. So Huss, Jerome, Luther, Calvin, Knox, and such like, all of them Romanists and ignorant of the gospel of the Kingdom, which consequently they never obeyed, were useful in blindly developing protestantism, which, with all its imperfections and worthlessness as a means of eternal life, is an improvement on Romish superstition and immorality. The last names on the list are representative of contemporary dilutions of protestantism. Whether they be improvements upon the original is questionable; they are at all events better than Romanism, if we except Mormonism, which is cruel as the grave.

They are forms of error, which, however diversified among themselves, are essentially Laodicean; yet, are not without their use in contributing to antagonize the rich and powerful sects; and to prevent them from coalescing into a colossal despotism, by which the gospel of the kingdom might be utterly suppressed. Pious faithlessness of the word is characteristic of them all. They are without exception the exact counterpart of the Laodicean Angel contemporary with John. The characteristics of this are equally those of Laodiceans from, Constantine to the manifestation of the presence of the Christ—"miserable, pitiable, poor, blind, and naked." The Spirit, in the present advocacy of the gospel of the kingdom, "counsels them to buy of him gold tried in the fire, that they may be rich; and white raiment that they may be clothed, and that the shame of their nakedness do not appear; and to anoint their eyes with eye-salve that they may see." Thus, "he stands at the door and knocks;" and ready to come as a thief—Rev. 16:15. But for the most part they pay no heed. Yet, if any will open, he will enter in, and sup with him. Who then will hearken to what the Spirit saith to the churches?

Appendix

The Apocalypse comprises the final message of the Lord Jesus Christ to "his servants," that they might understand certain matters relating to the purpose of Yahweh that were previously hidden from them; particularly in relation to events that were to come to pass (Rev. 1:1, 19; 4:1; 22:6). The message is not limited to prophecy, but also contains exhortation, warning and encouragement. However, its main purpose is to reveal the significance of the "times and seasons" which as "children of light" it is expected that we should comprehend (1 Thess. 5:1–5).

In Eureka, Brother Thomas has written:

"The Apocalypse was given to the end that the servants of Deity who are keeping their garments might be able to discern the signs of the times preceding the apocalypse of Christ; and the real nature of things extant in their several generations. No believer, understanding this prophecy, could be seduced into fellowship with the clerical institutions of the world; because he would see them in all their native deformity and sin."

Concerning Eureka, Brother Roberts wrote:

"I, for one, am indebted for my understanding of this most difficult part of the testimony of God. Before reading that exposition, I understood only snatches of it. Now I am thankful to be able to follow it in its entirety. Do not be tempted to think that we lean upon a man's judgment in the matter. Dr. Thomas not only gives you his conclusions, but the reasons which led him to those conclusions. We are able to make his conclusions our own by a process which makes us independent of all men as to the ground on which we hold them. The best proof of the soundness of the views advanced by Dr. Thomas lies in this, that once a reader is directed by him to the Bible, and becomes a Bible student, he can dispense with Dr. Thomas' book altogether so far as steadfastness of conviction is concerned. The Bible nourishes that conviction from day to day."

The Apocalypse, therefore, comprises a most precious gift from God. One, too, in which we can place implicit trust. Events have been fulfilling just as predicted. Nothing has failed. Paganism disappeared; the apostasy became enthroned; the Papacy arose and ran its cruel and unhallowed course; the Saracenic, Turkish, and Napoleonic scourges have performed their appointed work; the Ottoman Empire has disappeared and Turkey itself is under threat; the way of the Kings who are out of the Sun's rising is being prepared in the restoration of Israel; the world is distracted by the "unclean spirits like frogs"; a state of restlessness, antagonism and preparation for war is in evidence; and we stand on the eve of Christ's return. We have much indeed for which to be grateful in the gift of The Apocalypse, and also for its illuminating and stimulating key: Eureka.

The Apocalypse contains its own evidences of divine inspiration. The fulfilment of its many predictions of course is the most powerful of these evidences. But the structure of the book is a no less striking proof. Had man been the author of The Apocalypse, he would have given everything in chronological order, finishing up with the Kingdom. Not so with this divine programme. The reader is brought to the end, to the Millennium, many times over. There is an explanation for the course adopted. Believers, whilst being cheered in the various ages by the unfolding of the revealed events relating to their own times, have by the Kingdom being linked with those events, been constantly reminded of the grand consummation in view.

WHY THE APOCALYPSE SHOULD BE STUDIED

Paul wrote that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3:16–17).

All sections of the Word, therefore, should engage our attention; all of it is designed to equip the student for a wonderful and exciting destiny: life eternal in the Kingdom of God. The Book of Revelation should not be neglected. But, unfortunately, it is neglected by many who believe that it is beyond their comprehension to grasp. Admittedly, it is a book that is hard to understand; but so is Scripture generally, for it sets forth divine wisdom, which is far above human thought (Isa. 55:8–11).

The Blessings of the Book

However, more than any other book of the Bible, divine blessings are pronounced upon those who study the Apocalypse with understanding. Daniel was told that "the wise shall understand" the prophecies delivered unto him (Dan. 12:10), John in Patmos was told that the wise who came to understand the things revealed unto him will be "blessed."

In fact, this "blessing" is pronounced seven times throughout the book. And that is quite significant, for The Apocalypse is a book of "sevens": seven messages to the Ecclesias; a seven-sealed book; seven trumpeters; seven vials, and so forth. Seven is the number of completion, the number of an oath which seals a matter. The proclamation of seven blessings throughout the book emphasises the importance of its study.

Here are the seven blessings:

1. —A Blessing pronounced upon the accurate study of its message:
"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein" (Rev. 1:3).
2. —A Blessing pronounced upon those who will be resurrected to help fulfil it:
"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them" (Rev. 14:13).
3. —A Blessing upon those who watch and walk in the light of its teaching:
"Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments" (Rev. 16:15).

4. —A Blessing upon those who partake of the marriage supper of the Lamb:
“Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb” (Rev. 19:9).
5. —A Blessing upon those who attain unto life eternal:
“Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power” (Rev. 20:6).
6. —A Blessing upon those who keep the sayings of the book:
“Blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book” (Rev. 22:7).
7. —A Blessing upon those who keep the Lord’s Commandments:
“Blessed are they that do his commandments” (Rev. 22:14).

The word blessed is from the Greek makarios and signifies to pronounce happy. A cognate word is found in James 5:11: “We count them happy which endure.” The word is used in relation to the beatitudes (Matt. 5), and there denotes the nature of the blessing. The “poor in spirit,” the “mourners,” the “meek,” the “hungry and thirsty,” the “persecuted” are pronounced “blessed” or “happy,” because they are enabled to look beyond their present sufferings, to the glory of the Kingdom of God.

The Apocalypse sets forth that hope as a reality. It makes clearer and more substantial the joyous anticipations of the present. More than any other book of the Bible, it enables one to look beyond the present to the joy of the future. It enables one to appreciate better the words of Paul:

“For all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace might through the thanksgiving of many redound to the glory of God. For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal” (2 Cor. 4:15–18).

A Message for Every Age

Throughout the Revelation, Christ has injected personal messages to his brethren of every age. For example, his messages to the seven Ecclesias related primarily to the brethren of the first century; his encouraging comment recorded in Revelation 13:9–10 particularly concerned the faithful of the Middle Ages who had to endure the bitter persecution levelled against them by the Papacy during the time of its ascendancy; the proclamation of Revelation 16:15 is directed to those living at the epoch of his return.

So the book has encouragement for believers of every age, and words of warning, exhortation and advice for every situation. Above all else, it directs attention to the time when “God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away” (Rev. 21:4).

The book, therefore, comprises Christ’s personal message to “his servants” whom he treats as “his friends” (John 15:15). As his friends, let us heed the words he has directed for our learning and admonition, and particularly the powerful exhortation that is inserted in the prophecy of Chapter 16 for the benefit of believers of this Age.

A Blessing or a Curse?

The Apocalypse pronounces a blessing upon those who come to understand its message accurately.

There are three main schools of interpretation of this book. They are: the Immediate, the Futurist, and the Historist.

The Immediate sees it all fulfilled prior to the destruction of the Jewish State by the Romans in A.D. 70. According to this interpretation, the seven kings of Revelation 17:10, are the seven emperors: Augustus, Tiberias, Gaius, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho. The number of the beast—666—is the total numerical value of Nero Caesar spelled in Hebrew letters, and so on.

The Futurist understands the major part of the book as referring to what is still future, that is, to the end-epoch of the present age, and onwards. The theory introduces a confused jumble of events unlike anything else in Scripture; so that Christ is pictured as returning to the earth to wage war, and then ascending to heaven again, to finally return to complete his labours. The saints go forth to fight, only to be slain, and their bodies to remain for three days in the street of the great city (Rev. 11), to be resurrected, and “ascend into heaven.”

The Historist, taking Rev. 1:3, 19 as a guide, sees the book as a prophetic programme covering the whole of history from apostolic days to the end of time. The book thus becomes divinely predepicted history, from about A.D. 96 when John was persecuted in Patmos (Rev. 1:9) to the present time and beyond, depicting political and ecclesiastical events in cipher, figure or code. In this view, the book is unfolding itself throughout history, even through the present age.

That is the interpretation set forth by Brother Thomas in Eureka. We fail to see how any other view can be accepted in view of the statements of the Revelator:

“The time is at hand” (Rev. 1:3); “Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter” (Rev. 1:19).

These statements surely indicate that the Apocalypse relates to things that then shortly would begin to come to pass, and would continue on until the Kingdom is established. How can the Immediate theory be sustained in view of such requirements as “God shall wipe away all tears, and there shall be no more death” (Rev. 21:4)? How can the Futurist view be sustained in view of the Revelator’s explicit claim that the prophecies set down “must shortly come to pass”? We have read the theories advanced in support of this Futurist view, have given them consideration, but have been compelled to set them aside, not merely because we consider them an incorrect interpretation, but because that very form of interpretation would undermine basic doctrines of the Truth when taken to their logical conclusion. For example, a theory that demands that Christ returns twice; that the saints suddenly become belligerent and fight against the powers that be in a losing battle, to die, be raised and ascend to heaven, conflicts with basic teaching of the Gospel, and must be set aside.

We do not believe, therefore, that we can “agree to differ” regarding the interpretation of the Apocalypse. Whilst we can sympathise with brethren who may be hazy about its meaning, and therefore in need of instruction which they are prepared to receive, we believe that those who set out to destroy the line of interpretation set down in Eureka do a veritable disservice to the Truth; even though they do not intend this.

The matter is quite important. If a blessing is attached to those who “know accurately” the significance of the message; what are we to say of those who would set forth an interpretation that would distort its meaning? Obviously their theory conveys a curse; and as such should be opposed even though they might be quite sincere in their propagation of it. Certainly, we cannot remain indifferent to such expositions. When the basic doctrines of the Truth are challenged we are expected to defend them, and show the fallacy of the error advanced in their stead. In similar manner we should defend the truth concerning the interpretation of this book, particularly when the Lord Jesus himself has proclaimed a special blessing upon those who attain unto its true understanding.

With many Christadelphians, we believe that though Eureka is not inspired as the Scriptures are inspired, its author was divinely guided in the interpretation set forth. That does not mean that we necessarily endorse every detail of it; but it does mean that by and large, we accept it as the true meaning of the Revelation. We are convinced that an unbiased examination of the evidence will demonstrate the soundness of what is therein set forth.

PUBLICATION OF EUREKA

The first volume of Eureka was published in 1862, but long before then, the attention of its author had been directed towards the study of The Apocalypse. Indeed, for over twelve years he had pondered its message, and had written extensively on its contents in the pages of his various Journals. Eureka represents his major work, and in our opinion, the most valuable piece of writing outside the inspired Scriptures themselves.

Of the three volumes of Eureka, the first, in expounding the messages of Christ to the Ecclesias, must rank very high in importance. Exposition and exhortation are blended in the explanations of the symbols used by the Spirit and their application to the saints. Dr. Thomas had a sound grasp of Scriptural principles, and the study of his principles of interpretation provides the student with a key that unlocks the mysteries of the Word, and allows him to build on that which it reveals. As a medical doctor he had a mind free of human theological tradition, so that when he gave himself to the study of the word, he was very susceptible to its guidance. Concerning him, the late John Carter wrote:

“His educational and professional training combined to give him keen perception. His natural qualities of fearlessness and steadfastness led him to hold fast that which he perceived to be the Truth. Like Paul the apostle, he had one consuming purpose, to respond to God’s commands. Such a strong motive is an unifying force in life, and it gave zest to the study of the Oracles, earnestness in preaching, endurance in opposition, courage in disappointment; it enabled him to put aside worldly gain, and to toil in bringing God’s truth to others.”

The apex of his literary work undoubtedly is found in Eureka.

Volume 2

PREFACE

It is with no little satisfaction that the author is at length enabled to place this volume of his EXPOSITION OF THE APOCALYPSE in the hands of its subscribers. To subscribers and authors in general, the issuing of books by subscription must always be a work of anxiety; especially where, as in the instance of Eureka, the subscribers thereto have made its author the depository of nearly two thousand dollars in advance of the performance of what he had proposed in his prospectus. This was a signal act of confidence in his integrity, exceedingly gratifying to his feelings; for which he takes this opportunity of returning his sincere and heartfelt acknowledgment. It was an act of confidence also in his ability to perform the difficult work of exposition. He trusts, therefore, that now the volume is in the subscribers’ hands, and they can leisurely familiarize themselves with its contents, they will come to see that their confidence has not been misplaced.

When the prospectus was sent upon its mission, the author was far from being sanguine of success. The general indifference, and prejudice existing against the Apocalypse; the great cost of the proposed exposition; and the uncontradicted calumnies so industriously circulated by the author's enemies, cooperated to create no little misgiving in regard to the success of the undertaking.

But, when Deity signified the Apocalypse to the apostle John, did He not intend it to be understood by His servants? Was it not revealed for their information; and especially for the enlightenment of that generation of them which might be contemporary with the denouement of the plot so skillfully laid, and admirably worked out, in all the ages and generations of the past, by "the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, who had prevailed to open the scroll, and to loose the seven seals thereof?" Was all the wonderful and mighty working to be lost upon this generation, and to be in regard to it as though it had never been? This, the author could not bring himself to believe. His thorough and abiding conviction was, that the Apocalypse was not only given to be understood, but also to be understood before the appearing of THE ANCIENT OF DAYS. For otherwise, how could His servants watch, and perceive the signs therein revealed, and be prepared for his coming? The apocalyptic benediction is pronounced upon "HIM who knows accurately," and upon "THEM who give heed to the words of the prophecy, and observe narrowly the things written in it." But, how can this be done by them who understand it not? And where are they to whom it is intelligible? If any such exist, why is their light under a bushel; why hath it not shone forth to all that are in the house?

Without scriptural, historic, and chronological exposition, the Apocalypse is unintelligible to the people of the nineteenth century. Some imagine that because it is a revelation, it must necessarily expound itself to the illumination of a wayfaring man though a fool. This, however, is but a poor compliment to themselves who, with all their boasted science and scholarship, are altogether in the dark concerning it. But, from the days of DIONYSIUS, "the great bishop of Alexandria," to the time of PIO NONO, the present spiritual incumbent of the tottering throne of the Roman Orb, all "the wise and prudent" declare, that without exposition the Apocalypse is an unintelligible mystery. Hence many learned and popular writers of divers of the "names and denominations" have attempted to expound it. Among these are Sir Isaac Newton, Mede, Bishop Newton, Fleming, Faber, Bickersteth, Brooks, Cunningham, Irving, Keith, Maitland, Elliott, Cuning, Lord, and so forth. But no one understanding "THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM," and the doctrine concerning "THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST," can possibly admit that they have succeeded. Believers of this gospel can come to but one conclusion, which is, that all their attempts are signal and decided failures. And, if this class of writers have failed, whither shall we look for an interpreter?

The fact is that there was none. The understanding of the gospel of the kingdom enabled the author to perceive, that the exposition of the Apocalypse was still a desideratum—a thing to be devoutly and earnestly desired. The Apocalypse was given by Deity to Jesus Christ, that He might show it to his servants; and the reason why no exposition was extant, is, that Jesus Christ, who is the truth, had not given the ability to "the wise and prudent" of the Laodicean Apostasy. His servants and brethren were not to be taught by the wise and prudent of the excommunicated COURT OF THE GENTILES. He had "spewed these out of his mouth;" and was it likely, then, that he would confer on such the honor of being the interpreters of his apocalyptic mysteries? By no means.

The exposition, as well as the apocalypse given, must be His. "Let Christ dwell in your hearts by faith." These are the words of Paul; and the Spirit that anointed Jesus said through him, "I AM THE TRUTH." Hence, there can be no correct exposition of the Apocalypse unless CHRIST THE TRUTH give it. No writer on the Apocalypse can do anything aright apart from this inspiration. Unenlightened by "the truth as it is in Jesus," the most learned are as incompetent as the most ignorant. Mr. Elliott says truly: "The Apocalyptic subject is one altogether peculiar; being at once so important, so difficult, and so controverted.” It is an arena upon which the foregoing extremes meet and cordially embrace. “None of the guilty shall understand.” This is the irreversible decree; who can annul it?

A correct interpretation being Christ’s, it was for Christ also to provide for its publication. Such was the author’s conviction. If the work is the Lord’s, he will provide the means. And remarkably has this conviction been verified. The truth opened Lydia’s heart to attend to the things spoken by Paul. She heard them, became interested in them, and attended to them. This is termed the Lord opening her heart. Upon the same principle, He opened some of the hearts of the subscribers to the author’s exposition, that through its publication by their means, they and others afar off might come to the understanding of the things written in the apocalyptic prophecy; and that thereby they might obtain the blessing promised in chap. 1:3. The author has made personal application to none. The notice of his readiness to publish, if enabled so to do, is all the effort he has made in the premises. But the response was not encouraging; and the author came well nigh despairing of success. Christ, however, in the hearts of a few, willed otherwise; so that, by their spontaneous liberality to the amount of twelve hundred and sixty dollars, he was enabled to go to press; with the assurance also that, if he would proceed with the preparation of the third volume, the means for its publication should be promptly furnished.

This unexpected success in bringing forth so expensive a work has both rejoiced and surprised him. It is a practical attestation that he still lives in the esteem of “the excellent, in whom is all the delight of the Holy One.” As one of the Holy City down-trodden in the earth, he has not escaped the efforts of the Serpent’s Seed to bruise him in the heel; but he rejoices to find that they have not fatally affected his usefulness. Their “enmity,” which broke out against him while passing the first volume through the press, has coiled around him in all the labors of the second. He has, however, given but little heed to it; being assured that when this volume, the fruit of much thought and labor amid great discouragement and conflict, shall come into the reader’s hands, he will be able, by a comparison of the author’s incessant labors, with their fitful and ephemeral, but malicious, attacks upon his name, to arrive at a true and righteous verdict in the premises. The elaboration of such works as the author’s leaves no spare time for evil courses. The matter of which they are composed, firmly believed, alienates from the petty jealousies and rivalries of minds spoiled by “science falsely so-called,” and by all sorts of traditions, or crotchets, which make void the truth. “By their fruits ye shall know them.” Public writers and teachers can only be thus known. Their writings and discourses are their fruits. The author’s are before the world, and before “the saints who are on the earth;” and though all called saints are not “excellent,” he has no apprehension of reprobation from those who are. He regards the defamatory writings of bad men and hypocrites as highly complimentary and laudatory. In the denunciations of such, the author rejoices greatly; for it is a public testimony to all concerned, that he sits not in their seat, and that “the hope of the hypocrite” is not his.

The appearance of this volume at the present crisis of human affairs is well-timed. The author believes that two years or so later would have been unseasonable, and possibly “TOO LATE.” If his chronology be correct, the current epoch must be hard upon the terminus of the Papal Power, and the initiation of “THE TIME OF THE DEAD.” These two crises are conterminous. Their contemporary limitation is fixed to the ending of a symbolic “FORTY AND TWO MONTHS,” which is an Aeon, or cycle, of 1260 years. The signs of the times, apart from chronological computation, clearly indicate that this cycle has nearly described its course. The “DRIED UP” condition of the THE FOURTH EUPHRATEAN ANGEL-POWER, enthroned in Constantinople; and daemon-operation of the FRANCIC-FROG-POWER for the past eighteen years upon the Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet—are unmistakable signs of the speedy manifestation of THE ANCIENT OF DAYS. He comes in “as a thief.” HE WAS with Moses at the Bush. HE IS at the right hand of Almighty Power; and HE IS THE COMING ONE—the Grand Master of the situation created by events in the development of which FRENCH IMPERIALISM has been HIS subordinate and precreative agency. The working of this is the great sign “IN THE HEAVEN OF THE SON OF MAN.” It has been wonder-working until it has brought the False Prophet into the greatest peril. The withdrawal of French protection will, doubtless, leave him a prey to the hatred of his own children, whose rebellion will rapidly develop the end.

And how greatly is that end to be desired by all true believers! And how intensely interesting must be the proof of its extreme nearness to all such! It is indeed true, that “THE TIME OF THE DEAD, that they should be judged,” and that “the reward” so long promised should be given to “the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear the name of the Coming One, small and great”—is it indeed true, that this “Day of Vengeance and Year of the Redeemed,” is at the very door? The author believes, that this volume will assist the reader greatly in his endeavour to acquire a satisfactory solution of this highly important and interesting problem. THE TIME OF THE DEAD is contemporary with a time of angry excitement among the nations—“the nations were angry, and thy wrath came and the time of the dead, that they should be judged”—Apoc. 11:18. Their anger is excited against ROME: which when the Apocalypse was given, was styled, “that Great City having dominion over the kings of the earth”—Apoc. 17:18. She had it then; and but for the working of the revolutionary Frog-Power, would still manifest it to a greater extent than at present appears.

The approaching belligerency of the nations is an important element of THE ROMAN QUESTION. They are to hate the Harlot, and make her desolate and naked, and to eat her flesh, and burn her with fire”—Apoc. 17:16, THE PAPAL DEITY OF THE ROMAN ORB a refugee from his capital, or a captive in revolutionary bonds, may evolve an unclean, wonder-working, daemonspirit, from his mouth, which will go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole habitable, including the American Continent, and gather them to a conflict for the suppression of the approaching EUROPEAN REVOLUTION, and the reestablishment of the PAPAL THRONE, which will signally accomplish the desolation of the Harlot. The Convention between the French and Italian powers of September 15, 1864 contains the elements of this coming struggle between DESPOTISM and the REVOLUTION. Within two years of this date, Rome is to be evacuated by the French, and “THE GOD OF THE EARTH” left to his own resources. The 15th Sept., 1866, is the fatal limit of the Franco-Italian Convention. May it not also be that at this date will be found the terminus of the FORTY AND TWO MONTHS allotted to the Papal Power to practise—poiesai? Forty and two months of years ago carry us back to A.D. 606, into the Phocal Epoch. At this time the Bishop of Rome and the Patriarch of Constantinople were contending against each other for the Pontifical Supremacy of the Roman Orb. The only authority that could confer this Pontificate was the Emperor reigning in Constantinople. Maurice, the predecessor of Phocas, was in favor of the Patriarch; but a revolution set him aside, and elevated Phocas to the Imperial Throne. This sanguinary usurper favored the aspirations of the Bishop of Rome, known as BONIFACE THE THIRD. In compliance with his request, he confirmed the right acquired by John II, from Justinian seventy-five years before; and constituted “the See of the Roman and Apostolic Church THE HEAD OF ALL CHURCHES.” This was “giving the saints into the hand” of the Episcopal Constituent of the Little Horn; and authorizing him to practise. Thus, by imperial authority “was given unto the beast a MOUTH speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to practise forty and two months”—Rev. 13:5. It was only by foreign secular power contributing its support, that the Pontiff-King of Rome has been enabled to eke out an existence to the present crisis. But for the French in “the Eternal City,” the Papal Kingdom would have been numbered with the dead some twenty years before its time. The Deity sent the French to Rome in 1849 to strengthen it, that its Pontiff might be enabled to practise imperially to the end of the 1260 years for which its license was divinely granted. That cycle of preeminent lawlessness and blasphemy has nearly described its appointed course. A few months more will probably complete it; and the loss of power to practise, will be the death knell of the Papacy, and the deliverance of the saints; the giving to them the honor of executing “the judgment written” to the subversion of all thrones; and the final abolition of this sanguinary pontificate from the earth.

Such a crisis, then, being just upon the world, how interesting and important must that work be which treats of the things, whose course has been long tending thereto. It is the purpose of this volume to unfold that series of events which has been consecutively evolved from the time the Apocalypse was given to the formation of the present situation. The labor bestowed on its elaboration has been itself a pleasure; and the author earnestly hopes, that in reading it its subscribers will find much advantage; or at least, have no cause to regret the pecuniary expenditure incurred in causing it to see the light.

In conclusion, the author would invite the attention of the reader particularly to the Chronikon Hebraikon, which he has appended to this volume. He believes that it is a correct extrication of the chronology of the Scriptures. But, if these are not reliable, then all chronological inquiries pertaining to antiquity may be abandoned in despair. The Scriptures, however, are the most authentic chronological records extant; and only require to be understood to excite the admiration of the student at the ingenuity and accuracy of their details. The study of these is highly useful and improving; and calculated to fix firmly and methodically in the mind the events and testimonies of the word.

The Author intends to publish a small edition of his Chronikon apart from Eureka. It will be issued in a paper cover, at a price not exceeding seventy-five cents, including postage.

As to the THIRD VOLUME OF EUREKA, the author will proceed to its elaboration with all diligence, working while it is called today; for “the night cometh when no man can work.” His earnest desire is, that a celestial visitant may find him thus engaged; and by divine authority serve upon him notice to quit; and forthwith to report himself for judgment in the presence of THE KING. But if such an event as this should not transpire so soon as he anticipates; and time should be afforded for the completion of the work, the author will in that case give due notice to the purchasers of the second volume, that they may in like manner possess themselves of the third.

January, 1866. A.M. 5956. THE AUTHOR.

COMMENT

Time has proved that the anticipations of the Author of Eureka in regard to the return of Christ were premature. And this reveals that with all its value Chronikon Hebraikon fails to provide a satisfactory chronology of the Scriptures in relation to the time periods of the future. Those time periods seem to introduce consecutive epochs of time, rather than specific datings. The Author above made the mistake of interpreting the periods of 1260, 1290 and 1335 of Daniel 12 as beginning at different times and terminating at the one epoch (see Elpis Israel). In the Preface above he anticipated judgment being poured out upon the Papacy at the termination of the 1260 period (1868–70), and believed that the Lord would return about the same time. The first part of his prognostication was fulfilled. A few years after Eureka volume 2 was published, the Papacy experienced a measure of judgment at the hands of the revolutionary forces that swept Europe at that time, so that between the years 1868 and 1870 the temporary power of the Papacy was taken from it, and the Pope became a prisoner in the Vatican. This state continued until in 1929 the temporal power of the Papacy was restored. When Eureka was published the Popes ruled and still rule the Roman Catholic Church from the Vatican. Until 1870 they were also temporal rulers of the Papal States. In that year these states became part of the unified Kingdom of Italy. Papal territory was then confined to the palaces of the Vatican, and the Lateran and Villa of Castel Gandolfo, and the temporal power of the Popes was suspended until 1929. In that year papal sovereignty was recognised by the Italian government under Mussolini, so that the Popes, who had previously been virtually prisoners in their own splendid dwellings, today travel the world on diplomatic missions or for propaganda purposes.

In 1929, the Vatican was but a city; today it is a city-state; and in order to increase the political prestige and influence of the Papacy, Popes have visited many parts of the world, including Europe, Israel, Africa, USA, and so forth. This is in full accord with the requirements of The Apocalypse, for at the epoch of its destruction the Papacy is represented as boasting: "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow" (Apoc. 18:7). The Papacy is rapidly reaching that moment of boastfulness at the present time.

Meanwhile, let us make this point. The anticipations of the Author of Eureka regarding the return of the Lord, assisted in charging his comments with greater urgency and appeal, so that his expositions lose nothing in vigour and interest with the passing of time. His earnest desire for the Lord's coming probably influenced his timing in that regard, illustrating that he was of the company of those who "love the Lord's appearing" (2 Tim. 4:8). The enthusiasm he displayed is something that "the servants of Deity" can emulate today as they witness in the earth the signs that enable them to anticipate Christ's appearing with every confidence.

—HPM

The rugged, barren island of Patmos consists mainly of rocky, volcanic hills. Such islands were frequently used by the Romans as places of political banishment; and to Patmos John was sent. According to tradition and Scripture (Ch. 1:9), John was banished by the Roman emperor Domitian (A.D. 95) and released eighteen months later, having meantime received the Apocalyptic visions. Expressions through The Apocalypse are suggestive of his presence on such an island, such as, "I stood upon the sand of the sea" (Apoc. 13:1).

Hadrian restricted the borders of the Empire in order to consolidate its power. He put down the revolt of the Jewish leader Bar-Kochba, banned Jews from Jerusalem, ploughed the site (cp Mic. 3:12), rebuilt it as a Roman colony, and renamed it Aelia Capitolina.

CHAPTER 4

THE CHAPTERS OF THIS VOLUME ARE NUMBERED ACCORDING TO THE NUMBERS OF THE CHAPTERS OF THE APOCALYPSE; SO THAT THE FOURTH CHAPTER OF THIS WORK IS AN EXPOSITION OF THE FOURTH CHAPTER OF THE APOCALYPSE, AND SO ON TO THE ELEVENTH INCLUSIVE.

SUBJECT.

THE THRONE COVENANTED TO THE SON OF DAVID
ESTABLISHED IN THE HOUR OF JUDGMENT

TRANSLATION

APOC. IV.

1. After these things I looked, and behold a DOOR opened in the heaven, and that first voice which I heard as of a trumpet speaking with me, saying, Ascend hither, and I will exhibit to thee things which must come to pass after these.”

2. And immediately I was in spirit: and behold a THRONE was established in the heaven, and upon the throne One sitting. 3. And the One sitting was in appearance like to a jasper and sardine stone, and a RAINBOW circled about the throne in appearance like to an emerald.

4. And circling about the throne were TWENTY-FOUR THRONES: and upon the thrones I saw the twenty and four ELDERS sitting, having been invested with white garments; and they had upon their heads golden coronal wreaths. 5. And out of the throne burst forth lightnings and thunders and voices: and SEVEN LAMPS OF FIRE burning before the throne, which are the SEVEN SPIRITS of the Deity. 6. And before the throne a TRANSLUCENT SEA like to crystal. And in the midst of the throne, and in the circle of the throne, FOUR LIVING ONES, being full of eyes before and behind.

7. And the First Living One was like to a Lion; and the Second Living One like to a Calf; and the Third Living One having the face like to a Man; and the Fourth Living One like to an Eagle flying. 8. And the Four Living Ones, one by itself, had each six wings circling about it; and within they were full of EYES; and they have no intermission day and night, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord, the Omnipotent Deity, who was and who is and who is coming.

9. And when the Living Ones shall give glory, and honour, and thanks, to the ONE sitting upon the throne, who liveth for the Aions of the Aions, the twenty and four Elders fall before the One sitting upon the throne, and they do homage to Him who liveth for the Aions of the Aions, and they cast their coronals before the throne, saying, 11. “Worthy art thou, O Lord, to receive the glory and the honour and the power; thou createdst all things, and on account of thy will they exist, and were created.”

Exposition

SECTION I.

A DOOR OPENED IN THE HEAVEN, AND THE LOUD TRUMPET VOICE

“AFTER THESE THINGS I LOOKED, AND BEHOLD A DOOR OPENED IN THE HEAVEN, AND THAT FIRST VOICE WHICH I HEARD AS OF A TRUMPET SPEAKING WITH ME, SAYING, “ASCEND HITHER, AND I WILL EXHIBIT TO THEE THINGS WHICH MUST COME TO PASS AFTER THESE.”—VERSE 1.

In the English version, the fourth chapter of the Apocalypse begins with the words “after this;” as if the Spirit referred to one particular thing noted in the previous chapter, after which the subject of the fourth was to be initiated. But the original phrase is meta tauta, and should be rendered “after these things;” the Spirit thereby intimating a plurality of things to be accomplished before the establishment of the throne.

The things to be perfected before the setting up of the kingdom were those styled in ch. 1:19, “the things which are.” This sentence must be interpreted of the things existing while John was in Patmos. There are three sets of things indicated in ch. 1:9: first, “the things thou hast seen;” second, “the things which are;” and, third, “the things which shall come to pass, meta tauta, after these.” The first set consisted of the Seven Lightstands, the Son of Man, and the Seven Stars; the second, of the things treated of in the epistles to the Seven Ecclesias in relation to their spiritual condition, which was developing itself into irremediable apostacy and delusion; and the third, of the things to be accomplished after the removal of the lightstands out of their place in the ecclesias—ch. 2:5; after the tribulation of the ten days—ch. 2:10; after fighting against the Balaamites with the sword of the Spirit's mouth; after the casting of Jezebel into a bed, and them who commit adultery with her into great tribulation, and the killing of her children with death—ch. 2:22; after his coming upon the dead in trespasses and sins as a thief—ch. 3:1, 3; and after the Spirit had spued them out of his mouth—ch. 3:16. These things were all to come to pass before the promises affixed to each epistle could be fulfilled; which promises in their development in the “Hour of Judgment”—ch. 15:7—are symbolized in ch. 4:2–11.

But as to the time that was to elapse from the epoch of John's abode in Patmos to the opening of a door in the heavens, or from the spuing of the sevenfold ecclesia in Laodicean manifestation out of the Spirit's mouth, to the establishment of the throne in the opened heavens, it is not stated in this chapter how long. As I have shown, the ecclesia (a remnant only excepted), transformed into “the Holy Catholic Church,” had been spued out in the Constantine Era; still “the Church” continued. Jezebel and Balaam still flourish in the heavenlies, or high places of the earth; where they revel in all the pleasures of sin, and in the enjoyment of all the rewards of unrighteousness, the Gentile Balac, the son of Bosor, or the world-rulers of “the state” can bestow. As we have shown, Jezebel is representative of what Papists and Protestants agree to call “the Church,” which maintains its ascendancy until the opening of a door “in the heavens;” and Balaam is representative of the Clerical Orders of “the church” which will also prevail as “the spirituals of the wickedness in the heavenlies” (Eph. 6:12), until the throne is set. This is the order of things pertaining to the course intermediate between Constantine, A.D. 312–337, and the apocalypse of the Sons of the Deity, which is near at hand. In all this long period of over sixteen hundred and twenty years, LAODICEANISM has prevailed in the form of the Beast of the Sea, the Beast of the Earth, the Image of the Beast, the False Prophet, and the Scarlet-colored Beast bearing Jezebel, the Mother of Harlots, and of All the Abominations of the earth. The root of all these things is that Mystery of Iniquity at work in the christian community in Paul's day—2 Thess. 2:7. It was then only being sown by those wolves in sheep's clothing he predicted would arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them. In this they succeeded marvellously; so that the true believers were reduced to a mere remnant, which at the present time is too inconsiderable to command the respectful attention of “the church”.

But this Jezebel and Balaamite Mystery of Iniquity which continues to the adventual epoch, is to be consumed by the Spirit of the Lord's mouth, and utterly destroyed by the manifestation of his presence. Such is the testimony of Paul and Daniel, to say nothing of the rest. Now, this consuming and destroying manifestation of spirit is what John saw when he “looked and beheld a door opened in the heaven” of the apocalypse. What he saw is the epiphany, or manifestation of the Spirit's parousia, or presence. He beheld it in belligerent operation; for “out of the throne,” he says, “proceed lightnings and thunders and voices,” which are the symbols of war.

1. The Heaven and the Door

I need not here repeat what has already been said about “the heaven.” It will be sufficient to refer the reader to the captions on pages 139 and 146 of vol. 1. To the saints this aerial expanse is closed. At present they do not shine there as the sun, moon, constellations, and stars of the firmament. The luminaries of the heaven are the dignities, or glories, incarnated in the officials who figure as the civil and spiritual rulers of “the earth and habitable.” Although the saints are promised “power over the nations to rule them” (ch. 2:26, 27), “the heaven,” in which national government is located is shut and fast closed against them. Their principles incapacitate them for sharing power with the world-rulers in Church and State. A saint, who is one in deed as well as name, cannot condescend to subject himself to the conditions necessary to obtain the favor of the political mob, whether that mob be a mob of aristocrats, or a mob of what these call “the swinish multitude” he cannot, I say, condescend, as a son of the Deity, a brother of Jesus Christ, and a king and priest elect for God, to seek the favor of “the dead in trespasses and sins” whose votes and patronage are indispensable to his exaltation to the heaven; in which he may figure by the eloquence of his speech, or the gaudy decorations of a court, as a star of the first or an inferior magnitude. No saint could by any other possibility than that based upon apostacy, consent to occupy the Papal Chair, or to fill an archiepiscopal, or other ecclesiastical or secular throne. The heaven, in which these seats of glory, honor, wealth, and power exist, is infected with such malarious and poisonous exhalations of sin’s flesh, that he could not breathe them, and live and move, and have continued healthful spiritual existence in the Deity. Fortunately for the saints this heaven is shut against them, and its door bolted, locked, and barred to keep out all who will not fall down and worship the Satan, who is prince of the Aerial, and bestows its glories upon whomsoever he approves.

But this heaven is not always to be shut up and barred against the saints—against the Lord Jesus and his Brethren. The Satan that now fills it, and monopolizes its heavenly things, is to be hurled from it with a mighty overthrow. This Satan, which is Sin in official manifestation, holds the power and glory of the world’s dominions. They are delivered unto him, and to whomsoever he will, he gives them—Luke 4:5, 6. All the evil that afflicts humanity is “the power of the enemy,” or the Satan, whether that evil be enthroned in the heaven, or be found in the poison of serpents and scorpions. But the Satan in the heavenlies is doomed; for Jesus in vision of the future, said: “I beheld the Satan as it were lightning fall out of the heaven.”—Luke 10:18. He falls thence by virtue of a stronger than the Satan breaking into the heaven and casting him out. The Satan’s house or kingdom is strongly fortified against all burglars and besiegers, at present upon the earth. Under existing circumstances, there is no chance of the saints being able to make a breach, or to open a door in the heaven, to effect an entrance into it, and after the example of Cromwell and his Ironsides, to expel the Satan, and eject him with all his instruments of mischief and abomination. But though this present inability exists, the expulsion is to be accomplished. The oracle before us proclaims “a door opened in the heaven,” which is equivalent to saying, that a power had been apocalysped on earth, stronger than the Satan; that this power had made a breach in the enemy’s works; and that this breach had become practicable, so that the breaching power could march through it as through a door, and take possession of the heaven, or “kingdom under the whole heaven.”—Dan. 7:27.

The oracle does not say that doors were opened. Our attention is restricted to a door, that is, to one door. A door is that opening in a wall through which you pass into the area or room beyond. This is the scriptural use of the word. Understanding this, and that the apocalyptic heaven is that constitution of things expanded over all peoples, and nations, and languages, as the government by which they are regulated and controlled; the reader will perceive, that the coup-d’etat by which the smiting power succeeds in placing itself in power and authority over any part of those nations or peoples, is a door of entrance to that new power into the heaven. That coup-d’etat, which gave Louis Napoleon introduction into the heaven, and placed him there enthroned among “the Powers,” was “a door opened in the heaven” for him to pass through. This is easily comprehended, and makes the oracle before us easy of comprehension, as we shall endeavour to show.

From the condensed view I have given of “the Mystery of the Deity as he hath revealed the glad tidings to his servants the prophets,” under the caption of “the Apocalypse Rooted in the Prophets,” page 41, vol. 1, the reader will have learned that the Deity proposes to enact a great and mighty coup-d’etat, or stroke of policy, upon the world’s government. He intends so to shape and overrule its ambitions and schemes, as to cause them to make the territory of His kingdom the seat of war between hostile confederacies, contending for dominion over the hundred and twenty seven provinces of Daniel’s lion, bear, and leopard. “I will gather,” saith He, “all the nations against Jerusalem to war; and I will bring them down into the Valley of Jehoshaphat.” “They shall pitch the tents of their entrenched camp between the seas to the mountain of the glory of holiness”; a region which in Apoc. 16:16, is indicated by the Hebrew word “Armageddon”. This concentration of the hosts of the nations in the Holy Land, is its invasion by Gog, the Prince of Rosh, in hostility to the Merchant Power of Tarshish and its allies, then in possession of Jerusalem. But “this city shall be taken”; “and the land of Egypt shall not escape.” Advanced to this sovereignty, the Gog-dominion stands forth as “the Dragon, the Old Serpent, surnamed the Diabolos and the Satan”—Apoc. 20:2; and as the Image of the kingdom of men in its latter day manifestation, as represented to Nebuchadnezzar in his dream. In the development of these events a crisis is formed, such as the world, for magnitude and importance, has never seen before. The Satan will then have attained to the loftiest pinnacle of the temple, with the presumption that universal sovereignty is within the grasp of his omnipotence. The heaven will be filled with his glory; and no son of sin’s flesh will find admission there, whose zeal runs not in the way of a ready and devout allegiance to the God-defying principles of “the spirit that works in the children of disobedience.”

But things having arrived at this crisis, under the leadership of the Lawless One, the time will have also arrived for opening a door into Satan’s heaven, through which the saints may enter in. This will be done by a divine coup-d’etat such as the Satan little expects. This political stroke consists in the power represented by a Stone falling upon the enemy, and crushing them with a terrible overthrow. This STONE-POWER is the power of the Eternal Spirit in Jesus and the saints; who with sword, pestilence, rain, hail, fire and brimstone, plead with the adversary, and destroy him from the Promised Land. In this way Yahweh makes Jerusalem “a cup of trembling, unto all the people round about when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem: also a burdensome stone for all people, all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it.” Their multitudes and power will not appal him. He will go forth and fight against them, and stand victorious upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east. In this way, He, who the prophet styles, Yahweh my Elohim comes in, all the saints with him. In proof of all this, the reader is referred to Ezekiel, Daniel, Joel, and Zechariah.

Thus Yahweh Elohim, the saints, “come in.” By the crashing power of the Stone a door is opened, and they march in. Their Prince, who came as a thief, obtains possession of Jerusalem and the Holy Land, and becomes a potentate among the thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers of the heaven, in which, until He breaks in upon them, “the Devil and his Angels” only can be found.

2. The First Voice as of a Trumpet

A door being opened in the heaven when John was looking, a voice issued forth from the opening, and addressed him. He tells us that the voice was identical with “that first voice which he heard as of a trumpet speaking with him.” This first voice is noted in ch. 1:10. It was a loud trumpet-like voice, and he heard it when “in spirit.” In all this, John was a dramatic person; or, one through whom was represented in action certain things not narrated. When in Patmos, and about to behold something pertaining to “the Day of the Lord,” he says he was “in spirit.” This is equivalent to saying that, when he shall behold the reality of the similitude he saw in spirit, he will also be “in spirit”; which likewise intimates by implication, that he will have previously risen from among the dead and be spirit. The first voice, then, he heard behind him as the loud sound of a trumpet, was a symbolical voice of the seventh trumpet period, which will awake him from his death-sleep; for it is under the seventh, which is also the last, that the dead are raised, the prophets and saints are rewarded, the day of the Lord is introduced, and the Satan ejected from the heaven, bound hand and foot, and shut down in the bottomless profound there to remain for the thousand years ensuing—ch. 11:18.

Now, in John having referred us in ch. 4:1, to the first voice of ch. 1:10, it was equivalent to telling us, that the first and second hearing of the same voice related to the same epoch, or point of time. They both relate to the seventh trumpet period; and as John “turned to see” in the first instance, and “looked” and ascended in the other, the vision of the Son of Man, and the vision of the thrones, the elders, and the living ones, are both representative of things destined to come to pass after the advent of Christ and the resurrection of the saints. The apocalyptic Son of Man is the Stone-Power in manifestation. He shatters Nebuchadnezzar’s image to pieces; and having opened the heaven, establishes therein a throne, which becomes the centre of a dominion extending over all the earth. The first time John heard the voice of this trumpet, it was “loud.” It awoke him from the dust of death. But the second time, he does not say it was loud; this may be inferred, because it was the same voice. He was “looking,” before the words of the voice addressed him. He had risen, and was contemplating the opening of a door in the heaven; and while so looking, there was a speaking from the opening inviting him into the heaven. Hence, the beginning of the first voice awoke him to life and action; and afterwards the same voice invited him to ascend to the heaven and to inherit the kingdom established there.

The trumpet to which this “loud,” “first voice” belongs, is that represented in “the memorial of the blowing of trumpets,” on the first day of the seventh month—Lev. 23:24. It is that sounding by which the princes, heads of the thousands of Israel, are summoned to gather themselves together unto Christ, the King of Israel—Num. 10:4. It precedes the sounding on the tenth of the seventh month, Which proclaims liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof—Lev. 25:9. The saints are first raised and exalted to the heaven; in other words, “meet the Lord in the air,” as symbolized in this fourth chapter; and then afterward “the Great Trumpet” of the Jubilee is blown by Yahweh Elohim, who in the “lightnings and thunders which proceed out of the throne” (v. 5), goes forth with the whirlwind of the south—Zech. 9:14.

The silver trumpet that sounds upon the first day of the seventh month, gathers together that “great multitude which no man can number of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues”; of which John says he beheld that “they stood before the Throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands”—chap. 7:9. “These had been dead, but when the trumpet sounded at the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that Yahweh Elohim should give reward to his servants the prophets and to the saints, and to them that venerate his name, small and great” (ch. 11:18), when the loud trumpet-voice was heard at this time in the lower parts of the earth, all these, with John among the number, “turned” and “looked”—awake from their dusty bed, come forth from their graves, and gather together unto him (2 Thess. 2:1) who, by the energy of the Eternal Spirit, will have raised them from among the dead. This “first voice” which brings them together to stand before the throne in the heaven, plants them as the symbolical 144,000, upon MOUNT ZION, the area of the throne and Most Holy Place of the heaven; it plants them there with the Lamb, in preparation to “follow him whithersoever he goeth”—ch. 14:1, 4. In preparation to go forth, not in actual progress. Another “loud voice” must be heard before they go forth in the lightnings and thunders of the war of “the great day of God the Almighty”—ch. 14:15; 16:14.

While prepared for war, but the lightnings and thunders not yet flashed forth from the throne (ch. 4:5), the trumpet of the Jubilee is sounded for the gathering together of the congregation of Israel from the four corners of the earth. The sound of this trumpet is not an alarm for war—Num. 10:7. It is the “loud voice” of the class-angel that flies in mid-heaven, making proclamation of the good news pertaining to the Millennial Aion; announcing that the time of its introduction has arrived, and inviting mankind of all nations and tongues, to fear the Deity and give glory to him, because the hour of his judgment is come—ch. 14:7. “The Great Trumpet,” says Isaiah, “shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship Yahweh in the Holy Mount at Jerusalem”—ch. 27:13. This testimony informs us that the blowing of the great jubilee trumpet on the tenth of the seventh month, will ultimate in the return of Israel to their fatherland; but this return will not result without war. The North will not give up, and the South will keep back, until both North and South are harvested, and gathered into the winepress of the wrath of God—ch. 14:15, 20. Assyria, or the North, and Egypt, or the South, will be the enemy oppressing them in their land. This being their condition, the ordinance appointed for their generations during the Mosaic Olahm, enjoined upon the priests to blow the two silver trumpets, with the assurance that the blasts thereof should cause them to be remembered before Yahweh their Elohim, and that consequently they should be saved from their enemies—Num. 10:9. This was a prophetic memorial, the body or substance of which is of the Christ—Col. 2:16, 17. It signifies, that in “the latter end,” when oppressed by the enemy, “the Devil and Satan,” the loud angel-voices sent forth out of the throne (ch. 4:5), should proclaim war; and command the Son of Man in his white clouds of warriors, to thrust in the sharp sickle, and reap down their oppressors, and so save them from their enemies.

The “first voice,” then, is the apocalyptic antitype of the Mosaic ordinance of the memorial of the blowing of the two silver trumpets, which were blown for the calling of the assembly, a holy convocation; and for the journeying of the camps. This “first voice” is heard by the class of which John is the apocalyptic representative, before the pouring out of the Seventh Vial “INTO THE AIR;” by which a breach is made, through which, as “a door,” the saints, who are raised under the Sixth Vial—“the kings which are from the Sun’s risings”—who hear the first voice as of a trumpet speaking to them, enter into the heaven. Raised under the Sixth Vial, which has been pouring out upon the symbolical Euphrates for the last forty years of the present century, they await further developments. They await the smiting of the Nebuchadnezzar Image upon the feet, which is to manifest the temple of the Deity in the open heaven; and in the midst of that temple of holy ones, the Messianic Ark of his Covenant, whose propitiatory or mercy seat, is the crucified Nazarene—ch. 11:19.

3. “Ascend Hither.”

“Ascend hither, and I will exhibit to thee things which must come to pass after these.”—Ch. 4:1.

After resurrection is ascension; but not necessarily instantaneously after. This is evident from the example given in the case of the Lord Jesus. He first came out of the sepulchre; and then, after a certain interval, “ascended to the Father;” an ascent which is not to be confounded with his assumption from the Mount of Olives, forty-three days after his crucifixion—John 20:17; Acts 1:11. He ascended to the Father before he was “taken up.” The ascent was a necessary preparation for the taking up of the resurrected body; for a body such as he had, when he forbid Mary to touch him, was unfit for translation through the higher regions of our atmosphere, and the airless ethereal beyond. It was necessary that he should be “in spirit” and so become spirit, that he might be with the Father. So John “looked” and “heard,” which are vital actions; but though living and looking he saw nothing until after the invitation to ascend, with the promise, that subsequently to the ascent he should see an exhibition of things which should come to pass when “the time came for the saints to possess the kingdom” (Dan. 7:22); which implies their resurrection and ascent after the similitude of the dramatic resurrection and ascension of John.

The invitation to John to ascend into the heaven was equivalent to inviting him to “meet the Lord in the air;” and by implication, an invitation to all whom he represented to do so likewise at the appointed time. This is the only place in the apocalypse where it is said to John anaba hode, ascend hither! In ch. 17:1, and 21:9, it is said deuro, come here, or “come hither;” and in doing so, he is “in spirit borne away into a wilderness;” and “upon a great and high mountain.” In the wilderness he sees the Mother of Harlots, and the ensanguined Sin-Powers by which she is sustained; and from upon the mountain that overtops all other mountains, he beholds “the House of the Elohim of Jacob” (Isa. 2:3), or, the New Jerusalem Community, in the light of which the nations of the Millennial Aion walk in peace and goodwill. But when “a door in the heaven is opened,” John is not borne, or carried away; he is called up. He is invited to “ascend”—to ascend to the kingdom and throne to be established in the heaven. There is a testimony analogous to this in ch. 11:12, where a class of persons not represented by John are addressed in the words, anabete hode, ascend ye hither! And it says “they ascended into the heaven in the cloud which ascended.” This cloud of witnesses was the political element of the “Two Witnesses,” which had been politically dead, but unburied, for 105 years, at the end of which, that is, in the 1789–’90, they rose again, and ascending to the heaven in the sight of their terrified enemies, became the ruling power in the state. Hence for John to ascend into the heaven dramatically was indicative of those he represents, who have been prevailed against by the Sin-Powers of the Habitable, trodden under foot for the previous forty-two months of years, and sleeping in the dust, ascending from these depths of humiliation and degradation, to the high and exalted position of kings and priests for the Deity, through whom the world shall be ruled for a thousand years.

4. The Throne

“I was in spirit: and behold A THRONE was established in the heaven.”—4:2

The word throne is from the Greek thronos, an elevated seat with a footstool; and derived from thrao, to sit, metonymically, it signifies imperial and regal power. In the text before us it stands for “the dominion, glory, and kingdom,” which Daniel says “was given to the Son of Man, that all peoples, and nations, and languages might serve him”—ch. 7:14.

As soon as the invitation was given to ascend to the heaven, John was “in spirit.” Immediately upon this he saw a throne in the heaven, which had not been there before in such glorious manifestation. It had many ages anterior to his time, occupied a place in the heaven contemporarily with the thrones of Tyre, and Egypt, and Sheba, and Babylon; but, while he was in Patmos, and for many ages before and since, even to this day, there is no such throne in the heaven. When it existed there of old, it was occupied by David and Solomon as the kings of Yahweh over Israel. It was then styled “the throne of Yahweh,” and the throne of the kingdom of Yahweh over Israel”—1 Chron. 28:5; 29:23. By the covenant of the Olahm, or Hidden Period, this throne was established in the family of David. The proof of this is found in numerous places of the Scripture. Thus in 2 Sam. 7:12–16, the covenant to David reads, “Yahweh will make for thee a house. When thy days shall be completed, and thou hast slept with thy fathers, I will cause to raise up after thee thy seed who shall proceed out of thy bowels; and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build a house for my name; and I will establish the throne of his kingdom ad-olahm, during the hidden period;” that is, the Millennium. “I will be to him for a father, and he shall be to me for a son; whom, in his being caused to bow down, I will chasten with a sceptre of men, and with stripes from the sons of Adam; but my mercy I will not take from him as that I put away from with Saul, whom I removed from before thee. And thy house and thy kingdom shall be established during the Olahm before thy face; thy throne shall be set up for the Olahm,” or the thousand years.

Now when David’s days were about completed, he thus expressed himself in reference to this covenant of the throne and kingdom. In 2 Sam. 23:1, it is written: “Now these words of David, the last, are an oracle of David, son of Jesse; even an oracle of the mighty man enthroned, concerning an Anointed One of the Elohim of Jacob; and the pleasant theme of Israel’s songs.

“Yahweh’s spirit spake by me, and His word was upon my tongue; Elohim of Israel spake to me, and the Rock of Israel discoursed, saying, There shall be a Ruler over mankind, ruling in the righteous precepts of Elohim. And as brightness of morning, He shall rise the Sun of an unclouded dawn, shining forth after rain upon tender grass out of the earth.

“Though my house is not so with AIL, yet He hath appointed for me THE COVENANT OF THE Olahm, ordered in everything and sure: truly this is all my salvation, and all my delight, though he cause it not to spring forth.

“But the wicked shall be all of them as a thorn-bush to be thrust away; yet without hand shall they be taken; nevertheless A MAN shall smite upon them. He shall be filled with iron and the shaft of a spear; but with fire to burn up while standing, they shall be consumed.”

The above testimonies I have translated from the Hebrew. The reader can compare them with the English version, and adopt which he thinks the more intelligible and correct. He will find that both renderings agree in affirming this:

1. That a dynastic house was guaranteed to David;
2. That the kingdom and throne of this dynasty should be established during a future period;
3. That the commencement and duration of that period were hidden from David;
4. That said kingdom and throne should be established by Ail; or, as Daniel says, by “the Eloah of the heavens;”
5. That the occupant of said throne should be a resurrected seed of David and Son of the Deity;
6. That this seed should come to his death by the violence of his enemies; and be pierced with a spear;
7. That the establishment of said kingdom and throne should come to pass after David’s sleep with his fathers, and before his face; so that the establishment of the throne and kingdom would be after David’s resurrection from among the dead;
8. That this Covenant of the then, and yet, Hidden Period, ordered in all things and sure, contained all that constituted the salvation looked for by David; and in which was his delight;
9. That He who should be at once seed of David and Son of the Deity should be Ruler over mankind, ruling them in righteousness and in glory, when occupying the covenanted throne; and,
10. That he should utterly destroy the power of the wicked.

When these things were revealed to David, concerning his royal descendant and his kingdom and throne, they became the anchor of his soul both sure and steadfast behind the veil of a future undefined. Now, David was a great poet; we may say, the greatest poet that ever lived; for the Songs of Israel were from his pen indited under the inspiration of Yahweh’s spirit which spake by him, putting divine words upon his tongue. The covenanted seed, and the glorious things to him belonging, were “the pleasant theme of Israel’s songs.” In these songs, that which was “all his salvation and all his delight” was always prominent; and made them, not merely David’s, but Yahweh’s songs, which “Israelites indeed,” found difficult to sing when captives in a strange and foreign land Psalm 137:4. In the eighty-ninth of these songs, the Rock of Israel discoursed concerning the covenant, saying, “A hidden period of mercy shall be builded; thy faithfulness in them, the heavens, thou wilt establish. I have devised a covenant for my chosen one; I have sworn to David my servant, saying, during a hidden period I will establish thy seed; and I will build thy throne for a generation of the race.” And in verse 24, “In my name shall his horn be exalted. And I will set his hand in the sea; and his right hand in the rivers. He shall call upon me, saying, Thou art my Father, my AIL, and the Rock of my Salvation. Yea, I will appoint him the Firstborn, the Most High to the kings of the earth. For the hidden period I will keep my mercy for him; and my covenant shall be steadfast for him. And I have appointed his seed la-ad, for eternity (see diagram on p. 131, Vol. 1) and his throne as the days of the heavens.” Once have I sworn by my holiness, verily I will not lie to David: his seed shall be for the hidden period; and his throne as the sun before me. As the moon it shall be established a hidden period; and as a witness steadfast in the firmament”—ver. 35. “As the sun” the throne will always be; but “as the moon,” as a priestly throne, it shall continue only for the thousand years, until sin and death shall be destroyed.

Now, when we look into the heaven we behold no such throne and kingdom as those covenanted to David among the powers. We see there the Papal throne, the thrones of the Romish kingdoms, the imperial thrones of the Austrian, and Russian, and Turkish dominions, and so forth; but no kingdom and throne of David over Israel in the promised land. Is this present condition of the heaven permanent and final? Are these thrones and governments of the eastern and western hemispheres, always to rule the nations, and is there never to exist a throne and kingdom of David occupied and governed by his immortal household, as the kings and priests of the Deity? Whoever affirms these things, in so saying avers that Yahweh's spirit has "lied to David." He charges the Deity with falsehood; and in so doing proves, that he himself is like his father the devil, "a liar, and that the truth is not in him." But no. The existing order of the heaven is not final. The things which are seen there are only temporary: ta blepomena proskaira—2 Cor. 4:18. These thrones are to be cast down when the Ancient of Days shall sit; and judgment shall be executed by the saints—Dan. 7:9, 22. When "his throne as a fiery flame" shall be manifested it will be established in the heaven, and not withhold its "lightnings, and thunders, and voices," till every one of them shall be in the possession of the seed covenanted to David. But the absence of the throne and kingdom of David from the heaven for a long series of ages anterior to his resurrection was contemplated and expressly declared by the spirit in David and the prophets. In view of their suppression the spirit says in the psalm quoted, "But thou hast cast off and rejected; thou hast been very wroth with thine anointed one. Thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant; thou hast profaned his crown to the earth; thou hast broken down all his defences; thou hast reduced his strongholds to ruins. All who pass by the way spoil him; he hath been a reproach to his neighbors. Thou hast exalted the right hand of his adversaries; all his enemies thou hast made glad: yea, thou wilt turn the edge of his sword, and make him not to stand in war; thou hast made his brightness to cease, and his throne thou hast cast down to the earth. The days of his youth hast thou shortened; thou hast covered him over with shame. How long, O Yahweh? Wilt thou hide thyself la-netzach, perpetually?"

Such was the condition of things in relation to the throne in John's day as in our own. David, John, and all the saints from their time to ours, are all interested in the inquiry "How long?" Until when shall the kingdom and throne of David and David's Lord, be prostrate in the dust, and exist only as a matter of hope? This question has been long since answered by Ezekiel, who in ch. 21:27, says, the throne shall not exist "until He come whose right it is," and Yahweh Elohim will give it him. Jesus being the Christ, is He whose right it is. This is evident from Gabriel's word in Luke 1:3, saying to Mary, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and Yahweh Elohim shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob eis tous aionas, during the Aions, and of his kingdom there shall not be an end. The right to the throne, then, belongs to Jesus. But when he came into the world it was not in existence, nor while he remained here; and when he departed from the earth, instead of possessing a throne, "he went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom;" and having received it "to return,"—Luke 19:12. He has not yet returned, which is a proof that he has not "received for himself a kingdom." But he will certainly receive it according to Daniel's vision of the night—ch. 7:13, 14; and when he returns in power and glory, and all the holy angels with him, then will he build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and build again the ruins thereof, and set it up as in the days of old; and occupy the throne, which will then be the throne of his glory—Matt. 25:31; Amos 9:11; Acts 15:16. And this is that throne which John beheld "established in the heaven."

But it may be asked, in what terrestrial locality will this throne in the heaven be established? What is the topography of the substance, or reality, of the vision John beheld "in spirit?" The answer is MOUNT ZION IN JERUSALEM. This is where the Davidian covenant locates it, in saying to David, "THY kingdom shall be established during the Olahm before thy face; THY throne shall be set up for the Olahm," or hidden period of a thousand years duration. When these words were spoken to David he was reigning in Mount Zion in Jerusalem in the presence of ancients, the princes of Israel. Deeply impressed with this truth, as the poet of the House of Jacob, he celebrated the glory of Zion when he should behold her full of palaces tenanted by the saints, the Elohim of Israel. Hence, the psalms, are not only styled “Yahweh’s Songs,” and “Israel’s Songs,” but “the Songs of Zion.” The following is a specimen of the teaching of the spirit concerning Zion and Jerusalem.

“Yahweh’s foundation is in the mountains of holiness. He loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwelling places of Jacob. Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of the Elohim. Selah. This Man (the foundation-stone laid in Zion) was developed there: even to Zion it shall be said, the man, even THE MAN, was brought forth in her; and He the Most High, will establish her. In enrolling the peoples Yahweh will reckon (that) this Man was born there. Also singers as well as musicians (Apoc. 5:8, 9; 14:2; 15:2, 3) there: all my springs are in thee—Psa. 87.

Again. In Psalm 48 it is written, “Great is Yahweh, and greatly to be praised in the city of our Elohim, the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful of situation, the joy of all the earth, is the mountain of Zion, the sides of the north, the citadel of the Great King. Elohim in her palaces has been known for a defence. For behold, the kings (under Gog) were assembled, they perished together. They beheld; so were they in consternation; they were terrified, in terror they hasted away. Trembling seized upon them there, and anguish as a parturient woman. With a wind of the east thou wilt wreck the ships of Tarshish. As we have heard so have we seen in the city of Yahweh Tz’vaoth, in the city of our Elohim. Elohim will establish her ad-olahm, during the hidden period,” or MILLENNIUM.

Again. In Psa. 50 “AIL, Elohim, Yahweh spoke and made proclamation to the earth from the rising of the sun unto its going down. Out of Zion the perfection of beauty Elohim shined forth. Our Elohim shall come, and not keep silence. A fire before him shall devour, and it shall be very tempestuous around him. He will make proclamation to the heavens from above, and to the earth for to vindicate his people: saying, Gather ye to me my saints, the separatists of my covenant by the sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness; for He, the Elohim, is judge. Selah.”

In Psa. 46:4, also it says: “There is a river whose channels shall gladden the city of Elohim, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. Elohim in her midst, therefore she shall not be moved. Elohim shall help her at the opening of the dawn. The nations were enraged; the kingdoms were moved. He uttered his voice and the earth shall melt. Yahweh Tz’vaoth is with us; a fortress for us the Elohim of Jacob. Selah.”

In Psa. 122 it is written, “Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem—Jerusalem! that is builded as a city compactly joined together. Whither have gone up the tribes, the tribes of Yah, a testimony for Israel, to give thanks to the name of Yahweh; because there they have established thrones for judgment, the thrones of the House of David. Seek ye the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper who love thee.”

Lastly, in Psa. 132:11, it is written, “Yahweh swore to David the truth; he will not turn from it, saying; Of the fruit of thy body I will set upon the throne for thee. If thy sons will keep my covenant and my testimony which I will teach them; their sons also shall sit in the throne for thee adai-ad, until the beyond” (see diagram on p. 131, vol. 1). For Yahweh has chosen to be in Zion; he has desired it for a dwelling for himself. This is my rest until the beyond. Here I will dwell, for I have desired it. Blessing I will bless her provision; her poor I will satisfy with bread. Also her priests I will clothe with salvation, and her saints shall shout aloud for joy. There I will cause a HORN to bud for David; I have prepared a LAMP for mine anointed. His enemies I will clothe with shame; but upon him shall his crown flourish.” Such, then, is merely a specimen of what is testified in “the songs of Zion” of the relation she is destined to hold to Messiah’s kingdom, when he shall sit and rule as a priest after the Order of Melchizedec, upon the throne to be established in the heaven, and shall bear the glory of his Father’s house. The vision in the fourth chapter of the Apocalypse is of the “GREAT WHITE THRONE” of David’s Son, encircled by the judicial thrones of the House of David, to be occupied jointly with him by the apostles and saints in general, as his ancients, according to his promise. They are the thrones to be established in the Era of Regeneration; when the Son of Man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, and the apostles upon twelve thrones governing the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt. 19:19), “then shall Jerusalem be called THE THRONE OF yahweh: and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to THE NAME OF Yahweh, to Jerusalem (Jer. 3:17); and because of its superior glory, majesty, and power, compared with any other throne that ever was on earth, or ever shall be for a thousand years; the luminaries of the political expanse which now shed their rays upon the earth of subject nations, peoples, and tongues, shall be darkened with a total and permanent eclipse, according to the testimony of the Spirit that “the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when Yahweh Tz’vaoth shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.”—Isa. 24:23.

5. “Upon the Throne One sitting”

“And upon the throne One sitting. And the One sitting was in appearance like a jasper and a sardine stone.”—Ch. 4:2

He whom John saw “in spirit” sitting upon the throne; that is, He who will occupy it when it shall have been established in the heaven, is he whom the Spirit in Zech. 6:12, styles “THE MAN, whose name is THE BRANCH,” styled also in ch. 3:8, “My Servant the Branch.” This is the Son of the Deity to whom the throne belongs, and termed “His servant,” because of his manifestation to do service for Yahweh in “planting the heavens, and laying the foundations of the earth, and saying unto Zion, “Thou art my people” (Isa. 51:16); or, as expressed in ch. 49:6, “His servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the desolations of Israel; and also to be for a light to the nations, and for his salvation to the ends of the earth.” This is the “One sitting upon the throne” seen of Isaiah as well as by John. Isaiah saw him “in spirit” upwards of seven hundred years before he was made of a woman under the law” (Gal. 4:4); John beheld him in flesh, looked upon him with his eyes, and handled him with his hands, when he dwelt among the Jews; and seventy years afterwards while an exile in Patmos, saw a similitude representative of him sitting in Millennial glory upon the throne of David and of Deity, as indicated in the chapter before us.

Isaiah being “in spirit” saw him enthroned. “I saw,” saith he, “the ADONAI (plural) sitting upon a throne high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.—I SAW THE KING, Yahweh Tz’vaoth”—ch. 6:1, 5. He saw the king of whom the Spirit afterwards said, “Take away the filthy garments from him”—the filthy garments of flesh, styled his “iniquity; and let them set a fair mitre upon his head”—Zech. 3:4, 5. This has been accomplished in the perfecting of Jesus by spirit, as I have expounded it on p. 108, vol. 1. He is now prepared to rule the Father’s house, and to keep His courts. He is the man, the Second Adam, to be enthroned upon that eminence, high and lifted up above all other high places of the political aerial, covenanted by the Eternal Power to his father David. Ezekiel, when “in spirit,” saw him enthroned, and calls him “a Man”; that is Adam, not ish; but adam, as indicative of his original identity with the nature of the first man. John gives us to understand that he whom he saw sitting upon the throne was not only a man, ish, in the sense in which the three angel-elohim who appeared to Abraham are so styled; but that he was adam, a mortal descended from him who came out of adama, the ground. This is indicated by what he says in Apoc. 5:6: “I saw, and behold in the midst of the throne, and of the four living ones, and in the midst of the elders, A LAMP standing as if it had been slain, having seven Horns and seven Eyes, which are the Seven Spirits of the Deity sent forth into all the earth.” In these words he exhibits a combination of flesh and spirit “in the midst of the throne,” and therefore sitting upon it. The flesh is represented by a living lamb that had been slain, but had recovered from the death-wound. It is well known to one intelligent in the word, that “lamb” is the metaphor, and in the Apocalypse, the symbol, of the sacrificial man, Jesus, who was delivered to death for his people’s offences, and whose mission is to take away the sin of the world; in other words, to “destroy that having the power of death,” and to destroy the works of sin—the Diabolos and all that has originated from the flesh.

The sacrificial man, Jesus, then, is the apocalyptic lamb, one suspended upon a cross and forsaken of “the Seven Spirits of the Deity”; and consequently, not having at that time “seven Horns and seven Eyes”; but now, healed of the wound in his heel by resurrection and ascent to the Father, and by which he has become consubstantial spirit-flesh with Him, and therefore possessed of “the seven Spirits of the Deity,” or holy spirit in perfection, by which he is omnipotent and omniscient, seeing and knowing all things; and therefore “a lamb with seven horns and seven eyes,” and prepared to take up his position “in the midst of the throne,” when a door shall be breached in the heaven, and the throne shall be established there.

The Lord Jesus Anointed, then, is the Adam hereafter to sit upon the throne. Installed in the heaven, the four living ones will give glory, and honor, and thanks to him; and the twenty and four elders will fall before him, and do homage, and cast their coronets before him, saying, “Worthy art thou, O Lord, to receive the glory, and the honor, and the power; because thou createdst all things, and on account of thy will they exist, and were created”—ch. 4:9, 11.

In speaking of the appearance of the Man enthroned, John says, “it was like to a jasper and sardine stone.” He is in this likened to a Stone most precious; not to a common stone, but to a very brilliant and inestimable living stone. He is symbolized here by a stone, because he is so designated in the prophets. In setting forth the military prowess of Joseph’s posterity beacharith hayamim, “in the last one of the days,” he predicts that the arms of his hands shall be made strong by the Mighty One, the Ail and the Shaddai of Jacob, out of whom is the Shepherd, whom he styles “THE STONE OF ISRAEL”—Gen. 49:24, 25.

This Shepherd-Stone is typified in the two onyx stones of the Aaronic ephod, upon which the names of the twelve tribes were engraved in the order of the birth of their fathers, and which were to be borne before Yahweh upon the two shoulders of the one man officiating as High Priest, for a memorial—Exod. 28:9, 12.

The prophet Isaiah also speaks of him to Judah thus: “Sanctify,” saith he, “Yahweh Tz’vaoth himself, and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. And he shall be for a sanctuary. But also for a Stone of stumbling, and for a Rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem”—ch. 8:14. This has in part been accomplished, and we wait now for this stone to be laid in the identical place where it was stumbled over; according to the words of the Spirit by the same prophet, saying, “Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a Stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not be confounded”—ch. 28:16. This is “the stone which the builders refused” which will then have “become the chief of the corner”—Psa. 118:22, the head stone with Seven Eyes brought forth with shoutings of “Grace, grace, unto it!”—Zech. 3:9; 4:7, 10.

Two precious stones are selected by the Spirit to represent the appearance of the Man enthroned. These are a Jasper and Sardius. The reason why two are indicated rather than one, is because THE KING is Spirit and Flesh in combination. Had he been mere flesh, or spirit uncombined with flesh, one stone would have answered every purpose; but being deity manifested in flesh, two precious stones were necessary: one to symbolize the Spirit, and the other to represent the Flesh. The jasper is the spirit symbol. It is a hard stone of various hues, as purple, cerulean, green. The glory and light of the New Jerusalem community are likened to “a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal”—ch. 21:11; and in verse 23, this glory and light are styled the glory of the Deity and the Lamb. The wall of the city is also a jasper, which wall is the symbol of the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb; in other words, of the Spirit, who by Zechariah has said, “I will be unto Jerusalem a wall of fire round about, and the glory in the midst of her. Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith Yahweh”—ch. 2:5, 10. A beautiful cerulean gem clear as crystal, is the symbol of the Deity’s spirit condensed into substance; and as it is the primary principle of the city whose builder and maker the Deity is, “the first foundation is a jasper.”

The other gem is named in Hebrew ’odem. These are the same letters that compose the word applied to the creature Yahweh Elohim formed from the ground to be the father of our race. By the invention of the Masorites, instead of being pronounced adam, it is pronounced odem, and on being translated into the Greek, the Seventy rendered it by sardion, because found about Sardis. It is a carnelian, and so called from its color having a resemblance to that of flesh—a gem, therefore, fitly symbolical of the Adam-element of the one sitting upon the throne.

6. The Rainbow about the Throne

“And a Rainbow circled about the Throne in appearance like an emerald.”—Ch. 4:3

The rainbow is referred to in four places in the scriptures, and it is from these only can be deduced the import of the symbol before us. In nature, the rainbow is evolved by the action of showery vapor upon the sun’s rays, which, in passing through the aqueous globules, are refracted, and form an arch upon that part of the clouds opposite to the sun, glowing with all the colors of the prismatic, or solar, spectrum. The rainbow is never seen except when the sun is shining, and when rain is falling between the spectator and the part of the horizon where the bow is seen. These facts must not be lost sight of in considering the significancy of the rainbow when used as a symbol. Sun, light, rain, cloud, are elements necessary to the production of the natural bow; so are they also to the evolution of a symbolical arch in the heaven pertaining to the throne. In the absence of the Sun of Righteousness from the heaven, and of the light of life, glory, honor, and power, which he will irradiate the rainbow encircling the throne cannot be seen. Neither can the light irradiating from Him, be reflected to the spectator-world from the clouds of immortals about the throne, until the rain-showers of the heaven shall descend upon the mown grass to fertilize the earth. These are indispensable conditions to the evolution of the bow, which is the symbol of a clear and blessed sunshine after previous “lightnings, thunders, and voices from the throne,” contemporaneously with gently descending rain.

Based upon these principles, I remark that the order of the bow’s development is,

1. The opening of the heaven by the Stone-Power smiting Nebuchadnezzar’s Image upon the feet;
2. The establishment of the throne in the heaven by mowing the earth at harvest time (ch. 14:15); in the storm-period of “the lightnings, thunders, and voices proceeding from the throne” (ch. 4:5); by which the kingdoms of the world are taken possession of by the saints;
3. The grass of the earth being thus mown, its harvest reaped, and its vintage trodden out, the rain of the heaven descends in the blessing of Abraham upon the nations; which, being subdued, are blessed in Abraham and his Seed, or in Jesus and the saints;
4. “As brightness of morning, THE RULER rises the Sun of an unclouded dawn, shining forth after rain upon the tender grass of the earth.” The effect of this shining is that the Rainbow-Throne covenanted to David is beheld through the descending rain, which diffuses the knowledge of its glory to the utmost bounds of the habitable world.

The rainbow, then, is the token, or symbol of the Covenant. The bow in the natural heavens has been so designated by the Spirit from the days of Noah, after his salvation by water; and all who have looked upon the phenomenon with minds enlightened by the truth, from his day to this, have viewed it as the memorial of Yahweh's covenant. The first place in which this covenant is alluded to is in Gen. 6:18; it does not follow, however, that no covenant existed till the time therein indicated. Yahweh had a covenant which he styled, "My covenant." It was on account of this covenant that the race of Adam was perpetuated in Noah. If he had not found favor with Yahweh because of his faith in the covenanted promises, the race would have been exterminated from the earth. He became "heir of the righteousness which is by faith"; by that faith, which is "the substance of things being hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Noah died in this faith "not having received the promises." He has not received them yet; nor will he receive them "without us," for all the saints of all the generations are to be perfected together—Heb. 11:7, 13, 39, 40. Hence, the things Noah believed were the promises of the covenant with which he had been acquainted several centuries before the Flood. They were the promises made when the lives of the animals were cut off in Paradise for Adam's transgression—Gen. 3:15, 21. This covenant was renewed with Noah as its Heir, and afterwards with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and David. It was the covenant l'doroth olahm, "for the generations of the hidden period"; and therefore styled berith olahm, the "covenant of the hidden period."—Gen. 9:12, 16.

Now, the total destruction of the Adamic race in the line of Cain did not shake Noah's faith in the covenant. He still hoped for the promises it revealed. Seeing this, the Eternal Spirit condescended to communicate with Noah, and to assure him through Angel-Elohim, that no such sweeping destruction by water should again afflict the race. Hitherto, he had seen the prismatic arch photographed upon the clouds by clear shining of the sun through the rain; but he had never beheld it as a token, or sign of any thing else than that the weather was about to fair off. The time, however, had now arrived when henceforth he would view it as the symbol of salvation. For Elohim said: "I have set my bow in the cloud; and it shall be for THE TOKEN OF THE COVENANT between me and the earth. And it shall come to pass when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow shall be seen in the cloud. And I will took upon it, that I may remember the covenant of the hidden period between the Elohim and every living soul of all flesh that is upon the earth."

In his "visions of the Elohim," Ezekiel beheld the same scene as that presented to John in Patmos, respecting the Rainbow-Throne. He saw the appearance of the Man upon the sapphire throne, which he describes as of the color of amber flaming from the loins upward, and as fire from thence downwards, and brightness about the whole; which brightness was as the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain. All of which represented "the glory of Yahweh"—ch. 1:26, 28. The Man and the throne, and the glory he bears, being under the bow, are thereby indicated as the subject-matter of the covenant of which the rainbow is the token, symbol, or sign. This symbol points to a certain day, styled by Ezekiel, "the Day of Rain." There can be no bow except in such a day. "The day of rain" is a phrase which implies the existence of a day in which there is no rain; or, as the saying is "of a dry time." This is truly the character of the time in which we live; and not only so, but of all the time symbolized by "the court given to the Gentiles" (Apoc. 11:2), a time during which they are treading the Holy City under foot; concurrently with which also the Two Witnesses are prophesying, and the rain consequently, cannot descend; for "they have power to shut the heaven, that it rain not in the day of their prophecy"—11:6.

As in nature, then, so in grace, no bow can be seen but in a day of rain. At present every thing is dried up and parched. "All flesh is grass, and all the goodness thereof as the flower of the field; the grass withereth, the flower fadeth; because the spirit of Yahweh bloweth upon it; surely the people is grass; but the word (preached) of our Elohim shall stand to the hidden period"—Isa. 40:6. Such being the past, and present, and the future till the lightnings cease to flash, and the thunders to roll forth from the throne, no rainbow can or will be seen. It is now a day of perdition for want of rain. The people are withered, and shrivelled up for want of moisture; for their clergies are wells without water, dry clouds driven about of winds, withered trees without fruit, from whom no spiritual sustenance can be derived. A day of rain is the opposite of all this; and that the reader may have some idea of the nature of things when the bow shall be in manifestation about the throne, I invite his attention to the following testimonies.

“Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth. My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass; because I will publish the Name of Yahweh; ascribe ye greatness unto our Elohim. The Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; an AIL of truth and without iniquity; just and right is he.”—Deut. 32:1. “There is none like the AIL of Yeshurun riding heavens in thy help, and clouds in his majesty. Elohim of the east a refuge, and underneath the powers of the hidden period: and he shall thrust out the enemy from before thee; and shall say, Destroy them. ISRAEL THEN SHALL DWELL IN SAFETY ALONE: the fountain of Jacob shall be upon a land of corn and wine; also his heaven shall distil dew. Happy thou, O Israel; who like unto thee, O people, saved by Yahweh, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency! And thine enemies shall waste away before thee; and thou shalt tread upon their high places”—33:29. From the above we learn that when the name of Yahweh is being published to the peoples of the heavens and earth, the rain of the heaven is showering, and its dew in distillation; a state of the aerial favoring the appearance of the bow.

Between the opening of the door in the heaven, and the going forth of the lightnings and thunders, and voices from the heavens, there is no rain to cool off the sultriness of the aerial. For when the Ensign is lifted up upon the mountains, and the trumpet is being blown through the earth, Yahweh saith, “I will be still (yet in my dwellingplace I will be without fear) as dry heat impending lightning, as a Cloud of Dew in the heat of harvest”—Isa. 18:3, 4; but when the storm of thunder and lightning has subsided, and which is to result in presenting Israel before their King; and in bringing them to the place of the Name of Yahweh Tz’vaoth the Mount Zion; then “as the rain cometh down, and the snows from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth, and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return to me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree; and it shall be to Yahweh for a name, for the sign of the hidden period which shall not be cut off”—Isa. 55:10. This is the rejoicing of the nations with Israel, all blessed in Abraham and his Seed “in the day of rain”—the third day in which Israel is raised up, and lives in Yahweh’s sight; whose going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto them as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth—Hos. 6:2, 3; see also Joel 2:21–29, in which it is foretold that the Spirit shall be rained down upon all flesh to the praise of the Name of Yahweh Elohim in the midst of Israel, dwelling in Zion, his holy mountain; “then shall Jerusalem be holiness, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more.”

The symbol of all this blessedness and glory in the day of rain is the “rainbow circling about the throne in appearance like to an emerald.” The light green, the predominant color, typifying the fertilizing effect of the rain that forms the bow. The grass of the earth has become tender. It is then no longer tough and withered, and parched. The old grass has perished; and emerald fertility obtains on every side; for the covenanted glory of Yahweh covers the earth as the waters the area of the deep.

SECTION 2

THE KINGS AND PRIESTS OF THE MOST HOLY

“AND CIRCLING ABOUT THE THRONE WERE TWENTY-FOUR THRONES; AND UPON THE THRONES I SAW THE TWENTY AND FOUR ELDERS SITTING, HAVING BEEN INVESTED WITH WHITE GARMENTS; AND THEY HAD UPON THEIR HEADS GOLDEN CORONAL WREATHS”—CH. 4:4.

1. The Twenty-Four Elders

The symbolization presented in this verse is representative of the fulfilment of the promise contained in ch. 3:21, saying, “The victor, I will give to him to sit with me on my throne, as I also vanquished, and sat with my Father on his throne.” To represent this, twenty-four thrones are circled about one throne; so that in occupying representatively, that is, by a representative in the vision, one of the thrones, the individual victor sits with Jesus on his throne; in other words, shares with him in his kingly and priestly administration of human affairs in the Millennial Aion.

The twenty-four elders, then, are the victors or conquerors who have overcome, in the sense indicated in the writing to the seven ecclesias. Hence, being victors, enthroned and wreathed, and invested with white, or priestly garments, we behold them in the vision as kings and priests for the Deity. We see them as those who have eaten of the wood of the life, and who are, consequently, in the Paradise of the Deity; who are, in fact, collectively that living arboretum. We see them also in a position not to be injured by the second death; in possession of the Morning Star; clothed in white garments; pillars in the temple of the Spirit’s Deity to go out no more; with the name of Deity written upon them, the name of the New Jerusalem, even the New Name; for they are the manifestation of Deity, the New Jerusalem, and the New Name.

As symbolical personages, the twenty-four elders are representative of the redeemed in their official capacity of kings and priests. This is apparent from the song they join in singing, in which addressing Him upon the rainbowed throne, they say, “Thou wast slain, and with thy blood hast purchased us for the Deity from every people, tribe, race, and tongue; and hast made us kings and priests for our Deity, and we shall reign upon the earth”—ch. 5:9, 10. They are representative of “the people taken out from among the nations for the name of the Deity,” to whom it was testified that “they must through much tribulation enter the kingdom of God”—Acts 15:14; 14:22. This is the testimony of James and Paul, who are two of the represented. Hence, in the apocalyptic drama, one of the elders declares the origin of the class invested with white garments (which is also the investment of the twenty-four), and in so doing the origin of himself and company, saying, “These are they who came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; therefore are they before the throne of the Deity, and serve him day and night in his temple; and He that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and the Deity shall wipe away all tears from their eyes”—7:14.

2. Of the Number “Twenty-Four”

The twenty-four elders in the temple are a verification in symbol of these promises. The Lamb is there in the midst of them, and all tears are dried from their eyes. They are before the throne, and in the temple ready for service continually. The white garments with which they had been invested indicate the priestly office of the elders. They are “clothed with salvation” (Psa. 132:16), having been raised from among the dead, and invested with holy spirit nature consubstantially with the High Priest sitting upon the throne. They are victor kings as well as priests, as indicated by their wreaths of gold; and they are “elders,” because representatives of their class. Each elder is the symbol of an order, all the immortals being apportioned into twenty-four orders of royal priests after the type of David’s divisions of the Sons of Aaron into four and twenty orders—1 Chron. 24. Aaron was a type of Christ in his family and official relations, though not his order. He had two sons, Eleazar and Ithamar; the former name signifying “God is his helper;” and the latter, “the place of Palm Trees.” In David’s time, Zadok was the chief of Aaron’s sons in the line of Eleazar; and Ahimelech of those of Ithamar. Zadok signifies “the just one,” and Ahimelech “the brother of the king.” The interpretation of these names collectively is “God is (Israel’s) helper” in “the place of palm trees,” by “the Just One,” the “fellow of the King.” There were more chief men of the sons of Eleazar than of the sons of Ithamar. There were sixteen of the former, and eight of the latter; which together made twenty-four elders at the head of as many orders of priests, descendants of Aaron in the kingdom of David, that they might be princes of the sanctuary, and princes of the Elohim.

Such being the priestly arrangement in David’s kingdom, the symbols representative of it in the restoration of the constitution, “as in the days of old,” are derived from its ancient polity. When the Lord Jesus shall sit upon David’s throne, “he will sit and rule as a priest upon the throne, and bear the glory;” and as High Priest be the head of the houses of Eleazar and Ithamar, which are represented by the numbers sixteen and eight, or twenty-four. According to this, Eleazar and Ithamar constitute his priestly household. Sixteen of the Elders in John’s vision are figuratively of the house of Eleazar, and eight of the house of Ithamar; or, if named by their representatives in the time of David, sixteen are of the house of Zadok, and eight of the house of Ahimelech. Not, however, fleshly descendants of these men; for in the reconstruction of the government of Israel’s commonwealth, “the flesh profits nothing.” All in Christ are “made priests for the Deity,” by the fact of being in him; and as he takes the place of Aaron, all in him take the place of Aaron’s sons, and become, by adoption, thus the sons of Zadok. This change of persons does not alter the ordering of things. The twenty-four orders of priests will still obtain in the restored kingdom of David; and are therefore foreshadowed in John’s vision as encircling the throne. Collectively, they are Zadok, the just, and Ithamar, “the place of palm trees;” for they are washed from their sins in the blood of the Just One; and are represented in ch. 7:9, as “before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands,” the emblems of salvation and victory. They are also Ahimelech in the presence of David’s Son. They are many in one; all of them the children of a King; children given to Jesus for his brethren; and therefore collectively “the brother of the King,” or Christadelphians.

These twenty-four elders, then, are the twenty-four orders of the sons of Zadok, who shall enter into the sanctuary of Yahweh Elohim, and come near to His table to minister unto Him, and shall keep His charge—Ezek. 44:15, 16. The flesh and blood descendants of Aaron, who ministered in the holy and most holy places in the Mosaic Olahm, will not be permitted in the Millennial Aion to come near unto the throne encircled by the elders. “They shall not come near unto me, saith Yahweh Elohim, to do the office of priest unto me, nor to come near to any of my holy things in the Most Holy; but they shall bear their shame, and their abominations which they have committed. But I will make them keepers of the charge of the house, for all the service thereof, and for all that shall be done therein”—verses 13, 14. Thus the natural descendants of Aaron are degraded to an inferior station in the new heavens and earth. They were unfaithful to the Deity under the law. They turned their backs upon him when Israel went astray after their idols, before which they ministered, and caused them to fall into iniquity; and “therefore, saith Yahweh Elohim, I lifted up my hand against them, and they shall bear their iniquity.” This they will have to do during the thousand years; in which the saints will fill up the vacancy created by their degradation from their ancient rank near the throne to that of standing before the people to minister to them—verse 11.

But besides the twenty-four orders of Aaron’s sons, there were, in the ecclesiastical department of David’s kingdom, twenty-four orders of Levites, sons of Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun, whom he separated for the temple service, “to prophesy with harps, with psalteries, and with cymbals, to give thanks and to praise Yahweh Tz'vaoth" The number of those "who were instructed in the songs of Yahweh," were two hundred and eighty-eight, and were divided into twenty-four companies of twelve each, "as well the small as the great, the teacher as the scholar" being reckoned in each twelve—1 Chron. 25:1, 3, 7. These were also typical of those symbolized by the twenty-four elders who were represented to John in ch. 5:8, as "having each one harps and golden censers full of incense, which are the prayers of the saints; and they sang a new song." There are twenty-four symbolical elders because the sons of the High Priest and the singers who did the service of the temple under David's reign were twenty-four orders each; and in the aggregate typified the saints, the Elohim of Israel, who shall perform the temple service of the restored kingdom of David, when David's Son, the "Greater than Solomon," shall be High Priest of the kingdom after the Order of Melchizedec. The twenty-four elders represent both the priests and singers of the Ezekiel Temple which is to be built by "the man whose name is The Branch"—Zech. 6:12, 15. There will be twenty-four orders "as in the days of old"—Amos 9:11; who will be "the harpers harping with their harps, and singing a new song"—Apoc. 14:2, 3; even "the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb"—ch. 15:2-4.

First in design, last in execution, is the order of the apocalyptic visions. The Spirit designs the priestly manifestation of the kingdom, as exhibited in the beginning of this fourth chapter; but it will be the last in execution, for the manifestation cannot obtain until the saints have become victorious over the potentates of the earth. "The victor shall be clothed in white garments;" and it is stated that "the twenty-four elders had been invested with white garments;" which is as much as to say that their wars were over; that they had destroyed the Fourth Beast of Daniel; and that they had taken possession of the kingdom under the whole heaven, and were now entered upon their priestly functions in the presence of the Melchizedec High Priest sitting upon the rainbowed or covenanted throne "in the day of rain."

SECTION 3 THE LIGHTNINGS AND THUNDERS AND VOICES

"AND OUT OF THE THRONE PROCEED LIGHTNINGS AND THUNDERS AND VOICES; AND SEVEN LAMPS OF FIRE BURNING BEFORE THE THRONE, WHICH ARE THE SEVEN SPIRITS OF THE DEITY."—CH. 4:5.

1. The Lightnings

The throne established in the heaven in its inauguration is a throne of judgment; so that when the throne is set, "the judgment is set and the books are opened"—Dan. 7:10. This throne is "the Great White Throne" seen of John in ch. 20:11. It is all conquering; for from before the face of him who is to sit upon it, he says, "the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them." In other words, the Fourth Beast dominion was destroyed; and the other three beasts had their dominion taken away. At this crisis Daniel describes the throne as being a fiery flame, and the wheels, or hosts that obeyed its mandates, burning fire. He speaks of them as thousand thousands, and ten thousand times ten thousand. These he says, ministered to the King and stood before him; and in their going forth compares them to "a fiery stream issuing and coming forth from before him." The Spirit in David says, "He makes his ministers a flaming fire;" and therefore in this scene of the apocalypse, they are symbolized by "lightnings" with their attendant "thunders and voices." David also says, prophetically: "O Yahweh, bow thine heavens, and come down, touch the mountains, and they will smoke; flash forth lightning, and scatter them; send thine arrows, and discomfit them;" and the Spirit in Zechariah, foretelling the dissipation of the power of the sons of Greece at the advent, says: "I will render double unto thee, when I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee (Zion) as the sword of a Mighty Man. And Yahweh shall be seen over them, and his arrow (Ephraim) shall go forth as the lightning; and Yahweh Elohim shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south”—ch. 9:13. The teaching of this testimony is, that “in the day of the great slaughter when the towers fall,” there will be war between Israel and the rest of the world. That this war will have been kindled by the Messiah after his return. That he will be seen at the head of the armies of Israel, as their Commander, surrounded by the Sons of Zion, whom he will have raised up. He and they will be the captains of Israel, of whom Judah will be the bow, and Ephraim, or the Ten Tribes, his arrow. When this military organization is put into operation, and it goes forth for conquest in “the war of the great day of the Almighty Deity” (Rev. 16:14), it will issue forth as “a fiery stream” from the throne, burning with the fire of the King’s indignation; as lightnings flashing from the throne of David’s Lord and echoing their thunders and voices, from one end of the earth to the other, until “the controversy of Zion” shall be settled beyond all cavil or dispute. “In that day I will make the Governors of Judah as a hearth of fire among the wood, and as a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the peoples round about on the right hand and on the left; and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, in Jerusalem”—Zech. 12:6. These “governors” are the saints in lightning operation against the dominions symbolized by the four beasts of Daniel.

2. The Thunders.

Lightning is what philosophy terms electricity in luminous excitation. Scripturally, it is the “free Spirit of the Deity.” Thunder is the sound produced by the electrical condensation of the constituents of the aerial. The free oxygen and hydrogen floating in the air are electrically combined, and thereby caused to occupy less space than before, and so giving out lightning, and forming a vacuum, into which the surrounding air rushes, causing a loud report, or thunder. Hence, it is an appropriate symbol for that operation by which the temporary constituents of the political aerial (and the things which are seen there are temporary) are condensed into one dominion under the glorious luminary of the New Heavens. Jesus named the sons of Zebedee “the Sons of Thunder.” These were James, and his brother John, to whom this vision of thunder was revealed. The agents in this throne-scene are all sons of thunder. They are the Spirit-incarnations condensing all things into one kingdom with the thundering tumult of war in ch. 10:3, symbolized by “the Seven Thunders,” whose utterances are “sealed up” till the storm-period which precedes “the day of rain” when the bow appears.

3. The Seven Lamps of Fire.

The whole scene is a manifestation of Spirit in preparation for the reduction of the great mountain before Zerubbabel to the level of a plain. This is to be effected, not by ordinary military prowess or force, “but by my Spirit saith Yahweh of Hosts”—Zech. 4:6. He that sits upon the throne is spirit, those represented by the twenty-four elders will be spirit like him, and those symbolized by the four living ones will be spirit also; so that all that is manifested is an embodiment of spirit, and all effected by the manifested ones is done by the energy of Divine Power. This power is symbolized by the “Seven Lamps of Fire burning before the throne.” These are interpreted to signify “the Seven Spirits of the Deity:” not that there are seven distinct and independent spirits. We learn from Paul that there is but “One Spirit;” which one was represented to John by the symbol of perfection, “seven lamps of fire.” In ch. 5:6, these seven lamps are termed “seven horns and seven eyes.” The reason why the Spirit is symbolized by stationary lamps burning before the throne, as in ch. 4, is because it is connected with the throne in Zion as its fountain or reservoir—“all my springs are in thee, Zion;” but, as “seven horns and seven eyes” upon a lamb, in locomotion (ch. 14:4) the one spirit is represented as “sent forth” from Zion, “unto all the earth.”

The lightnings, and thunders, and voices, then, are those of the one spirit in seven-fold perfection sent forth into all the earth for the subjugation of the world. The spirit, however, does not go forth as free, uncombined, or naked spirit, as seen in the lightning and heard in the thunder of the material expanse. But it goes forth incarnated in the saints—in the Lord Jesus and his brethren; who are symbolized by the One sitting upon the throne and the twenty-four elders, and the four living ones.

4. When the Seven Spirits go forth.

The time when they begin to go forth into all the earth is, of course, subsequently to their resurrection. The sons of Zion are to be raised up against the sons of Greece, or the Gentiles. Being resurrected, they are in readiness to “follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth”—ch. 14:4. “Blessed are the dead dying in the Lord, haparti, at this time.” The epoch has then arrived for the generations of me righteous, who have previously died in the Lord, to be blessed—to take possession of the kingdom, or dominion, having been prepared for them from the foundation of the kosmos, or existing order of things; for all things are for their sakes—Matt. 25:34; 2 Cor. 4:15. At that time, they are to “take possession of the kingdom, under the whole heaven,” “that they may take rest out of their labors; yea, saith the spirit, for he follows their works with them”—14:13.

The time when the Lord’s dead ones are blessed, is when they have consummated the work symbolized by the sickles, which are set to work by the voices that proceed from the spirit throne with the lightnings and thunders. There are three voices. One announces their resurrection-blessedness; the second proclaims the harvesting of the earth, and the third the gathering the clusters of the earth’s vine—ch. 14:13, 15, 18. These voices belong to the Seventh Vial, which is the last period of the Seventh Trumpet, by which the Seventh Seal is consummated in all the events thereof. The wrath of the Deity is then exhausted, and peace reigns for the thousand years ensuing—ch. 15:1. Until these lightnings, and thunders, and voices shall cease to proceed from the throne, “no man can enter into the temple”—verse 8. Hence, the exhibition of the twenty-four priestly elders in the temple, is a scene that obtains, after “the war of the great day of the Almighty Deity” is over. The saints are then victors, and can give law and religion to the world. Hence, the Seventh Angel pours out his vial, into THE AIR; the result of which is that when it is emptied, “a great voice out of the temple of the heaven from the throne, says, “IT IS DONE.” But while it is pouring out by the saints who are engaged in taking the kingdom under the whole heaven, “there are voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great”—ch. 16:17. This will be the time of trouble Daniel speaks of in ch. 12:1, to result in the abolition of all human governments, and the establishment of the kingdom of the Deity.

5. The Translucent Sea.

“Before the Throne a translucent sea, like to crystal”—Verse 6.

In prophetic writing “Sea” is representative of nations. It is thus used in Ezek. 26:3, where Yahweh Elohim addressing Tyre, says, “I am against thee, and will cause many nations to come up against thee, as the sea causeth his waves to come up.” Here the waves of the sea represent the military forces of the nations marching against any enemy. Also in Jer. 51:42, 43, the forces of the Medes and Persians which captured Babylonia are styled the sea; as “the sea is come up upon Babylon: she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof: her cities are a desolation.”

Daniel’s four great beasts are represented as arising out of the Great Sea, or Mediterranean, as the result of the striving of the four winds upon it. These four beasts are systems of powers which arose out of conflicts of the nations inhabiting that portion of the earth the central sea of which is the Mediterranean. Hence, this sea became their representative in the prophecy. It is also so used in the Apocalypse into the symbols of which it has been transferred, and with them incorporated. The beast having seven heads and ten horns exhibited in ch. 13:1, is a combination of Daniel's four, and therefore represented as "rising up out of the sea," which of course, is the same sea.

The second trumpet was prepared to "blow upon the sea; and when it sounded the great Attila mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea; and the third part of the sea became blood; and the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed."—Apoc. 8:8. This was a representation of the judgments that were to fall upon the peoples of the Roman West occupying that third part of the great sea region and scourged by Attila and his Huns, as Moesia, Thrace, Macedonia, Illyria, Lombardy, and so forth. But, until the Sealing Angel had done his work upon the servants of the Deity, the Angel of the second trumpet was commanded not to hurt the sea—ch. 7:1, 3

The rainbowed angel that descends from the heaven, is represented in ch. 10:2, 5, as planting his right foot upon the sea, and swearing that henceforth "there should be no delay in the finishing up of the mystery of the Deity as he had declared the good news," or gospel of the kingdom, "to his servants the prophets." This is the same sea; and the right foot of the angel resting upon it, indicates that it is to be subjected to the judgments of the Seven Thunders from the throne as well as the earth, or interior regions.

In chap. 12:12, the sea is again introduced in the words, "Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and the sea! for the Devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." Here the sea is regarded as an inhabited region to which the Devil would pay a visit in wrath. In this text it represents those provincial regions of the Fourth Beast habitable in which the last struggle for power between the Catholic and Pagan factions was to ensue, subsequently to the expulsion of the "what withholdeth," from the Roman Heaven, in the Constantinian epoch—2 Thess. 2:6, 7.

In chap. 16:3, the second angel-power is exhibited as pouring out his vial upon the sea; "and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in the sea." Here is a sea of living souls in anything else than a translucent state like to crystal. It was opaque with human blood to excess, as symbolized by the death of all the souls it contained. The naval anti-revolutionary war, which commenced in 1793, and continued with brief intermissions till 1815, illustrates this judgment upon the sea. It is a sea of living souls noted for their wickedness; and hence it is that the Spirit speaking of them, says, "The wicked are like a troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. No peace for the wicked, saith my Elohim."—Isa. 57:20.

This is the present condition of the Apocalyptic sea, representative of the nations of the four beasts of Daniel; the people of the interior, as of Germany, Hungary, Poland, Russia, and so forth, being represented by "the earth." The sea-nations are more especially before, or in the presence of the throne; the earth-nations being more remote. Nevertheless, the nations, or "inhabiters of the earth and sea," are all of the same character, and in the hour of judgment "equally obnoxious to the wrath of the Deity. They are both a dead and a troubled sea, and so charged with mire and dirt," that nothing can make it transparent to the light of the divine glory, but the judgments of the Deity—the bolts of the seven thunders pealing from the throne: "when his judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness;" and "all nations shall come and worship before Yahweh; because his judgments are made manifest"—Isa. 26:9; Apoc. 15:4.

This, then, is the purpose of the Deity upon the sea; to make it "like to crystal," transparent with righteousness and truth. This is the mission of Yahweh's servant when he comes in power to enlighten the earth with his glory. But this must be preceded by judgments upon the sea. The representation of this is found in Apoc. 15:2, in which John says: "I saw as it were a translucent sea that had been mingled with fire (memigmenen perf. part pass.)." But the fire had ceased to burn, and those who had gained the victory over the sea of nations, he also saw standing upon it, and with their harps celebrating their victory over the Papal and other dominions, and singing the song of Moses and the Lamb. The fire with which the sea will have been mingled is the wrath of the Deity contained in the Seven Thunders, or terrors of the Seventh Vial, to be hurled from the throne by Jesus and his Brethren, who constitute the Rainbow Angel, "whose face is as the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire"—ch. 10:1.

When these judgments, which make the Deity "a consuming fire" (and "the Spirit follows with them," the saints) when they shall have subsided, "the Mystery of the Deity will be finished." The sea of nations will be no more lashed into fury and tempest for a thousand years. In the presence of David's throne it will be tranquil; and its waters so translucent, that those who stand upon it, having calmed its tempests and quieted its waves, will see into its utmost depths. But though at rest for a thousand years, and the power of the Satan submerged in the abyss, the sea will again become tempestuous, and cast up mire and dirt. "In the flesh dwells no good thing," and "it lusteth against the Spirit." At the end of the Millennial Period it becomes impatient of restraint, and the nations rebel against the saints who will have ruled them with a rod of iron so long in righteousness and peace. As "the sand of the sea" they again try conclusions with the saints; and as before the saints subdue them with a crushing and final overthrow. The end of flesh and blood upon the earth will have then arrived, and there will be "no more sea"—ch. 20:8; 21:1. A full end will then be made of all nations—Jer. 30:11. The nations of the earth and sea will then be superseded by "THE ISRAEL OF GOD," every individual of whom, of all orders and degrees, will be consubstantial with the Deity, and the occupant of this then glorious planet which shall never be removed.

SECTION 4 THE FOUR LIVING ONES

"IN THE MIDST OF THE THRONE AND IN THE CIRCLE OF THE THRONE FOUR LIVING ONES BEING FULL OF EYES BEFORE AND BEHIND."—VERSE 6.

These four living ones being "in the midst of the throne and in the circle of the throne," must be symbolical of those represented by the twenty-four elders, that is, of the saints. The elders, as we have seen, are representative of the saints in the peaceful exercise of their sacerdotal and regal functions, "resting from their labors" performed in "the war of the great day of the almighty Deity," while the four living ones represent the saints in cooperation with the Spirit carrying on the war to its victorious consummation.

In the Common Version these four are styled "beasts." The word in the original is zoa, and signifies simply living ones. In Ezek. 1:5, they are styled chaiyoth, rendered in the E.V. "living creatures." They are symbols representative of what is to be, not of what is yet manifested. That which is to be manifested exists, but the form of manifestation does not. That which exists is the all-pervading spirit radiant from the Divine Substance; but the spirit-forms, which do not exist, are the dead saints. These must be raised, and then transformed into spirit-bodies, instinct with life and power omnipotent; a transformation which in all its elements is aggregately represented by these "four living ones full of eyes before and behind." The Spirit of the Deity, then, is the great reservoir of power out of which they are born or developed. "That which hath been born out of spirit is spirit." These are the words of Jesus to Nicodemus. The glorified saints, glorified after resurrection, are therefore spirit multitudinously manifested, and isaggeloi, equal to angels. In his "Visions of Elohim," Ezekiel beheld this manifestation of the saints out of spirit in symbolic representation. He tells us that he was looking in a northerly direction, and in the distance behold “a whirlwind, A GREAT CLOUD, and a fire came out of the North.” This was the Spirit in tempestuous and destructive operation. But to show that it was not free spirit, but embodied spirit, he goes on to say, that out of the midst of the fire issued forth “the likeness of four living creatures.” He then describes their appearance, and afterwards remarks concerning their movements, that they were identical with those of the spirit; for “they went,” saith he, “every one straight forward: whither the spirit was to go, they went”; and of this going, John says, it was “into all the earth.” They went with the Seven Spirits of the Deity, for they will be the seven spirits embodied. Hence the terms applied to the seven spirits by John, are applied to the four by Ezekiel, who says they were like burning coals of fire and like lamps; and that out of the fire, that is, from them went forth lightning; and that they ran and returned as a flash of lightning.

But though Ezekiel introduces them as four living ones and four wheels in ch. 1:5, 16, in referring to them in ch. 10:15, he speaks of them as one, saying, “this is hachaiyah, THE LIVING ONE.” In other words, the individuals of whom this Spirit manifestation is composed are, in the aggregate, what the voice issuing from their midst proclaims without intermission day and night, namely, the thrice or superlatively holy Yahweh, the Omnipotent Deity, who was, and who is, and who is coming—Apoc. 4:8. These are the ONE BODY, nearly all the atoms of which are now in death, “sleeping in the dust.” But, speaking of them as they are now in reference to its future, the Spirit styles them “MY DEAD BODY,” and says “they shall arise,” and, in view of the resurrection, exclaims, “Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust.” When they come forth from the dust they are no longer the Spirit’s Dead Body, but they become the Spirit’s Living One, and can then say, “I am the First and the Last, and the Living One: and I was dead, and behold I am living for the Aions of the Aions, the Amen.” Jesus is the visible Head of these. Without Him the Living One would be incomplete—Isa. 26:19; Rev. 1:18.

Ezekiel clearly indicates what was represented by the four living ones and their wheels in ch. 1:24. He says, “The noise of their wings was like the noise of great waters, as the voice of shaddai, MIGHTY ONES, the voice of speech, as the noise of a host.” This was equivalent to saying that their wings represented “great waters,” which represented “Mighty Ones,” who gave utterance to their will and purpose, and that there was a multitude of them. These were the waters John heard responsive to the voice issuing from the throne, saying, “Praise our Deity, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, small and great.” “I heard,” says he, “the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, hallelu Yah, praise ye YAH; for Yahweh Elohim the Omnipotent reigns. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give the glory to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready”—ch. 19:6. This glorious multitude will be the embodiment of the power that is “to execute vengeance upon the nations and punishments upon the peoples; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgment written:” that is to perform all those things I have sketched under the caption of “The Apocalypse Rooted in the Prophets”—from page 41 to 85, vol. 1; to set up the kingdom and to establish glory to the Deity in the highest heaven, over the earth peace and goodwill among men.

These four living ones and the four wheels are “THE CHARIOT OF THE CHERUBIM.” They are the chariot in which the Deity rides forth to battle against the enemies of the house of David, and upon which he sits enthroned over Israel. This appears from 2 Sam. 22:11, and Psalms 80:1. In the former place, Yahweh is said to ride upon a cherub; and in the latter, to inhabit the cherubim. The etymology of the word is regarded as obscure. In view of this, I would suggest that we may take the root charav, as having been the same with kharav, to waste, to destroy, from which comes, kherev, a sword. This derivation is suggested by the text where kheruvim, or cherubim, first occurs in the scriptures; as, “Yahweh Elohim placed at the east of the garden of Eden the cherubim and the flaming sword which turned itself to guard the way of the tree of the lives.” By rendering wav, by even, instead of “and,” it would make the flaming sword expletive of the cherubim; as, “the cherubim, even the flaming sword”—the flame containing the cherubic power, as Ezekiel’s “whirlwind, great clouds, and fire,” did the four living ones he saw.

But, be the true etymology what it may, it is certain that they are symbols of a wasting and destroying power. When their wings are expanded they are in lightning operation; when let down, they are standing, and either preparing for action or “resting from their labors.” They are “full of eyes before and behind;” or, as Ezekiel says, “their whole basar, flesh, even their backs, and their hand, and their wings, and the wheels, were full of eyes round about.” An eye is the symbol of intelligence; and when a multitude of eyes are aggregated together, each eye indicates a particular or individual intelligence. Ezekiel informs us that the eyes were in flesh which was full of them. Each eye, then, was a flesh-intelligence; and, as the four had each a human face and hand, and were endowed with the faculty of speech, the intelligence was that of a man. Hence, each eye is representative of a man; and as the four sing, “Thou hast redeemed us,” each eye is symbolical of a saint. The eyes are “a great multitude which no man can number;” yet they are symbolized by four, by 144,000, by a city lying four-square, and 144 cubits—that is, these numbers are symbolical of the saints; first, in relation to their encampment; second to their nationality; third, to their municipality; and fourth to their corporation limit.

1. Seraphim Identical with Cherubim

In Isa. 6:2, these cherubic symbols are styled seraphim. “I saw the Adonai,” saith he, “sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. SERAPHS stood near to it.... And one cried to another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, Yahweh Tz’vaoth (He who shall be hosts): the whole earth (shall be) full of his glory.” There is no obscurity about the etymology of seraph. It signifies burning, fiery, deadly. The fiery serpents sent among the people (Numb. 21:6) are styled by Moses seraphim. By the saints, the seraphim and cherubim of Messiah’s throne, the whole earth is to be filled with his glory. Being incarnations of Spirit, they will be more than a match for all the powers of the world. They will cast down their thrones, overthrow Babylon, waste the land of Assyria, reap the harvest of the earth, tread the winepress of wrath, and as a stream of devouring fire destroy the body of Daniel’s fourth polity with their burning flame.

2. The Four Faces.

In the Most Holy Place of the Temple of Solomon there were two cherubic figures, which stood opposite to each other, with wings outstretched over the Ark of the Covenant. Each of these had four faces, which were so ordered that four different faces of the eight should look down upon the caphporeth, coverlid, mercyseat, or propitiatory. By this arrangement, the face of the lion, of the ox, of the man, and of the eagle, all looked upon the coverlid on which was sprinkled the sacrificial blood of the great day. Though the number of the cherubim varies, the faces are always four. In the temple there was one body to four faces. Ezekiel saw four bodies with four faces each, and John saw four bodies, each body having one face. But though the number of the bodies differed, they were only the subdivisions of a general whole.

The faces are the faces of the Spirit. The show-bread placed on the golden table in the holy place is styled “the bread of the Faces taken from before the Faces of Yahweh,” when it was given by the priest to David—1 Sam. 21:6. The faces of Yahweh were the cherubim faces over against the table embroidered on the curtain of the tabernacle. They symbolized the Spirit in flesh-manifestation and were therefore the faces of the Spirit.

Now collectively the saints are an encampment, and are so represented in Rev. 20:9; where it is stated, that the rebel nations at the close of the Millennium go up against their “camp.” As the saints are “the Israel of the Deity;” and though by the accident of birth multitudes of them were once Gentiles, yet by adoption through Jesus were grafted into the Commonwealth of Israel; they necessarily partake of its national organization. The camp of the saints, then, has its ensigns in conformity with those of the four camps into which the twelve tribes were distributed, whose captains or princes they become. From Numb. 2 we learn that the whole host of Israel was marshalled about four standards: the first, that of Judah; the second, of Reuben; the third, of Ephraim; and the fourth, of Dan; and in the midst of these four grand divisions was the camp of the priests and saints, and in their midst the tabernacle, in which was the throne of Yahweh over the Mercy Seat and between the Cherubim. Now, of these several camps of fighting men the following were their ensigns: first, the Lion, which symbolized the camp of Judah; second, the Man that of Reuben; third, the Ox that of Ephraim; and fourth, the Eagle for the camp of Dan. Hence it is that the Lamb in Rev. 5:5, is styled “the Lion of the Tribe of Judah.” Being descended from that tribe, and the King of the nation too, the royalty of which belongs to Judah, he is symbolized by the ensign; and as the king is thus designated, so all his brethren, the saints, are apocalyptically divided into camps about the throne; each camp being represented by a living one; and the ensigns of the camps borrowed from the nation they are to rule. And that the reader may not erroneously suppose that the four living ones represent the fleshly descendants of Abraham, their standards are enumerated after a different order; it being first, the lion; second, the ox; third, the man; and fourth, a flying eagle.

Apocalyptically, then, we have the whole multitude of resurrected and accepted saints marshalled into four camps in the midst of, and circling about the throne; and according to the law, “every man of the children of Israel pitching by his own standard with the ensign of his father’s house.” There will be the east camp composed of three gates, or tribes; on the north three; on the south three; and on the west three, ch. 21:12, 13; all ready to go forth following the Head to the place it may indicate (Ezek. 10:11) on the mission of the chariots and horses, of which we have treated already on page 74, vol. 1. In the new song they sing they say, “We shall reign on the earth;” not “we do reign.” They go forth energized by the spirit to establish their dominion, and to fill the earth with glory; so that when their victory is complete they may as royal priests of the Deity, cast the coronal wreaths they have acquired before the throne; that he who sits upon it, whom in their wars they will have followed whithersoever he led them, may receive the glory and honor and power; for the reason that he has “created all things, and for his pleasure they are and were created.”

Portion of the symbology of The Apocalypse is based on the Tabernacle.

CHAPTER 5

THE GLORY OF Yahweh FILLS THE EARTH AS THE RESULT OF THE SCROLL BEING UNROLLED AND THE SEALS LOOSED

TRANSLATION

APOC. V

1. And I saw at the right of Him, seated upon the throne a SCROLL that had been written within and on the outside, sealed up with SEVEN SEALS.

2. And I saw a powerful messenger heralding with a loud voice, “Who is worthy to unroll the scroll, and to loose its seals?”

3. But no one was able in the heaven, nor upon the earth, nor under the earth, to unroll the scroll, nor to see it.

4. And I shed many tears, because no one was found worthy to unroll and to read the scroll, nor to see it.

5. But one of the elders saith unto me, “Weep not; behold the LION who is of the Tribe of Judah, THE ROOT OF DAVID, hath prevailed to unroll the scroll, and to loose its seven seals.

6. And I saw, and behold in midst of the throne and of the four Living Ones, and in the midst of the Elders, a LAMB having stood as having been slain, having Seven Horns and Seven Eyes, the which are the SEVEN SPIRITS of the Deity, having been sent forth into all the earth.

7. And he went and received the scroll from the right of Him seated upon the throne.

8. And when he received the scroll, the four Living Ones, and the twenty-four Elders prostrated themselves before the Lamb, having every one harps, and golden bowls full of perfumes, the which are the prayers of the SAINTS. 9. And they sing a NEW SONG, saying,

*“Thou art worthy to receive the scroll,
And to undo the seals thereof;
For thou wast slain, and with thy blood,
The price, hast purchased us for God
From every tribe, race, people, tongue;
And mad’st us kings and priests t’our God,
And we upon the earth shall reign.”*

11. And I beheld, and heard a voice of many angels circled about the throne and of the Living Ones and of the Elders; and the number of them was ten thousand and thousands of thousands,

12. Saying with a loud voice,

*“The Lamb that hath been put to death,
The power, riches, wisdom, strength,
And honor, glory, blessing too,
Is worthy to receive.”*

13. And every created thing that is in the heaven, and things which are on the earth, and underneath the earth, and upon the sea, even all the things in them, I heard saying,

*“TO HIM that sitteth on the throne
And to the LAMB the blessing be,
The honor, glory, and the pow’r,
The Aions of the Aions for!”*

14. And the four Living Ones said, “SO LET IT BE!” And the twenty-four Elders prostrated themselves, and did homage to him that liveth for the Aions of the Aions.

A Jerusalem Yemenite scribe writing a scroll of the Law. The “book” or scroll seen by John was written within and on the outside for it symbolised events relating to the Ecclesia and to the World. But it was sealed with seven seals, and so completely hidden from human sight until opened by the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, and its contents revealed for the edification of the “servants of the Deity”.

SECTION 1

GENERAL REMARKS

IN THE PREVIOUS CHAPTER IS EXHIBITED “THE MANIFESTATION OF THE SONS OF THE DEITY” IN THE PRESENCE OF THE ETERNAL CREATOR, SUBSEQUENTLY, OF COURSE, TO THE RESURRECTION OF THE SAINTS. “THE ADOPTION, TO WIT, THE REDEMPTION OF THE BODY” FROM THE POWER OF THE GRAVE IS ACCOMPLISHED; AND THE TIME IS COME FOR THEM TO EXECUTE THE JUDGMENT GIVEN THEM, AND TO TAKE THE KINGDOM AND POSSESS IT UNDER THE WHOLE HEAVEN. THE CHAPTER REPRESENTS THEM AS PREPARED FOR ACTION, “ACCORDING TO THE ENERGY WHEREBY” HE WHO SITTETH UPON THE THRONE, “IS ABLE TO SUBDUE ALL THINGS TO HIMSELF.” THEY HAVE JOYFULLY ACKNOWLEDGED HIS LORDSHIP THEMSELVES, AND CAST THEIR CORONAL WREATHS BEFORE HIM IN RECOGNITION OF THE SOVEREIGN POWER WHENCE THEY WERE DERIVED; AND THEY DECLARE THAT HE IS WORTHY OF UNIVERSAL GLORY, HONOR, AND POWER, WHICH IT IS THEIR MISSION, AS THE EMBODIMENT OF THE SEVEN SPIRITS, TO ESTABLISH IN ALL THE EARTH. “WORTHY ART THOU, O LORD, TO RECEIVE THE GLORY, AND THE HONOR, AND THE POWER; BECAUSE THOU CREATEDST ALL THINGS, AND ON ACCOUNT OF THY WILL THEY EXIST, AND WERE CREATED.”

But after what course, or successive development of things among the nations, is such an extraordinary consummation to be accomplished? “As I live,” saith Yahweh, “the whole earth shall be full of my glory.” “It shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.” True, O Lord; but how shall it be effected; in what sequence of events; and by whom? In the time of the Apostle John this was a matter of great interest. In his day the saints were engaged in a severe and perilous conflict with Caesar, who had learned sufficient of their doctrine to know that the Pagan or any other human constitution of the world was incapable of contemporaneous existence with the kingdom proclaimed and longed for by the saints. But, though Caesar made war upon them they were not to avenge themselves; how, then, could the kingdom promised them be established? How could a door be opened in the heaven, and the throne of their kingdom be established there to the entire exclusion of Caesar and his representatives? Would it be consequent upon and coeval with the downfall of paganism? Or would it be many ages after that event? And, whenever the time came, by what means will the Eloah of the heavens set up the kingdom, and break in pieces the government of the nations? These were questions “the servants of the Deity” needed light upon. They had the prophets, it is true; and among these Daniel especially: but still there were mysteries “sealed up and closed” in their writings which required information not yet extant to make them intelligible. Daniel “heard, but understood not,” neither did any of his contemporaries—ch. 12:8; 8:27. Nor should we err if we were to say that this state of mind was characteristic of all the saints previous to the giving of this revelation, styled the Apocalypse, to Jesus Anointed. They “none of them understood” the development of the mystery the Deity had declared to his servants the prophets—Rev. 10:7. Nor need we be surprised at this when we consider that even after the mystery was solved by revelation, multitudes existed in and near John’s time who had to confess that they could not comprehend the exposition of the enigma. They needed one to expound the exposition. Among these was Dionysius, styled by Eusebius the ecclesiastical historian contemporary with Constantine, “the great bishop of Alexandria.” He flourished in the middle of the third century as an opponent of the thousand years’ reign of Christ upon earth with his saints after their resurrection, which was ignorantly and maliciously ascribed to one Cerinthus, contemporary with the Apostle John, as its inventor. But Daniel taught the doctrine nearly seven hundred years before Cerinthus was heard of, as may be seen in the Apocalypse as contracted in his seventh chapter. Cerinthus may have grafted upon it some foolishness of his own; but of the doctrine itself he was no more the inventor than the Pope of Rome.

There are two works ascribed to Dionysius “On the Promises.” They were written to oppose the idea that the promises given to holy men in the scriptures should be understood more as the Jews understood them, and that there would be a thousand years of delights on the earth. This position was taken up by a bishop in Egypt named Nepos, who wrote a book in defense of it, and styled it “Refutation of the Allegorists.” Dionysius being an allegorist, warmly opposed Nepos in his work “On the Promises.” In one of his works he thus speaks of Nepos: “They produce,” says he, “a certain work of Nepos, upon which they lay great stress, as if he advanced things that are irrefragable when he asserts that there will be an earthly reign of Christ. In many other respects I accord with and greatly love Nepos, both on account of his faith and industry, and his great study in the scriptures; as also for his great attention to psalmody, by which many are still delighted. I greatly reverence the man also for the manner in which he has departed this life. But the truth is to be loved and honored before all. It is just, indeed, that we should applaud and approve whatever is said aright, but it is also a duty to examine and correct whatever may not appear to be written with sufficient soundness. If, indeed, he were present, and were advancing his sentiments orally, it would be sufficient to discuss the subject without writing, and to convince and confute the opponents by question and answer. But as the work is published, and as it appears to some, is calculated to convince, and there are some teachers who say that the law and the prophets are of no value, and who give up following the gospels and who depreciate the epi not sealed”—ch. 22:10—it should be sealed, and therefore unintelligible to them. The truth of the matter they call “little and perishable;” and absurdly suppose that the Millennial reality expounded by Chiliasts is expected to be “such a state of things as now exists in” what they call “the kingdom of God,” that is, in “Christendom.” But the reason of this their folly is, that the things revealed by the Deity are not in conformity with “the thinking of the flesh.” That which the Old Adam terms grand and sublime, is not truly so. The sublimity and greatness of his conceptions in relation to “the deep things of God,” are mere foolishness. Dionysius and his brethren were of “the Synagogue of the Satan,” “Jezebel and her children,” who held the doctrine of Balaam, and taught “the depths of the Satan;” by which they were industriously developing the Laodicean Apostasy, which, in the reign of Constantine the First, became the religion of Satan’s Kingdom, and continues such until this day. The Old Adam’s foolishness was, therefore, especially theirs. Hence, the charge of their Millennarian contemporaries is perfectly just, that the Allegorists “have no sublime and great conception either of the glorious and truly divine appearance of our Lord, nor of our own resurrection, and of our being gathered, and assimilated to him.”

In proof of how greatly Jezebel’s children were puzzled by the Apocalypse within a hundred and fifty years after its publication—how utterly incapable they were in any sense “to see it”—I will still quote from “the great Bishop of Alexandria.” “Some, indeed, before us,” says he, “have set aside, and have attempted to refute the whole book, criticising every chapter, and pronouncing it without sense, and without reason,” that is, totally opposed to the thinking of the flesh, or to the sense and reason of minds destitute of the truth. “They say,” continues Dionysius, “it has a false title, for it is not of John. Nay, that it is not even a revelation, as it is covered with such a dense and thick veil of ignorance, that not one of the Apostles, and not one of the holy men, or those of the Church, could be its author.” It will not be difficult for one of “servants of the Deity” to discern to what class of professors these critics belonged, and the true cause of their denunciation of the Apocalypse. It condemned them as “evil,” as “liars,” as false apostles, as Nikolaitanes, as spurious Jews of the Satan’s synagogue, as the children of Jezebel, and so forth. They had sense and reason enough to recognize themselves as of the class repudiated under these terms in the apocalyptic epistles. They were conscious that they “held the doctrine of Balaam,” and “the doctrine of the Nikolaitanes,” and hence, their bitter enmity and contempt for the whole book which exposed them, and all of their class in all ages and generations, to the reprobation of all truly good and Christian men. They tried to persuade their contemporaries who professed christianity, that it ought not to be recognized as canonical: that it was no revelation from the Deity; and that consequently, pious, God-fearing people should not perplex their minds in the vain endeavour to understand it. Whatever its author might mean, was inscrutable, being imbedded “in such a dense and thick veil of ignorance.” No doubt, there was such a veil between its meaning and their comprehension of it; but the fog was that which beclouded their own brains, and arose from the vain imaginations and traditions of their evil hearts. Mankind are prone to evil, and to the reception of foolishness rather than the truth. This has been characteristic of all generations since the original transgression in Eden. It was pre-eminently so of the generations immediately succeeding the delivery of the Apocalypse to John. The Nikolaitanes and children of Jezebel, whose representatives in our generation are the “Holy Orders of the Ministry,” the Spirituals of Modern Christendom, at length succeeded in persuading their dupes that they ought not to trouble themselves with the study of the Apocalypse, for that it was utterly unintelligible, or could not be seen; and calculated only to dethrone all sense and reason. The impression they made was deep and lasting. Repudiation of apocalyptic studies became a principal of “orthodoxy” in all succeeding generations, until in our own, a man’s sanity is suspected if he is known earnestly to devote himself to the work of unfolding the mystery set forth, or revealed, in the symbols it contains.

But they were not content with simply denying the divine authorship of the book. They proceeded to justify the character assigned them in the Apocalypse by falsely ascribing it to one Cerinthus; who if he ever existed, is said, like many in our day, to have held some very absurd opinions in connection with the Divine truth of Christ’s reign on earth. “Cerinthus,” say they, “the founder of the sect of Cerinthians, so called from him, wishing to have reputable authority for his own fiction, prefixed the title. For this is the doctrine of Cerinthus, that there will be an earthly reign of Christ.” In this he was perfectly correct. “And,” continued they, “as he was a lover of the body; and altogether sensual in those things which he so eagerly craved, he dreamed that he would revel in the gratification of the sensual appetite, i.e. in eating, and drinking, and marrying.” Whether he really held these opinions it is impossible to tell. His enemies say so; and these enemies have had the ear of the world to the exclusion of all testimony but their own. To the class denounced in the Apocalyptic epistles have belonged all the ecclesiastical historians through whom has come to us the meagre and insipid accounts of what they unscripturally style “the church.” All not of the Laodicean Apostasy, they have proscribed and denounced as “heretics;” and where they could not procure the suppression of these by force, they have sought to hold them up to the reprobation and contempt of their contemporaries and posterity by “saying all manner of evil of them falsely for Christ’s sake,” as he foretold they would—Matt. 5:11. I know experimentally that this is the policy of professors and their spiritual guides of this nineteenth century generation. They affirm certain ridiculous falsehoods, and say I teach them. They do not care to inform themselves of the truth of the matter, which would be inconvenient, and might not answer their purpose. So it may have been in the case of Cerinthus. He may not have held the opinions attributed to him; or he might. But, if even he did, his errors did not change the truth of the Deity. He has decreed the reign of His king on Zion, the hill of His holiness, and it will assuredly come to pass, in spite of all the errors assigned to Cerinthus and others who believe it, concerning the nature and character of that reign.

Cerinthus was perfectly scriptural if he affirmed that there would be eating and drinking in the kingdom of the Deity. It is, however, difficult to believe that he taught that there would be marrying, in view of the saying of Israel’s King, that they who attain to the resurrection and the kingdom “neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels of the Deity.” As to eating and drinking, this is as plainly taught by Christ, who not only ate with his apostles after his own resurrection, but promised them, saying, “ye shall eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel;” and again he said, “I will no more drink of the fruit of the vine until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of the Deity”—Luke 22:30; Mark 14:25. The enemies of Cerinthus did not believe this; but denounced it as sensuality, and in so doing, thought themselves wonderfully spiritual! They said that to give the eating and drinking “a milder aspect and expression,” he taught that it would be “in festivals and sacrifices, and the slaying of victims,” the sensual appetite of the redeemed would be gratified. Against this “milder aspect and expression,” they exclaimed as loudly as our own clerical contemporaries and their disciples; for according to their system of superstition, they can discern no place in the kingdom, whether on earth or in heaven, for eating and drinking sacrificially or in any other way. I perceive, plainly, in these charges brought against Cerinthus the great and rapid progress the apostasy Paul predicted had made within a short time after the apocalypse was revealed. Nay, even while he wrote the prediction, the Allegorists were actively engaged in the work of superseding the real, literal, and true, by the fictitious and imaginary, which they call the “spiritual,” or allegorical, until now at length, everything is resolved into feeling and impressions, and the testimony of the Deity by prophets and apostles is practically ignored. A professor “feels good,” and therefore he is good; he “feels that a thing is true,” and therefore it is true; he “feels that it is false,” and therefore it is false! With hearts full of such enlightened feelings as this; and with heads unfurnished with the divine testimony, we have the professor of the Laodicean Apostasy who has flourished in all the odor of sanctity, and orthodox contempt for the reign of Christ on earth, characteristic of the zealots in all “the times of the Gentiles.” In their systems of fleshly pietism they have no place for the priesthood of the saints; nor for the temple, and festivals, and sacrifices of Ezekiel’s testimony. All is figurative or allegorical; and nothing real remains but to save souls from eternal torment, and when the number of the elect is completed, to make a bonfire of terrestrial creation! Well might it be said of the allegorists, that “they have no sublime and great conception, either of the glorious and truly divine appearance of our Lord, nor of the resurrection, and the gathering, and assimilation to him.”

But to return to Dionysius and the Apocalypse. He could not, it would seem, go as far as some of his predecessors and contemporaries in a total repudiation of the book. “For my part,” says he, “I would not venture to set this book aside, as there are many brethren who value it much; but having formed a conception of its subject as exceeding my capacity, I consider it also containing a certain concealed and wonderful intimation in each particular. For though I do not understand, yet I suspect that some deeper sense is enveloped in the words, and these I do not measure and judge by my private reason; but allowing more to faith, I have regarded them as too lofty to be comprehended by me, and those things which I do not understand, I do not reject, but I wonder the more that I cannot comprehend.” This was a candid admission on the part of Dionysius, that he could “not see it.” He showed a better sense than many in not venturing to set it aside, because he could not see it. Inability to see it disqualifies the reader for enlightened criticism. If he were able to see the apocalyptic scroll, he would discern knowledge and wisdom pervading it, which “no one in the heaven, nor upon the earth, nor under the earth” could have originated but the Deity who gave it to Jesus Christ. The proof of the divine authorship of the book is in this. I would, therefore, advise the reader to study it that he may be “able to see it”—to understand it. “Many brethren” in the days of Dionysius “valued it much,” though he could make nothing of it. They valued it, doubtless, because they understood it, not that they could have expounded all its details; but keeping in mind “the gospel of the kingdom,” the nature of that kingdom, and the great mystery of godliness, in the manifestation of the sons of the Deity, they saw into the general import of this wonderful book, and secured the blessing promised to him that knows accurately, and gives heed to its words, and observes narrowly the things it contains.

Let us, then, proceed under the enlightened conviction, that though there is no help to be expected from “the great bishops” of the Gentiles, babes in Christ may come to see the apocalypse intellectually if they approach the subject in a teachable spirit, and from a right direction. I proceed then to remark, that while the fourth chapter introduces us to “the hour of judgment”—to the epoch when the door had been violently opened in the heaven, and a throne set up there, the fifth chapter shows that universal dominion over the earth shall be to him who unrolls the scroll and looses the seven seals. The consummation of this chapter is coeval with the end of the seventh seal, the seventh trumpet, the seventh vial, and the seven thunders. The opening of the door in the heaven never to be closed again, marks the first minute of the judgment hour; and the ascription of blessing, honor, glory, and power to the Lamb by every created thing in verse 13, marks the last moment of the same hour in which the wrath of the Deity against the nations is entirely exhausted. This “hour” is a period of thirty years, in which the process of loosing, or finishing the loosing of the seventh seal is being completed. The seven seals are to establish the kingdom of David’s house “for the Aions of the Aions.” The chapter does not describe what is, but prophesies what shall be hereafter. It reveals that the personage is provided to whom is assigned the honor and glory of accomplishing the work termed the unrolling the scroll and the loosing of the seven seals; and no one can mistake him. In verse 12, he is declared by the saints and angels to be “worthy to receive” whatever is decreed. At this point it is not possessed; because the power and the glory are in the hands of “the powers that be,” who are hostile to his claims; and “shall make war with him,” to prevent him from obtaining what the “ten thousand of ten thousands and thousands of thousands” proclaim him worthy of—Apoc. 17:14. “But he shall overcome them; for he is Lord of lords and King of kings: and they that are with him” in his wars, that is, the saints, “are the called, and chosen, and faithful”—the 144,000, who follow him whithersoever he goeth—ch. 14:1–4. The result of this conquest is declared in verse 13, of the fifth chapter, which testifies, that every creature acquiesces in his receiving everything of which his brethren the saints and the angels of the Deity announce him to be worthy. All power, riches, strength, honor, glory, and blessing become his, and all nations find the blessedness of the gospel preached to Abraham come upon them, and established for the thousand years. A most unexpected result to them all; but one looked and longed for by those represented by the four living ones, and the twenty-four elders; who, both in their mortal state before resurrection, and as resurrected and prepared for action, exclaim, “So let it be!”

SECTION 2

“AND I SAW AT THE RIGHT OF HIM SEATED UPON THE THRONE A SCROLL THAT HAD BEEN WRITTEN WITHIN AND ON THE OUTSIDE, SEALED UP WITH SEVEN SEALS.”—CHAP. 5:1

1. The Scroll

It is scarcely necessary to remark that the occupant of the throne is the Deity, likened in chap. 4:3, to a jasper and a sardine stone, emblematic of Spirit manifested in flesh. That chapter gives no intimation of this flesh having ever tasted of death; but in the fifth this great fact is brought out in connection with the scroll, as we shall see hereafter.

On the right of the manifested Deity was a scroll. It was written within and on the outside; and was sealed up. This was, doubtless, related to the same document as that referred to in Dan. 12:4, 9 where it is written, “Shut up the words, and seal the book till the time of the end;” and “the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end.” Daniel was not informed with how many seals, or if by one only it was sealed up; but simply that it was sealed. It was all the same to him whether it was sealed up with one seal or many; for a scroll closed and sealed up is unreadable till unrolled, and the sealing is opened. The catastrophe, or final series of events, revealed to Daniel belonged “to the time of the end.” He was instructed to look forward to that period, to which pertains the apocalyptic “hour of judgment,” for the termination of the wonders and times treated of in his book, or scroll. What had been communicated to him was principally concerning his people and his holy city. He had heard that the Saints were to be overcome by the Little Horn of the Fourth Beast that has Eyes and Mouth; and that their subjugation was to continue until the Ancient of Days came with a cloud of attendants numbered by “a thousand thousands and ten thousand times ten thousand,” when the judgment would sit, and the fourth beast in body, head and horns should be destroyed by the burning flame of wrath proceeding from the cherubic throne of Deity. All this he had heard; nevertheless, there was a mystery closed up and sealed against his scrutiny that needed explication. What did that Little Horn with his Eyes like a man, and a mouth speaking great words against the Most High signify? Was the Ancient of Days by whom they were to be destroyed, Deity or angel; if the former, how manifested? If the latter, who was he? Who was that Son of Man brought before the Ancient of Days, to whom universal dominion upon earth is given? How could the conquered saints take the Kingdom under the whole heaven from the four beasts? These, and many other questions would suggest themselves to Daniel, which would only put him to grief, and place him beside the apostle John, who “shed many tears because no one was found worthy (and therefore able) to unroll and to read the scroll, nor to see it”—ch. 5:4. When Daniel saw the vision of his seventh chapter he said he “was grieved in spirit in the midst of the body, and the visions of his head troubled him;” and even after the meaning of what he saw was interpreted, he says his cogitations still troubled him much, and his countenance was changed. Thus if John and Daniel had been both in Patmos together studying “the matter” they would have been companions in tribulation consequent upon their fruitless investigations, and endeavors to unclothe the words, and to unseal the scroll seen by the prophet in the first and third of Belshatzar’s reign, and in the third of Cyrus the Persian King. Nor would their grief have been assuaged until this day had the scroll at the right of Deity manifested in flesh, and occupying the throne, been withheld. John could have instructed Daniel concerning the Ancient of Days and the Son of Man; he could have enlarged his views concerning the Saints; and have given him skill and understanding in the mystery of the gospel preached to Abraham; but as to the relations of the saints to the then existing government; the taking out of the way that which hindered the revelation of “The King who should do according to his own will,” and in his empire should honor a blaspheming god unknown to his pagan predecessors; as to the rise of the ten horns; the development of the Saracen and Turkish powers; the pouring out of that determined upon the desolator of the Holy Land and City; the coming of the Ancient of Days in power; the resurrection; the war of the great day of the Omnipotent; the co-operation of the Saints; the establishment of the Kingdom; and so forth; as to all these things John could give Daniel no connected and intelligible account. They were all written within and on the outside of that notable scroll on the right of the throne, or place of almighty power. In vision, or spirit, John looked wistfully upon that scroll, closely rolled up and exuberantly sealed. Daniel would have looked wistfully at it too; and so would all the saints, both their contemporaries and ours. And if all this company could have occupied synchronously with John his position in the vision, and their feelings could have been simultaneously expressed, on hearing the question “Who is worthy to unroll the scroll, and to loose its seals?” unreplied to by a solitary response; there would have been a universal lamentation and shedding of tears abundantly. In saying this, I speak of the Saints of all ages and generations who are such in reality, and not merely in pretense. The saints of the Deity, or “his servants,” who are such in deed and in truth, like John, take a deep interest in “the things of the spirit,” and earnestly desire and diligently endeavour to “know the truth” of all “matters” the Deity has condescended to reveal. They seek to know the true import, the real meaning, of them all; and if they do not succeed, it is a source of much anxiety and restlessness of mind. But saints so called who have a name like many in the ancient Sardis, “that they live, but are dead,” would have seen the scroll at the right of power, and though they should have heard with John, “that no one was able in heaven, nor upon the earth, nor under the earth, to unroll the scroll, nor to see it,” would have been far from joining him in “shedding many tears, because no one was found worthy to unroll and to read the scroll, nor to see it.” Saints of this sort flourish in overwhelming multitudes in the present time. They might possibly so far have respected the presence of the apostle as not to have laughed at his “weakness;” but behind his back, they hesitate not to laugh to scorn those who are interested in this scroll, and seek to understand, or “see it.” They regard such as hairbrained and frantic fanatics, and exclaim in vast astonishment at their presumption. To them the scroll is “covered with a dense and thick veil of ignorance,” which only the presumptuous and reckless would essay to lift or put aside. In holding these sentiments they condemn the weeping of the apostle. What sense in his shedding many tears because no one could interpret such a document as they esteem it—a book calculated only to addle or dement the brains of all who try to understand it? Certainly none. In effect, then, they condemn the lamentation of the apostle: and prove to a demonstration, that they are not in fellowship with him; nor, by consequence, “with the Father, and with his son Jesus Christ,”—1 John 1:3. Hence, the apostle in the vision does not represent saints of their class. In the apocalyptic drama he symbolizes no such impious professors. If a multitude of weepers had been introduced into the scenic representation instead of one tear-shedding apostle, the apocalypse-despising crowd would have found no standing room among them. Such profane and scoffing pietists could have no more place there, than as cherubic eyes in the four Living Ones, when the unrolling of the scroll, and the unloosing of the seals, will be complete. No, not these, but his own class, is symbolized or represented by John in the vision of this fifth chapter. He acts for those in fellowship with the apostles and prophets as these would have acted had they heard the proclamation of the vision in the time before the Lion of Judah’s tribe was announced as the unroller of the scroll, and looser of the seals. His dramatic weeping argues, and indeed indicates, “the joy unspeakable and full of glory” characteristic of his class, the saints, in their “full assurance of faith and hope” that “all power has been given to him in heaven and upon earth” to unroll the scroll, and to loose the seals thereof; and that consequently, there is no throne, dominion, principality, nor power in the political firmament that can successfully contend against him; nor kindred, tongue, nation, tribe nor people, that can preserve their independence of the sovereignty of Judah and Israel’s King. In the ratio of the lamentation is the intensity of the joy by implication. Sensible men do not “shed many tears” over trifles. Hence, though it is not said that John was glad with exceeding joy when he heard that one was found who was able to unroll the scroll, read and see it, it is nevertheless implied, seeing that he was so movingly affected on the contrary supposition. That scroll, symbolical of its contents, must certainly have been inestimable which could be unrolled only by one in all the Universe deemed of worthiness sufficient by the Lord of heaven and earth. Its denouement, or unravelling of its subject matter, was to put John and all in fellowship with him, in possession of the great salvation—of the kingdom promised to those who are “rich in faith;” hence, to understand this denouement and to know that the Lord Jesus will carry it through, and establish it so that “it cannot be moved,” would develop the voices of this fifth chapter which are expressive of loud shouting for joy on the part of all who utter them.

These things being premised, I proceed to remark that the scroll at the right hand of power, occupying symbolically the place of Christ’s present position, is all that section of the Apocalypse embraced in the seven seals. It does not contain the epistles to the seven ecclesias in Asia. In John’s day, the subject matter of these letters was ha eisi, “the things which are;” but, in our time, they are the things which were; yet is the are and the were connected as the acorn and the wide-spreading oak. The reader will remember the Spirit’s division of the Apocalypse, or “Revelation of Jesus Anointed which the Deity gave to him,” in chap. 1:19. There John was told to write ha eides, “the things seen;” ha eisi, “the things extant;” and ha mellei ginesthai, “the things to be.” The Apocalypse, in the largest sense of the word, is the writing John executed in obedience to this command, and comprehends all these three classes of things. The things he had seen at the time of the order to “write,” were the things he saw when, in spirit, or vision, he was in the Lord’s Day, the day when He comes in power and great glory, the account of which is in the first chapter, from the tenth verse to the eighteenth inclusive. The second class of things, or things which are, were those things charged upon the seven ecclesias in the epistles contained in the second and third chapters, and which, instead of being suppressed by the Spirit’s reprobation of them, grew vigorously until they became a great and deadly upas, overshadowing the whole territory of Daniel’s fourth beast dominion, miscalled “Christendom,” as at this day. Hence John’s ha eisi, or things extant, in the ecclesias named, were the “inside” seeds of things which afterwards became “THE CHURCH BY LAW ESTABLISHED”—an establishment consisting of the nauseous sputa ejected from the Spirit’s mouth when the apostasy had attained its Laodicean development at the incipient loosing of the seventh seal. Its patrons, who by it had their wealth and honor, styled it “THE HOLY APOSTOLIC CATHOLIC CHURCH,” and do symbolize it at this day by a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and angels crowning her with a crown of twelve stars. The three ecclesiastical divisions of “Christendom”—Greek, Latin, and Protestant—contend earnestly for what their champions regard as the honor of this title. Each section would appropriate it exclusively to itself, but this exclusive appropriation is still in abeyance, and likely so to be interminably; for, as they have not been able to settle the controversy in fifteen centuries and a half, they are not likely so to do in the few years remaining of “the times of the Gentiles,” when the loosing of the seventh seal will be complete.

But there were also written in the seven epistles certain predictions of ha mellei ginesthai, “things which shall be,” meta tauta, “after these things”—the iniquities of the second class of things shall be consummated. Jezebel would be clothed with the sun and give birth to the Man-child of Sin; and her children, the Harlots and Abominations of chapter seventeen, would become rich by her, and develop “the depths of the Satan as they teach,” but then, it was predicted in what the Spirit said to the ecclesias, that professors should have “a tribulation ten days;” that He would “fight against them with the sword of his mouth;” that He would cast them into a bed... “into great tribulation, and kill them with death;” that He would “come on them as a thief;” that He would “make them come and worship before the feet of those who keep his word, and have not denied his name;” and that professors of the Satan’s synagogue—professors not scripturally in Christ, and those who walk after the flesh—“shall know that he has loved the true believers” whom they despise; that He would bring “the hour of trial upon the whole habitable to try them that dwell upon the earth,” and that, being “lukewarm,” He would “spuc them out of his mouth.”

The book referred to by the author in his footnote on p. 71 is no longer available. However, the illustration above is from the Official Baltimore (US) Catechism of the Catholic Church. The same picture representing Mary with the twelve stars circling her head and the crescent moon under her feet is found also in innumerable Roman Catholic Churches throughout Europe. According to Kenrick’s Egypt vol. 1, p. 425, the Egyptian goddess Isis was often represented as standing on the crescent moon with twelve stars surrounding her head. As the author of Eureka shows, the Apostasy, in the days of Constantine and afterwards, endeavoured to make their beliefs palatable to pagans by superimposing their superstitions on Christianity.

HPM

But, beside these threatenings against professors of christianity pretending to be apostles, or “successors of apostles,” “Jews,” and spiritually “rich and increased in goods, and in need of nothing,” as in all the ages and generations of the Apostasy concurrent with the seventh seal, as at this day: but who, both “divines” and people, are apocalyptically denounced as “liars,” holding with the teaching and practices of the Nikolaitanes, which the Spirit hates; as “the Synagogue of the Satan;” “holding the teaching of

Balaam” in mass-sacrifices to images, and the fornication of a marriage-forbidding hierarchy; as “the woman Jezebel, who calls herself a prophetess, teaching and seducing God’s servants to practice abomination; as the Satan;” as “having the name that they live while really dead;” and as “wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked.” Besides the threatenings against these, the apocalyptic epistles abound in promises of a glorious destiny to those who “overcome.” These are described as those “who cannot bear them who are evil,” and who try claimants to apostolicity and inward Jewship, and in default of scriptural proof reject them as “liars.” They are described as those who “have borne and had patience, and for the Spirit’s name sake have labored and not fainted;” as rich in faith and faithful unto death; as Antipas, who holds fast the name and has not denied the faith of the Spirit; as those whose “last works are more than the first;” as the “few names” in the midst of a christian community in a dying state, or “ready to die,” who have “not defiled their garments;” as those who have “kept the word and not denied the name of the Spirit;” and as those who are “zealous, and hear the Spirit’s voice; and hearing, respond to his voice, and open the door of their mind and affections to his entering in. These are they who “overcome the wicked one,” and the false prophets of the world, whom the world heareth—1 John 4:1, 4, 5; 2:14. They are “born of the Deity,” and therefore “overcome the world” by their faith. They all believe in His promises with an intelligent faith, and that Jesus is His first-begotten—the Chief of His many sons—through whom alone the scroll can be unrolled, and the loosing of its seven seals effected—1 John 5:4, 5.

To these, then, who are the heirs of victory, the epistles to the seven apocalyptic ecclesias teem with promises of abounding glory. The Spirit testifies in them that they shall “eat of the wood of life in the midst of the paradise of Deity;” that a coronal wreath of life shall crown them; that they shall receive a white pebble with a new name engraved upon it, known only to the receiver; that they shall have dominion over the nations, and govern them with an iron sceptre; that the imperial and regal constitution of the world shall break to pieces as the potter’s clay vessels; that those who get the victory over the world shall receive the Morning Star; that they shall be clothed in white garments, and their names openly confessed by the Life-imparting Spirit in the presence of his Father and his angels; that they shall be eternal pillars in the temple of Deity; that the Quickening Spirit (1 Cor. 15:45; 2 Cor. 3:17) shall engrave them with the name of his Deity, and the name of the city of his Deity, the New Jerusalem, which descendeth out of the heaven from his Deity, even his new name; and that they shall sit with him in his throne after the example of what shall obtain in relation to himself and his Father’s throne.

Here, then, are threatenings and promises—threatenings for spurious professors and apostates within, and for persecutors of the saints without; and glorious promises for those who gain the victory over their own lusts and the seductions of the world by faith. These were the things to be—the things of the third class which the apocalyptic epistles affirmed but did not unroll. They give no explanation concerning the how and the when the vision symbolical of the Lord’s Day, or “the things seen” of John, in chap. 1, and “the things which shall be,” or the threatenings and promises, shall be developed. A revelation, then, was needed to exhibit the when and the how of the threatenings and the promises, and this need was amply supplied by the scroll at the right hand of power, written within and on the outside, and sealed up with seven seals. It was placed in the vision at the right hand of power, or, as it is expressed in the text, “at the right of Him seated upon the throne,” to signify that none but the Omnipotent in manifestation was “able” or powerful enough to unroll it and loose its seals. Gabriel, whose name, Gabriel signifies Mighty One of Power, “who stands in the presence of Deity,” had been employed to give Daniel skill and understanding in the vision and matter communicated to him in the third year of Belshatzar (Dan. 8:16; 9:21; Luke 1:19); but Gabriel was not worthy, able, or powerful enough to give John skill and understanding in the matter of the scroll; for, says John, “no one was able in the heaven, nor upon the earth, nor under the earth, to unroll the scroll, nor to see it.”

The book of Daniel is to the Apocalypse as the acorn to the oak. The latter is the mystery of Daniel's prophecy symbolically revealed. This mystery of things he ministered he thought much upon, and sought to find out with great diligence, but without success; for he was informed that the mystery was hidden, and could not be penetrated until a time appointed.

As already intimated, Daniel saw a scroll, as indicated in the phrase "the words and seal the book," as well as John. He was told that "the words were closed up and sealed till the time of the end." Hence, these were to Daniel "a scroll at the right of Him seated upon the throne written within and on the outside, sealed up with seven seals." That closed and sealed against Daniel's understanding was the mystery or secret of the words of the book.

But one might inquire, If the mystery were to be concealed "till the time of the end," in what sense can John's apocalyptic scroll and seals be a revelation of the hidden wisdom of Daniel's book, seeing that John's age was not "the time of the end"—a time which is only just now dawning upon the world? This we consider a very pertinent inquiry. In answer, the reader may be reminded, that the revelation to John was symbolical. He did not see the actual, but only the acted or dramatized events he describes. What he saw was a pictorial representation, as it were—a speaking hieroglyphic signifying to his understanding things which in the time of the end shall all have become accomplished facts, so that, in this end "the vision shall speak, and not lie"—Hab. 2:3. The Apocalypse in its word-painting is the unrolling to the understanding of the servants of the Deity the series of events that should be successively unfolded, and which in their time of the end consummation should manifest as an accomplished result "THE END OF THE MATTER"—Dan. 7:28.

The scroll had to be unrolled and its seals loosed before the vision it contained could be read and perceived, or intelligibly comprehended, when it should "speak at the end." The speaking at the end truthfully, is what is styled in modern phrase the denouement, a word signifying the discovery of the plot, the unravelling or issue of the matter, termed in Daniel "the end of the matter." This denouement was revealed to him; but the unfolding of the particular series and succession of events thereunto leading, was not made known to him. He was informed in general terms, that the powers of the fourth beast dominion should make war upon and prevail against the saints until the Ancient of Days should come; and that then the saints should become a power mighty enough to destroy the fourth-beast system of powers; and to set up the kingdom of Deity. In the establishment of which as the great political fact of the age and generation, the denouement of God's dealings with the nations all the time of their ascendancy over the saints, would be manifested. He was instructed that "the end of the matter" was to be a crisis elaborated providentially from antecedents evolved in the history of the fourth-beast nationalities; but what was the particular vein to be worked out in its several lodes to conduct to the main and terminable results, he did not "see." In dramatical representation, the spectators behold the unrolling of the author's scroll, as the acting is in progress; but they have to wait till the end of the piece, the time of the end, for the dramatist's conception to "speak and not lie." Unless they have read the play, or seen it acted before, they have to "wait for the end of the matter," ere they can tell how the matter will come out, or what the ingenious dramatist designed should be the end of the whole, or the issue of the plot. It was thus with Daniel and John. The end of the matter had been revealed to them both. They had read the denouement of the drama to result at the end from all its shifting scenes; but they had never seen nor read the play. The acting had not been revealed to them. In Daniel's time the stage had not been prepared, nor the dramatis personae, the company of performers, collected and arranged in their several parts for the performance of the tragedy to be played. There was no fourth-beast dominion then; nor any saints who had "washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb"—Rev. 7:14—to be prevailed against thereby; and without these important parties in the premises, the actual tragedy could not begin; nor could a representation or rehearsal of the performance have come with any enlightening effect upon Daniel's mind, being ignorant as he was of the mystery afterwards revealed in the apostolic ministration of "the word."

But by the time that John had come to be an exile in Patmos, all this was changed. Daniel's situation was no longer that of John and his brethren. The fourth-beast dominion was now upon the world's stage; and, as the Little Horn, not then as yet decorated with "Eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things," had "taken away the Daily, and had cast down the place of its sanctuary," and practised and prospered. Messiah the prince, though faultless, had been "cut off" by this horn; and by the teaching concerning his kingdom and name, a people composed of Israelites and Gentiles according to the flesh, had been developed as the seed of the great father of the faithful and "friend of God," by adoption through Jesus as the prince; and stood confessed of heaven before "the inhabitants of the earth and sea"—the whole habitable—as "THE ISRAEL OF GOD."

In these two hostile communities exist all the elements to be afterwards developed into the parties of the play. The Israel of God on the one side, and the Fourth Beast, on the other, contained the germs of the conflicting good and evil of the ages and generations from John's day to the giving of "the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom, under all of the heavens to the people of the saints of the Most High Ones, whose kingdom is the kingdom of Olahm (the hidden period), and all dominions shall serve and obey him;" which is "the end of the matter." While the apocalyptic tragedy was being rehearsed before John in Patmos, God's Israel was already constituted of "two manner of people"—they who walked after the flesh; and they who walked after the spirit, which is the truth. Out of the former were afterwards developed the worshippers of demons and of "idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood"—Rev. 9:20; also, "the Mouth speaking great things and blasphemies—13:5; the image of the beast; the drunken woman, and all the daughters of her prostitution, and abominations of the earth"—Rev. 17:1–5. These all are the fruit of the Mystery of Iniquity that was at work in the mystical body of Christ, in the time of Paul and John. The apostolical epistles are full of protest against its insidious and corrupt working, which they clearly saw would "eat as doth a gangrene;" and therefore earnestly warned all who would be approved of God to have nothing to do with those who favored it—2 Tim. 2:15–18; 2 John 10.

On the other hand, from the Israel of God who walked in the truth were developed in after ages and generations, "the souls under the altar slain for the word of God"—ch. 6:9; "the servants of the Deity sealed in their foreheads;" the 144,000, or "holy nation," (1 Pet. 2:9); the white-robed palm bearers—ch. 7; the temple of the Deity, the altar worshippers, and the holy city—ch. 11:1–2; the four and twenty elders, and the four living ones; the fugitive woman and the remnant of her seed—ch. 12:14, 17; God's name and tabernacle, and them that dwell in the heaven—the saints—ch. 13:6, 7; the redeemed from the earth, the virgins, the first-fruits unto the Deity and the Lamb, faultless before the throne—ch. 14:1–5; them who had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over the number of his name, having the harps of Deity—ch. 15:2; the kings of the east, who watch and keep their garments—ch. 16:12, 15; the called, and chosen and faithful with the Lamb in his wars—ch. 17:14; the prophets and saints slain—ch. 18:24; the Lamb's wife arrayed in righteousness; and the squadrons of his power—ch. 19:7, 8, 14; them to whom judgment is given, the beheaded souls, who worshipped not the beast, nor his image, and who reign with Christ as the priests of Deity for a thousand years; the beloved city—ch. 20:4, 6, 9; the holy city, New Jerusalem, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, the municipal aggregate of all written in the Lamb's book of life—ch. 21:2, 27; whose foreheads are enstamped with the name of Deity and the Lamb—ch. 22:4. These all constitute "the Israel of the Deity" upon whom Paul invoked "peace and mercy"—Gal. 6:16; and for whose special information the apocalypse was rehearsed to John in Patmos; and who were, and are yet to enact a most conspicuous part in its public exhibition upon the platform of the habitable dominated temporarily by the fourth-beast system of powers, so dreadful and terrible to Daniel's sight—Dan. 7:7.

As already remarked above, the Israel of God and this Fourth Beast Dominion contained of old all the germs of the good and evil which have mingled in devouring conflict for the past eighteen hundred years; and which will continue occurrent till the victory which shall culminate in the blessing of all nations in Abraham and his seed. We have traced the germinal development of the “two manner of people” through the tragedy rehearsed to John. By examining the testimonies cited above, the reader will see how they diverged into an “enmity” that admits of no mitigation or compromise; but which apocalyptically results in the utter and final extermination of the Laodicean Apostasy from among the nations of the Fourth Beast where alone it has taken root. The reader will also see from the same testimonies that the apostasy generated in and evolved from the mystical body of Christ, or God's Israel, is found in alliance with the “dreadful, terrible, and exceedingly strong” dominion of “the whole habitable,” against “the remnant who keep the commandments of the Deity and have the testimony of Jesus Anointed;” and that the fate of the one is that also of the other—the civil, military, and ecclesiastical constitution and institutions of “Christendom,” which is the fourth-beast organization come to remediless perdition, as the result of the “judgment given to the saints.”

In John's day, then, this Fourth Beast was in the germinal phase of its development, Daniel saw it with many horns upon it; but neither he nor John were contemporary with them. The beast had arisen out of the Great Sea countries, and John was living under the dominion of its Sixth Head—ch. 17:10; that is, under the rule of Rome Imperial. The beast had not then acquired horns; and it had not then become acquainted with that “god whom his fathers knew not...that strange god” who was afterwards to be “acknowledged” by the Emperors, and by them “increased with glory”—Dan. 11:38, 39. This “god” had not appeared on the Roman Habitable then. John had no personal acquaintance with him; but in the apocalyptic rehearsal of what was in after ages to be publicly exhibited before the concourse of nations, he saw that he would appear and figure upon the blood-stained arena as the Image of the Beast—an image resulting from a coalition of the Laodicean Apostasy with the Roman State.

In the apocalyptic rehearsal, then, John saw this pagan dominion under which he lived developed into the Man of Sin-Power. He beheld its birth coeval with a great war in the heaven of the Fourth Beast—ch. 12:5, 7. He saw the development of the Ten Horns as the result of the Fourth Beast Dragon being compelled to yield a portion of his power, his throne, and great authority to certain incomers upon the habitable, who divided with the imperials the sovereignty of the earth—ch. 13:1–4. He saw these new powers of the earth in alliance with a blasphemous power, under whose inspiration they would make war upon the saints, and overcome them. He saw, also, this persecuting power acquire great consistence, and become imperial. Daniel's “Little Horn with Eyes and Mouth” rose up before him in the form of a beast coming out of the earth, having two horns as of a lamb, and speaking as a dragon. He saw the horn and mouth in this beast, and “the Eyes” in the image which the civil and military power would cause the people to worship upon pain of death—ch. 13. He saw in this the Man of Sin Power, begotten and born in previous centuries, developing into a “dreadful and terrible” tyranny, that would make the times perilous for the saints, and for all who, from any cause, would not do it homage. He perceived, also, that it would have the ascendancy for a long time; and that it would do after its will for forty-two months of years. This long period he knew would reach to the coming of the Ancient of Days, and that the Fourth Beast dominion would then be in its full and final manifestation. The Man of Sin-Power would then be in full fruition, and in its final form. It was rehearsed to Daniel in this form with other three dominions; and was afterwards apocalyptically rehearsed to John as a scarlet colored beast with eight heads, bearing as its rider a drunken prostitute. He saw in this the Man of Sin Power in full maturity; and ready to contend with the Ancient of Days and his followers, “the called, chosen, and faithful,” for the indefinite perpetuation of the Fourth Beast dominion “over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations”—ch. 17 and 13:7. But “the end of the matter” divinely purposed required the victory of the Woman’s Seed; and that the saints should possess “the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under all of the heavens.” This being the predetermination of the Deity, when the apocalyptic rehearsal had brought out the Sin-Power to the full, its judgment was forthwith represented to John as immediately consequent upon the manifestation of a great heaven-descended angel power upon earth. He saw that the judgment of the saints would fall with primary and especial violence upon the ecclesiastical element of the Fourth Beast—ch. 18. Babylon the Great being thus abolished, he saw the civil power that had upheld her, and had caused all nations to bow their necks to her priestly yoke, subjected to relentless and exterminating war; the result of which was the total abolition of the Church and State of the Fourth Beast dominion. Consequent upon this, the Beast of the Sea, the Beast of the Earth, the Image of the Beast, and the False Prophet, the head thereof, are no longer found playing any part in the public affairs of the world. The all-conquering saints and the Dragon alone remain. John saw the Dragon chained in the bottomless profound. There were no binding of the others. They were destroyed; but not so the Dragon. This is shut up and imprisoned for a thousand years, and afterwards released preparatory to his destruction then. Identical with this was the consummation represented to Daniel in ch. 7:11, 12. There the Fourth Beast body politic is totally destroyed, while the lion, bear, and leopard nationalities are deprived of sovereignty by the saints, or bound for a season and a time, during which long period there is no power on earth to dispute its absolute possession by the SON OF MAN—Jesus and his brethren. More than this was not deposed to Daniel. He was informed, indeed, that the saints should possess the kingdom ad-ahlmah, wead ahlam ahlmaiyah—“during the hidden period, even for a hidden period of the hidden periods:” but what was to transpire in regard to the suppressed dominion of the lion, bear, and leopard, after the expiration of the “period of the periods,” he did not see. It was reserved for the apocalyptic rehearsal to inform the servants of the Deity, that the lion, bear, and leopard dominion, should be “loosed a little season” after the expiry of the season and time period of their subjection to the saints; and should then renew their conflict with them, and so bring upon themselves swift and irremediable, and final destruction. “The end of the matter” with Daniel was the victorious establishment of the Millennial Kingdom of the Saints. Beyond this his vision did not penetrate. He knew nothing of the Son’s delivering up the kingdom to the Father as the result of a crisis culminating in the change of its constitution, the abolition of mediatorship, and the supercession of flesh and blood nature by spirit; so that all the dwellers upon earth shall be ho Theos ta panta en pasin, the Deity the all things in all—DEITY MANIFESTED IN FLESH—of which the glorified and anointed Jesus is now the type. This is the end of the matter rehearsed before John—the apocalyptic denouement of the divine purpose conceived by the Allwise Intelligence before the foundation of the world.

2. The Writing Within and on the Outside

The scroll, then, is representative of the things rehearsed before John—the things which were to be transacted by the performers indicated in our previous sectional remarks in the public audience of the world, until the establishment of the kingdom promised to the poor, who may be found rich in faith, and deemed worthy to possess it. It was “written within and on the outside.” This was not stated without meaning. We have seen that it has reference to two general classes of actors in the drama; to those within the temple, and to those of the court without—ch. 11:2. “We were troubled on every side,” saith Paul; “without were fightings, within were fears”—2 Cor. 7:5. The outsiders are those who make war upon and persecute the saints, such as the beasts, the image of the beast, dragon, and so forth. The things of the scroll written concerning these, were the things written on the outside; while those written on the inside, are the things written about the remnant of the woman’s seed, the 144,000, the white robed palm bearers, the witnesses, the victorious harpists of the Deity, the Lamb's wife, his followers in the war of the great day of Almighty Power, and so forth. So long as the scroll was rolled up, and the seals not loosed, what was written without and within would be unreadable, and unseen. Hence the unrolling of the scroll, and the loosing the seals, were indispensable to a practical knowledge of its contents. Suffice it then to say in the absence of a present acquaintance with their details, that whatever the writing within may be, it could only be lamentation and woe on the outside; inasmuch as those who are "without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and invents a lie"—ch. 22:15. Such "in no wise enter into," or within "the city;" for no one that defiles is permitted to come in there. As it is written, "there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or inventeth a lie: save they who have been written in the Lamb's roll of life"—ch. 21:27. These only will be found therein; and to them only do the good things written within the scroll belong.

The things written on the outside pertain to the "dogs," against whom Paul cautioned those within, saying, "Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision"—Phil. 3:2. These were dogs who had got into the sheepfold unawares, and passed themselves off for sheep by a sheeplike demeanor. They were nothing but dogs, however, in the clothing of sheep. They were very pious; so much so, that in appearance they surpassed the sheep. They were righteous overmuch, and thereby destroyed themselves—Ecc. 7:16. They were "evil workers" under pious pretences, who seduced the faithful from "the simplicity which is in Christ," teaching for doctrine the traditions which in after years intoxicated all the nations of the Fourth Beast dominion.

These "dogs" without are commonly styled "the Fathers" by those who are without. These, in the estimation of the Gentiles of "the court which is without the temple," are of higher authority in all ecclesiastical or spiritual questions and "articles of faith" than all the prophets and apostles, or Jesus Christ himself. The Fathers of the Greek and Latin "Christendom" are the foundation upon which it is built for a habitation of the Satan, through the spirit that works in the children of disobedience. The spirituals of "the court of the Gentiles without the temple," in all "the times" allotted to the Gentiles to "tread under foot the Holy City," are the living incarnations, in all the ages and generations of those times, of the soul-destroying principles and practises of "the concision"—loved and invented by the Nikolaitanes, Balaamites, children of Jezebel, and the Satan—the Fathers of the Laodicean Apostasy. The priestly and ministerial incarnations of the principles of these Fathers in our day are "LEGION." They are blind leaders of the blind into the perdition that is yawning to engulf the Man of Sin-power and all his agents. Their admirers designate them as "reverend divines," "ambassadors of Jesus Christ," "successors of the apostles," "ministers of the gospel," called and sent of God, as Aaron was, to preach and administer ordinances, "holy men of God," clergy, or God's lot, "holy orders," and so forth. They are the spiritual guides of the people in all the ways, the broad ways, of "the court without the temple of God." They are the learned and pious expositors of the traditions sanctioned by the innumerable "names and denominations," styled apocalyptically "names of blasphemy," of which the scarletcolored beast of the "court without" is declared to be "full"—ch. 17:3. These "dogs without" are they who "are of the world, who therefore speak of the world, and whom the world consequently hears." By this broad fact, patent to all who understand the truth, all apocalyptic "dogs" may be discerned, and the spirit by which they are inspired perceived—1 John 4:1–6. They are, as the prophet said of the watchmen of Israel, "blind; they are all ignorant (of the truth); they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; dreamy, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand; they all look to their own way (or sect), every one for his gain to his quarter"—Isa. 56:10, 11. "They are shepherds that cannot understand," or "come to the knowledge of the truth"—2 Tim. 3:7. They can understand, in some sort, the school divinity it is their business to grind for those who go “wondering after” them, and by whom they have their wealth; but to understand the gospel of the kingdom of Deity, and of the name of Jesus Christ, is too high for them, they cannot attain to it. Let any man, intelligent in the gospel, the preaching concerning Jesus, the revelation of the mystery and its fellowship, as set forth by the apostles (Rom. 16:25, 26; Eph. 3:9), take in hand a Greek priest, a Papist sin-pardoner, a Protestant State Church parson, or a Dissenting minister of any of the sects of “the court without the temple,” and try his best to exorcise him of his Gentilism, and to substitute in his understanding “the truth as it is in Jesus,” and he will find experimentally, that they are all shepherds that cannot understand. With much care the truth was communicated to their predecessors of the apostolic age, who received it, but not in the love of it that they might be saved. They held it in unrighteousness, having the form of godliness, but denying its power. For this cause, God, as Paul threatened, sent upon them strong delusion that they should believe the lie they had invented and to this day so dearly love—2 Thess. 2:10–12. This “lie” is the matter of the pharmakeia, or poisoning by which all nations have been deceived—ch. 18:23. Its effect is to delude strongly all that swallow it, so that it is hardly possible for the truth to enter in.

Apocalyptically, “the dogs without” who administer this poison to the people are styled in the common version “sorcerers,” i.e. pharmakoi, poisoners. They poison the people with their soul-medicines; and so having bewitched them, make merchandise of them from the cradle to the grave. It is evident from Acts 13:6, that a sorcerer is a false prophet or teacher. All, therefore who do not teach the truth are scripturally designated “sorcerers,” poisoners, or false prophets, and are classed with the “filthy” and the “unjust,” and are obnoxious to all the judgments written upon the scroll on the outside. It was for them, “those men who have not the seal of God upon their foreheads,” that the scorpion-torment and the woe that followed were prepared. These judgments overwhelmed them with calamity, and reduced them to the basest servitude under which they groan until this day. Nevertheless, the rest of their class, upon which the ruin did not come, “repented not of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts” Rev. 9. From the Chief Sorcerer in Rome to the meanest poisoner among the western nations, this unrepentant state of mind is their characteristic. They still cling tenaciously to their superstitions, and are as murderously disposed towards all that oppose them as of old. On the side of the oppressor is power; and, wherever that power is, there are the priests, clergy, and ministers of the apostasy to be found sanctifying tyranny, and dividing with the plunderer the gains of extortion and the profits accruing from popular ignorance and folly. Because as murderers, they have shed the blood of saints and prophets; blood has been given them to drink; they have been scorched with fire and have been made to gnaw their tongues with pain—Rev. 16:6, 8, 10. Yet “they repented not of their deeds.” The judgments that have been poured out upon them, and which have ensanguined the page of history to this present, have failed to bring them to repentance. The things written on the outside of the scroll speak only of the fullness of wrath for such. As they will not repent, utter destruction is written against them in their being made to “drink of the wine of the wrath of Deity, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation,” and in being “tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb”—Rev. 14:10. When this consummation shall have been developed, the saints’ war, which pertains to the great and dreadful day of Yahweh (Rev. 16:14; Joel 2:31) will have expended itself in the conquest of the Ten Horns, or “kingdoms of the world” (ch. 11:15; 17:14), the utter and fiery consumption of the ecclesiastical system of the Greco-Latin habitable (ch. 18:4–8), the extinction of the beast and false prophet power in the lake of fire, and the binding of the Dragon in the bottomless abyss. These results belong to the things written on the outside of the scroll, and were a rehearsal before John of the finishing of the mystery of the Deity as he had already declared the glad tidings to his servants the prophets—ch. 10:7. All orders in the states and “churches” of the world, symbolized by the fourth beast of Daniel, will then have been judicially abolished, and the spiritual and temporal destroyers of the people will have been themselves retributively destroyed—ch. 11:18. There will then be no more any priests, parsons, or preachers, ministering to the ignorance and superstition and sensuality of the multitude and their own especial gain and glorification. The influence of these “sorcerers” over the public conscience will have been reduced to zero. The blasphemous names and denominations which fill the eight-headed scarlet-colored beast will have been dissipated, and mankind will have at length attained to that unity of faith and practice so amply foretold in the writings of the holy prophets. Then, when the clergy and ministers of the Laodicean Apostasy shall have been thrust out of the way (for they, as upheld by the civil power and ignorance of their devotees, are the Babylonian hindrance to the Millennium), the denouement of the things written on the outside of the scroll will stand out in bold relief before all nations, which will then have learned obedience to God and his saints by the things they shall have suffered; and they will say—

*“To Him that sitteth on the throne,
And to the Lamb the blessing be,
The honor, glory and the pow’r,
The Aions of the Aions for!”—Apoc. 5:13*

And then, in the language of Apoc. 5:14, the victorious “kings of the east,” standing upon the sea of glass no longer mingled with fire (ch. 15:2), shall joyously approbate the benediction, and proclaim the loud and mighty apocalyptic AMEN! So let it be for the thousand years, “until he has put all enemies under his feet”—1 Cor. 15:25. Then will the “royal priesthood” of the heavens, being at that time in those heavenlies (1 Pet. 2:9; Matt. 5:12), rejoice with the subject nations, upon whom the blessing of Abraham will have come, with loud acclamation, saying, “We give thee thanks, O Yahweh Ail-Shaddai, the Being, and the Was, and the Being Come, because thou takest to thee thy great power, and reignest”—ch. 11:17. “Great and marvellous are thy works, Yahweh Ail-Shaddai; just and true thy ways, thou King of Saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Yahweh, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and do homage before thee: for thy judgments are made manifest”—ch. 15:3, 4. “Hallelu-Yah, salvation, and glory, and honor, and power unto Yahweh our Elohim; for true and righteous are his judgments: for he hath judged the Great Harlot, which corrupted the earth with her prostitution, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. Hallelu Yah! Amen! Hallelu-Yah! Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. Hallelu-Yah! for Yahweh Elohim omnipotent reigns. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready”—ch. 19:1–7.

Such was the end of the matter written within the scroll, and rehearsed before John as inaugurative of the reign of the Great and Holy City, New Jerusalem, over the healed nations for a thousand years—ch. 20:1–6; 21:2, 10, 24; 22:2—in all which the world is possessed by the city, the saint-city, the Royal and Priestly Municipality of Deity; and all nations are blessed with faithful Abraham and his seed—1 Cor. 3:21, 22; Gal. 3:9.

3. Sealed up with Seven Seals

The words of the scroll rehearsed to Daniel, were “closed up and sealed;” and the scroll rehearsed before John was “sealed up with seven seals.” To seal up a scroll was to “close” it; but with how many seals it was closed up, Daniel was not informed. This secret concealed from the “greatly beloved” Daniel, was revealed to the “beloved disciple,” the exile of Patmos.

The allusions and references to seals and sealing are very frequent in the scriptures. We need not, however, do more here than to direct attention to instances in which a book or scroll sealed, is a volume whose contents are hidden so long as sealed. In Isa. 29:10 is a remarkable instance of this. The prophet had a vision concerning Judah and Jerusalem, but it was to the Jews as a scroll sealed, and therefore while so, unreadable so as to be understood. “The vision of all,” says the Spirit in Isaiah, “is become unto you as a scroll that is sealed, which one delivers to him that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed.” The books of the ancients were not like our books in form or material. They were rolls of papyrus, parchment, or other flexible substance, of various lengths. Zechariah’s roll was twenty cubits long by ten broad; and was written “on this side” and “on that side,” with the curse of consuming judgments—Ch. 5:1–4. While rolled up they were sometimes fastened by sticking the edges of certain turns of the roll together; or by tying the same, and appending a seal, or seals, to the ligature. Hence, to read such a scroll it would be necessary to unloose the seals, in their order when so much only of the scroll could be read as extended from the first to the second tying or sticking; then from the second to the third; afterwards, from the third to the fourth; then from the fourth to the fifth; after this, from the fifth to the sixth; and lastly from the sixth to the seventh: and when this was untied, the whole scroll, if there were no more stickings or tyings, could be fully extended, and read from beginning to end.

Now the written spaces, or intervals, from one fastening of the scroll to another, were called seals, or closures. To read them the closures must be loosed, otherwise the contents of the scroll would be forever concealed. They could no more be discerned, or seen, while in the sealed state, than our modern books could be read so long as locked by one, two, or more clasps. Seals, then, being closures, they become symbolical of secrecy. This appears from Apoc. 10:4, where John is commanded to “seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.” The not writing them, which John was about to do before the command was given, was to keep what he had heard to himself, so that no one else might know what was spoken—but the class he represented when they and he, as “sons of thunder” should execute the utterances; and this concealment of the mystery of the seven thunders was the sealing of them up. Hence, the unsealing of them will consist in their actual development without previous rehearsal to any but John.

The scroll that John saw at the right hand of Power was sealed, or closed up with seven seals or closures. This signified that there must be seven unloosings enacted before the mystery contained in and on the outside of the Scroll of the Divine purpose, could be all performed upon the stage of the “whole habitable” in the sight of all nations.

The apocalyptic drama in being visually rehearsed before John has been verbally rehearsed to us; for the rehearsal he witnessed, he has recorded for the information of the rest of his brethren in all after ages; or, that is to say, until judgment shall be given to them at the appearing of the Ancient of Days. The apostle’s brethren may therefore see from a perusal of the written rehearsal, that the seven seals represent seven parts of the great drama, consecutively developed, and issuing in the establishment of their dominion over all the nations of the earth.

In the apocalyptic drama prefigured in the rehearsal before us, however, these parts are unequally distributed. They pertain to three grand divisions of the performance, which are defined by the nature of the situation. Thus, it is obvious, that the kingdom promised to the saints could not be established so long as the Man of Sin Power were undeveloped; and, secondly, that the Man of Sin Power could not be manifested upon the scene of the fourth beast habitable so long as the constitution of this beast-dominion continued pagan. The former necessity of the situation is thus expressed by Paul: “He that now hinders will hinder until he be taken out of the way; and then shall the Lawless One be revealed.” When Paul wrote these words the Power that hindered the manifestation of the Lawless One he had described in a previous verse, and whom he styles “the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition,” was the same power that exiled John to Patmos—the Pagan Roman. It was necessary that the Pagan Roman power should be “taken out of the way.” This was an important element in the drama to be performed. But how was it to be accomplished? The answer is: By the culminative force of the events developing in the course of, and culminating in the full exhaustion of, the things written within and on the outside of the first six seals. This is the first division of the apocalyptic scroll; a six act tragedy, resulting in the fall of paganism, and the enthronement of the LAODICEAN APOSTASY, called by its devotees, “the Holy Catholic Church,” as the religion of the Roman state.

Now, Paul teaches in 2 Thess. 2 that the Man of Sin-power to be developed after the taking out of the way of the pagan Roman, should continue till the time for its consumption and utter destruction by the glorious manifestation of the Yahweh NAME—“whom the Lord shall consume,” saith he, “with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy by the manifestation of his presence.” The perdition of this son of the woman (ch. 12:5), called, therefore, “the Son of Perdition,” and the appearing of the Son of Man are events of the same epoch. All the interval, then, between the taking away of the pagan constitution of the Roman State and the destroying of the Man of Sin-power, is occupied by the development of the latter from its birth to its perdition by the saints. This consummation is the grand issue of the finished performance of the second and third divisions of the seven sealed scroll. The seventh seal is equivalent to these divisions. It opens at the end of the sixth seal, and extends its representations to the end of the Seventh Vial when the wrath of Deity against the Laodicean Apostasy is filled up by its utter and complete destruction, and the victory of the saints over all their enemies—ch. 15:1–4. But while this three-fold division of the scroll is that into which it is resolved by the necessity indicated by Daniel and Paul, the roll is nevertheless the subject of minor subdivisions resulting from considerations affecting the parties concerned in the development of the Man of Sin-power, their apostasy from the truth, their warfare against the saints, and their overthrow by the Ancient of Days in “the hour of judgment.” These are subdivisions of the second and third general divisions, or Seventh Seal. This exhibits the whole performance from its opening, A.D. 324, until the judgment given to the saints shall have been completely executed upon their enemies. The Seventh Seal ends with the total and complete abolition of the Sin-powers represented by Nebuchadnezzar’s image, Daniel’s Four Beasts, and the Little Horn of the Goat, or Absolute King; and the Stone-power that smites them becoming a great mountain dominion, and filling the whole earth. Hence, although the seventh seal had been opened it has not yet been entirely unrolled so as to be read historically. When the Seventh Seal prophecy shall be all fulfilled, it will be said, “Behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest;” for then the spirit of Yahweh Elohim, apocalyptically styled, “the Seven Spirits of Deity burning before the throne,” will have been quieted in all countries of the earth. The mission of the Christ personal and mystical will have been fully accomplished. The tribes of Judah will have been raised up, the desolations of Israel will have been restored; the nations will have been enlightened; and Yahweh’s salvation developed to the ends of the earth—Isa. 49:6.

But before this consummation so devoutly to be wished, there were to intervene many centuries, and generations of men “believing a lie,” with all the deceivableness of unrighteousness, in which they would take great delight. History teaches us of this generation, that over fifteen hundred years have elapsed since the opening of the seventh seal. In all this time the arena of the seal has been the habitable of two belligerents—“them that perish;” and the saints; upon the former class, “a strong delusion” came from God, that they might believe a lie and be damned, as a just punishment for not believing the truth, and taking pleasure in unrighteousness. This class began to show itself in the days of the apostles; and, as we have seen in our exposition of the apocalyptic epistles, acquired the position of CLERGY, or, “Lords over the Heritages”—katakuriuontes ton kleron; shepherds of the flock who had become unfaithful ministers of the word, and seducers, and wholesale subverters of households for filthy lucre’s sake. These had not only acquired ascendancy over the heritages of the Deity, “which he had purchased with his own blood,” not sparing them, but rending them as grievous wolves; but they had become before the opening of the seventh seal, a formidable political antagonism to the Roman government. They were political christians who had the form of a godliness opposed to the paganism of the state, but not the power of that godliness originally delivered to the saints by the apostles. They were the Radicals, Democrats and Dissenters of the time, cordially hating, and being hated of the governing classes who possessed and sought to retain power and official spoil. These anti-pagan politicians assumed to be "THE HOLY APOSTOLIC CATHOLIC CHURCH;" and were prepared, when a leader should be found ambitious and daring enough, to make war upon the government of Caesar, and to dispute with him the sovereignty of the world. In the beginning of the fourth century the crisis came, and with it the leader they required. Under the leadership of Constantine, whom they styled "The Great," they fought, and conquered the power which from the time of the apostles had been pouring out the blood of their "fellow-servants and brethren," good and bad; who all passed current as "Christians" with their pagan accuser, though differing widely among themselves.

In the beginning of the fourth century, the Roman Earth was full of "Names and Denominations of Christians," inspired with very bitter feelings against each other; but united in hatred of "THE ACCUSER," who harassed them all with continual persecution to imprisonment, confiscation and death. These constituted in the aggregate the Laodicean Apostasy—an e pluribus unum as heterogeneous and motley as this "christian" nation in congress, when, before the war, it appointed an unbelieving Jew to lead it in its prayers to God.

But apart from this Holy Apostolic Laodicean Catholic Apostasy, there was a community, comparatively small, that hated the deeds and doctrines of these Nikolaitanes and children of the woman Jezebel. It repudiated "the depths of the Satan as they taught;" and with "a little strength," kept the word of the Spirit, and did not deny his name. This community of faithful ones was preserved from the hour of temptation which came upon the whole habitable to try them. These who stood aloof from the Apostasy, protested alike against "Catholics," Jews and Pagans. They were zealous for "the faith once for all delivered to the saints," and contended earnestly for it, both against their own "fellow-servants" and nominal "brethren," who were fraternizing with the liberal non-professing world, and conspiring with them against the government; and against Pagan and Jewish clergies and their blasphemous and profane traditions with which they "destroyed the earth." This Philadelphian community was in all things opposed to the Laodicean. Its members "walked after the Spirit," or the truth; and through that spirit mortified the deeds of the body; while the Laodiceans, who had an overweening conceit of their own piety and spiritual intelligence, "walked after the flesh," in the fashion universally illustrated in the practice of the pietists of all the "Names and Denominations of Christendom," and of the "christian politicians," "liberal christians," and the political wire workers and pullers, of our day. The Philadelphian party had no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but reproved them. They had escaped from the corruptions of the world through lust, and devoted their energies to the making of their calling and election sure. They came out, therefore, from among the Laodiceans, that they might not be defiled by the uncleannesses of these unfaithful "fellow-servants and brethren," and constituted what the Laodicean Catholics termed a Schism or Heresy.

Now, in the apocalyptic drama, the Philadelphian and Laodicean parties of the Antipagan Body are represented by a Woman in two several and different conditions. The woman apart from the relations of each condition, represents the Antipagan Community as a whole, and irrespective of the many sects within its pale. When the power of the Deity with the Constantinians, symbolically styled "Michael and his Angels," was casting the Pagan Sin-power out, so that place should be found for it no more in the heaven; the Woman appeared in it arrayed in all the insignia of imperial state. This was a period of revolution, in which power was passing from the pagan classes to the catholics. The former "prevailed not;" for their armies were beaten and dispersed by the catholic forces of Constantine, who became Emperor of Rome, and proclaimed the superstition of the Laodiceans, the religion of the Roman State. Thus truly, “a wonder appeared in the heaven” of Daniel’s Fourth Beast, the church, professedly christian, in union with the world—adulterously united to another than Christ, to the state; and therefore, in friendship with the world! Of the spiritual relation of such a church to Deity there can be no mistake on the part of one intelligent in the word. “The world’s friendship,” says James, “is enmity with God. Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God.” The said “Holy Apostolic Catholic” party is therefore unquestionably God’s enemy; and so are all such, together with all that fellowship the union in all ages and generations, until the saints possess the world and rule it in righteousness. The catholic party being a worldly party, their leading spirits, or teaching prophets, were “of the world, therefore they speak of the world, and the world heareth them.” This is an infallible rule by which the world’s priests, or clergies, may be known. The spirit that is in them is the spirit that is in the world—“the spirit that works in the children of disobedience.” It was predicted that Anti-christ should come—1 John 2:18; 4:3. He was to be manifested through false teaching concerning the flesh, or nature, of Jesus. In John’s day there existed “many antichrists,” who denied that Jesus Anointed came in “the flesh.” They affirmed that he came in another sort of flesh than that which is common to all men—in a holier nature, that was immaculate, or pure and undefiled. This dogma, of course, rendered null and void the teaching of the word which declares the condemnation of sin in the flesh, in the bearing in his own body the sins of believers to the tree, when nailed thereon by the predetermination of Deity. This, says John, was that of the Antichrist that should come. It was a dogma that had many advocates so early as apostolic times. Its teachers repudiated the fellowship of the apostles, and “went out from them, because they were not of them.” In denying the true nature of Jesus, they preached “another Jesus;” and in so doing, denied that the Jesus whom Paul preached was the Christ: and in denying this, denied that the Father was manifested in common human flesh; and, therefore, denied the Father and the Son; “for whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father.” “He is the antichrist,” saith John, “that denieth the Father and the Son;” and “this is the Deceiver and the Antichrist.” “He that abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God”—of the true teachings of God-manifestation he is wholly and necessarily ignorant.

Now, in the Catholic element of the Woman, the dogma characteristic of the Antichrist was embodied. It only waited for a Head to become politically manifest. That head was the Imperial Dynasty begotten in the woman-community by the working of the Mystery of Iniquity, and born of her in the appearance of what the world designates “THE FIRST CHRISTIAN EMPEROR.” This son was the Man of Sin in his birth, and the Head of the Holy Apostolic Laodicean Catholic Apostasy, that was to rule all nations with a rod of iron—the Antichrist, that had forced its way up to Deity, and usurped his throne.

In the consummation of this revolution in the civil and ecclesiastical constitution of Daniel’s Fourth Beast, the world had imposed upon it a despotism more “dreadful and terrible” than its predecessor, and no less the enemy of God and the persecutor and destroyer of his saints. No sooner had the Laodiceans become victorious over their pagan adversaries, and had acquired political power, than they became violent oppressors of all who did not conform to the standard of what they were pleased to style “orthodoxy.” As the party and power of the Man-child escaped from the devouring jaws of the pagan Dragon, and were enthroned in his place, they persecuted the Philadelphian party which abode in the doctrine of Christ; and the woman became a fugitive from imperial glory, in the sunshine of whose favor the unsealed professors of the world’s substitute for the one faith and hope of the gospel have basked from the consummation of the Sixth Seal to the present century of the unfinished Seventh.

After the perfecting of the revolution of the fourth century, the issue was no longer the Saints versus Imperial Paganism; but “the Remnant of the Woman’s Seed” versus the Imperial Laodicean Apostasy, known in history as “The Holy Catholic Church.” It assumed to itself this name after it had been “spued out of the mouth of the Spirit” as an unholy abomination beyond all possibility of redemption. Prosperity accelerated corruption with rapid strides until the patience of Deity had reached its limit. Consumption and utter destruction of the antichristian apostasy were predetermined at a time duly fixed and revealed. The Lawless Power, ho Anomos, “that opposeth and exalteth itself over all called god, or revered; so that he in the temple of the god as a god sitteth, showing forth himself that he is a god;” this absolute power, styled in Dan. 11:36–39, “the king who does according to his will, and exalts himself and magnifies himself above every god,” was to prosper till the indignation against Israel be accomplished. He is then to stand up against the Prince of princes (Dan. 8:25), who will consume him with the Spirit of his mouth, and destroy him with the manifestation of his presence”—2 Thess. 2:4–8. This is the consummation that presents itself as the completion of the Seventh Seal prophecy; during all of which this the Antichrist is seen developing itself with intense ferocity and impiety against “the Deity, his name, his tabernacle and them that dwell in the heaven”—Apoc. 13:6. It was not intended to permit the Mystery of Iniquity to attain to instantaneous maturity as soon as the Woman gave birth to her manchild. He had been nine months of years in coming to the birth, and it was determined that he should pass through youth and middle age to the decrepitude of all things human. But though the Antichrist was to prosper till the time appointed for his destruction by the saints, he was not to be free from the troubles and ills of “the present evil world,” in which “there is no peace for the wicked, saith Yahweh; for they are like the troubled sea, which cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.” It is not compatible with the honor and goodness of God to allow them to rest while they are blaspheming him and oppressing and destroying his people. In the absence, therefore, of “the Son of his handmaiden,” Mary—“the Son of man at his right hand whom he hath made strong for himself”—He uses the wicked as his sword (Psa. 17:13) to torment one another for their abominations, until the time appointed for the sword of judgment to be committed to the saints, and the power of the wicked be by them destroyed.

All things are of God, and “there is no power but of him. The powers that be have been put in order under the Deity.” He creates evil in punishment of sin. He makes evil powers a terror to evil doers, who all subsist by his permission, and by that only. Thus he tolerates as powers combinations of men whose principles and practices are his abomination. Evil being in the world as a present necessity, he gives shape and organization to it, so that it may work out his own purposes to the confusion and overthrow of the agents through whom he operates. He does not leave the evil of this world to develop a chapter of accidents, and to run riot as chance may occasion. Had he done so, the Apocalypse would never have seen the light; for this remarkable instrument is a rehearsal before the performance of the prearranged and methodical development of the evil predestined to fall upon the “Children of Jezebel” for their worship of demons and images, and for their murders, sorceries, fornication, and thefts—Apoc. 9:20, 21. These were, and continue to be, the crimes of the “Holy Catholic Church,” and its family of “Denominations” and “Names of Blasphemy,” which recognize it as “the Mother Church.” Its superstition became excessive and its demoralization extreme. “The christians of the seventh century,” says Gibbon, “had relapsed into a semblance of Paganism; their public and private vows were addressed to the relics and images that disgraced the temples of the East; the throne of the Almighty was darkened by a cloud of martyrs, saints, and angels, the objects of popular veneration; and the Collyridian heretics, who flourished on the fruitful soil of Arabia, invested the Virgin Mary with the name and honors of a goddess.”

The Seventh Seal, then, being inducted by the completion of the work of the angel ascending from the East for the sealing of the 144,000, the time had come for the loosing of the Four Wind-Trumpet judgments against the men of the Western Leg of the Imperial Catholic dominion. The full effect of these four trumpets was the slaying of the sixth, or imperial, head of Daniel’s Fourth Beast. This “wound by a sword” appeared for a long time to be unto death. For “the third part of a day and the third part of a night,” it lay prostrate as it were in death; but at the end of that period “the deadly wound was healed;” and the Imperial Head once more stood conspicuously before the nations as the sun of the Western World.

Another important result of these trumpets was the development of the Seventh Head of the Dragon-Beast in the place of its throne, that is, in Rome. This was to continue only a short space compared with its predecessor. After sixty years it was abolished; and for many years after, the sovereignty of “the Eternal City” was simply an affair of history.

Lastly, in addition to these events, the striving of the winds upon the great sea-nations caused the budding forth of the Horns upon the territory on which also the Sixth Head afterwards thrust itself into position on recovering from its deadly wound, and before which three of the ten horns fell, and were “plucked up by the roots.” Thus, the judgments of the first four trumpets laid the foundation of what afterwards became the Europe of modern times.

But these scourges did not affect the Catholics of the East. Their hearths and temples were still protected from the fire and sword of the destroyer. The wrath of God upon their coreligionists of the West, however, failed to work repentance in them for their worship of “the ghosts” of dead men and women, adoration of images, murder of the saints; their sorceries, fornication, and thefts. In twenty years alone of this wind-trumpet period—that, namely, ending in the settlement of Italy by Justinian’s Pragmatic Sanction, A.D. 554—Italy and Africa lost nearly twenty millions of their inhabitants. Yet did not this cause reformation; but men went on waxing worse and worse, until the time came that they must be tormented with scorpions and killed with serpent fire.

This was the mission of the first two Woe-Trumpet angels, and constitutes the second part of the Seventh Seal. The first woe-trumpet was not to extinguish the “Holy Catholic” sovereignty of the East, but only to torment with the plagues of war “those men who had not the seal of God in their foreheads;” that is, all of the Greek Catholic superstition in contrast to the saints, who in all ages are the sealed of the Father.

The second woe-trumpet was to consummate what the first had only began. It was to extinguish the supremacy of Greek Catholicism over all the territory destined for subjugation by the powers brought upon the arena by these woes. But, as these two woes in their operation upon the Eastern Leg of Nebuchadnezzar’s Image wrought no more repentance upon the Latin Catholics of the Western than the first four trumpets did upon their coreligionists of the East, the judgments of the second woe were apportioned also to the catholics of the Horn-Kingdoms of the Sea-Beast. Hence the second woe-trumpet period, in its second part, comprehends the time of the prophesying of the Two Witnesses against the Sea-Beast, in which they exercise their power to shut up his heaven, and to smite his territory with all plagues as often as they will. It also comprehends the later period of the crusades, in which multitudes of the Sea-Beast, and Earth-Beast, and Image of the Beast, populations, all demon-and-image-worshipping devotees, fell by the operation of these woes. Other “voices” of the second woe were the killing of the witnesses as the result of a war upon them by the authorities of the Sea-Beast—a war waged against them when they were about finishing their testimony—and Papal and Protestant factions became the antagonist rivalries of the West. Another “voice” was the resurrection of the witnessing bodies, their ascent to power, and the reign of terror in which they took direful vengeance upon the civil and ecclesiastical orders of the Laodicean Apostasy, which had put them to death three days and a half of years before.

The ending of the second woe, at the ascription of glory to the God of heaven, A.D. 1794, prepares us to enter upon the Third Part or Section of the Seventh Seal. This is the Seventh Trumpet or Third Woe. This period brings us to a comparatively recent epoch in the relations of the Apostasy. The so-called “Holy Catholic Church” and its “Branches,” the “Names of Blasphemy,” of which the “Scarlet-Colored Beast” is “full,” in other words, the Roman Mother Church and her brood of rebellious and protesting bastards were not one whit less blasphemous, or nearer the truth, or walking less after “the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life,” after all the dreadful judgments of the first six trumpets, than were their Laodicean Fathers fourteen centuries before. They still caused to be visited with imprisonment, torture, civil disabilities, or death, “as many as would not worship the Image of the Beast,” and compelled “all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.” They still continued their priestly fornication, “forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats.” Their robbery of the people in tithes and offerings, under the deceitful pretence of curing their souls, was as rampant as ever. Sheer infidelity, or a barren formalism, characterized the more “liberal and enlightened” sections of the “Christendom” of the Beast and Image of the Beast. Pietism was the substitute for “sound doctrine,” which could not be endured; and the Law of Faith and the obedience it required were universally ignored. The pietism was the blind superstition of sect, with unreasoning assent to the dogmas of creeds and articles ordained by the authority of catholicism bewitched, and upheld by the force of “pike and gun.” The witnesses against these things being spiritually and civilly dead, though unburied, there were none to disturb the quiet into which the established orders of the Beast in Church and State, and the “many waters,” or multitudes, they controlled, had settled themselves for the tranquil and unlimited enjoyment of their estate. They rejoiced that they could be no more tormented by the prophesyings of witnesses they had slain, and that now all would be “merry” as a marriage-feast.

But “woe to the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the voices of that trumpet that was yet to sound.” Their political fabric was shaken by a great popular convulsion, which announced that their tormentors had come to life again, and were preparing to go forth and to renew the conflict with the kings, priests, and aristocratic orders of the Beast and his Image, which had “overcome and killed them” for a time. This conflict was renewed by the witnesses against the Beast, and is consummated by Jesus and his Brethren, the saints, after his advent and their resurrection. When the Seventh Trumpet shall have completed its soundings, “the mystery of the Deity will be finished, as He hath declared the glad tidings to his servants the prophets.” The Mother Church and her harlot progeny, with all that sustain the existing order of things, are woebestruck under this third and last section of the Seventh Seal. Their kingdom is filled with darkness, and they gnaw their tongues for pain; yet repent they neither to give God glory, nor of their blasphemies and deeds.

What, then, remains for such a generation but capture and “destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power?” The Laodicean Apostasy in its Greek, Latin, and Protestant forms, can only be destroyed by this judicial manifestation of the presence of the Lord Jesus. When judgment is given to him, judgment is also given to the saints, for He is one of them, being the head of their body, or Chief. To him and them is assigned the deliverance of the nations in the only way they can be delivered, by that, namely, of “destroying them who destroy the earth”—ch. 11:18. To attempt to reform the world by any agency extant is useless. Mankind is intoxicated, and therefore insane, and beyond the reach, consequently, of any spiritual amendment resulting from any appeal to their understanding based upon “the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ.” The people are brutish, and their most revered leaders in church and state maniacally hallucinated. Nothing can be done with individuals or nations until their attention is gained; and all public meetings show that the blind multitude will only listen to that which flatters them, or is spoken in accordance with their prejudices. “When the judgments of Yahweh are abroad in the earth the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness”—Isa. 26. This is certain. Nothing but judgment can meet the necessities of the case; for the same authority saith, "Let favor be showed to the wicked yet will he not learn righteousness." Now the decree has gone forth, that from the rising to the setting of the sun all nations shall assemble in a certain appointed way to worship the one King of the whole earth in Jerusalem—Zech. 14:9, 17; Mal. 1:11; Apoc. 15:4; for the reason given, "because his judgments are made manifest." By these judgments the Eternal Spirit in corporeal manifestation will "avenge the heaven, the holy apostles, and prophets on their enemies;" visit with a just punishment the Apostasy in all its unhallowed forms, and expel from the high places of the Dragon-Beast all its spirituals of wickedness, that "the kingdoms of this world may become the Kingdoms of Yahweh and of His anointed"—Apoc. 11:15; and all their subject nations be blessed in Abraham and his seed according to "the Gospel of the Kingdom."

Now, the judgments that are to accomplish all these results are those to be displayed "in the days of the voice of the Seventh Angel when he shall sound"—ch. 10:7. This seventh trumpet is the trumpet of Isa. 18:3; 27:13; Zech. 9:14; Matt. 24:13; 1 Cor. 15:52; 1 Thess. 4:16. It is the conclusion of the premises laid by the sounding of the previous six. This seventh apocalyptic trumpet in the seventh period of its sounding brings out the events prefigured in the Mosaic trumpet of the Jubilee. It brings in its consummation "the Atonement," or Covering Over, of the sins of Israel, liberty from their long previous bondage to the House of Esau, and return to their possessions in the Holy Land—Lev. 25:9, 10. The assembling of the tribes is proclaimed, and their camps are marshalled for their journeyings. The princes, heads of the thousands of Israel, i.e., the saints, gather together unto Christ, and Israel is saved from their enemies—Num. 10:2, 4, 9; 1 Thess. 4:16; 2 Thess. 2:1.

In Isa. 27:13, it is styled "the Great Trumpet," which Zech. 9:14, testifies shall be blown by Adonai Yahweh, rendered "Lord God," in the C.V., but literally, He who shall be Lords, that is, by the Eternal Spirit incarnate in Jesus and his Brethren. When Jericho was to be taken there were seven periods appointed for the sounding of trumpets. One trumpet-sounding was blown daily for six successive days; but on the seventh they sounded seven times, and at the seventh time the wall of the city fell and Jericho was taken. Thus there were thirteen circumurban soundings—seven upon as many days, and six additional on the seventh; but at the thirteenth only was the city destroyed. So in relation to the capture and destruction of Babylon by the Saints. The seven trumpets all sound against her during seven successive periods; but on the seventh period, or last day of sounding, there are seven soundings, apocalyptically styled "Vials." Six are developed, but "the great city" is not fallen. At last, the seventh vial-outpouring, or blast, of the seventh day sounding is manifested by Adonai Yahweh; "and the people shout, for the Lord hath given them the city." The Lord Jesus and the Saints cooperate personally and visibly in the executing of "the judgment written," which especially pertains to the Seventh Vial, or last period of the sounding of the Seventh Trumpet.

This is the last and greatest of the "Woes." It is, in its seventh period, "the time of Jacob's trouble, out of which, however, he shall be saved"—Jer. 30:7. But not of Jacob only, but also of "the House of Esau," which shall be as stubble to the devouring flame, when "saviours shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau, and the kingdom shall be Yahweh's"—Obad. 17–21; for at that time, which is "the time of the end," when "the indignation shall be accomplished, and that determined done"—"Michael shall stand up, the great prince who standeth for the posterity of Daniel's people; and there shall be a time of trouble, apocalyptically represented by "a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great" (ch. 16:18)—or, as Dan. 12:1, expresses it, "a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation to that same time." Then will the dead who have walked in the truth be raised to incorruptibility; and the Son of Man will send his messengers with a trumpet of great voice, and they shall gather together his elect ones from all the nations, from the end of the heavens; and they shall return—Deut. 30:3–5; Matt. 24:31.

The sounding of the seventh trumpet results in the fall of Babylon the Great, the abolition of the powers of the world, and the establishment of the kingdom which is possessed by Jesus and his Brethren for a thousand years. These mighty results are not effected in an instant. The angels, or agents, of the vials encompass the city six times before judgment is assumed by Jesus and his Brethren. Hence, before their mission in the tragedy is evolved, the five vials are poured out upon “the earth,” “the sea,” “the rivers and fountains of waters,” “the sun,” and “the throne and kingdom of the Beast.” The judgments of these vials of the Seventh Trumpet do not work repentance in the Laodiceans, but only anguish, because of their “pains and sores.” They affect chiefly antichristendom—the Horns, Sixth Healed Head, and Image; i.e., the Horns and Eighth Head.

The Sixth Vial has primarily to do with the eastern section of the fourth beast territory. Its judgments are poured out upon the Euphratean district, where the third part of the men of the Laodicean Apostasy had been politically killed by the messenger powers confined, until loosed, by the Euphrates. Under this vial the time comes to dry up the power which keeps them in vassalage and subject. Not, however, for their sake, and for their restoration to their former position, but as a preparation for the establishment of that EASTERN KINGDOM which is to be possessed by the Theistic Kings, the Saints, and is to rule over all the earth.

This vial is divisible into four parts, each part being characterized by a notable series of events. The drying up of the Euphrates is characteristic of the first part; the political wonder-working of the frog-like spirits of demons, the second; the Eternal Spirit’s advent in Jesus and the Saints, the third; and the postadventual gathering of the powers that be into Armageddon, the fourth.

The second part has to do with the whole Laodicean Habitable apportioned to the Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet, whose policies developed by the machinations of the Frog Power bring them into position for conflict with Jesus and his Brethren, styled “the war of the great day of Ail-shaddai,” or God Almighty.

The third part has to do with the affairs of the Saints exclusively, and belongs to the things written on the inside of the scroll. It announces the appearance of “the Lord, the Spirit,” and the blessing at this time of all Saints who shall not be found naked or uncovered. In this part of the sixth vial, “the King comes in to see the guests furnished for the wedding”—Matt. 22:10, 11; and to scrutinize them, that it may be seen who of them are fit associates for his majesty, and who are not. At this epoch “the Great White Throne” is placed, styled by Paul in Rom. 14:10; and 2 Cor. 5:10, “the Judgment Seat of Christ,” before which all constitutionally in Christ appear. They stand before it bodies, or living souls, such as Adam was when he was created from dust of the ground. Their resurrection brings them back to nature, and so restores to them identity, and enables them to “give account of themselves to God.” Paul will be there to give account of himself among the rest. All called saints, who by the gospel have been invited to the Kingdom, who cannot give a good account of themselves; who, in other words, have been “walking after the flesh, or “sowing to the flesh,” between their immersion into Christ and their death, will be pronounced “naked,” not having “watched and kept their garments.” These will therefore be put to shame and contempt, and will be condemned to “receive things in body” accordant with their deeds—Matt. 16:27; Rom. 2:6. Negatively, they will not be “accepted of Christ;” they will not be “clothed upon with the house from heaven;” “immortality will” not “be swallowed up of life;” they will not be permitted to “eat of the tree of life in the midst of the paradise of the Deity;” but affirmatively, they will be “injured by second death;” they will be “blotted out of the book of the living;” they will “die” and “reap corruption”—Apoc. 2:11; Psalms 69:28; Rom. 8:13; Gal. 6:8. Thus, they will receive in bodies natural “bad things” according to their previous works, which they could not do if by resurrection per se they were of necessity incorruptible and immortal.

Judgment at the house of God being ended (1 Pet. 4:17) by the separation of the good and bad fish enclosed by the gospel net (Matt. 13:47, 48), the good are appropriated by the Lamb for future use.

Cleansed and purified from tares they constitute the wheat of his garner. All “false brethren,” and mere pretenders, not having on the wedding garment, being cast into outer darkness, those who are accepted by the King as “holy, unblamable, and irreproachable in his sight” (Col. 1:22), “enter in through the gates into the holy city”—Apoc. 22:14; and become “the 144,000 having the Lamb’s Father’s name written on their foreheads”—ch. 14:1. These accepted ones are the saints to whom judgment is given for the destruction of the Fourth Beast—Dan. 7:22, 26. “They follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth” in all the scenes and enterprizes of “the war of the great day of Ail-Shaddai,” until they are seen no longer as the Rainbow Angel with feet as pillars of fire—ch. 10:1; but under the new aspect of Divine Harpers standing on a sea of crystal, no longer “mingled with fire,” as the conquerors of the beast and all pertaining to that hateful dominion, singing the song of victory—the song of Moses and the Lamb—ch. 15:2.

Thus, the events of this third part of the sixth vial are an organization and preparation of the Stone-Power—the cutting of the Stone out of the mountain without hands—Dan. 2:45; for the work of smiting Nebuchadnezzar’s Image on the feet, and of reducing the broken pieces to powder, light as the chaff of the summer threshing floors, that all may be carried away of the tempest and found no more. The Stone-Power is constituted of the Eternal Spirit, or Deity, manifested in Jesus and the Saints. “glorified together,” and directing and leading the tribes of Israel, and the mixed multitude commingled with them. At this time, and thus officered and commanded, Israel will have arrived at “their latter end;” have been made “willing;” and have been energized for “one to chase a thousand, and for two to put ten thousand of their enemies to flight”—Deut. 32:29, 30. “Yahweh Elohim,” the Spirit incarnate in Jesus and his Brethren, “is with them; and the shout of the King is among them.” They have now “the strength of the unicorn; and are risen up as a great lion, and lifted up as a young lion; and shall not lie down until he devour the prey, and drink the blood of the slain.” The time now comes for the King of Israel to be higher than Gog, or Agag; and for his kingdom to be exalted. Thus officered, and commanded by Michael the Great Prince, “he shall eat up the nations his enemies, and shall break their bones, and pierce them through with his arrows.” In this third part of the sixth vial, the Star of Jacob prepares to shine forth as Israel’s Sceptre, and to smite the princes of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth—him that remaineth of the city—Num. 23:21, 24; 24:7, 8, 14, 17—19.

The saints being “gathered together unto Christ,” his day is come; and the due season at length arrived for the consumption and destruction of the Lawless One by the spirit of his mouth, and the manifestation of his presence—2 Thess. 2:1–8. All things being thus ready, the messenger-power of the Sixth vial proceeds to the gathering of the kings of the earth, and of the whole habitable, into Armageddon. This introduces the fourth part of the vial, and creates the situation necessary to the parallel outpouring of the seventh. In this fourth section of the vial-period the peoples will associate themselves against Israel, in whose midst Immanuel now is; and, under the fiery flying serpent of Assyria, will rush as the rushing of many waters, and with the sound of the roaring seas, to spoil and scatter them—Isa. 8:9, 10; 14:25, 29; 17:12&–14. They will ascend like a storm-cloud to cover the land in this the day of Yahweh’s vengeance, and the year of recompences for the controversy of Zion—Isa. 34:1–8; 63:1–6. He will cause them to come up from the north parts, and bring them upon the mountains of Israel, which are the apocalyptic “Armageddon”—Ezek. 38:9; 39:2, 4. There, under the king of the north, encamped between the seas, even to the mountain of the glory of the holy (Dan. 11:41, 45) will they be gathered against Jerusalem to besiege and take it, and rifle it, and to make captives of its residue—Zech. 14:2. But they will not find therein the King of Israel. By this gathering of all nations against Jerusalem, in tempestuous conflict among themselves for the possession of the holy city, which becomes to them “a cup of trembling,” and “a burdensome stone” (Zech. 12:2, 3) the judgments of the Sixth vial are closed. It will have assembled the Laodicean and other heathen in that part of Armageddon called in Joel “the valley of Jehoshaphat;” where Yahweh Elohim, the Spirit incarnate in the Saints, will sit in judgment upon them. “The mighty ones” of the Spirit having descended into the arena, or valley of decision or threshing, and its fats overflowing with multitudes upon multitudes of wicked, “the great and terrible day of Yahweh” is about to shine forth in their overthrow and destruction—Joel 3:9–14.

The fourth section of the Seventh Seal is the seventh and last vial. The judgments of this pertain emphatically to “the great and terrible day of Yahweh,” styled in ch. 14:7, “the Hour of his Judgment.” It is “the consummation of the seventh seal, which fills up the wrath of Deity” upon the Laodicean Apostasy. It is the vial-period in which the sea of nations is mingled with the fiery indignation of the Eternal Spirit—ch. 15:2. It begins with Yahweh going forth to fight against the assembled nations; and in vanquishing them in Armageddon, to stand upon the Mount of Olives preparatory to his triumphal entry into Jerusalem—Zech. 14:3–4; 9:9, 10; Psa. 24:7–10; 118:26; Matt. 23:39; Apoc. 14:1. This defeat consummates the outpouring of the seventh vial upon “the Air”—it shakes the heavens and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; it shakes all nations to the overthrow of the throne of kingdoms and the destruction of the strength of their dominions Hag. 2:6, 7, 21, 22; Joel 3:15, 16. Consequent upon the full exhaustion of the vial is the darkening of the sun and moon, and the extinguishing of the stars of the Gentile aerial, by the bathing of Yahweh’s sword therein. In the words of the Spirit, “all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree”—Isa. 34:4, 5; Joel 3:15; and as a consequence, he before whose face this earth and heaven flee away (Apoc. 20:11) appropriates the world’s kingdoms to himself and friends—Apoc. 11:15.

The overthrow of the armies of the nations in Armageddon is the manifestation of the end. Subsequently to the defeat of the enemy, by which the king effects his entrance into the Holy City, he issues a proclamation, styled “a great voice out of the temple of heaven from the throne,” announcing that “It is done”—ch. 16:17; 21:16. What is done? “That which is determined”—the full accomplishment of the indignation which scatters the power of the holy people—Dan. 11:36; 12:7. The “time of the end” is finished when the angel-power of the seventh vial has poured out all the wrath upon “the air” of the Nebuchadnezzar-Image: the “time, times, and a half,” or 1260 years of Dan. 12:7, are expired; and the 1335 years of verse 12 also. This exhaustion of the indignation is styled “the consummation” in Dan. 9:27. The indignation hath its first end and its “last end” (Dan. 8:19) and between these two ends a long intermediate interval of centuries of desolation. The seventh vial is identical with “the last end,” in which the Little Horn of the Goat power, “the king who doth according to his will,” “the Assyrian” (Mic. 5:5), “Gog of the land of Magog,” “the King of the north,” Nebuchadnezzar’s Image, the four great beasts from the sea, “the dragon,” “the Beast and his Image,” the ten horns—all terms representing “the kingdom of men”—will stand up in battle array against the Prince of princes and his faithful and chosen followers. But affliction comes upon the tents of Cushan, and those of the land of Midian are made to tremble at the Ensign lifted up upon the mountain of Israel—Hab. 3:7; Isa. 18:3. Great and terrible is the power of the Holy One in the judgments of the seventh vial. “He stands, and measures the earth; he beholds and drives asunder the nations; and the everlasting mountains are scattered, and the perpetual hills do bow”; or, in the words of Apoc. 16:20, “every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.” Every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood; but he who comes with dyed garments from Edom, is with burning and fuel of fire—Isa. 9:5; 63:1–6; 66:15, 16. The armies of the kingdom of men issue forth as a whirlwind to scatter him; but vain are all their efforts; for He will march through the earth in indignation, and thresh the nations in anger; for he goes forth for the salvation of his people, and he will not be foiled.

“It is done.” Is the result of the exhaustion of this vial upon “the air,” the fourth beast of Daniel’s vision will have been totally destroyed in all its parts, and the kingdom of God established as the sole political organization for the government of the nations. It will then be said, “Behold, it is come, and it is done, saith Adonai Yahweh this is the day whereof I have spoken—whereof he has spoken by his servants the prophets that he would break the power of the Gentiles, when saviours should come up on Mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau; and the Kingdom should be to Yahweh”—Ezek. 39:8; Obad. 21.

Such is the general result of the Seventh vial upon “the air.” There are, however, certain stages through which judgment passes to the subversion of the existing order of things, and the establishment of that which is to last unchanged for a thousand years—“the world to come.” This fourth section of the Seventh Seal is divisible into two acts, or summaries of detail. The first relates to what may be styled, the first angel mission of the seventh vial; the second, to the second and third angel missions of the same. The first angel mission forewarns the nations of what is prepared to burst forth upon them. It announces that the Hour of Judgment has actually arrived; and declares the glory of yahweh among the Gentiles inhabiting Tarshish, Pul, Lud, Tubal, Javan, and the isles afar off from Jerusalem—Isa. 66:19; Apoc. 14:6. This manifesto is proclaimed after the advent and resurrection, and separation of the tares from the wheat at the judgment seat of Christ, and occupation of Jerusalem by the great king, and before the fall of Babylon by certain “of those who escape.” They are sent as moshkai kesheth, “sounders of truth,” to blow the great trumpet of the jubilee, and to invite all nations to do homage to the King of the Jews—Isa. 18:3; 27:13; 66:19; Lev. 25:10; Apoc. 10:11. To this proclamation succeeds the day of affliction, in which a great sacrifice is offered by yahweh for the birds and beasts of prey—“the flesh of the mighty, and the blood of the princes of the earth”—Lev. 23:27–32; Ezek. 39:17; Apoc. 19:17. The offering of this sacrifice is the punishment of the goats—Zech. 10:3–6; Matt. 25:31–46; and constitutes the second act of this fourth section of the seventh seal. The offering is the mission of the mighty angel with the rainbow upon his head, whose countenance is as the sun, and his progress as moving pillars of fire—Apoc. 10. He places his right foot upon the sea, and his left upon the earth, and thus takes up a burning position upon the territory of the ten-horned, and two-horned beasts of ch. 13. “The earth and the whole habitable” thus become an arena of intense conflagration, in which the Gentile body politic is given to the sword and the burning flame—Dan. 7:10, 11:—“the sea” is mingled with fire, and the “the earth” becomes “a lake of fire burning with brimstone”—ch. 15:2; 19:20:—“the Aion-Fire prepared for the Devil (Dragon—ch. 20:2) and his angels”—Matt. 25:41; into which all are cast who are condemned to share in the punishment inflicted upon the goats—ch. 20: 15; 14:9, 11.

This rainbowed angel is symbolical of the Eternal Spirit incarnate in Jesus and his Brethren, the glorified saints, in their warfare against “the beast and his image,” over which they get the victory. He is the “Four Living Ones full of eyes,” in one symbol, giving utterance to the roar of the Lion of the Tribe of Judah—Joel 3:16; 2:11; Jer. 25:30–38; Isa. 42:13–16. What proceeds from the company of actors represented by this symbol, “proceeds from the throne,” whence issue forth “lightnings, thunderings, and voices”—ch. 4:5. The rainbowed messenger is the embodiment of “the seven lamps of fire burning before the throne”—of the “seven horns and seven eyes, the seven spirits of the Deity, sent forth into all the earth”—ch. 4:5; 5:6. “When he had cried,” or made the proclamation pertaining to the first angel mission, which is responded to by the armies of the Ten Horns rushing forth as a whirlwind to scatter him (Hab. 3:14; Apoc. 17:14) “seven thunders utter their voices”—ch. 10:3. The details of these thunders are not specified. They will become history to be read by the generations to come when they shall have thundered down all opposition to the dominion of the saints. It would have swelled the apocalypse to an unwieldy size, and have greatly augmented its complications, to have recorded in detail the utterances of these thunders. John was therefore commanded to “seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and to write them not.” Hence, all we can say about them is, that as “thunder,” which implies lightning, is the symbol of destruction, the seven thunders augur only a bitter practical prophecy to many peoples, nations, tongues, and kings—ver. 9, 11.

But in the hand of this mighty heaven-descended Spirit-Messenger, not naked spirit, but “clothed with a cloud” of the holy and blessed of the Father, is “a little scroll open.” It is not closed or rolled up like the seven-sealed scroll, but open and unsealed. It is the scroll of judgments in bitter manifestation, in current outflow from the body of John and his coworkers in the execution of the judgments written—ch. 10:9; Psa. 149:5–9. It contains the denouement of the apocalyptic tragedy—the issue of the plot, or, as Daniel was informed, “the end of the matter.”

In this little open scroll is written the performances of the actors in the second and last act of the fourth section of the seventh seal. It is, therefore, the key that opens or unlocks “the Mystery of the Deity as he hath declared the glad tidings to his servants the prophets”—ch. 10:7. Upon it are inscribed the missions of the second and third angels, comprehensive of the judgment of Babylon, the conquest of the Ten Horns and destruction of the Beast, and the slaying of “the remnant” not included in the symbol, by the white-robed battalions of the King of kings and Lord of lords—ch. 19.

The mission of the second angel is to destroy “Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and the Abominations of the earth”—ch. 14:8. It is a work of the saints to do this; for she is “drunk with their blood, and with the blood of the witnesses of Jesus”—ch. 17:6; 18:4–8. Hence, they are the messenger-power of the second mission. They enlighten the nations with the glory of the coworking Spirit, so that they bring into contempt the Laodicean Apostasy in its Greek, Latin, and Protestant manifestations, causing the spiritual merchants of all privileged and unprivileged sects of “Christendom” to weep and mourn, “because no man buyeth their merchandise any more”—ch. 18:11.

The Ecclesiastical Corporation of the Fourth Beast, by the abundance of whose spiritual delicacies the great men of all nations, styled demons, foul spirits, unclean and hateful birds, had waxed rich (ch. 18:2, 3, 23), being tormented to utter and final extinction from “the Air” (vv. 8, 15, 21) by the second symbolic angel, or Yahweh Elohim and the Saints (vv. 6, 8), they continue their work in the mission of the third angel to the tormentation and destruction of the beast and false prophet-power in their civil and military organizations. The adherents of these constitutions bewail and lament the breaking up of the priest and clergy craft of “Christendom” (vv. 9, 10), showing that their political existence continues beyond the fall of that “Mystery of Iniquity.” These, therefore, become the next object against which “the holy messengers and the Lamb” direct their exterminating judgments—ch. 14:9–11. This work of destruction continues so long as the smoke of their torment ascends, which is till the body of the beast is destroyed by the burning flame that issues forth from before the Ancient of Days, or, as it is apocalyptically expressed, eis aionas aionon, to aions of aions, which is to the commencement of the thousand years’ reign—Dan. 7:10, 11; 2 Thess. 2:8; Apoc. 14:10, 11.

This whole burnt-sacrifice of the fourth beast in the day of Yahweh’s vengeance would have consummated the tragic drama of the apocalypse had there been no Gentile Remnant beyond the jurisdiction of the fourth beast. Had Daniel’s vision presented before him only one beast, then there would have been no more to do than to celebrate the victory, and to keep the Feast of Tabernacles, and so enter upon the reign. Or, had Nebuchadnezzar’s Image consisted only of one metal, and been pulverized by a single blow of the stone upon the feet, the stone would at once have become a great mountain filling the whole earth. But these suppositions do not obtain. There are four beasts to be disposed of, and four metals, and a grinding of the whole to powder after the fracture of their image-combination by the stone. The fourth beast and the iron teeth and brazen claws thereof being in process of demolition by the second and third angel missions, “the remnant” (ch. 19:21), or “dragon” (ch. 20:2, 3), or first three beasts of Dan. 7:4, 5, 6, 12, are being also collaterally and coetaneously subjected to the sword of the King of kings and his white-robed squadrons of the heaven. This great potentate, riding this “white cloud” or body of celestial horse (ch. 19:11, 14), “having on his head a golden wreath and in his hand a sharp sickle” (ch. 14:14, 15), reaps the harvest of the earth, and gathers the clusters of the earth’s vine, and casts them into the great winepress “without the city,” which he treads in anger, making them drunk in his fury, and so brings down their strength to the earth (Isa. 63:1—6; Joel 3:13; Apoc. 14:20).

The result of the reaping the harvest and treading the great winepress is the binding of the Dragon-power and the shutting of it up in the abyss for a thousand years; in other words, the taking away of the dominion of the Assyrian lion, the Medo-Persian bear, and the Greco Egypto-Anglican leopard, for a season and a time—Dan. 7:12. These organizations of peoples are not destroyed, as was the Babylonian fourth beast embodying the Laodicean Apostasy. They are conquered and deprived of dominion, which is transferred to their conquerors the saints, who will have brought down their strength with a sanguinary and mighty overthrow. Thus, Assyria, Egypt, Pathros, Khush, Elam, Shinar, and the islands of the sea, will have felt the edge of their twoedged sword, as well as Europe and the West; for, like birds of prey, their tribes will “fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the West; they will spoil them of the East together; they will lay their power upon Edom and Moab, and the children of Ammon shall obey them” (Isa. 11:11, 14). The face and condition of the East will then be altogether changed. With the present spiritual and temporal constitution of “Christendom” destroyed, and the East brought into subjection to Deity, the nations will then be truly “blessed with” and “in Abraham and his seed,” as predicted in the gospel of the kingdom. Yahweh will be made known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know Yahweh in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation ... In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the land; whom Yahweh Tz’vaoth shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance—Isa. 19:21–25. As to the leopard, or “Philistines toward the west,” the third beast, of which Egypt is a part, Tarshish and Javan, these also become a spoil in the war of the great day of Yahweh Ail-Shaddai. The Tyrian commerce of the Great Sea is turned from Britain to Palestine as a flowing stream; and “her merchandise and her hire is holiness to Yahweh; it shall not be treasured nor laid up; for her merchandise shall be for them that dwell before Yahweh, to eat sufficiently, and for durable clothing” (Isa. 23:18; 60:5, 9; 61:6; 66:12; Psalms 45:12; 72:10).

In the development of the second and third angel-missions, and in the harvesting of the earth and treading of its vintage, all the work of the seventh vial will have been accomplished. All its voices, thunders, and lightnings, will have been hushed into eternal silence; the vibrations of the greatest earthquake that ever shook the nations will have ceased their tremblings for ever; the threefold divisions of the great city will all have been confounded in the fall of Babylon, and the flight of every political island, and disappearance of the imperial mountains of ancient date. Jesus and his Brethren, energized by Yahweh, the Eternal Spirit, descending as a tempest of hail, a destroying storm, will have beaten down the Assyrian, and swept away all refuges of lies. The Laodicean Apostasy will have been demolished and for ever abolished; and “the smoke of the temple from the glory of the Deity, and from his power,” will all have cleared away, and men will enter into the temple and go out no more (Isa. 30:30; 28:2, 17; 32:19; Ezek. 38:22; Apoc. 11:19; 15:8; 3:12; 16:17–21). “IT IS DONE.” “The Air” is purified of “the spirituals of wickedness in the heavenlies” (Eph. 6:12), and nothing remains but for the victorious saints and the conquered world of nations to celebrate the victory.

Such is a brief sketch of this remarkable prophecy, outlined in the light of the prophets, the testimony of history, and the reality of what exists, truly brought out by the unerring principles of apostolic truth. The Apocalypse is its own evidence of its divine authenticity. Its perfect harmony with Moses and the prophets, the discourses of Christ Jesus, and the teachings of all the apostles; its unique and inimitable structure, and its complete frustration of all the attempts of “the wise and prudent” to comprehend it (Matt. 11:25), are evidences that it originated, not from John or any other of his learned or unlearned contemporaries, but from the mind of Him to whom are known all his works from the beginning. It brings to nothing “the understanding of the prudent,” and resolves into outer darkness the wisdom of all the world’s rulers and soul-merchants, in whatever name or denomination they may rejoice in Church and State. “If any man will do the Father’s will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of the Deity”—John 7:17. No man can do his will who is not intelligent in “the truth as it is in Jesus;” because his will demands an enlightened obedience. A man, therefore, who is not an enlightened believer, is essentially deficient in the prime prerequisite qualification of an interpreter and critic of interpretations. This is the reason why there is not a single scriptural interpretation of the apocalypse extant from the days of Sir Isaac Newton to the current year. Many attempts have been made, but they have all proved failures; because their “wise and prudent” authors, being the mere embodiments of the dogmatic pietism sanctified in the world’s opinion by the “names of blasphemy” of which “the scarlet colored beast,” in contemporary existence with Christ’s advent, is “full” (ch. 17:3), are necessarily ignorant of “the first principles of the oracles of God.” A man cannot be loyal and true to his Romish or Protestant creed and understand the apocalypse. His head will be full of immortal soulism, heaven beyond the realms of time and space, purgatory, mariolatry and saint-worship, eternal subterranean hells, baby-ghosts transformed into angels studding the cloudy vapors of the air, and of all other speculations kindred to these. Such a wise and prudent genius mistakes a community of confessed “miserable sinners,” assembling in an ecclesiastical temple of the dead, and rejoicing in the Queen as their head, for the Church of Christ, and looks only for saints in “sainted” sinners translated to the skies! Such a “theologian,” be he lay or clerical, conformist or dissenter, never has, and never can, understand the apocalypse till he abandons these traditions of the Apostasy.

The author of this work does not address himself to such. He writes of them as an interpretation of the book that delineates the terrible catastrophe coming upon them demands; but he writes for “the servants of the Deity,” that they may read and understand. Lest, therefore, the sketch already given should fall short of that simplicity necessary to the comprehension of the apocalypse by the least intelligent of his brethren in Christ, the author invites their attention to the following “Tabular Analysis,” which presents, as it were, synoptically, the subject matter of the previous sketch. The method of the Analysis is suggested by the Apocalypse itself. The first general division of the prophecy contains the first five chapters; the second, the seven sealed scroll; the third, that portion pertaining to the introduction of the thousand years’ reign, or kingdom of God; the fourth, the prophecy of millennial blessedness; and the fifth, the prophecy of the “little season.” These divisions must not be confounded with the divisions of the scroll; for the two divisions of the scroll are comprehended in the second general division of the prophecy.

The Roman figures, I., II., III., IV., V., prefixed to certain captions of the Analysis, indicate that all following that title belongs to the divisions so numbered.

TABULAR ANALYSIS OF THE APOCALYPSE

GENERAL SUBJECT

A REVELATION SYMBOLICALLY AND DRAMATICALLY EXHIBITED OF THE ENMITY BETWEEN THE SERPENT AND HIS SEED, AND THE WOMAN AND HER SEED, AS ESPECIALLY DEVELOPED IN THE CONFLICT BETWEEN CHRIST AND HIS BRETHREN WITH DANIEL'S FOURTH BEAST SYSTEM OF POWERS: OF THE JUDGMENTS RETRIBUTIVELY AFFECTING THESE; OF THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST'S BRETHREN IN THE CONFLICT; OF THEIR SUBJUGATION UNTIL THE ANCIENT OF DAYS APPEAR; OF THE SUBSEQUENT OVERTHROW AND DESTRUCTION OF THE POWERS OF THE WOLD BY CHRIST AND HIS BRETHREN; AND OF THE CONSEQUENT ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KINGDOM AND THRONE OF DAVID PROMISED TO THE SAINTS, AND NEVER TO BE DESTROYED.

Gen. 3:15; Dan. 2:44; 7:21, 22, 26, 27; Apoc. 6–20:5; Heb. 2:11–14.

TIME OF DEVELOPMENT
FROM A.D. 107 TO A.D. 1905 = A.M. 5995.

GENERAL DIVISIONS

I. THE SEVEN APOCALYPTIC EPISTLES TO THE SEVEN REPRESENTATIVE ECCLESIAS.
II. THE SEVEN-SEALED SCROLL. III. THE LITTLE OPEN SCROLL CONTAINING THE UTTERANCES OF THE SEVEN THUNDERS FROM THE THRONE, WHICH JOHN WAS FORBIDDEN TO WRITE. IV. THE PROPHECY OF MILLENNIAL BLESSEDNESS. V.
PROPHECY OF THE "LITTLE SEASON."

I. THE SEVEN APOCALYPTIC EPISTLES

(SEE THE FIRST VOLUME, PAGE 428)

II. THE SEVEN-SEALED SCROLL

1. FIRST GENERAL DIVISION OF THE SCROLL

THE FIRST FOUR AND THE SIXTH SEALS REPRESENTATIVE OF THE JUDICIAL MANNER OF "TAKING OUT OF THE WAY" THE PAGAN CONSTITUTION OF THE "DREADFUL AND TERRIBLE FOURTH BEAST," WHICH WITHHELD THE REVELATION OF "THE LAWLESS
ONE;" (DAN. 7:7; APOC. 6; 2 THESS. 2:3–9) AND THE CONSEQUENT MANIFESTATION OF THE CATHOLIC MYSTERY OF INIQUITY, OR MAN-OF-SIN POWER, IN THE HEAVEN OF THE SAID BEAST, OR "GREAT RED DRAGON" (APOC. 12:1–5, 7–13).

TIME OF EVENTS

FROM A.D. 107 TO A.D. 325

2. SECOND GENERAL DIVISION OF THE SCROLL

THE SEVENTH SEAL, SEVEN TRUMPETS, AND THE SIX VIALS TO THE APPEARING OF CHRIST "AS A THIEF;" EXHIBITING THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE TEN HORNS OF THE FOURTH BEAST, IN THE WOUNDING OF THE SIXTH HEAD AND ESTABLISHMENT OF THE SEVENTH (APOC. 7, 8); THE SUBVERSION OF THE GREEK CATHOLIC DYNASTY OF CONSTANTINOPLE (APOC. 9); THE RISING OF DANIEL'S EPISCOPAL HORN, OR EIGHTH HEAD, THAT SPEAKS BLASPHEMIES AND "AS A DRAGON" (APOC. 13:1–5, 11–18; 17); THE WAR OF THE SAINTS WITH THIS POWER; THEIR SUBJUGATION, DEATH, RESURRECTION, AND ASCENSION TO THE HEAVEN, AT THE ENDING OF THE SIXTH TRUMPET (APOC. 11:3–12; 12:14, 16, 17; 13:6–10); JUDGMENTS UPON THEIR ENEMIES, THE HORNS, EIGHTH HEAD, AND IMAGE (APOC. 6:1–11), AND THE PREPARATION OF THEIR WAY (APOC. 16:12–14).

TIME OF EVENTS
FROM A.D. 325 TO THE FALL SEASONS OF A.D. 1864–8, OR THEREABOUTS.

III. THE LITTLE OPEN SCROLL

THE SEVENTH SEAL, SEVENTH TRUMPET, SEVENTH VIAL, AND SEVEN THUNDERS FROM THE MANIFESTATION OF CHRIST AND HIS BRETHREN AS THE LAMB IN THE MIDST OF THE 144,000 REDEEMED FROM THE EARTH, TO THE FULL ESTABLISHMENT OF THE MILLENNIAL THRONE AND KINGDOM OF DAVID UPON THE UTTER DESTRUCTION OF DANIEL’S DREADFUL AND TERRIBLE FOURTH BEAST; AND THE SUBJECTION OF THE FIRST THREE, OR THE LION, THE BEAR AND THE LEOPARD.

Apoc. 4:5; 5:5–14; 7:9–17; 10; 11:15–19; 13:10; 14; 15; 16:15–21; 17:14; 18; 19; 20:1–6, 11–15; 21:8.

TIME OF EVENTS

“THE TIME OF THE END,” (DANIEL 8:17; 11:40; 12:1–4) FROM THE QUADRENNIAL EPOCH, A.D. 1864–8 TO A.D. 1905.

IV. THE PROPHECY OF MILLENNIAL BLESSEDNESS

MILLENNIAL BLESSEDNESS AND GLORY PERVADE THE EARTH, AND ALL ITS NATIONS ARE “BLESSED IN ABRAHAM AND HIS SEED,” ACCORDING TO THE GOSPEL. THE GOVERNMENT OF THE WORLD BEING IN THE HANDS OF JESUS AND HIS BRETHREN, THERE IS “GLORY TO THE DEITY IN THE HIGHEST HEAVEN, OVER THE EARTH PEACE, AND GOOD WILL AMONG MEN,” WHO ALL REJOICE IN THEIR GREAT DELIVERANCE FROM THE TYRANNY AND MISRULE OF THE SPIRITUALS OF WICKEDNESS IN THE HEAVENLIES OF CHURCH AND STATE.

Daniel 7:14, 27; Apoc. 5:13; 14:13; 15:3, 4; 20:6; 21:9–27; 22:1–5.

TIME OF EVENTS

FROM A.D. 1905 TO A.D. 2905

V. PROPHECY OF THE “LITTLE SEASON”

THE POSTMILLENNIAL “LITTLE SEASON,” WHEN THE ADVERSARIES OF RIGHTEOUSNESS ADMINISTERED BY THE SAINTS IN CHURCH AND STATE, WILL GET UP

A WIDESPREAD REBELLION AGAINST THEIR GOVERNMENT. WAR ENSUES, AND THEIR CAMP AND CAPITOL ARE INVESTED; BUT THE POWER OF THE ADMINISTRATION PREVAILS; AND WITH THE SUPPRESSION OF THE INSURRECTION, THE TIME COMES TO CONSUMMATE THE WORK OF “TAKING AWAY THE SIN OF THE WORLD,” IN THE DESTRUCTION OF “THE LAST ENEMY”—OF “THAT HAVING THE POWER OF DEATH,” AND OF “THE WORKS OF THE DEVIL.”

Apoc. 20:7–10; 21:1, 3–7; 22:3; 1 Cor. 15:24–28; Heb. 2:14; 1 John 3:8.

TIME OF EVENTS

FROM A.D. 2905 TO A.D. 2910 = A.M. 7000

SPECIAL DIVISIONS OF THE APOCALYPTIC TRAGEDY

I. THE FIRST SIX SEALS

ACT I.—SEAL 1

THE ARCHER OF THE WHITE HORSE GOES FORTH FROM THE LAMB WITH HIS BOW, ON A CAREER OF CONQUEST—CH. 6:1, 2.

ACT II.—SEAL 2

THE RIDER OF THE RED HORSE PUTS AN END TO THE PREVIOUS PEACE, AND INVOLVES THE POPULATIONS OF THE FOURTH BEAST POLITY IN BLOODY CIVIL WARS—CH. 6:3, 4.

ACT III.—SEAL 3

THE GRECO-LATIN HORSE BLACK WITH LAMENTATION, MOURNING AND WOE—CH. 6:5, 6.

ACTS IV.—SEAL 4

WAR, FAMINE, PESTILENCE, AND BARBARIAN INVASION COMBINED, SICKLY OVER THE ROMAN HORSE WITH THE PALE CAST OF DEATH AND CORRUPTION—CH. 6:7, 8.

ACT V.—SEAL 5

A PERIOD OF GREAT RESISTANCE UNTO BLOOD ON THE PART OF THE BOWMEN ENGAGED IN THE CONQUEST OF THE PAGANISM OF THE FOURTH BEAST—CH. 6:9–11.

ACT VI.—SEAL 6

A GREAT EARTHQUAKE INAUGURATES THIS JUDICIAL PERIOD. WAR IN THE HEAVEN, (APOC. 12:7) RESULTING IN AN ECLIPSE OF THE SUN, IN THE MOON BECOMING BLOOD, IN STARS OF THE HEAVEN, THE STARS DRAWN BY THE TAIL OF THE DRAGON, FALLING TO THE EARTH, AND IN THE CASTING OUT THEREINTO OF THE GREAT RED DRAGON (APOC. 12:4). THE HEAVEN OF THE DRAGON-POLITY DEPARTS AS A SCROLL ROLLED UP; AND EVERY MOUNTAIN AND ISLAND CHANGE THEIR PLACES. THE ANGELS OF THE DRAGON ARE CAST OUT WITH HIM (APOC. 12:9). NO PLACE FOR THEM ANY MORE IN THE HEAVEN FROM WHICH THEY ARE EJECTED HAVING BEEN EFFECTUALLY

CONQUERED BY THE ARCHER—THE FELLOW SERVANTS AND BRETHREN OF THE SOULS UNDER THE ALTAR; WHO CONQUERED HIM BY THE BLOOD OF THE LAMB, AND BY THE WORD OF THEIR TESTIMONY, ON ACCOUNT OF WHICH THEY WERE SLAIN, NOT LOVING THEIR LIVES UNTO DEATH (APOC. 12:11; 6:9). GREAT REJOICING IN THE HEAVENS BY THEM WHO SUCCEED THE EJECTED DRAGON AND HIS OFFICIALS, WHO RAGE WITH GREAT FURY IN THE EARTH AND SEA OF THEIR LATE DOMINION (APOC. 12:12). THE GREAT DAY OF WRATH UPON PAGANISM.

The woman Jezebel, who calls herself a prophetess, the Laodicean Apostasy, imperialized, and the Man-of-Sin power revealed (Apoc. 2:20; 3:16; 12:1–5).

II. THE SEVENTH SEAL

APOC. 8

This seal covers the whole period from A.D. 325 to—A.D. 1905, an interval of 1580 years. It therefore contains the judgments specially allotted to the seven trumpets, seven vials, and seven thunders.

It treats of the development of the imperialized Laodicean Apostasy into “the powers that be” of the Greco-Latin habitable under the forms of the Beast of the Sea, the Beast of the Earth, (Apoc. 13) the scarlet-colored beast and drunken woman (Apoc. 17:1–6), the image of the Beast, (Apoc. 13:14–18; 15:2), and of the relation of these powers to the fugitive woman and to the remnant of her seed “who keep the commandments of the Deity, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ” (Apoc. 12:17). They are prevailed against (Apoc. 13:7; 11:2; Dan. 7:21); but the Ancient of Days comes to their relief; the tide of adversity is turned; the Saints become victorious; the Apostasy incorporated in the Names and Denominations of “Christendom,” is abolished; and they take possession of the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven (Dan. 7:27) of Daniel’s Four Beasts.

ARENA OF THE SEVENTH SEAL

“THE EARTH AND THE WHOLE HABITABLE” (APOC. 16:14). TERRITORY OF NEBUCHADNEZZAR’S IMAGE.

INDUCTION OF THE JUDGMENTS OF THE SEVENTH SEAL

THOUGH CAST OUT OF THE THIRD OF THE HEAVEN, AS INDICATED BY HIS TAIL DRAWING THE THIRD OF THE STARS OF THE HEAVEN, AND CASTING THEM INTO THE EARTH (APOC. 12:4), THE DRAGON STILL RETAINED POWER IN “THE EARTH AND SEA” OF THE GRECO-LATIN POLITY (APOC. 12:12, 13, 15, 16; 7:3). HIS POWER THERE WAS A “WOE” TO THEIR INDWELLERS, NOT EXCEPTING THOSE WHO PROFESSED THE FAITH OF JESUS. RETRIBUTION, HOWEVER, FOLLOWED IN HIS EXCLUSION FROM THE HEAVEN. A.D. 324; UPON WHICH THE SEALING OF THE 144,000 SERVANTS OF THE DEITY, AND THE PERIOD OF “SILENCE” ABOUT HALF AN HOUR, BEGAN. FURTHER RETRIBUTION WAS SUSPENDED DURING THE SILENCE; BUT THIS BEING ENDED, THE PRAYERS OF ALL THE SAINTS WHICH ASCENDED DURING THE SILENCE AS A CLOUD OF INCENSE FROM THE GOLDEN ALTAR OF THE TABERNACLE OF THE TESTIMONY BEFORE THE DEITY, WAS ANSWERED BY “VOICES, AND THUNDERS, AND LIGHTNINGS, AND EARTHQUAKE,” (APOC. 12:8; 8:3, 4) WHICH PRECEDED THE PREPARATION OF THE SEVEN TRUMPETERS TO SOUND AGAINST THE EARTH AND SEA (APOC. 8:6).

FIRST SECTION OF THE SEVENTH SEAL

THE FOUR WINDS OF THE EARTH FOR THE INJURY OF THE EARTH, SEA, AND TREES—CH. 7:1.

PREPARATION FOR SOUNDING

SEVEN ANGELS HAVING THE SEVEN TRUMPETS PREPARE THEMSELVES TO SOUND—
CH. 8:6.

BLOWING OF THE FOUR WINDS, OR FIRST FOUR TRUMPETS

ACT I.—FIRST WIND-TRUMPET

APOC. 8:7

The hurting of the earth by hail and fire mingled with blood; by which a third part of the trees, and all green grass is burned up.

ARENA—The third part of the Fourth Beast habitable.

A.D. 395

ACT II—SECOND WIND-TRUMPET

CH. 8:8, 9.

The hurting of the sea by a great mountain burning with fire being cast into it; by which the third of the sea became blood; the third of its living creatures died; and the third of its ships was destroyed.

ARENA—The third part of the sea of the Greco-Latin empire.

A.D. 429.

ACT III—THIRD WIND-TRUMPET

CH. 8:10, 11

The poisoning of the third of the rivers and fountains of waters with a deadly bitterness, by the great blazing star, Wormwood, falling from the heaven into them, and causing the death of many.

ARENA—The third of the rivers and fountains of the empire.

A.D. 450

ACT IV.—FOURTH WIND-TRUMPET

CH. 8:12.

The darkening of the third of the luminaries of the Greco-Latin Catholic firmament by smiting them; so that the day and the night of their system were without ruling lights, and, therefore, shone not the third of them.

A.D. 476

NOTE

THE JUDGMENTS OF THESE FOUR WINDS CULMINATE IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE SEVENTH HEAD, WHICH “CONTINUES A SHORT SPACE,” (APOC. 17:10) AND OF THE TEN DIADEMED HORNS OF THE BEAST THAT RISES OUT OF THE SEA; (APOC. 13: 1); IN THE “WOUNDING AS IT WERE TO DEATH” OF ITS SIXTH HEAD; (APOC. 13:3) AND IN THE CONSEQUENT CESSION BY THE DRAGON OF HIS POWER, THRONE, AND AUTHORITY (APOC. 13:2) OVER THE AFFECTED THIRD PART, WHICH, BEFORE THE BLOWING OF THESE WINDS, WAS A CONSTITUENT OF HIS DOMINION.

TIME OF EVENTS

FROM A.D. 395 TO A.D. 554, THE END OF THE DARKENED DAY AND NIGHT IN THE THIRD OF THEM, BEING EQUAL TO A PERIOD OF 159 YEARS.

SECOND SECTION OF THE SEVENTH SEAL

APOC. 9

The first two woe trumpets.

ACT I.—FIFTH TRUMPET OR FIRST WOE

APOC. 9:1–11.

A star falls from heaven into the earth, to whom is given the key of the pit of the abyss, which he opens, and from its furnace a smoke issues that darkens the sun and air. Out of the smoke locusts go forth into the earth with scorpion power to torment “those men who have not the seal of the Deity upon their foreheads,” during five months, and to injure them other five. Their king is styled the Angel of the Abyss; in Hebrew, Abaddon; in Greek, Apollyon.

TIME OF EVENTS.

FROM A.D. 632 TO A.D. 932 = 300 YEARS.

ARENA—The territory of the Dragon upon which “the sun” shone before being darkened by the smoke.

ACT II.—SIXTH TRUMPET OR SECOND WOE

EASTERN PART

APOC. 9:13–21

Still in response to the prayers of all saints, a voice from the four horns of the golden altar of incense commands the four messenger powers, confined by the great river Euphrates, to be loosed. They are prepared for successful aggression against the Byzantine empire during the hour and day and month and year, that, at the end of this period, they may slay with political extinction the power of the men who ruled the Eastern Third of the Roman orb, and worshipped demons and images, and were murderers, and sorcerers, and fornicators, and thieves; and had not been smitten by the judgments of the wind trumpets.

TIME OF EVENTS

FROM APRIL 29, 1062, TO MAY 29, 1453 = 391 YEARS 30 DAYS.

WESTERN PART

APOC. 11:1–13.

The fugitive woman in the wilderness and the remnant of her seed, as the nave of the Deity, the altar and the worshippers therein, measured by John. These are the holy city, and posterior to their measurement, are trodden under foot forty and two months by the Lion-Mouthed Gentiles of the unmeasured outer court; that is, until the Ancient of Days comes.

But “the earth helps the woman” from the time of her flight into the wilderness of the two wings of the Great Eagle, where she is protected for a time, times, and half a time (Apoc. 12:16, 14). To “the earth” as the two witnesses against the woman’s persecutors power is given to maintain their testimony in sackcloth 1260 days. In the exercise of their mission, they smite the earth with all plagues as often as they will. At length the Lion-Mouthed Beast of the Sea effects their subjugation and political extinction. But after three days and a half they stand upon their feet again, and ascend to the heaven in sight of their enemies. At this crisis, an earthquake overthrows a tenth of the city, “Babylon the Great” titular distinctions within the sphere of the convulsion are abolished, and many of those who rejoice in them slain; the rest are terror stricken, and give glory to the God of heaven.

During the testifying of the witnesses the Ten Horns, the two horned beast of the earth, and the image of the wounded sixth head of the beast, appear upon the arena.

TIME OF EVENTS

FROM A.D. 312 TO A.D. 1794, A PERIOD OF 1482 YEARS.

THIRD SECTION OF THE SEVENTH SEAL

SO MUCH OF THE SEVENTH TRUMPET OR THIRD WOE AS IS COMPRISED IN THE FIRST SIX VIALS TO THE ADVENT OF CHRIST AS A THIEF—CH. 16:15.

ACT III.—SEVENTH TRUMPET OR THIRD WOE

APOC. 11:14; 8:13.

The judgments of this last woe extend to the end of the Seventh Seal, or victory of the saints over the beast, his image, his mark, and number of his name (Apoc. 15:2). In the days of the voice of this woe when its calamities shall be complete, the mystery of the Deity will be finished, as he hath declared the glad tidings to his servants the prophets (Apoc. 10:7). The Eloah of the heavens will then have set up the kingdom (Dan. 2:44) promised to them that obey him (James 2:5); so that the kingdoms of this world will all have become Yahweh's and His Anointed's (Rev 11: 15), who reigns for the aions of the aions. But before this glorious and blessed consummation, Yahweh Ail-Shaddai, the Ancient of Days, comes in (Zech 14:5), upon the world as a thief in the night (Apoc. 16:15). This is indispensable, because it is his personal mission to accomplish it (Isa. 40:10). At his coming the nations will be in a state of anger among themselves, with distress and perplexity; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the habitable (Luke 21:25).

In the midst of this the saints are raised from the dead to their judgment; after which all of them who are approved and chosen are recognized by the Lamb as constituents of the 144,000, and follow him whithersoever he goes (Apoc. 14:1–4). Being approved, judgment is given to them for execution upon many peoples, nations, tongues, and kings (Apoc. 10:11); in the rendering of which there issue from them lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail, every stone being about the weight of a talent (Apoc. 11:19; 16:21).

ARENA—The whole habitable of Daniel's four Beasts.

FIRST SIX SPECIAL DIVISIONS OF THE SEVENTH TRUMPET, OR THIRD WOE.

ACT I.—FIRST VIAL

APOC. 16:2

The pouring out of wrath in the form of a noisome and grievous sore upon that part of the earth inhabited and ruled by those having the mark of the beast, and who worship his image.

ACT II.—SECOND VIAL

VERSE 3

The pouring out of wrath upon the apocalyptic sea, making it as the blood of a corpse; so that every living soul therein died.

ACT III.—THIRD VIAL.

VERSES 8, 9

The outpouring of wrath by which the rivers and fountains of waters of the beast's dominion are turned into blood, in righteous retribution for the cruelties of his Lion Mouth, perpetrated in that section of his empire upon the saints and prophets whom he had subjugated and killed. This vial gives their "destroyer" (Apoc. 11:18) blood to drink.

ACT IV.—FOURTH VIAL.

VERSES 4, 7

The outpouring of wrath upon the sun of the beast's dominion; and power is given to a constituent of that luminary to scorch with great heat the blasphemers of the Deity's name; yet they repent not to give him glory.

ACT V.—FIFTH VIAL

VERSES 10, 11

The outpouring of wrath upon the throne of the Beast, which fills his kingdom with darkness. The rulers and their adherents gnaw their tongues for pain, and blaspheme the Deity of heaven because of their pains and their sores; and they repent not of their deeds.

ARENA OF THE FIRST FIVE VIALS.

THE HORN-KINGDOMS OF THE BEAST OF THE SEA, THE BEAST OF THE EARTH, AND THE STATES OF THE IMAGE OF THE SIXTH HEAD, COMMONLY STYLED “THE STATES OF THE CHURCH”

TIME OF EVENTS

FROM A.D. 1795 TO A.D. 1819, A PERIOD OF 24 YEARS.

ACT VI.—SIXTH VIAL

VERSES 12–16

PART 1

VERSE 12

Outpouring of wrath upon the great river Euphrates, by which its water is dried up, that the way of the kings of a Sun’s risings may be prepared.

PART 2

VERSE 13, 14

Three Froglike, unclean, wonder-working spirits of demons issue forth from three principal governments—from the Mouth of the Dragon, the Mouth of the Beast, and the Mouth of the False Prophet—to the powers of the earth and of the whole habitable—to gather them for the war of the great day of Ail-shaddai—the Seven Horns and Seven Eyes of the Lamb, the Seven Spirits of the Deity sent forth into all the earth (Apoc. 4:5, 6); the Spirit incarnate in Jesus and his brethren, the Saints.

PART 3

VERSE 16

While the frog-like spirits are working, “the Lord the Spirit” (2 Cor. 3:17, 18) comes into the world as a thief in the night. He descends from heaven having great power—the key of the abyss and a great chain (Apoc. 18:1; 20:1) for the work of enlightening the earth with his glory (Apoc. 18:1). Having been clothed with a cloud (Apoc. 10:1; Heb. 12: 1) of witnesses, he stands on Mount Zion in the midst of the 144,000—his companions and co-workers—the mystical Son of Man, whose voice is as the voice of a multitude (Dan. 10:6); as the sound of many waters (Apoc. 1:15). His head is encircled with the rainbow of the covenant; his face is as the sun, and his goings forth as pillars of fire. Thus prepared, he stands ready for action with his right foot upon the sea, and his left upon the earth, and a little open scroll in his hand, upon which are inscribed, “the lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and earthquake, and great hail” to be ministered by those who are honored to take the scroll and to eat it up (Apoc. 10:9; 11:19). Now is the judgment of the nations—the Hour of judgment, in which they are invited to fear the Deity and to give glory to him (Apoc. 14:6, 7). Proclamation is made by the One Body, now anointed and glorified, and of which Jesus is the Head, that “there shall be no longer delay” in the finishing of the mystery of the Deity. They sing a new song before the throne; and confidently aver that they shall reign as kings and priests of Deity upon the earth (Apoc. 14:3, 9); to accomplish which are the judgments of the Little Open Scroll given to the Saints (Dan. 7:22).

PART 4

VERSE 16

The advent, or “manifestation of the sons of the Deity” having transpired, the angel of the sixth vial gathers the kings of the earth and of the whole habitable into the place styled in Hebrew, Armageddon.

This gathering is effected by the events of the seventh vial.

TIME OF EVENTS
FROM A.D. 1821 TO THE OVERTHROW IN ARMAGEDDON

III—THE LITTLE OPEN SCROLL FOURTH SECTION OF THE SEVENTH SEAL

“THE GREAT DAY OF Ail-Shaddai”

APOC. 10:2

The things written in this scroll, sweet as honey in the mouth of them who eat it, but bitter in its effects upon them that perish, are the remaining judgments of the seventh seal, and wholly comprised in the seventh vial (and a fraction of the sixth), which is the last division of the seventh trumpet, and fills up the wrath of the Deity upon the nations (Apoc. 16: 14; Joel 2:31; 3:11). And whereas, all the judgments of the Seventh Seal running parallel with the Laodicean Apostasy are executed by the wicked upon the wicked as the sword of Yahweh; (Psa. 17:13) those of this “little open book” the crowning judgments of the wrath of the Deity, consummate his indignation, and are assigned to the saints of the Rainbow, who have the “honor” of their execution, by which they “prophesy again” with John, “against many peoples and nations, and tongues, and kings” (Apoc. 10:11).

THE SEVENTH VIAL

APOC. 16:7–21

The exhausting of the judgments of this vial consummates the sounding of the seventh trumpet which transfers the Kingdoms of this world to Yahweh, and his Anointed Body—the saints. The wrath of this vial is poured into the Air—the firmament of the appropriated kingdoms. When the wrath upon “the House of the Wicked” is expended, the Times of the Gentiles will have wholly expired, and a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne proclaims, “It is done!” (Ezek. 39:8; Apoc. 21:6) Yahweh’s bow is now made quite naked, even that word which went forth “conquering and to conquer.” (Hab. 3:9–13; Apoc. 6:2).

But, between the advent of the Son of Man and the proclamation aforesaid, is an interval of several years. This interval is Daniel’s “time of the end”—the time specially appointed for the judgments of the Little Open Book. In it is developed the antitype in full of the Passover, of the First Fruits, of the Blowing of Trumpets, of the day of Covering of Iniquity, of the Jubilee, of the Feast of the Tabernacles, and of the Bearing of Palms. The antitypical celebration of the last three feasts of Yahweh consummates the time of the end, and inaugurates the reign of the thousand years. The judicial events of this little open scroll open the “door in the heaven” and place therein the Great White Throne upon which is set the jasper and sardine-like Man, (Apoc. 20:11; 4:1, 2, 3) encircled with a coronetted “multitude which no man can number” (Apoc. 4:4; 7:9). These are the “thousand thousands and ten thousand times ten thousands” who are prepared to go forth as a fiery stream, and as the Spirit’s wheels of consuming flame (Dan. 7:9, 10), for the utter destruction of the body politic of the Fourth Beast, and subjugation of the other three (Dan. 7:11, 12).

In their execution of “the judgment written” there is a great earthquake, which develops Daniel’s “time of trouble” (Dan. 12:1) in which the superstitions of “Christendom” are abolished, and their blaspheming clergies of all orders and degrees made to drink the cup of the wine of the fierceness of Divine wrath. All islands and mountains of the political world disappear; and the stone that smites and grinds them to powder becomes a great dominion, and fills the whole earth (Dan. 2:34, 35, 44, 45). With a view, therefore, to this “end of the matter” (Dan. 7:28), the following symbolization thereof is revealed.

ACT I.—MISSION OF THE FIRST ANGEL

APOC. 14:6, 7

The postadventual proclamation of the good news concerning the Aion to all the governments and populations of the habitable, announcing the fame and glory of the Great King, (Isa. 66:19) and that the hour of His judgment has at length arrived. In making this proclamation the class represented by John, “prophesy again before many peoples, nations, tongues and kings.” It results in separating the nations one from another as a shepherd divideth sheep from goats, (Matt. 25:32) and in the goats coming out like a whirlwind to scatter Him and his hosts (Hab. 3:14; Apoc. 17:12–14).

THE SEVEN THUNDERS AND THEIR VOICES

APOC. 10:3

These are the lightnings, and thunderings, and voices proceeding from the newly established throne in the heaven (Apoc. 4:5). They are the lion-roaring voice of the rainbowed angel, who strides the earth and sea with feet as pillars of fire, or as fine brass glowing in a furnace Apoc. 1:15; Isa. 30:30; 31:4; Joel 3:16). They result in the mightiest earthquake that ever shook the constitution of the political world. The shepherd like separation of the nations divides the great city Babylon into three parts, (Apoc. 16:19) and the kingdoms of nations fall. “The goats are punished” being conquered by the Lamb and his associates in arms, (Zech. 10:3; 9:13; Apoc. 17:14; 19:19–21) who “follow him whithersoever he goes.”

ACT II.—MISSION OF THE SECOND ANGEL

APOC. 14:8

The spirituals of wickedness in the heavenlies of the great city commonly styled “Christendom” rewarded double according to their works by Yahweh Elohim—Eternal Spirit incarnated in the quickened saints, and styled, “heaven and holy apostles and prophets” (Apoc. 18:4–8, 20–24). These retaliate upon the Apostasy with torment and sorrow by which it falls, and is abolished from the earth.

THE HARVEST

APOC. 14:14–16

Consequent upon the result of the proclamation of the good news by the first angel, another angel from the temple announces to the golden wreathed Son of Man, associated with a cloud of followers in white, upon whom he sits as the Commander-in-chief, faithful and true, prepared in righteousness to judge and make war, that the time is come for him to reap the ripe harvest of the earth (Apoc. 19:11–14; Joel 3:13).

This He does, and the result is the fall of Babylon the great.

ACT. III.—MISSION OF THE THIRD AANGEL

APOC. 14:9–11

The work of this angel-power exhausts the wrath of the Deity upon the nations of the Fourth Beast Polity, the destruction of which it consummates. It is the supper of the great Deity upon the mountains of Israel (Apoc. 19:17–21; Ezek. 39:17–22) in the presence of the holy angels and the Lamb; who torment them with fire and brimstone, and give them no rest day nor night, to the aions of the aions; by which time the seven plagues of the seven angels of the vials, will have been fulfilled (Apoc. 15:8).

THE VINTAGE

APOC. 14:17–20

The consummating vengeance of the altar. The national clusters of the Gentile vine are gathered into Armageddon, the great wine press without the city, full to overflowing with the wicked (Joel 3:11–13; Isa. 63:1–6; 34:1–10; Dan. 11:45). The treading of this, binds “the Dragon that Old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satan” and shuts him up in the abyss, and seals him that he should deceive the nations no more till a thousand years are fulfilled (Apoc. 20:2, 3). This binding also deprives the lion, the bear, and the leopard of their dominion; but does not extinguish their political life, which is prolonged for “a season and a time” or 1000 years (Dan. 7:12; Isa. 19:23–25). “It is done!” The third angel’s mission is complete; and the blessed are now prepared to rest from their labors. The earth and the heaven of the Gentiles have fled away from the face of the enthroned, and no place is found for them again (Apoc. 20:11).

IV. THE PROPHECY OF MILLENNIAL BLESSEDNESS

APOC. 14:13.

The feast of Tabernacles. The white robed palm-bearers (Apoc. 7:9–17) and divine harpists stand upon the sea of nations now no longer mingled with fire, and celebrate their victory over the vanquished powers of the world. They sing the song of Moses and the Lamb (Apoc. 15:2–4); and a song before the throne which no man could learn who is not redeemed. The smoke of divine wrath being dispelled, they enter into the temple of Deity (Apoc. 15:8) where they rest from their labors of judgment, and serve him day and night. Over them the second death hath no power; but they are priests of the Deity and of Christ, and reign with him upon the earth a thousand years (Apoc. 20:6).

As the great and holy city, the new and holy Jerusalem, the bride, the Lamb’s wife (Apoc. 21:2, 9, 10), they shed their light upon the nations saved from their present delusions, degradation and oppressions, being then joined to Yahweh as his people, and blessed in Abraham and his Seed (Apoc. 21:24; Zech. 2:11). Yahweh Ail Shaddai and the Lamb are the temple of those who had died in the Lord; and the glory of Deity and the Lamb their light (Apoc. 21:22). The healed nations walk in this light; and the kings of the earth, the saints, do bring their glory and honor, and the glory and honor of the subject nations, into it.

V. PROPHECY OF THE “LITTLE SEASON”

APOC. 20:7–10.

The end. Rebellion against the government of the saints. The Devil and Satan, whose dominion had been suppressed a thousand years before, is permitted to renew the struggle for sovereignty over the nations of the earth. These are deceived to a vast extent by the illusions of the flesh, stimulated into insurrection by the ambition of evil counsellors, by whom they are precipitated into a great war against their divine rulers, which eventuates in the manifestation of “the end” (1 Cor. 15:24–28). The lake is rekindled by the fire and brimstone of God’s wrath, and the saints torment them in war to the end of the aions of the aions, or expiration of “the little season.”

The rebellion being destroyed, the heaven and earth of the previous thousand years are superseded by a New Order of things, in which there is no more sea of nations of mortal men to be lashed into tempest and fury by ambitious and deceitful demagogues (Apoc. 21:1). The Son—Jesus and his brethren—has reigned until the Father hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy, death, comes now to be abolished, and all things made new. The mediatorial kingdom of the thousand years is delivered up to the Father by his kings and priests, who become subjected to Him, who becomes the all things in all the dwellers upon earth—ta panta en pasin.—Amen.

IV. SEVEN-SEALED SCROLL

1. FIRST GENERAL DIVISION OF THE SCROLL

THE FIRST FOUR AND THE SIXTH SEALS, REPRESENTATIVE OF THE JUDICIAL MANNER OF “TAKING OUT OF THE WAY” THE PAGAN CONSTITUTION OF THE “DREADFUL AND TERRIBLE FOURTH BEAST”, WHICH WITHHELD THE REVELATION OF “THE LAWLESS ONE” (DAN. 7:7; APOC. 6; 2 THESS. 2:3–9; APOC. 12:1–5, 7–13) AND THE CONSEQUENT MANIFESTATION OF THE CATHOLIC MYSTERY OF INIQUITY, OR MAN-OF-SIN POWER, IN

THE HEAVEN OF SAID BEAST, OR “GREAT RED DRAGON.”

TIME OF EVENTS
FROM A.D. 107 TO A.D. 324

The First Seal

The arrowless Bowman, symbol of the conquest of the Roman Empire through the influence of Christ. The “crown” or stephanos (coronal wreath) on his head was the symbol of victory. The epoch of the first seal (A.D. 96–183) saw the reigns of what historians term “the good emperors”: Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian, and the two Antonines. The first three years of the reign of Commodus continued the era of peace, but then personal pride and suspicion began to dominate him, and he initiated a reign of terror and moral decline. This was followed by a train of events that brought Pagan Rome to an end to be replaced by Papal Rome (the 6th Seal).

CHAPTER 6

THE OPENING OF THE FIRST SIX SEALS IN ORDER, THE CUMULATIVE EFFECT OF WHICH IS THE ABOLITION OF THE HEAVEN WHICH HINDERED THE MANIFESTATION OF THE LAWLESS POWER.

TRANSLATION

APOC. 6

1. And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard from one of the Four Living Ones, saying, as a voice of thunder, Come and see!

2. And I saw, and behold a White Horse, and one sitting upon him having a bow; and there was given to him a coronal wreath, and he went forth conquering, and that he might conquer.

3. And when he opened the second seal, I heard from the second living one, saying, Come and see!

4. And there went forth another, a Fiery Red Horse; and to him sitting upon him, to him it was given to take the peace from the earth, and that they might slay one another; and there was given to him a great dagger.

5. And when he opened the third seal, I heard from the third living one, saying, Come and see! And I saw, and behold a Black Horse, and he who sits upon him holding a balance in his hand. 6. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four living ones, saying, “A choinix of wheat a denarius; and three choinices of barley a denarius; but the oil and the wine thou mayest not act unjustly by!”

7. And when he opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth living one, saying, Come and see!

8. And I saw, and behold a Pale Horse, and he who sits upon him, the name for him is Death; and Hades followed with him: and there was given to them authority to kill upon the fourth of the earth with sword, and with famine, and with pestilence, and by the wild beasts of the earth.

9. And when he opened the fifth seal, I saw underneath the Altar the souls of them who had been slain on account of the word of the Deity, and on account of the testimony which they held. 10. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, Until when, O thou who art the Despot, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood upon those who dwell upon the earth? 11. And to them each were given white robes, and it was answered to them that they should repose yet a short time, while their fellow-servants and their brethren should be filled up, who are about to be killed even as they.

12. And I saw when he opened the sixth seal; and behold a great earthquake occurred, and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood. 13. And the stars of the heaven fell to the earth, as a fig-tree casts its unripe figs, being shaken by a mighty wind. 14. And heaven departed as a scroll rolled up; and every mountain and island were removed out of their places. 15. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich, and the military chieftains, and the mighty ones, and every bondman and every freeman, concealed themselves in the caverns and among the rocks of the mountains; 16. And they say to the mountains and to the rocks, “Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him who sits upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for that great day of his wrath has come, and who could have been caused to stand.”

1. Introduction

This sixth chapter of the prophecy constitutes the rehearsal of the first six acts of the tragical conflict between the Lamb and his adherents of the one part, and the constituted authorities of Greek and Latin Paganism in Church and State of the other. The translation given is of the text amended by Griesbach, and compared with that of Tregelles, and others, whose rendering, however, has had but little influence with the author. Indeed, I have been greatly disappointed in the fruit of the labor of the wise and prudent biblical critics of the original text of the Apocalypse. Their grapes are wild and bitter; and not less so those of the Tregelles vine, which has increased the bewilderment of the learned author of the “Horae.”

The Rev. S. P. Tregelles, a dissenting minister of Plymouth, England, is learned in the languages of the East, a clear writer, and not without authority in the wisdom of the world-religious. He has published a translation of the apocalypse “from the Greek text according to the ancient authorities” not more modern than twelve hundred years, and the far greater part fourteen hundred years ago. He has published this translation by itself, and introduced it by a very interesting preface. On reading this, I supposed that an enlightened critic had appeared among the divines of the apostasy, who had risen above the bias of his religious metaphysics, and would therefore give us a reliable version of the book. But, alas, how disappointed was I when I came to examine the result of the rules and principles by which he had promised to work. The following specimens of new translation based on his “ancient authorities” will show of themselves to “the servants of the Deity” what I mean.

1. In ch. 1:6—“He hath made for us a kingdom—priests unto Him who is his God and Father.”

2. In ch. 5:10—“Thou hast made them unto our God a kingdom and priests; and they reign on the earth.”

3. In ch. 6 before us, he omits “and see” in the four places where the phrase “Come and see” therein occurs.

Now, the first two instances prove to an intelligent believer of the gospel that Mr. Tregelles’ “ancient authorities” are unreliable; and that, if he understood “the truth as it is in Jesus” he would not have been led by them. Fourteen hundred years ago carries us back to the latter half of the fifth century, or A.D. 464, about 140 years after the complete establishment of Laodicean Catholicism as the religion of Daniel’s Fourth Beast. This Church and State establishment was then regarded as God’s kingdom, and the Laodicean ecclesiastics as his priests. Now, some Greek MSS., of this epoch read as Tregelles has given it; while others read “kings and priests, and they shall,” not they “do,” “reign on earth.” Here is a discrepancy—some fifth century manuscripts against some less ancient. Tregelles prefers the former because of their relative antiquity, and is biased, though he may not be aware of it, by the Laodicean dogma that the Church is the kingdom, that Christ is now reigning, and the saints with him as they join him in the skies. We have, therefore, no hesitation in rejecting the authority of his new translation based on such readings which are utterly at variance with the first principles of the oracles of God. The readings are self-evident corruptions of the true text by transcribers who sought to make the apocalyptic saints sing in harmony with the traditions of the Laodicean Apostasy. True believers are now kings and priests elect for God. He has promised them a kingdom, and they shall reign on the earth. This is the teaching of the word ministered by prophets and apostles, and not readings of Greek MSS., even if written in the days of John, affirming the contrary, could be anything else but spurious.

I have not seen any good reason for much diversity of rendering in the translations of this sixth chapter. The common version is substantially correct. I not only see no reason for striking out “and see” from the text of verses 1, 3, 5 and 7, but I see a good and sufficient reason why it should be retained. The reason is this. In ch. 5:3, it is affirmed that no man in the universe was found worthy, blepein auto, to see it—the scroll with seven seals. John wept at this announcement. But he was afterwards comforted with the assurance that Jesus Christ could see it, and loose the seals. When, therefore, the time came to convert this assurance into fact, John, as the dramatical representative of a class who would be contemporary with the opening of the first four seals, and would “see” or discern their unloosing, was invited not only to “Come,” but to “Come and see.” Hence, the significance of the sentence would be spoiled by rejecting the words kai bleme, “and see.” What was he to come for? To see—to see or discern the operation while the Lamb should be engaged in the successive seeing or loosing of the first four seals. The words are an important part of the text, and must in no wise be rejected, as the learned and “divine” author of the “Horae Apocalypticae” has done on the authority of Dr. Tregelles, whose translation he follows.

I have deviated from the common version in rendering zoa, living ones, instead of beasts; stephanos, coronal wreath, instead of crown; purros, fiery red; choinix, and denarios, terms of measure and coin, I leave for interpretation; Hades, I have transferred; despotes, also transferred; but as to the phrase, “the fourth of the earth” in verse 8, we defer any remark upon it until we come to the interpretation of the fourth seal.

I have remarked above that the general subject of the translation of Apoc. 6 is the conflict between the truth incarnate in the Woman’s Seed and their adversary, the seed of the Serpent, enthroned in Pagan Rome. However prolonged, it reveals that the conflict was not to be endless, but should terminate in bruising the Satan, and the departing of his heaven as a scroll when it is rolled up. This is the terminus ad quem, the end to which this sixth chapter brings us. It begins with the first seal and ends with the sixth; hence, the first seal is the terminus a quo, the end from which the conflict takes its apocalyptic inception.

The first seal, then, being our point of departure in this great contest, which was to determine the fate of that Pagan power which had “magnified itself against the Prince of the Host, and had already taken away the Daily, and cast down the place of his sanctuary” (Dan. 8:11), it is important and desirable to know the chronology of the first seal, that is, the epoch of the beginning.

And how is this to be determined? It certainly was not opened before John’s banishment to Patmos; for the seals were a prophecy to him of what should come to pass afterwards. The best evidence extant declares that John resided in Patmos in the reign of Domitian, where, A.D. 96, he saw the things he records in the apocalypse. The first seal in its symbolization is not of a color suited to the times and events of the period from the assumption of Jesus to the right hand of power, to A.D. 96. The following quotation from Gibbon will give the reader some idea of the agents who figured before the world and gave character to the times in which it was the misfortune of honest men to live. With the exception of Vespasian and his son Titus, by whom God broke up the Jewish State, and burned the city of his Son’s murderers (Matt. 22:7), the imperial rulers of the Roman people, from Tiberius to Domitian, were tyrants of a truly “dreadful and terrible” description. “Their unparalleled vices” says he, “and the splendid theatre on which they were acted, have saved from them oblivion. The dark, unrelenting Tiberius, the furious Caligula, the feeble Claudius, the profligate and cruel Nero, the beastly Vitellius, and the timid, inhuman Domitian, are condemned to everlasting infamy. During fourscore years (excepting only the short and doubtful respite of Vespasian’s reign) Rome groaned beneath an unremitting tyranny, which exterminated the ancient families of the republic, and was fatal to almost every virtue and every talent that arose in that unhappy period.”

The color of the first seal is not characteristic of the age in which these rulers flourished in crime. Red or black would have expressed the color of their times, but certainly not the white of the first seal.

I see no epoch for the commencement of the first seal earlier than John’s exile in Patmos, nor any one later than the reigns of the five emperors who succeeded “the timid, inhuman Domitian.” When we “come” to consider the first seal in particular, we may perhaps be able to “see it.”

The chronological epoch of the commencement of the seals being determined, the loosing of the seals will, of course, be in the order of their enumeration—the second before the third, and the third before the fourth, and the fourth before the fifth, and the fifth before the sixth, and the sixth before the seventh. There will have been to the loosing of each seal a definite period assigned, which may be styled the seal-period. The predicted events of a seal must be found in its own seal-period; they will culminate and acquire their full development in the period; but it by no means follows that the judgments will have ceased to operate, or have become exhausted, before the opening of the next seal ensues. Thus, lamentation, mourning, and woe, are the subject of the third seal, and a characteristic also of the fourth; only in the latter the evil is increased by its association with famine, pestilence, and the sword. Certain things symbolized in the first seal, and in active development in the first seal period, do not cease at the opening of the second seal, but continue operative through all the six, till it can be said, “He that was to go forth conquering and that he might conquer, and receive the coronal wreath, hath conquered, and is crowned the victor in the fight.” Hence, certain of the things “signified” in the first seal, though not expressed in the word-painting of the others, underlie them all, and crop out in another part of the prophecy.

2. Of the War-Horse Symbol

But, in reading the first four seals, the student of this prophecy must have been struck by the symbolization of which the war-horse is the root. What does this sign import? What use does the Spirit of Christ make of the horse in prophecy? What does He signify by it, and what did he intend it to signify when he exhibited it before John, now white, then red, black, and pale?

In Isa. 63:13, the Spirit says, that Yahweh led the whole tribes of Israel “as a horse in the wilderness that they should not stumble.” This use of the animal is making it the symbol of a nation, or people.

Again, in Zech. 10:3, the Spirit saith, “Yahweh Tz’vaoth hath visited his flock, the house of Judah, and hath made them as his goodly horse in the battle.” Thus, when Messiah comes he will ride Judah as his war-horse. From these instances, then, it is scriptural to say that the Spirit in prophecy sometimes represent a people by a horse.

Now it is also scriptural to say that where He finds people representing themselves by animals, he adopts their symbols, and speaks of them by their own signs. Thus, the Persians represented their nation by a Ram; the Macedonians theirs by a Goat; the Romans theirs by a Horse, a Dragon, an Eagle; and the Franks their people by Frogs. The Spirit of Christ that was in the prophets has appropriated all these in speaking prophetically of each. The Ram-people and the Goat-people are largely treated of in Daniel; and the Horse-people, Dragon people, Eagle-people, or Greco-Latin, or Roman people; and Frog-people, figure conspicuously in the apocalypse.

There can be no reasonable doubt of the Roman people having symbolized themselves by a war-horse. This is clearly shown by the Rev. E. B. Elliott, A. M., in his work on the apocalypse, both by quotations from Latin authors, and from ancient Roman coins. They claimed to be the offspring of Mars, their god of war, whom they honored and worshipped by horse-races and horse-sacrifices in spring and fall from the time of Romulus, the founder of their state, down to the time of the emperors. The horse was also, according to Pliny, one of the ancient Roman war-standards; so that Mars, the Horse, and the Roman people, had an established and recognized affinity.

The introduction of the Roman Horse into the symbolization of the first four seals as representative of the Roman people, was peculiarly appropriate. It was their symbol as pagans—worshippers of their father Mars through the horse which they sacrificed to him. It represented the pagan Roman people, who were to be ridden by the judgments of the first, second, third and fourth seals in retribution for the cruelties they perpetrated upon the seed of the Woman in their fight of faith against idolatry during the first.

Now the diverse colors of the horses indicate certain diverse conditions of the body politic typified by the horses. White is emblematic of peace; red of war, black of lamentation, mourning and woe; pale green of famine and pestilence. From the time of John, the pagan body politic, with whom he and his brethren and fellow-servants were contending to the death, was to pass through seal-periods of a peaceful onslaught upon their superstitions, war, famine and pestilence, in the order of symbolical enumeration. The first seal-period, then, was to be a period of internal peace and prosperity to the pagan Roman world; and this period is only found in pagan Roman history subsequent to the death of Domitian, between that event and the accession of the emperor Commodus, A.D. 180.

This, then, is the chronological initiatory epoch of the seals. The Lamb begins the unrolling of the scroll by causing the removal of the “timid inhuman Domitian” A.D. 96; and the introduction upon the arena of a new class of imperial agents, who should promote the material prosperity and happiness of the people. John saw the change and partook of its benefit. On the opening of the first seal, he returned from exile. He lived through the short reign of Nerva; and died, according to the consent of antiquity, in the early part of the reign of Trajan: an event very analogous to that of Daniel, who lived to see the opening of the “2400 evening-morning” period; and then went his way till the end shall be when he and John will arise to their inheritance at the end of the days.

SECTION 1 THE EPHESO-SMYRNEAN STATE

VOL. 1 PP. 428, 432, 433.

This section of the subject answers to those things written within the scroll pertaining to the concluding portion of the Ephesian, and commencement, or first part of the Smyranean, state of the Body of Christ.

ACT I.—SEAL PERIOD FIRST.

Chap. 4:1, 2

The Archer of the White Horse goes forth from the Lamb with his Bow on a career of conquest. A.D. 96.

I. Initiation of the Seal-Period.

1. “And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard from one of the four living ones saying as a voice of thunder, Come and see!”

In spirit John was in the Lord’s day, and “saw” spirit-manifestations, or spirit-forms, styled by us symbols or emblems; and among these was the spirit-manifestation, or “sign” of this first-seal period. It was all a visual creation of the spirit “signified to his servant John” that through this recorded rehearsal, might be shown to the fellow-servants of the apostle, his brethren and companions in the Domitian tribulation, and in the kingdom and patient waiting for Jesus Christ ha dei genesthai en tachei, things which must come to pass speedily.

These honored “servants of the Deity” while John was in Patmos, shared with him in the great tribulation inflicted upon the whole community of the faithful at the close of the first century by the government of “the timid inhuman Domitian.” This man was son of Vespasian, and brother of Titus, the renowned destroyers of the holy city and temple of the Jews. These had learned in the school of experience the value of reason, humanity, and justice in the government of mankind; and they accordingly exhibited a character which, in some of its parts, was still new on the throne previously occupied by Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, Nero and Vitellius—the character of wisdom, propriety, and humanity, assumed for its own sake, and without any intention to circumvent the people, or to impose on the world. But the fortunes of their family soon devolved upon a person equally unfit to sustain them, and equally unfit to be endured by a submissive world.

Domitian ascended the throne of the Caesars, A.D. 81; and, as a “destroyer of the earth” his tyranny was endured for fifteen years. The greatness of his family alarmed his pusillanimity, which could only be appeased by the blood of those Romans whom he either feared, or hated, or esteemed. His ferocity does not appear to have been inflamed against the christians immediately upon his accession to power. He increased in cruelty as he approached the end of his reign, when he renewed the horrors of Nero’s persecution, imputing to his victims the guilt of “atheism and Jewish manners” which was the common charge against christadelphians on account of their refusal to worship the idols of Greece and Rome. “Many” says Dion, “were condemned who had embraced Jewish customs, part of them were put to death, and others spoiled of their goods and banished.” Tertullian says, he ordered John to be cast into a caldron of boiling oil, but that he came out unhurt. If this really happened, it did not bring liberty to the apostle who was forthwith driven from the haunts of men, and confined in Patmos, a solitary island of the sea.

In this state of things at the close of Domitian’s maladministration of power, there was nothing answerable to the spirit’s symbolization of the first seal period. There was no whiteness in the situation nor the times for pagan, Jew, or Christadelphian. How much longer the tyrant should redden them with their own blood, and desolate their hearths with his fierceness, who could tell? A gloomy cloud was impending; and, as there was no habeas corpus for the defence of liberty, the lives and property of the whole people were suspended on the fiat of “the basest of men.”

1. The Voice of Thunder

But heark! Hear ye not, O ye servants of the Deity, that “voice of thunder” issuing from that one of the four living ones like a lion, and inviting you to Come and see! It is the voice of the Spirit, as fatal to Domitian as the writing of the same spirit upon the wall was to Belshazzar on the night he was slain. The voice is the opening voice of the first-seal period, A.D. 96. A voice that changed the times, and whitened the situation of the affairs of the great Roman Habitable. It was the thundering voice of revolution that hurled the tyrant from his throne, and inaugurated a new course of things; the effect of which should not cease until Christ had conquered Caesar. And what the second causes resulting in this premanifestation and predetermination of the Spirit? Listen; Domitian bestowed on his cousin Flavius

Clemens his own niece Domitilla in marriage, adopted the children of that marriage to the hope of the succession, and invested their father with the honors of the consulship. But he had scarcely finished the term of his annual magistracy, when on a slight pretence he was condemned and executed; Domitilla was banished to a desolate island on the coast of Campania; and sentence either of death or of confiscation was pronounced against a great number of persons who were involved in the same accusation—atheism and Jewish manners. He charged this upon those symbolized by “the Lamb and the Four Living Ones” and in so doing the pagan government, their Accuser, “accused them before the Deity day and night”—ch. 12:10. But the mandate of retribution had gone forth, and a few months after the death of Clemens, and the banishment of Domitilla, Stephen, one of her freedmen who had enjoyed her favour, assassinated the emperor in his palace. Thus Heaven’s decree, that “whoso sheddeth man’s blood, by man shall his blood be shed” took effect in Domitian’s case. He had shed the blood of the servants of the Deity, and by the wicked as His sword, he fell.

2. The Lamb

Such was the secondary agency in this revolutionary event, but what was the primary? John says, that the first cause of all the events represented in the Seals was “THE LAMB” “he openeth and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth” He opens all the sealperiods; and, by that omnipotence given to him in heaven and in earth, he gives such a shape and color to the world’s affairs, civil, ecclesiastical, and social, as accords with the prefigurations of the Spirit in this prophecy. He is that popularly styled “Providence” who, for the past eighteen centuries, has been engaged in preparing a situation of affairs favorable to the establishment of his throne and kingdom upon earth. Providence is the Lamb; and the Lamb, with his seven horns and seven eyes, recovered from the wound with which he was wounded in the house of his friends (Zech. 13:6); and embodying the seven lamps of fire burning before the throne—is the symbol of the All-powerful Spirit of the Deity. This is manifest from ch. 4:5;5:6. It gives symbolic shape to the great mystery of Deity manifested, justified and glorified in crucified flesh. The embodiment of this mystery was “made both Lord and Christ” by his ascent from the lower nature of His fathers Abraham and David, to the higher nature of his Father the Eternal Spirit—John 10:17; Heb. 2:7, 9, 16, 17; Acts 2:36. Thus he became spirit after leaving his sepulchre, and about forty days before his assumption to the right hand of power. Ever since he hath been “the Lord the Spirit”—2 Cor. 3:17; “the Quickening Spirit”—1 Cor. 15:45: so that When “He that was dead”—Apoc. 1:18, dictates to John the matter of the epistles to the seven Asian ecclesias, he concludes his address to each of them by an exhortation to “hear what THE SPIRIT saith to the ecclesias.” As the Dead One, anointed with spices and bound with grave clothes, he was Sin’s Flesh crucified, slain, and buried; in which by the slaying sin had been condemned, and by the burial, put out of sight: but as the Living One again alive for the Aion of the Aions—“the Son of Deity with power by spirit of holiness out of a resurrection of dead ones” He is the Spirit—“the Seven Spirits before the throne;” “the Alpha and Omega, beginning and ending; the first and the last; he who is and who was and who is coming, THE OMNIPOTENT”—Apoc. 1:4, 8, 11; 16:5.

Opp. DOMITIAN—Domitian was the son of Vespasian, and brother of the popular Titus who took the city of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. He came to office a despised younger brother, embittered by his elders’ contempt. He vented his spite on such notable men as Juvenal, Tacitus, Seutonius and Pliny. He encouraged the pernicious system of the common informer and the law of treason. He persecuted the Christians, continuing the policy and legislation of Nero in that regard. Domitian considered himself a god, and accused the Christians of treason for refusing to acknowledge him as such. According to Irenaeus (5:30:3), and accepted by J. Thomas, the Apocalypse was written during his reign. Domitian's suppression of Christianity extended to his family, so high had the movement penetrated. And this increased his opposition to it. It is conjectured that Domitian banished John the Apostle to Patmos, there to work in the mines (Rev. 1:9). In A.D. 96, Domitian was murdered after a plot supported by his wife, who felt the insecurity of her own position. In such circumstances, the Apocalypse was given to John, and circulated among the ecclesias.

Such is the signification of the symbolic Lamb who opens the scroll, having prevailed so to do, and to “see it” in the loosing of all its seals, that the prophecy may be read, and understood, and observed by them who are faithful and true.

3. The Four Living Ones

But beside the symbolic Lamb we find the Four Living Ones acting a part in connection with the first four seal-periods. They are not introduced into the drama as mere drapery and ornament; but as representative of a class of agents performing a very important part in association with the Lamb during the first four seal-periods. Aggregately they are the symbols of the “ONE BODY—of “the Ecclesia which is His body”—Eph. 1:22–23; 4:4. When encircling the throne, they represent the one body of the redeemed after their appearance at the judgment seat of Christ; but in these seals they are emblematic of the general assembly and ecclesia of firstborns, who have been enrolled for heavens (Heb. 12:23) in their relation, or rather, opposition, to “the Prosecutor of the Brethren” enthroned in the heaven of Pagan Rome—ch. 12:7–10. This power, symbolized by “the Dragon in heaven” was continually assailing them with accusations of blasphemy and atheism, and of hatred to mankind in general; and unrighteously subjecting them to the cruelest pains and penalties of despotic and arbitrary power. But, energized by the Lamb, “they loved not their lives unto the death”; and “by the word of their testimony” withstood their enemy until at length “they overcame him.”

The Lamb and the Four Living Ones in the first four seals symbolize, then, what may be styled in popular phrase, “the church militant”—such as the ecclesia of the Deity was in the time of the apostle John. The Lamb was then in the midst of the seven golden lightstands, in which burned the seven flames of fire. In other words, the apostolic ecclesias were all in the Spirit’s Mouth, from which they were not “spued” or ejected, until after the fifth seal. The Lamb and the Four Living Ones were One Body—“the Father in Jesus, and Jesus in the Father, and they, the true believers, in them” a Divine Unity. This was a power too strong for the Dragon-power of Rome. It was the spirit of the Deity in intellectual and moral activity contending in flesh and blood “against principalities, against powers, against the worldrulers of the darkness of the aion, against the spirituals of the wickedness in the heavenlies” of Daniel’s fourth beast—Eph. 6: 12. While the weapons of the Dragon’s warfare were carnal—imprisonment, torture, confiscation, fire, and sword; the weapon of theirs was “the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God.” It was not they who opened the seal-periods, but the Spirit-Lamb; and when he opened them in order, the voice of that same spirit, issuing from the corporate aggregations of eyes, which derived their intelligence from Him, invited John as a member of the body, and as the dramatic representative of his class in then present and after times, to “Come and see”. “And” saith he, “I saw.” The dethronement and death of Domitian were the thunder-voice of the opened first seal-period, which arrested the attention of all christadelphian eyes to behold what was next to “come.” Their Ephesian vigilance required not to hear the mandate, “Come and see” for their eyes were full orbed upon the government; and anxiously and earnestly watching events bearing upon its policy with reference to themselves, and the conflict in which they were engaged.

The fall of Domitian, then was in itself a command to all the eyes of the One Body (and it was gemonta ophthalmon, “full of eyes” ch. 4:8; Ezek. 10:12) to come “to the consideration of the event” and to “see,” to discern, the unloosing of the seal.

And what did they see in the Dragon-empire consequent upon the tyrant’s fall? They saw a very remarkable change of times. The previous fifteen years of misrule and cruelty were immediately succeeded by a mild and beneficent reign of sixteen months and eight days. This was the short, but brilliant reign of Nerva, which was inaugurated by an act of the Roman Senate, which condemned Domitian’s memory, and rescinded his decrees. Nerva was one of the best monarchs permitted by the Lamb to occupy the Dragon throne. Under his mild administration of the laws, the people of the Roman Horse was everywhere contented and happy. He extended his clemency as “the minister of the Deity for good” to all who were imprisoned for treason; called home all that had been banished in Domitian’s time, except the tyrant’s own niece, Domitilla, whose freedman had assassinated him; restored all sequestered estates; punished informers, and, to the utmost of his power, redressed the grievances of every description of his subjects. To christadelphians he allowed the freest toleration, not permitting any to persecute either them or the Jews, though the saints were generally regarded as Atheists, having no visible temples, altars, or sacrifice, which the pagans considered as essential to a profession of religion.

II. The Seal-Period Occurrent

2. “And I saw, and behold, a White Horse, and One sitting upon him having a Bow, and there was given to him a coronal wreath; and he went forth conquering, and that he might conquer.”

1. The Whiteness of the Horse

In regard to the period thus propitiously initiated by the reign of Nerva, Gibbon has remarked that, “were a man called to fix upon an epoch in the history of the world during which the condition of the human race was the most happy and prosperous, he would, without hesitation, name that which elapsed from the death of Domitian to the accession of Commodus,” namely, from A.D. 96, to A.D. 180. “The vast extent of the Roman empire was governed by absolute power under the guidance of wisdom and virtue. The armies were restrained by the firm but gentle hand of four successive emperors, whose characters and authority commanded involuntary respect. The forms of the civil administration were carefully preserved by Nerva, Trajan, Adrian, and the two Antonines, who delighted in the image of liberty, and were pleased with considering themselves as the accountable ministers of the laws. Such princes deserved the honor of restoring the republic, had the Romans of their day been capable of enjoying a rational freedom.”

Here then are two periods of about equal duration, the one ending, and the other beginning at the death of Domitian; the former styled by the historian, “that unhappy period;” and the latter, “the most happy and prosperous” known to the world. This happiness and prosperity of the Roman people for eighty-four years was owing to the exemption they enjoyed from civil discord under these emperors. The period was a reign of peace over the Roman earth, granted by the opener of the seal; and as white is symbolical of peace and prosperity, the Horseman in the first seal-period, is paraded upon the arena sitting on a white horse.

Some light is thrown upon the whiteness of the horse in this seal by what the spirit saith of the white horses in Zech. 6:6. He reveals four chariots issuing forth from between two mountains of brass, and horsed with horses of divers colors. He terms these “the four spirits of the heavens which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth.” One of the spirit-chariots was harnessed with black horses, and another of them with white. Their mission was “into the north country” —north from Jerusalem. That country was to be plagued, therefore the black horses were sent thither first. While they were doing their work, the Lord's Spirit was in a state of unrest, actively inflicting judgment upon the workers of iniquity in the north country. But when they had been sufficiently plagued, the white horses were sent into the country after them—"the white go forth after the black." As the white drove through the land the black would retire; and the vision of the north country would be a spirit-chariot with white horses. What then would be the condition of that country so symbolized? The answer is, peace, prosperity, and plenty would be its condition; in other words, the Lord's Spirit having conquered, would be in a state of rest; his wrath against the people would have passed away, and public tranquility be restored; as saith the Spirit, "Behold these that go toward the north country have quieted my spirit in the north country."

Now without identifying the vision in Zechariah with the seals, the illustration of the figuration of the first seal derived from it is this. The "unhappy period" which preceded the fall of Domitian was a period of unrest to the Spirit of the Lord of the whole earth—"the Lamb." In it "the spirits of the heavens" went forth through all the Roman habitable earth, inflicting judicial calamities upon the families which had for ages presided over the destinies of the republic, and upon the pagan people; all of whom were colleagued against the Deity in their persecution of his apostles unto death, and of his saints and nation. Had these fourscore years of trouble been symbolized by horses, they would have been black and red; and while in motion, going forth, would have indicated the unquiet state of the spirit of judgment. But the judicial condition of the Roman habitable during those years is not symbolized. We know from Daniel, that the Roman Dragonic Horn would magnify itself against the Prince of Judah's host, suppress the Daily Sacrifice, destroy the city and sanctuary, cast down the truth to the ground, and practice and prosper—ch. 8:11, 12; 9:26; —all of which came to pass in the period before Domitian's assassination. But, of the judicial visitation that should fall upon Roman society in the period the Roman government and people should be venting the ferocity so characteristic of them upon Messiah the Prince and "the people of the holy one," prophecy does not testify. But with the first seal's symbolization, we "see," as John "saw," that whatever might have been the color of things hitherto, a white horse was to be the spirit of the heaven when the first seal-period should be open; and that then the spirit of the Lord would be quieted in the Roman Habitable until the time arrived to open the second seal-period however long that might be; and that then in the first seal-period, there would be peace, prosperity, and plenty for the people generally.

2. The Rider and the Bow

But John not only saw the coming of this "most happy and prosperous period" in the color of the horse, but he saw a rider upon him. The rider of a horse is one who governs, controls, influences him in all his movements. He is active, while the horse is passive and subject to his will. The Roman horse, or people, in this first seal-period, were to be ridden, or subjected to certain activities, which would result in such a consummation as was indicated by other elements of the figuration. The rider was "the spirit of the heaven" whose mission was conquest. He gave energy to a certain class of activities, by which they were prosperously advanced, until at length they overcame all obstacles. He was not therefore an emperor, nor a succession of emperors, wreathed or diademed; but a class of spirit-agencies to be coronally wreathed when their triumph over all that hindered was complete.

A rider with any thing remarkable in his hand would naturally attract a beholder's attention, and fix it upon himself and the instrument he bore. John therefore not only notes the rider, but tells us that "he had a bow." Whatever the bow may signify, it was the rider's badge or token, a mark by which he might be known. He was then, an archer, and his mission that of archery. But he had no "quiver full of arrows," nor any arrow at all; what use then a bow without arrows to shoot? But suppose he had been armed with arrows, what then? In that case the horse he rode should have been red, not white. He would have represented a bloodshedding agency, which would have been incompatible with the color pertaining to the first seal-period.

“He had a bow.” John did not see him without a bow. The bow was inherently his. It was the weapon of his warfare which killed without shedding the blood, or piercing the bodies, of his enemies. It was the weapon with which “he went forth conquering that he might conquer.” It was an invincible weapon in his hand; and he who used it though unharnessed with shield, breastplate, or helmet in the figuration, was fearless of heart, and able to quench all the fiery darts of his adversaries.

But this conquering archer’s bow, what did the Deity “signify” by the use of it in this symbolization? To get at the divine signification, we must consider the prophetic use of the symbol in other parts of the scripture; we may perhaps then be able to “see it.”

In Zech. 9:13, the Spirit says, “I will render double unto thee, O Zion, when I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim and raised up thy sons against the sons of Greece.” In this a bow in the hand of the Spirit symbolizes a multitude, and that multitude the whole tribe of Judah. This will be a mighty bow, but not arrowless, like the same Spirit’s bow in the seal. The arrow of the Judah-bow, is Ephraim, or the ten tribes which fill the bow. Here is a bow and arrow of tremendous power when handled by the Spirit, who expelled the Dragon-power from the heaven in the period of the sixth seal. Of this Ephraim-arrow, which is Yehweh’s, it is said, “it shall go forth as the lightning,” and “they shall devour.”

This equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius, Emperor from A.D. 161 to 180, and author of the famous Meditations stands in the Piazza del Campidoglio on the Capitoline Hill in Rome, illustrates the symbolism of the First Seal. In The Apocalypse the horse is used as a symbol of Rome, and the rider thereon as its ruler. Marcus Aurelius reigned during portion of the period of the 1st Seal, an epoch of Roman history when peace generally reigned, permitting the spread of the Gospel. Gibbon in The Decline And Fall Of The Roman Empire describes this period as the happiest era in the entire course of human history. The Waverley Book of Knowledge states concerning the period of the First Seal: “In this period of tranquility the new religion founded by Jesus of Nazareth had an opportunity to grow, until, in the reign of Constantine, Christianity became the official faith of the Roman Empire.”

Again, in Hab. 3:9, the Spirit saith, “quite naked was made thy bow—oaths of the tribes—the word.” Here bow stands for the word, which contains the covenanted promises of Deity concerning the tribes of Israel. In other words, bow represents that “certain word” which Paul preached as “the hope of Israel,” and styled in the New Testament “the gospel of the kingdom.” This is the Spirit’s Bow from which arrows are shot more killing than barbed steel.

Thus a multitude imbued with the word is an agency that might be fitly represented by a bow in the hand of the Spirit of the heaven riding the white horse of the seal. But then, how does he use this intelligent multitudinous bow? How does he shoot from it; and what are the arrows he shoots? We shall be able to “see” this by reference to other scriptural uses of the word bow.

In Psalm 64 it is written, “the workers of iniquity whet their tongue like a sword, and bow their arrows, bitter words, that they may shoot in secret at the perfect.” In this the tongue is compared to a bow from which words are shot forth as arrows. Hence, a multitude may not only itself be a bow, but its tongues may be bowed or bent, to shoot forth doctrine or testimony, which, as an arrow in the vitals, shall put to death the enmity of the carnal mind, or “the thinking of the flesh,” against the Deity. When such a multitude would deliver the testimony it held to be true, it would be drawing the bow and shooting at its adversaries the word of truth. This word would also be the arrow of their bow, as well as their sword; and whether regarded as an arrow or a sword, “living and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart”—Heb. 4:12.

But there is a remarkable instance of the use of the phrase drawing the bow, in the sense of proclaiming the truth, in Isa. 66:19: thus, “I will send *maihe*m of those that escape to the nations Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, drawers of the bow; Tubal and Javan, the coasts far off which have not heard my fame, nor seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the nations.” “Yahweh gives the word, and great is the company of those who publish it”—Psa. 68:11.

Translators of Isaiah have been much at a loss what to do with moshkai kesheth “drawers of the bow,” in this text. Some have thought that moshkai should be rendered Meshech, called Moschi by the Greeks, as a proper name, seeing it is associated with Tubal as in other places. Boothroyd has so rendered it, and Lowth is inclined to it, as appears from his notes; but in the text he renders the phrase by the words “who draw the bow” in common with the English Version. But though it is true it may be literally rendered thus, the strictly literal sense does not apply in this place. “Who draw the bow,” or “drawers of the bow,” is a mode of warfare not at all more characteristic of Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, than of Tubal and Javan, of whom it is not affirmed. They all drew the bow in battle when the prophet wrote; and Tarshish at the present time is more famous for gunpowder and cannon balls than for shooting arrows from the bow.

The metaphorical, and not the literal, must be the sense of the words in this place. It should be rendered sounders of the truth, which is in agreement with what is affirmed of those sent saying, “and they shall declare my glory (or sound the truth in bowing, or bending, their tongue to shoot) among the nations.” See note in Anatolia, p. 94.

From this text we derive then the idea of a multitude going forth with a bow to the nations, and in their use of it, declaring the truth, or their testimony, to them concerning the coming of Yehweh with his chariots like a whirlwind to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. Such is the style in which the spirit gives expression to “the deep things of Deity” in the holy writings of the prophets; and as the writings of the apostles are a revelation by the same spirit of the hidden mysteries of the prophetic scriptures, he continues therein to speak after his wonted manner; which is “not in the words which man’s wisdom teacheth, but which the holy spirit teacheth, interpreting spiritual things by spiritual.”

We conclude then that the spirit-symbols of the first seal, which are its “spiritual things,” are scripturally interpreted by comparison with the “spiritual things” of the law and the testimony; for “the servants of the Deity” are instructed out of the law, and not out of learned and classical disquisitions on Greek and Roman Numismatics. The rider and his bow in the first seal, doubtless, symbolizes a like idea to that of the Spirit giving the word, and bowing or shooting it through a great company of believers to the world. This answers to the facts in the case as they obtained in the first, second, and third centuries; and as they will obtain again, when the Lamb appears upon Mount Zion with the 144,000 gathered unto him—ch. 14:1; 2 Thess. 2:1. A great company of obedient believers had been gathered together into “one body” by the labours of the apostles, which, in John’s apocalyptic epoch, had attained “to a perfect man”—a man that could not be seen as an ordinary man by the eye of sense; but a man who could be seen, discerned, looked upon, as the seals can be seen, by the eye of the understanding enlightened by the divine testimony. This was the Spirit-Man who fought for conquest against Caesar as the power which hindered, that he might be taken out of the way. He began this good fight in Caesar’s empire on the fiftieth day after he was wounded in the heel by the serpent-power. Being healed of his wound, he went forth with his bow “conquering;” and in his prospering course, “pulling down strongholds, casting down reasonings, and every lofty conceit that exalted itself against the knowledge of the Deity, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ”—Eph. 4:13; 2 Cor. 10:5. For about sixty years he had handled his bow with great dexterity, prowess, and effect; and had already witnessed the signal overthrow of the Jewish power, against which he had been practising his archery nearly forty years. But the fall of Jerusalem did not bring peace to him. His work was still to “contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints,” until the idolatrous superstition of which Caesar was the Chief Pontiff should be expelled from place and power in “the heaven” of the Roman Orb, or habitable earth. For upwards of thirty years he had been bleeding at every pore, “sweating great drops of blood,” in his encounters with the Neros and Domitians of the Roman state. Still he went on conquering with his bow, subduing enemies with the truth, and transforming them into Eyes of the Living Ones, and his own faithful allies in the good fight of faith.

This perfect man of the Ephesian phasis of the “One Body” had thus for sixty years “borne, endured, and labored for the sake of the Spirit’s Name, and had not fainted” (ch. 2:3). He drew his bow against all adversaries, whether lying pretenders to apostleship, and Nicolaitanes within; or the Jewish and Pagan denizens of the rayless darkness without. They were all the prey of his devouring bow, which spared neither age, sex, nor condition, admitted of no neutrality, knew no compromise, and tolerated only that which was indisputably true. This Spirit-Man, whose head was Christ, his members in particular, those whom he filled with spirit-gifts for the work of the ministry and edifying of the body; and his flesh and bones, the faithful in general—Eph. 4:10–12; 5:30—this Spirit-Man, I say, was a real and formidable potential existence in the empire of the Goat’s Little Horn. He had made Felix tremble; he had almost persuaded king Agrippa to be a bowman with himself; and he had so alarmed Caesar, that this imperial pontiff of the state superstition commanded him to draw his bow no more in the name of Jesus. But to this mandate he paid no regard. The louder the lion of the forest roared, the louder the echoes of his voice above the battle’s din, and the grander the execution of his bow; so that according to Pliny’s letter to Trajan (see vol. 1 p. 254) in the early part of his reign, the number of the bowman’s victims was so great as to call for the serious consultation of the authorities; for, he says, “the contagion of the superstition hath spread not only through cities, but even villages and the country: . . . the temples were almost desolate, the sacred solemnities long intermitted, and the sacrificial victims could scarcely find a purchaser,” This roused the priests, who had their wealth by the craft “by law established,” to infuriate official Rome to the deadliest ferocity against him. But “the great iron teeth, and brazen claws,” of the Dragon could not devour and rend him to death. The two-edged sword of the magistrate was too dull fatally to disable this Bowman of the Seal. His “fellow-servants and brethren might be laid under the altar, weltering in their blood (see fifth seal); but the power of Rome was not equal to the subjugation of what Pliny styles “their sullen and obstinate inflexibility.” They obeyed Christ before Caesar, whose gods and imperial image were their abomination; and his power, though “dreadful and terrible,” too impotent to compel them to invoke.

While John was in Patmos, and recording ha eisi the things which are, and anxiously awaiting the opening of the first seal, he was gratified with the apparition of this valiant archer, bow in hand, and bestriding the Roman world as its conquering rider, in a period of public prosperity and peace. This represented an existing fact, as we have seen, on the fall of Domitian, and before the death of John about A.D. 98. John “saw him thus produced in vision; and doubtless, by spiritual discernment, recognized him as his ancient and familiar companion in arms. John knew that hitherto they had been successful in their warfare against Judaism and idolatry; but what of the future?—what ha mellei ginesthai meta tauta, the things that shall come to pass after these, in relation to the archer? Shall his career of conquest be arrested? Shall the Dragon and his adherents break his bow, and silence his testimony; or shall he prove too strong for him, and hurl him like lightning from “the heaven” amid “the inhabitants of the earth and sea?”—12:12. This was an interesting inquiry for John and all the saints with him; for the issue of the cause for which they counted every thing but refuse was comprehended in this archer’s fate.

3. The Coronal Wreath

How gratifying, then, to the spectator when he beheld a coronal wreath bestowed upon him—"and there was given to him a stephanos," not a diadema. John "saw" the full import of this sign, which we who are confined to the English Version, do not. In the revelation communicated to him the Spirit was very exact in the use of words. When he desired to impart distinct ideas, he did not select one word-sign as representative of them all. For different ideas he chose different Greek words and phrases. This rule the translators of our English Version have not regarded; for, in numerous instances, they have used but one and the same word to express "the words which the Holy Spirit teacheth." Thus, for aion, kosmos, ge, oikoumene, four widely differing word-signs, they have substituted our indefinite sign, world; for machaira and rhomphaia the word sword; and for stephanos and diadema the word crown. These are only a few instances, but sufficient to show that the English translation does not with critical accuracy represent "the things which the Holy Spirit teaches." This defect we must endeavour to supply by interpretation and exposition.

As to diadema, the diadem, we see in Apoc. 12:3, the great red dragon in the heaven wearing seven diadems, one upon each head. In ch. 13:1, we behold ten diadems on the beast that rises out of the sea, one on each of his horns. And lastly, in ch. 19:12, many diadems are seen upon the head of Him, who conquered and possesses the kingdoms of the nations previously held by the ten horns—on the head of the King of kings and Lord of lords. These are the only places in the apocalypse where diadem occurs. Diadema signifies a band or fillet, and comes from diadeo, to bind round. It was properly the band of the tiara or turban worn by kings. The diademed tiara was the badge of sovereignty among the Asiatics; hence it signifies in the symbolization of the apocalypse the royal dignity of the wearer. Kings used several diadems when they possessed several kingdoms. Thus, Ptolemy, having conquered Syria, made his entry into Antioch, wearing two crowns upon his head, that of Egypt and that of Asia. The seven heads of the Dragon were actually sovereign; so the Ten Horns; and so will the Faithful and True One be over the many kingdoms, when the time for the verification of the prefiguration shall have been fulfilled.

A diadem was not given to the Bowman of the first seal. He was therefore not a reigning sovereign: and could not represent a Roman emperor, or a succession of emperors, as is supposed by the learned author of the Horae Apocalypticae. The Roman emperors, good, bad, and indifferent, were already diademed in the sixth head of the Dragon. The Bowman had nothing to do with the emperors but to obey them in all things not forbidden by the Spirit; and to contend against the superstition over which they presided as pontiffs supreme. The destiny of the rider of the white horse was not to wear the diadem, but to win the stephanos when the limit of his conquering should be reached.

We need not say much about the stephanos in this place, having dwelt upon it considerably in vol. 1. p. 386. It was a circlet of evergreen offered as a prize of honor and glory to the victor in the public games celebrated in the service of the gods. Before the combatant could receive the stephan he had to go on conquering according to the rules of the fight; then at the end of the conflict, he was adorned with the emblem of victory. The stephan may therefore be said to import, as a symbol, something to be obtained by conflict; or something that may have been obtained thereby. In Apoc. 4:4, 10, the twenty-four elders are stephaned with each a stephan, which they cast down before the throne. Their stephans are golden or unfading, which they receive after having been invested with white garments—victors' wreaths, bestowed by the Spirit upon all who overcome.

In Apoc. 9:7, the locusts have something on their heads resembling stephans of gold—yellow turbans. In ch. 12:1, the woman in the heaven, from which the Dragon had been expelled, is encompassed about the head with a stephanos of twelve stars, indicating that she had obtained her position there by having conquered. Lastly in ch. 14:14, one resembling the Son of Man rides a white cloud, and wears a golden stephan. This indicates that he has a conflict before him, and at the same time is predictive of his conquering unto final victory.

From considerations, then, derived from the use of the word stephanos in general and particular, we “come” with John “and see,” that the valiant archer of the seal was not a ruler, or succession of rulers, of an established dominion, or royalty; but a combatant, an athlete, in that great public game, whose issue was his extermination by fire and sword; or his victory over Caesar, by which that god of the whole Roman earth should be displaced, and the Man-Child of the Star-wreathed woman enthroned as his substitute over all the nations of the Dragon empire. This was the grand proximate issue between the “One Body,” or Christ Mystical, to which John belonged, and the pagan Roman power that oppressed him and his brethren and companions in tribulation for the word of the Deity, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ—ch. 1:9. They were gratified, comforted, and energized, by the testimony of this prophetic seal, that they would go on conquering for a purpose; and that purpose, not merely the converting of men and women from idolatry that they might obtain remission of sins and eternal life; this was only one department of their mission, great and important in itself; but “conquering that they might conquer” the great Dragon, that old Serpent, surnamed the Diabolos and the Satan, which deceived the whole habitable and persecuted them continually unto imprisonment, confiscation, and death—ch. 12:9. Hence, the mission of this body of believers in its manhood, with no other weapon than a bow,—the word of the Deity, or gospel of his kingdom,—was twofold; namely, “to take out from the nations a people for his name;” and secondly, and subordinately to this, so to indoctrinate society with their principles, as by its enlightenment to make it the instrument of a grand political revolution, by which its constitution in all departments of the body politic should be changed and thoroughly remodelled after a pattern altogether different from the old. This conquest of Rome pagan they saw foreshadowed in a stephanos being given to the rider on the white horse. They knew from the nature of the gift, and their own condition in the world as a proscribed people, that it was prophetic, and not the representation of an accomplished fact. When they reviewed their progress in the empire for the past sixty years, they perceived that they were a conquering people, but that they had not yet won the stephan, or victor’s wreath. They had therefore to go on “conquering that they might conquer;” and with this most satisfying consideration to strengthen and encourage them, that if in the conflict their blood were poured out under the Altar, and they might not be personal witnesses of the Dragon’s expulsion from the heaven, yet, “precious in the eyes of Yehweh is the death of his saints;” they would therefore not be forgotten, but at a remoter epoch would be raised from among the dead, and be associated with the Lamb as his companions in arms in the conquest of the Ten Horns, and in the binding and shutting up of the Dragon in the abyss for a thousand years.

Such, then, is the general import of the first seal. Although its period was most happy and prosperous for the generations ruled by Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian and the two Antonines, yet the “we all who had come to a perfect man” had often to groan under the bloody despotism of those wise and virtuous heathen. Of Trajan, the historian saith, “There remains one panegyric far removed beyond the suspicion of flattery. Above two hundred and fifty years after the death of Trajan, the Senate, in pouring out the accustomed acclamations on the accession of a new emperor, wished that he might surpass the fidelity of Augustus and the virtue of Trajan.” Yet this virtuous emperor ordered his subjects to be capitally punished if convicted of the guilt of Christianity, as is clearly seen from his letter to Pliny. There is still a letter extant addressed by Tiberianus, of the province of Syria, to Trajan, which shows his persecuting spirit, and the boldness of his victims. “I am quite wearied,” says he, “with punishing and destroying the Galileans, or those of the sect called Christians, according to your orders. Yet they never cease to profess voluntarily what they are, and to offer themselves to death. Wherefore I have labored, by exhortation and threatening, to discourage them from daring to confess to me that they are of that sect. Yet, in defiance of all persecution, they still continue to do it. Be pleased, therefore, to inform me what your highness thinks proper to be done with them.”

Whatever answer was given to this, the sanguinary enmity of the government continued to be evinced during the whole of Trajan’s reign; for it does not appear that the edicts which were in force against the christadelphians and their fellow-servants when he ascended the throne, were ever repealed or revoked during his life, which was closed A.D. 117, while prosecuting his great military expedition into the East, having swayed the imperial sceptre nineteen years.

Trajan was succeeded by Hadrian, under whose reign the state of affairs in regard to our hero of the first seal-period was somewhat ameliorated. This ruler had decreed that “these people were not to be officiously sought after;” nevertheless, such as were accused and convicted of an obstinate adhesion to the faith, were to be put to death as criminals; a sentence from which there was no escape but by worshipping the gods and adjuring Christ. Nevertheless, Hadrian, according to Gibbon, was a wise and virtuous prince, under whom “the empire flourished in peace and prosperity. He encouraged the arts, reformed the laws, asserted military discipline, and visited all his provinces in person. His vast and active genius was equally suited to the most enlarged views and the minute details of civil policy; but the ruling passions of his soul were curiosity and vanity. As these prevailed, and as they were attracted by different objects, Hadrian was by turns an excellent prince, a ridiculous sophist, and a jealous tyrant.” He reigned twenty one years, that is, to A.D. 138, when death caused him to give place to the Antonines.

According to Tertullian, he was in the highest degree curious and inquisitive. His knowledge is said to have been varied and extensive—he had studied all the arts of magic, and was passionately fond of the rites and institutions of Paganism. There could, therefore, have been no sympathy in his heart for those who were handling the bow for the victor’s wreath. Apologies, or vindications of christianity were addressed to him by two writers named Quadratus and Aristides, A.D. 126, which were supposed to have favorably affected him; but it could only have been slightly, as the imperial edicts were permitted to operate against them.

Concerning the period of this seal, Mosheim has remarked that such of the christians as could conceal their profession were indeed sheltered under the law of Trajan, which was therefore a disagreeable restraint upon the heathen priests, who breathed nothing but fury

The above coin was one of the first minted by Hadrian. In order to impress the Romans that he ruled by the authority of his predecessor, he is depicted as receiving the globe from Trajan’s hands. He claimed to follow the policy of Trajan, but in fact, varied it where it suited him. Trajan extended the borders of Rome, Hadrian restricted them and consolidated the power of the Empire. He reigned for 21 years, and spent much of his time travelling throughout his realm. He was a shrewd and talented ruler, and did much to firm the peace that the empire enjoyed during the period of the first seal which depicted the rider on the white horse (Apoc. 6:2). Note that the Emperor is wearing a stephanos, the symbol of victory and authority.

against the disciples of Jesus. The office of an accuser was also become dangerous, and very few were disposed to undertake it, which put the priests upon inventing new methods of oppressing the christians. The law of Trajan was consequently artfully evaded under his successor Hadrian. The populace, set in motion by their priests, demanded from the magistrates, with one voice, during the public games, the destruction of the christians; and the magistrates, fearing that a sedition might be the consequence of despising or opposing these popular clamors, were too much disposed to indulge them in their request. During these commotions, Serenus Granianus proconsul of Asia, represented to Hadrian how barbarous and unjust it was to sacrifice to the fury of a lawless multitude persons who had been convicted of no crime.

This remonstrance was not without effect. Hadrian saw the propriety of the complaint, and his moderation in yielding to it is supposed to have been attributable to the “Apologies” before mentioned.

Serenus having resigned, Hadrian addressed the following rescript to his successor:

“TO MINUTIUS FUNDANUS

“I HAVE RECEIVED A LETTER WRITTEN TO ME BY THE VERY ILLUSTRIOUS SERENUS GRANIANUS, WHOM YOU HAVE SUCCEEDED. TO ME, THEN, THE AFFAIR SEEMS BY NO MEANS A FIT ONE TO BE SLIGHTLY PASSED OVER, THAT MEN MAY NOT BE DISTURBED WITHOUT CAUSE, AND THAT SYCOPHANTS MAY NOT BE ENCOURAGED IN THEIR ODIOS PRACTICES. IF THE PEOPLE OF THE PROVINCE WILL APPEAR PUBLICLY, AND PREFER OPEN CHARGES AGAINST THE CHRISTIANS, SO AS TO AFFORD THEM AN OPPORTUNITY OF ANSWERING FOR THEMSELVES, LET THEM PROCEED, BUT IN THAT MANNER ONLY, AND NOT BY RUDE DEMANDS AND MERE CLAMOR. FOR IT IS MUCH MORE PROPER, IF ANY PERSON WILL ACCUSE THEM, THAT YOU SHOULD TAKE COGNIZANCE OF THESE MATTERS. IF, THEREFORE, ANY SHOULD ACCUSE THE CHRISTIANS, AND SHOW THAT THEY ACTUALLY BREAK THE LAWS, DO YOU DETERMINE ACCORDING TO THE NATURE OF THE CRIME. BUT BY HERCULES! IF THE CHARGE BE A MERE CALUMNY, DO YOU ESTIMATE THE ENORMITY OF SUCH CALUMNY, AND PUNISH IT AS IT DESERVES.”

But, during this seal-period, the swinish multitude and priests of pagan Rome, with the civil power of the state, were not the only enemy in the “outer darkness” with which the rider on the white horse had to contend in his conquering career. The Jews, whose state had been dissolved by the fervent heat of divine indignation, still were true to the character given to them by Paul, that “they pleased not God, and were contrary to all men”—contrary to the saints in Christ, and contrary to the Romans. Still, if the Gentiles made an onslaught upon the christians, the Jews were sure to throw in all their influence to aggravate the horrors of the situation. But the eye of the Deity was upon them, and his wrath ready to flame out anew.

During the half century that had elapsed since the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman Horn of the Goat, the Jews had wonderfully increased. They felt their importance in this respect, and became daring and ferocious, making violent attempts, as opportunity seemed to favor, to restore their government. Their first rebellion was about a year before Trajan’s death. It extended through the Jewish population of Palestine, Egypt, Cyrenaica, Cyprus, and the neighboring coasts, and much blood was shed between them and Rome. A second rebellion broke out in the sixteenth year of Hadrian, A.D. 133. This was also very sanguinary, and continued to increase for about four years. In its suppression there was an un pitying destruction of the Jews, being more severe because they had long irritated and vexed the Romans. “But,” as a writer has well remarked, “their sufferings were a just reward for their cruelty and unrelenting hatred toward the christians, whose principles would not allow them to unite in rebellion against the government.” This ruin of Jewish affairs was of some advantage to the party of the Bow, which, though not delivered from their hatred, was liable to less annoyance from the diminution of their influence with those in power.

But, with the death of Hadrian, A.D. 138, and the accession of Titus Antoninus Pius, a senator of about fifty years of age, who filled his place in “the heaven,” the state of the combatant for the victor’s wreath was relatively improved. The emperor appears to have been a most amiable prince. He caused order and tranquillity to be maintained throughout the empire, and though a heathen pontiff, he was never guilty, so far as his own personal character and intentions were concerned, of wantonly shedding the blood of christians. They were, however, cruelly treated in some of the Asiatic provinces. The crimes laid to their charge by the priests were those of impiety and atheism from a pagan point of view. But Antoninus issued an edict in which he decided that the profession of christianity was not in itself either the one or the other. He addressed a letter to this effect to the magistrate, as follows:

THE EMPEROR OF THE COMMON COUNCIL OF ASIA.

“I AM QUITE OF OPINION THAT THE GODS WILL TAKE CARE TO DISCOVER SUCH PERSONS. FOR IT MUCH MORE CONCERNS THEM TO PUNISH THOSE WHO REFUSE TO WORSHIP THEM, THAN YOU, IF THEY ARE ABLE. BUT YOU HARASS AND VEX THE CHRISTIANS, AND ACCUSE THEM OF ATHEISM AND OTHER CRIMES, WHICH YOU CAN BY NO MEANS PROVE. TO THEM IT APPEARS AN ADVANTAGE TO DIE FOR THEIR RELIGION, AND THEY GAIN THEIR POINT WHILE THEY THROW AWAY THEIR LIVES, RATHER THAN COMPLY WITH YOUR INJUNCTIONS. AS TO THE EARTHQUAKES WHICH HAVE HAPPENED IN PAST TIMES OR LATELY, IS IT NOT PROPER TO REMIND YOU OF YOUR OWN DESPONDENCY WHEN THEY HAPPENED, AND TO DESIRE YOU TO COMPARE YOUR SPIRIT WITH THEIRS, AND TO OBSERVE NOW SERENELY THEY CONFIDE IN GOD? IN SUCH SEASONS YOU SEEM TO BE IGNORANT OF THE GODS, AND TO NEGLECT THEIR WORSHIP. YOU LIVE IN PRACTICAL IGNORANCE OF THE SUPREME GOD HIMSELF, AND YOU HARASS AND PERSECUTE TO DEATH THOSE WHO DO WORSHIP HIM. CONCERNING THESE SAME MEN, SOME OTHERS OF THE PROVINCIAL GOVERNORS WROTE TO OUR DIVINE FATHER HADRIAN, TO WHOM HE RETURNED ANSWER, ‘THAT THEY SHOULD NOT BE MOLESTED UNLESS THEY APPEARED TO ATTEMPT SOMETHING AGAINST THE ROMAN GOVERNMENT.’ MANY ALSO HAVE SIGNIFIED TO ME CONCERNING THESE MEN, TO WHOM I HAVE RETURNED AN ANSWER AGREEABLE TO THE MAXIMS OF MY FATHER. BUT IF ANY PERSON WILL STILL PERSIST IN ACCUSING THE CHRISTIANS MERELY AS SUCH, LET THE ACCUSED BE ACQUITTED THOUGH HE APPEAR TO BE A CHRISTIAN, AND LET THE ACCUSER BE PUNISHED.”

Set up at Ephesus in the Common Assembly of Asia.

Eusebius informs us that letters to the same purport were written to other assemblies, and to all Greeks; and that the humane emperor took care that his edicts were carried into effect. He reigned twenty-three years, and it seems not unreasonable to conclude that during the greater part of that time the “we all who had come to a perfect man” were enabled still to go on conquering with the bow without very formidable molestation. But at length the senior Antoninus died, A.D. 161; and was succeeded by his colleague, Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, an implacable persecutor of the faithful; yet, according to Gibbon, “just and beneficent to all mankind.” These two Antonines governed the Dragon empire forty two years “with the same invariable spirit of wisdom and virtue. Their united reigns,” continues this elegant apologist for paganism, “are possibly the only period of history in which the happiness of a great people was the sole object of government.” Marcus detested war as the disgrace and calamity of human nature; yet he was forward to shed the blood of christians without a pang.

But Marcus Aurelius was a philosopher of the sect of the Stoics, the old opponents of Paul in Athens. His philosophy was his superstition. He fancied that he carried the Deity within him, and that to be good and virtuous was only to follow nature and to obey the dictates of the Deity—that is, of the human soul, which was divine and self-sufficient. Such was his wisdom—the wisdom of the world, which the wisdom of the Deity in its conquering progress proved to be folly. The collision of these systems brought the rider of the white horse into conflict with this imperial champion of deified human consciousness. His bow dashed it in pieces as a vain conceit; and as Dagon before the ark, scattered its fragments to the pity and contempt of myriads. This indignity was too much for the pride of a Stoic, wielding despotically the “dreadful and terrible” power of the Roman Dragon. The pride of the emperor was deeply wounded. He could not endure to be proved a fool by the logic of the truth twanging from the archer’s bow in flights of missiles, darkening the air of his philosophy. Nothing but blood could expiate the offence. Hence his cruel and exterminating policy against the christians, so opposite to that of his humane and noble predecessor.

In speaking of this ruler, Mosheim remarks, that “most writers have celebrated Marcus beyond measure on account of his extraordinary wisdom and virtue. It is not, however, in his conduct towards the christians that we are to look for the reasons of these pompous encomiums; for here the clemency and justice of that emperor suffers a strange eclipse . . . So that if we except Nero, there was no reign under which the christians were more injuriously and cruelly treated.” He commenced a persecution against them, and carried it on with merciless barbarity in those Asiatic regions which had been relieved by Antoninus Pius, whose tolerant principles, in the plenitude of his power, he dismissed altogether from his regard. Still, though the blood of the saints poured forth copiously afresh, the archer was not dismayed at the terrors of the fight. His career could not be impeded by an imperial professor and lecturer on Stoical metaphysics. He rode on, “conquering that he might conquer,” rejoicing in the honor of death, that being faithful thereto, he might receive the wreath of victory, and of the life that knows no end—Apoc. 2:10. But, though undismayed, voices were sometimes heard deprecating the cruelties inflicted by power. “Pious persons,” said Melito of Sardis to the emperor, A.D. 177, “aggrieved by new edicts published throughout Asia, and never before practised, now suffer persecution. For audacious sycophants, and men who covet other persons’ goods, take advantage of these proclamations openly to rob and spoil the innocent by night and by day. If this be done by your order, let it stand good, for a just emperor cannot act unjustly; and we will cheerfully submit to the honor of such a death. This only we humbly crave of your Majesty, that after an impartial examination of us and of our accusers, you would justly decide whether we deserve death and punishment or life and protection. But if these proceedings be not yours, and the new edicts be not the effects of your personal judgment—edicts which ought not to be enacted even against barbarian enemies—in that case we entreat you not to despise us who are thus unjustly oppressed.”

The reign of this “philosophic emperor” abounds with instances of unrelenting cruelty towards the christians. He made it a capital offence for any one to avow himself a christian; by which he afforded the world a striking illustration of the justice, mercy and beneficence, which flow from the mere reason and philosophy of the natural man! His theory deified what he called the soul; and this rational and philosophic god within him devoted all its divinity and power, inherent and acquired, to the maintaining a system of superstition and idolatry, repugnant to every principle of reason enlightened by sobriety and truth. But, the Lamb who opened this seal, and who was now about to open the second, had tolerated this blind and ferocious philosopher’s malignity, so much in accord with the fury of the besotted and brutal populace, to the utmost of his forbearance. He had afforded “philosophy” in purple an ample opportunity and a splendid theatre for the display of its “wisdom and virtue,” in promoting the honor of the Deity, and real happiness of mankind. But it had been weighed in the divine balance, and proved by the conquering bowman of the seal, to be lighter than vanity. His cruelty upon the Brethren of Christ is an indelible disgrace to his memory; which, however, according to Gibbon on the authority of Dion, “was revered by a grateful posterity, and above a century after his death, many persons preserved the image of Marcus Antonius among those of their household gods.” His death occurred A.D. 180, by which a period was put to the flaming of this firebrand, which, with little intermission, had continued in one quarter or another during a period of eighteen years.

4. Of Clerical Expositions

In concluding this section, I remark, that it is not within the scope of this exposition to occupy its pages in stating and examining the multitude of opinions and theories that have been broached by the many and various writers that have preceded me in attempts, all of which have proved futile attempts, at apocalyptic interpretation. To expose their speculative demerits would leave neither time nor space for the exposition of the text; and we should fall into the error of our predecessors, which has been a losing sight of the subject in the fog of their own “ripe scholarship,” with which they have confounded and stultified themselves, in demolishing the vain imaginations of their opponents. If A prove B’s position to be untenable, it does not therefore follow that A’s is impregnable. The reader is interested to know, not how many views there are of our grand subject in general and detail, or in what their error consists; but what is its true scriptural and historic import. This “the natural man” can neither unfold, nor “see” when it is explain; for the simple reason that it is “spiritually discerned”—1 Cor. 2:14. The clergymen and ministers who have mystified themselves and the public by their apocalyptic researches have all signally failed for this cause; not for want of an acquaintance with heathen authors in their original Latin and Greek, proficiency in which is the glory of the natural man; but for want of that spiritual discernment which is anchored to a comprehensive understanding and belief of the truth, as it is in the prophets and apostles. Not having this light within them they cannot “see” that apocalyptic vein of pure gold, which is traceable amid the historic quartz and sands of the “great mountain,” which is to become a plain before Zerubbabel. This vein cannot be prospected by any signs extant in the literature and philosophy of the natural man. Volumes of this learned lumber may be compiled, with the most amusing and curious notes, annotations, and addenda, and after all said, the first scriptural idea fail of having been elicited, as in the Rev. E. B. Elliott’s Horae Apocalypticae. This accomplished “divine” of the Anglican Harlot as by Satan’s law established, whose book is a monument of industry, literary and classical research, and Laodicean foolishness, informs us of the opinions of other “divine” naturals concerning the first four seals, which he rightly rejects as absurd; and then adds thereunto a palpable absurdity of his own. “Hence,” says he, “the inadmissibility not merely of such directly antichronological explanations as that of the martyrologist Foxe and Mr. Faber, which interprets the four horses and horsemen of the four successive military empires of Babylon, Persia, Macedon, and Rome, the three first of which had already some centuries before St. John passed away:—but also of such as Dr. Keith’s, which would interpret them to symbolize the four successive religions of Primitive Christianity, Mohammedanism, Popery, and Infidelity; though elsewhere insisting on the establishment of the reign of popery and the popes, as dating near a century before the rise of Mohammedanism.” Having disposed of these, and very properly repudiated the notion of the horses signifying the church, he would have us believe that the first four seals in their figuration represent the martial Roman nation and its emperors. On this assumption, he expounds the figuration of the first seal of the Roman people in a happy and prosperous state, ruled by five successive emperors of extraordinary excellence; and characterized as the imperial riders by the Stephanos; and of the Nervan family of Caesars by the bow, the symbol of Nerva the founder of the gens; who sprang originally from Crete, celebrated of old time for the manufacture of bows, which thus became the symbol of the Cretans, and stamped upon their coins! This “crowned bow bearing rider,” the Nerva family of emperors, “went forth conquering and to conquer;” “thereby,” says Mr. Elliott, “assuring the general inviolability from foreign foes, and perhaps (for the words might seem to intimate as much) advancing the limits and the greatness of the empire” of Rome!

It is said, that there is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous, and surely here it is. The figuration of the seal is the sublime; but this Elliott “commentary” thereon is certainly the ridiculous. The reader, however, who now has the subject fairly before him, must judge for himself according “to the law and the testimony;” for, if we speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in us. Let him compare, if he will, these diverse and rival expositions; and according to the magnitude and grandeur of the things we have set forth, let him determine of himself, if their fitness be not more nearly allied to the heaven-born things of Deity than the learned and classical elaboration of the Nervan bow, by the antiquarian and excursive ingenuity of the “late Vicar of Tuxford.”

SECTION 2

THE PERGAMIAN STATE

VOL. 1. P. 428,436

The Epheso-Smyranean State of the Ecclesias degenerates into the Pergamian. The doctrine of Balaam and the Nikolaitanes gaining the ascendancy. Celsus, a heathen opponent of the word, objects, that christians were now so split into sects, that the name, christian, only remained to them in common.

ACT II.—SEAL-PERIOD SECOND

Apoc. 6:3, 4

The rider of the Red Horse puts an end to the previous peace, and involves the populations of the Fourth Beast Polity in bloody civil wars.

A.D. 183

3. “And when He opened the Second Seal, I heard from the Second Living One saying, ‘Come and see!’
4. And there went forth another, a fiery-red horse; and to him sitting upon him, to him it was given to take the peace from the earth and that they might slay one another; and there was given to him a great dagger.”

1. Preliminary Remarks

In my previous exposition I have shown that the Bowman of the first seal is emblematic of the spirit of the heavens manifested in the “we all” who had “come to A PERFECT MAN,” who was engaged in an earnest contention for the faith against the superstition and infidelity of the world. This was that one styled by the Spirit in David, in Psa. 68:18, adam, “the man,” for whom the Lord Jesus received official gifts when he ascended to the right hand of power—“thou receivest gifts ba'adam for the Man,” or for the Adam. Paul styles Jesus, “made Lord and Christ,” “the last Adam;” and says, that as the saints have born the image of the first Adam, so also shall they bear the image of the last—1 Cor. 15:45–49. They shall be in nature like what he is now. But, in a moral sense they are required to be now like to what he was while on earth “learning obedience by the things which he suffered.” This tuition developed the moral image of Deity, as the creative energy of the Spirit did the material image after his resurrection. It is divinely predestined, therefore, (and the predestination is a necessity that cannot be dispensed with) that all who shall inherit salvation in the kingdom of the Deity shall be “conformed to the image of his son, that he might be the Firstborn (or Chief) among many brethren.” Paul says to the Colossians, “ye have put off the Old Man,” or moral image of the First Adam, “with his deeds; and have put on the New Man,” or last Adam, “who is renewed by knowledge after the image of him that created him”—3:9, 10. This they had done. They were in the last Adam, and conformed to his moral image, in hope of being conformed to his material image at the coming of their Chief.

Here then are two men, or Two Adams, occupying the arena of the Roman Habitable—the Old Adam and the New Adam. The former is an infidel atheistic sinner, declared by Paul to be atheos en to kosmo, atheist in the world. Read his summary of him in Eph. 2:12; and his description of his vices in Rom. 1:21–32. The whole world of unenlightened natural men of all ages and generations constitutes collectively the Old Adam, who is also “the Devil and Satan” in a certain relation of things. This man has long since come to a perfect man—to the measure of the stature of the fulness of the Antichrist. He is strong and lawless, doomed to perdition when the times apocalyptically “signified” shall be fulfilled.

The other Adam came upon the arena of the habitable in a later age and generation; and was regarded by him as an intruder, and an enemy to be ejected by all possible means, the end to be attained sanctifying everything, however criminal or ferocious. But, if he could not prevail by violence, it was within the scope of his policy to try and corrupt with flatteries; for if he could put to silence by these he would convert the New Man into a partizan, and all opposition would cease. So long, however, as each remained true to his principles, the Old Adam to those of the flesh, and the New Adam to those of the word, there could be nothing but war until the one or the other were subdued.

But, the New Man, though “perfect,” did not in all the constituents of his body continue in all his conflicts undefiled. Much of his flesh became diseased and gangrenous, and perished by the way. This reduced his proportions considerably, and leaves him in his nineteenth century existence feeble, emaciated and decrepid; while the Old Adam is still robust and powerful.

In the days of the first seal, the New Man of the spirit was healthy, vigorous, and formidable to the Old Man of the Flesh; who ruled in the Pagan Church and State, as he does now in all the Churches and States of what he ignorantly calls “Christendom.” The conflict between the two was very earnest and bloody. Many lives or souls were ruthlessly precipitated under the altar, while many of the Old Serpent-Man’s adherents fell from their allegiance, and became incorporated in the New Man. But, in this sanguinary strife all the desertions were not from the party of the Serpent; many relaxed their hold upon the Lamb, fell into the ranks of the enemy, and became, either implacable adversaries, or perverters of the truth, who pretended to have found a common ground, on which Jew, philosopher, vulgar Pagan, and christian might meet in the fellowship of the same essential opinions. Sects, formed of the factions who had become impatient of the restraints of the truth, had greatly multiplied. The seed sown in the first century by the seducers, evil men, and false prophets, of whom we read so much in the New Testament, was now in vigorous growth; multiplied, varied, complicated, and refined by endless subtleties and fancies, in which the poverty of taste and genius discovered itself abundantly.

There were at the time of the closing of the period of the first seal and the opening of the second, two classes among the professed adherents of the New Man, whose opposite characteristics were becoming daily more distinct. The one may be regarded as the vital and wholesome element of the man himself—Christadelphians; those who held fast the Spirit’s Name, and had not denied His faith; and those of the Balaam class, who held the teaching of the Nikolaitanes, or Gnostics, and were multiplying considerably. Instead of holding fast the Spirit’s Name, they were developing what in history is called the Arnestitheos apostasia, or Deity-denying apostasy, which affirmed that “Christ was no more than a man.” The Spirit’s Name is the Father by his spirit manifested in Sin’s Flesh begotten and born, not of the will of man, but by his own creative energy, as was Adam the first: but, to say, that he was no more than a man, was to affirm, that he was begotten of blood, or of the will of the flesh, or of the will of man; which was to lay the basis of a name which the spirit not only will not recognize, but one which he hates. These Gnostics also, while they claimed the name of christian, denied the Spirit’s faith, as do “the names and denominations” of modern times. These Nikolaitans sects amused and stultified themselves with the discussion of the merest trifles; such as, the proper time of the observance of Easter; the pretended prophetic illuminations of fanatics, and the questions agitated by the Eclectics of Egypt. These sects were “the Mystery of Iniquity” working under the name of christians; the Synagogue of the Satan that aggravated greatly the difficulties of the genuine elements of the New Man in that department of his work, the “taking out from among the Gentiles a people for the Spirit’s Name.” Still, out of the evil of these sects some good was extracted. They became a numerous and powerful political party, which eventually acquired sufficient strength to contend with the pagan party sword in hand and to expel it from “the heaven” of the Roman world. While they had denied the Spirit’s name and faith by their traditions, they still contended against the idolatry of the Gentiles; and in this contention they were, doubtless, very successful. The Christadelphians or true believers, and the heretics called Christians combined were too much for the heathen in their argument against their gods, and the worship with which they honored them; so that the New Man, notwithstanding all the discouragements which afflicted him on the right hand and on the left, still went on “conquering” under this second seal “that he might conquer” under the sixth, when his brethren and fellow servants who were to be slain should be filled up.

Now these Nikolaitan Heretics who were defiling the temple of the Deity with their traditions, were exhorted at this period to “repent; or else,” said the Spirit, “I will come unto thee suddenly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth”—ch. 2:16. Hence the Spirit had a controversy with them as well as with the heathen populace, priests, and civil, and imperial rulers. He will not permit His name, His faith, and His faithful and true ones to be disregarded, denied, tormented, and destroyed with impunity. Nemo me impune lacessit, no one provokes me without punishment, is the Spirit’s maxim with respect to his holy things. Retribution had therefore accumulated within the past eighty years upon the heads of two classes of offenders—upon the Roman people and government; and upon the sectarian or Pergamian apostates, who were neither pagan, Jew nor christadelphian; but, like our modern “names and denominations,” Balaamite and Nikolaitan blasphemers of the truth yet “christians” so-called.

The retribution threatened against these apostatizing professors of christianity was that the Spirit would fight with them, and that the weapon he would wield against them would be “the sword of his mouth.” That is, he would command a sword to be unsheathed against them. Such a sword would consist in something more practical and material than reason and testimony. These were fast becoming to them, what their brethren in modern times affirm the word of the Deity to be now, “a dead-letter.” Argument by the Spirit through the Angel-elderships of the Ecclesias had been exhausted; so that appeals to their intelligence being fruitless, it remained only to treat them as heathen men and publicans—mere creatures of sensation, brutish as the beasts that perish.

The sword, then, that was suspended over them was a sword of retribution, which, on smiting them, would also smite the heathen populace and its rulers, and redden society with its own blood. That this is the kind of sword “signified” by the Spirit’s words, will appear from the use of the phrase in Apoc. 19:15—“Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword that with it he might smite the nations;” and in verse 20, “The remnant were slain with the sword of him sitting upon the horse, which sword proceedeth out of his mouth;” and the blood of those slain flowed to the horse-bridles of them who inflicted the vengeance.

“Repent,” metanoeson, change your minds, “or else I will come unto thee suddenly, and fight with thee.” But instead of such repentance as this, they hardened their hearts, and went on from bad to worse, until the patience and longsuffering of the Deity being exhausted, the Lamb opened suddenly the Second Seal, and a fiery red condition of society became the characteristic of the “Spirit of the Heavens” that ruled the passing hour.

2. The Opening of the Seal-Period

When the Lamb opened the first seal, John’s attention was called to the fact by a voice “as of a voice of thunder;” but in the opening of the second, he hears a voice of the same import, only without the thunder. There was no hurling of the tyrant Marcus Aurelius Antoninus into the shades of death by the hands of an assassin, and the revocation of his edicts, and declaring his memory infamous, by the decrees of an indignant Senate, as in the case of Domitian. Though this imperial Stoic had shed so much christian blood, or permitted it to be shed when he could easily have prevented it, which is equally criminal with the Deity, the Lamb allowed him to depart to his own place without any signal personal vengeance being inflicted upon him. He died without violence, aged about fifty-seven, having reigned conjointly with Antoninus Pius twenty-three years, at the expiration of which he became sole emperor for thirteen, when he associated his son Commodus with him in the government. Four years after this he died, leaving Commodus, at the inexperienced age of about nineteen, the uncontrolled and irresponsible despot of the so-called “civilized world.”

Commodus ascended the throne as sole ruler A.D. 180. “The beloved son of Marcus,” says Gibbon, “succeeded to his father amidst the acclamations of the Senate and armies, and when he ascended the throne, the happy youth saw round him neither competitor to remove, nor enemies to punish. In this calm, elevated station, it was surely natural that he should prefer the love of mankind to their detestation, the mild glories of his five predecessors to the ignominious fate of Nero and Domitian.”

During the first three years of his reign, he reluctantly surrendered himself to the direction of those experienced counsellors whom his father had delighted to honor. By their influence his profligacy was confined to his private revels; and as his hands were yet unstained with blood, there was hope that he might become, if not the most virtuous, at least not the most “dreadful and terrible” of his kind. A fatal incident, however, dashed all hopes, and decided his weak and timid character for the worse, until cruelty degenerated into habit, and at length become the ruling passion of his soul.

One evening as Commodus was returning to the palace through a dark and narrow portico in the amphitheatre, an assassin, who waited his passage, rushed upon him with a drawn sword, loudly exclaiming, “The Senate sends you this.” The menace prevented the deed; the assassin was seized by the guards, and immediately revealed the authors of the conspiracy. The conspirators, who, with the assassin himself, were senators, were all executed. But though relieved of their presence, the words of the assassin sunk deep into the mind of Commodus, and left an indelible impression of fear and hatred against the whole body of the Senate. Those whom he had dreaded as importunate ministers he now suspected as secret enemies. The Delators, a race of men discouraged and almost extinguished in the former reigns, again became formidable, as soon as they discovered that the emperor was desirous of finding disaffection or treason in the Senate. This great council of the nation was composed of the most distinguished of the Romans, and distinction of every kind soon became criminal. “The possession of wealth stimulated the diligence of the informers; rigid virtue implied a tacit censure of the vices of Commodus; important services argued a dangerous superiority of merit; and the friendship of Marcus Aurelius always ensured the aversion of his son. Suspicion was equivalent to proof, trial to condemnation. The execution of a senator of consideration was attended with the death of all who might lament or avenge his fate; and when Commodus had once tasted human blood, he became incapable of pity or remorse.”

Such was the opening of the Second Seal, A.D. 183. It was a sign in “the heaven,” and the color of the sign was fiery red. The spirit that ruled the situation there was that of retributive vengeance, through a class of agents who were the blind executioners of a purpose which they knew not. Bloodshedding was the order of the day. The son-in-law of the late emperor was among the victims; and Arius Antoninus, the last representative of the Antonines, also fell by the axe of the executioner. Every sentiment of decency and humanity was extinct in the mind of Commodus. He abandoned the reins of empire to the most unworthy favorites, and valued nothing in sovereign power except the unbounded license of indulging his sensual appetites. He is said to have been the first of the Roman emperors totally devoid of taste for the pleasures of the understanding. From his earliest infancy he discovered an aversion to whatever was rational or liberal, and a fond attachment to the amusements of the populace, the sports of the circus and amphitheatre, the combats of gladiators, and the hunting of wild beasts. He entered the lists as a gladiator, and gloried in a profession which the laws and manners of the Romans had branded with the justest note of infamy.

He had now attained the summit of vice and infamy. Amidst the acclamations of a flattering court, he was unable to disguise from himself that he had deserved the contempt and hatred of every man of sense and virtue in his empire. History has preserved a long list of consular senators sacrificed to his wanton suspicion, which sought out with peculiar anxiety those unfortunate persons connected, however remotely, with the family of the Antonines, without sparing even the ministers of his crimes or his pleasures. His cruelty proved at last fatal to himself. He had shed with impunity the noblest blood of Rome; he perished as soon as he was dreaded by his own domestics. He was strangled while laboring with the effects of poison and drunkenness, A.D. 192, after a sanguinary reign of thirteen years. This reign may be regarded as the opening period of the Second Seal. In its course divine vengeance executed through the wicked, as the sword of Deity, retributive justice upon the authorities, and upon the imperial family, who had shed the blood of the saints in the former reigns; and, when the work was consummated in their case, the imperial executioner was punished for his crimes by death at the hands of the infamous.

But, though Commodus had destroyed the peace and happiness of the Senate and patricians of Rome, his reign was remarkable for the peace granted to the Ecclesia of Christ in all the habitable. In this one particular point only, namely, in his conduct towards the christians, Commodus was more just and equitable than his philosophical father. In this the change of emperors was propitious. The power, goodness, and justice of the Deity were evinced in making so vile a character at once his sword upon the persecutor and a check upon persecution, by which a breathing time was afforded after eighteen years of sufferings exceedingly cruel. The gospel, or what was called the gospel, is said to have “flourished abundantly, and many of the nobility of Rome, with their whole families, embraced it.” At all events, they abandoned paganism; but whether or not they embraced “the truth as it is in Jesus,” is beyond the competency of historians to testify.

The Opening of the Second Seal

Seldom in history has so speedy and tragic a reversal taken place as that which followed the death of Marcus Aurelius, the last of the emperors of the first seal. At his death (A.D. 180), the empire stood at the zenith of stability; but in the hands of his successor, the gross and dull-witted Commodus, it entered into a sharp decline that approached disruption. He instituted a regime of terror, one so unjust and savage that many leading citizens looked to the armies for relief, and so laid the foundation of further bloodshed.

Commodus (see left) considered himself the incarnation of Hercules and had himself portrayed with the attributes of that god: a club and a lion’s skin. He degraded himself by appearing in the arena as a gladiator, there to slay unarmed opponents. He slaughtered senators at will, and permitted his pampered favorites in the Praetorian Guard to run the affairs of state as they pleased. He sought out every form of perversion, his excesses causing disgust among the people over whom he ruled, until, finally a hired assassin put him to death by strangling. His reign commenced the epoch of bloodshed and evil that finally brought the empire to an end.

3. The Horse Fiery Red

In the first seal the horse was white—it was in peace and prosperity; but the horse in the second seal appears under an administration that “takes away the peace from the earth.” Hence the redness of the horse—a horse dyed with blood—with arterial blood the life of the flesh, and therefore its fiery rather than a purple hue. The same word is used by the LXX in 2 Kings 3:22, purra hos haima, red as blood. The word is very expressive; the root of it being pur, fire, it indicates in this emblem both the brightness of the red and the cause of the horse’s redness—the fiery indignation of the Deity. John beheld the horse in a state of fiery redness without any whiteness about it. Not that the social horse became all over red on the opening of the second seal, but that this would be its condition before the seal-period should be superseded by that of the third. While the horse represents Greek and Latin society, the color represents that society's judicial condition. The judgments brought upon it in the reign of Commodus fell chiefly upon the upstartdom of the State. The lower classes, however, of the city Rome did not altogether escape. Pestilence and famine broke out among them there, so that two thousand persons died every day for a considerable length of time. The pestilence was attributed to the just indignation of their gods; but the famine they considered as owing to speculators, and among these principally to the emperor's favorite, who had monopolized the breadstuffs of the city. The popular discontent, after it had long circulated in whispers, broke out in the assembled circus. The people quitted their favorite amusements for the more delicious pleasure of revenge, rushed in crowds towards the palace in the suburbs, and demanded with angry clamors the head of the public enemy. The obnoxious favorite ordered a body of praetorian cavalry to disperse the seditious multitude. The people fled towards the city; several were slain, and many more trampled to death. But when the praetorians entered the city, the foot-guards joined the people. The tumult became a regular engagement and threatened a general massacre. The cavalry at length gave way, and the tide of popular fury returned with redoubled violence against the gates of the palace, where Commodus lay dissolved in luxury, and alone unconscious of the civil war. It was death to approach his person with the unwelcome news. Two of his concubines, however, ventured to break into his presence, and revealed to the affrighted tyrant the impending ruin. He started from his dream of pleasure, and commanded that the head of his favorite should be thrown to the people. The desired spectacle appeased their rage, and the tumult ceased.

This was a sort of earnest of the sanguinary aspect that awaited the whole social horse when the judgments of the seal should be fully developed. He would, in all his parts, under the administration of his bloodshedding rider, bleed from every pore, and become fiery red, as John saw him in the vision; so that when the seal-judgments should be complete, the Senate, the executive, the pagans, philosophers, and heretics, of Daniel's "dreadful and terrible" fourth beast, should be all fiery red from the sanguinary calamities their crimes, unbelief, and apostasy had brought upon them.

4. The Rider of the Horse

John refers to the rider by the phrase "him who sits upon him." This equestrian is a symbolical personage, not representative of an individual man, but of a class of agents blindly executing retribution upon those obnoxious to the Lamb's displeasure. He evidently represents a class of agents endued with the power of the sword, and who could wield it in the cause of peace or war. "It was given to him," says John, "to take away the peace from the earth." This shows, first, that the white period of the first seal was a period in which peace ruled the situation; and, secondly, that it was given to him to destroy public tranquility—to abolish "the peace," and to substitute tumult and confusion where it had previously reigned. But this state of public disorder might obtain without bloodshedding John was therefore informed that the reason why it was given to him to take away the peace, was that "they," the agents symbolized by the rider, "might slay one another." This was an intimation to the apostle that, when the second seal should be in manifestation, a period of civil commotion and bloodshed would have superseded "the most prosperous and happy era" of the first seal. A sanguinary revolutionary condition of things, in the presence of that generation of "the people of the mighty and the holy ones," symbolized by the second or Ox-headed Living One "full of eyes," was the signification of "mystery" of Roman society dyed fiery red and ridden by this "dreadful and terrible" equestrian.

In the English Version it reads, "Power was given to him to take peace from the earth." This is very indefinite unless it is distinctly understood what is "signified" by "the earth." In the original the phrase is, labein ten eirenen apo tes ges, to take THE peace from the earth. The relation of the first two seals shows that the definite article, ten, ought not to be omitted, whether it be so in some manuscripts or not. Public tranquility had obtained within the limits of the Dragon empire from the fall of Domitian to the alleged sending of a sword to Commodus by the Roman Senate, a period of eighty-seven years. This was peace notably definite in the history of the imperial diademed head of the Dragon, and the taking of it away was very properly foretold in the definite form of the original. I have, therefore, not omitted it in my rendering of the text, but, after “the form of words” before me, instead of “take peace from,” have given it “take the peace from the earth.”

5. The Great Dagger

“And there was given to him (the rider) a great dagger.” So I render the words, kai edothe auto machaira megale. In the English Version, machaira megale is rendered a great sword. My objection to this is, that in the symbolization of the Fourth Seal the sword is introduced in the English Version, although in the Greek the spirit has selected a different word, which, in fact, represents a weapon of a different kind. In verse 4, a machaira was given to the rider; while in verse 8, they kill with a rhomphaia. There must be a reason why two different words, both rendered sword in the English Version, are used by the Spirit in the second and fourth seals. A machaira and a rhomphaia, though both weapons of destruction, are such in the hands of different classes of destroyers. In Liddell and Scott’s Lexicon, machaira is defined “a large knife or dirk; a short sword or dagger; but still rather an assassin’s than a soldier’s weapon.” It was worn by the emperors as a symbol of their power, as magistrates-in-chief, over life and death. It was also worn by the praefects of the imperial guard. It was the badge indicating them as the constitutional authorities whose function it was to cause the laws to be obeyed on pain of death.

As a symbol, then, adapted to the representation of events peculiar to the bloodstained condition of things in the second sealperiod, a machaira was very appropriate. In this symbolization, it was the emblem of the murder or assassination, committed by them, who wielded constitutionally the power over the lives of their contemporaries, commonly termed the power of the sword. It was a great dagger—symbolically great. It was great in the excessive and unconstitutional, or illegal use of it. Though a short, small, weapon in itself; yet in the hands of the class represented by the rider, it was great, or “dreadful and terrible.” It was a weapon in the hands of imperial and military assassins of murder by wholesale in cold blood; and of bloodshedding in civil war to avenge assassination; or to retain sovereign power which had been acquired by the dagger’s use. In giving therefore to this rider “a great dagger,” he had power “given to him to take away the peace of the earth,” and to cause its potsherds to slay one another in civil wars. He would redden them with a fiery redness—the redness of a brother’s blood.

6. “The Earth”

“It was given to him (the rider) to take the peace from the earth.” “The earth” in this place cannot be the earth wherever men dwell, comprehending what we term Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australasia. The last two were unknown to the ancients; and may therefore certainly be excluded from “the earth” having relation to events being transacted in their time. The use of the phrase in this seal furthermore, could not have comprehended even all the territory known to them, for the prediction was “to take the peace” of the first seal “from the earth.” Now, “the peace” of this seal was internal, not external, peace; for although it was a “most prosperous and happy” period for the Roman people, they still waged great wars against the Persians, Jews, Quadi, Marcomanni, &c., in the reigns of Trajan, Hadrian, and Marcus Antoninus. Hence, the territories inhabited by these peoples must be excluded also from “the earth” of this text. In other words, “the earth” was bounded and confined to the frontiers of the Greco-Latin Dragon of Daniel and John; extending two thousand miles in one direction, and three thousand in another; and inclosing within its circuit the Mediterranean sea. This was the sense in which “the earth” was understood by the Greeks and Latins in John’s time. A writer named Dionysius speaks thus concerning it,

He de Rhomaion polis apases men archei ges, hose me anembatos esti pasis de kratei thalasses—the city of the Romans indeed governs the whole earth, as much as is not inaccessible, and holds possession of all the sea. And Ovid sings, that is, to other nations territory is given with a defined limit; to the Roman the extent of the city and the orb is the same; and in another place, he says, Roma caput orbis, —“Rome the head, or capital, of the earth.” This will remind the reader of what John says of this city in his day under the figurative name of “Babylon the Great,” in Apoc. 17:18, “that great city having dominion over the kings of the earth.”

Gentibus est aliis tellus data limite certo,
Romanae spatium est urbis et orbis idem.

This formula, then, “the earth” in this prophecy of the six seals, is to be interpreted of the Roman territory—all that portion of the orb we inhabit subject to the dominion of Pagan Rome. Beside the text before us, we have it occurring in verses 8, 10, 13, 15. In all these places “the earth” has the same limitation; and is to be interpreted only as the arena of events happening to the peoples and government of Rome.

Having thus expounded the beautiful and expressive figuration of the second seal, I shall now proceed to lay before the reader a narration of events illustrative of the foregoing exposition. I shall condense it from Gibbon as the best historian who has compiled the history of the seal-periods. If I wrote for the learned, this would still be indispensably necessary; for, though they may be well acquainted with the transactions of the times, very few of them are able to trace the apocalyptic vein of the fine gold that runs through them; in other words, to run a parallel between the prophecy and its historical fulfilment. But, this exposition is for the same class of readers as that to whom John was ordered to send the prophecy—“to the servants of the Deity;” and these in all the ages and generations since his day, have been mostly of the poorer sort; and but little acquainted with what has happened in the world beyond what is written in the scriptures. It is necessary, therefore, for their sakes, not only to explain the symbols, but to give so much history as will enable them to “see” for themselves, the reasonableness of the explanation; so that, when they shall have the prophecy in symbol turned into the prophecy in signification, and the history before them, they may be able to conclude that it can only mean what is shown, and nothing else.

7. Fulfilment of the Prophecy

Commodus, the imperial sword-bearer of the Roman empire, was not poinarded, but strangled to death. He was succeeded by Pertinax, the praefect of Rome, a senator of consular rank, and conspicuous for his merit. He was chosen emperor by the Praetorian Guards, whose praefect, Laetus, had procured the murder of Commodus, and his election by the military. The election was ratified by the Senate, A.D. 193, which at the same sitting branded the memory of Commodus with eternal infamy.

Pertinax was a “virtuous” pagan, who sought to heal the wounds inflicted by the hand of tyranny. The innocent victims who yet survived, were recalled from exile, released from prison, and restored to the full possession of their honors and fortunes. The unburied bodies of murdered senators (for the cruelties of Commodus, an individual element of the rider of the fiery red horse, endeavored to extend itself beyond death) were deposited in the sepulchres of their ancestors; their memory was justified; and every consolation was bestowed on their ruined afflicted families.

Economy and industry he considered as the pure and genuine sources of wealth. The rapacious extravagance of Commodus had left only about forty thousand dollars in the treasury. With this small sum he had to defray the expenses of the government, and to discharge the pressing demand of a liberal donative he had been obliged to promise the licentious and turbulent soldiery who had elected him. Yet under this pressure, he remitted all the oppressive taxes invented by Commodus, and cancelled all the unjust claims of the treasury; declaring, “that he was better satisfied to administer a poor republic with innocence, than to acquire riches by ways of tyranny and dishonor.”

His thorough radical reform of state abominations secured to Pertinax the love and esteem of the people, who never would have acquired a fiery redness had they been ridden solely by rulers of his description. They already flattered themselves that they should long enjoy the benign influence of his administration. But his zeal to reform the corrupted state was too hasty, and proved fatal to himself and to his country. His honest indiscretion united against him the servile and swinish multitude, who found their private benefit in the public disorders, and who preferred the favor of the most vicious tyrants to the inexorable equality of the laws.

Amidst the general joy, the sullen and angry countenance of the praetorian guards betrayed their discontent. They dreaded the restoration of ancient discipline; and regretted the licence of the former reign. Three days after their election of Pertinax, they seized on a senator with the design of making him emperor. But he escaped their grasp, greatly alarmed at their purpose of thrusting upon him so dangerous a distinction. A short time after this, one Sosius Falco, a rash youth, conspired with the soldiery in the absence of Pertinax; but the conspiracy was foiled by his unexpected return to Rome. Falco was on the point of being condemned to death by the Senate, but escaped through the intercession of the emperor, who desired that the purity of his reign might not be stained by the blood even of a guilty senator.

These disappointments served only to irritate the rage of the licentious and brutal praetorians, who were the curse of the state it was their duty to defend. Only two months and twenty-six days after the death of Commodus, a general sedition broke out in their camp, which the officers wanted either the power, or inclination to suppress. They marched at noonday with arms in their hands, and fury in their looks, towards the imperial palace. Their companions on guard gave them free admission; and they were welcomed by the domestics of the old court, who had already formed a secret conspiracy against the life of the too virtuous emperor. Pertinax, disdaining either flight or concealment, advanced to meet those in whose fiery red hand was already brandished “the Great Dagger.” He recalled to the minds of these assassins his own innocence, and the sanctity of their recent oath. But all in vain. A barbarian levelled the first blow, and Pertinax fell, pierced with a multitude of wounds. His head was borne on a lance in triumph to the praetorian camp in sight, of a mournful and indignant people, who lamented the unworthy fate of an excellent prince, and the transient blessings of a reign the memory of which could serve only to aggravate their approaching misfortunes.

The Praetorians were an arrogant military elite created as the emperor’s guard. They spent much of their time in Rome, and ultimately became tyrannical in their domination of the city, choosing and deposing several of the Emperors. They installed Pertinax as Emperor when he paid them a bribe, but after a few days murdered him. They had frequent recourse to the assassin’s sword (the machaira of Ch. 6:4) to gain their way until disbanded by Severus who replaced the existing guard with his own legions. In the left background is a standard bearing the imperial eagle with which Rome was identified (see Matt. 24:28).

The praetorian bands, whose licentious fury was the first symptom and proximate cause of the decline of the Roman empire, numbered about fifteen thousand. They were instituted by Augustus for the maintenance of his usurped dominion. They enjoyed double pay, and superior privileges. After fifty years of peace and servitude, Tiberius for ever rivetted the fetters of his country by concentrating them at Rome, in a permanent camp without the walls, which was fortified with skill, on the broad summit of the Quirinal and Viminal hills.

Such formidable servants are always necessary, but often fatal, to the throne of despotism. But thus introducing the praetorian guards as it were into the palace and the senate, the emperors taught them to perceive their own strength, and the weakness of the civil government; to view the vices of their masters with familiar contempt, and to lay aside that reverential awe, which distance only and mystery, can preserve towards an imaginary power. In the luxurious idleness of an opulent city, their pride was nourished by the sense of their irresistible weight; nor was it possible to conceal from them that the person of the sovereign, the authority of the senate, the public treasure, and the seat of empire, were all in their hands.

The advocates of the guards endeavored to justify by arguments the power which they asserted by arms; and to maintain that their consent was essentially necessary in the appointment of an emperor. “Where,” said they, “was the Roman people to be found? Not surely amongst the mixed multitude of slaves and strangers that filled the streets of Rome; a servile populace as devoid of spirit as destitute of property. The defenders of the state were the genuine representatives of the people, and the best entitled to elect the military chief of the republic.” These assertions became unanswerable when the fierce praetorians increased their weight by throwing their swords into the scale.

We have seen in the exposition of the first seal, how a bow may symbolize a multitude; it will not therefore be difficult for us to comprehend, how that the “great dagger,” or small sword, of the second, may symbolize a multitude of bloodshedding assassins in the hand of the power that rides the people, or rules the state. The scripture in various places uses the sword as emblematic of a multitude in arms. The wicked are the sword of Yahweh (Psa. 17:13); the sons of Zion are compared to a sword—Zech. 9:13; all the tribes of Israel are styled Yah Elohim’s battle axe and weapons of war, with which He will break in pieces the nations, and destroy kingdoms—Jer. 51:20. Hence, they are symbolized in the apocalypse by a sword proceeding out of His mouth with which he will smite the nations—19:15. These praetorian assassins, who claimed to be the representatives of the Roman people, were the sword in the hand of power; and became signally “great” when their numbers were increased by Severus, “the military chief of the republic,” to fifty thousand.

Having violated the sanctity of the throne by their atrocious assassination of Pertinax, the praetorians at once proceeded to dishonor its majesty by proclaiming, with a loud voice from the ramparts of their camp, that the Roman world was to be disposed of by public auction to the highest bidder. This infamous excess of military licence diffused grief, shame and indignation throughout the city. Two bidders presented themselves, Sulpicianus, father-in-law to Pertinax, and governor of the city, and Didius Julianus, a wealthy senator. The former offered £160 to each soldier; when the vain old Julian, eager for the prize, offered upwards of two hundred pounds sterling to each. This was irresistible; the gates of the camp were instantly thrown open to the purchaser. He was declared emperor; received their oath of allegiance, which would be regarded so long as convenient; and was conducted, in close order of battle, through the deserted streets to the senate-house where he received the imperial symbols from the obsequious and false-hearted council of the nation.

On the throne of the world, Julian now found himself without either friend or adherent. The praetorians even were ashamed of him, nor was there a citizen who did not regard his elevation with horror as the last insult on the Roman name. The streets and public places of Rome resounded with clamors and imprecations. The enraged multitude insulted the person of Julian, rejected his liberality, and called aloud upon the legions of the frontiers to assert the violated majesty of the Roman empire.

"It was given to him to take the peace from the earth." The public discontent was soon diffused from the centre to the frontiers of the empire. The armies in Britain, in Syria, and in Illyricum, lamented the death of Pertinax, as an old and favorite commander, and sternly refused to ratify the ignominious sale. "Their immediate and unanimous revolt was fatal to Julian, but it was fatal at the same time to the public peace; as the generals of the respective armies, Albinus, Niger, and Septimus Severus, were still more anxious to succeed, than to revenge the murdered Pertinax. Of these rivals, S. Severus was the most fortunate; and as the time of the seal-period had arrived, "that they should slay one another," they all prepared for the arbitrament of the sword. Severus being a man of energy as well as a soldier of experience and capacity, and having the best troops of the service; and being also nearer to the capital had much the advantage over Niger of Syria, and Albinus of Britain. He speedily assembled his Pannonian legions; painted in the most lively colors the crime, the insolence, and the weakness of the praetorians, and animated his soldiers to arms and revenge. He concluded with the persuasive of about nineteen hundred and fifty dollars to every man; a donative double in value to the bribe with which Julian had purchased the world. The acclamations of the army immediately saluted Severus as emperor, who without delay marched them into Italy on the way to Rome.

Severus and his Pannonian legions were a "great machaira" in every sense of the phrase. His approach to the city made both Julian and the praetorians to tremble. They quitted, with a sigh, the pleasures of the baths and theatres, to put on arms, whose use they had almost forgotten, and beneath the weight of which they were oppressed. Every motion of Julian betrayed his trembling perplexity, which, with secret pleasure, was greatly enjoyed by the Senate. He insisted that Severus should be declared a public enemy; anon he entreated that he might be associated with him in the empire. He sent public ambassadors to negotiate, while he dispatched private assassins to slay him. He designed a solemn procession of vestals, and all the colleges of priests in their canonicals, and bearing before them the symbols of Roman superstition, to meet the Pannonian legions; and at the same time he vainly tried to interrogate, or to appease, not "the Lamb," but "the Fates," by magic ceremonies, and unlawful sacrifices. But Severus dreaded neither his arms, nor his enchantments, but took wise precaution against assassination. His emissaries, dispersed in the capital, assured the guards, that provided they would abandon Julian, and the assassins of Pertinax, to the justice of the conqueror, he would no longer consider that murder as the act of the whole body. The faithless praetorians complied with these easy terms, seized the greater part of the assassins, and signified to the senate that they no longer defended the cause of Julian. That assembly forthwith, unanimously acknowledged Severus as lawful emperor; and pronounced sentence of deposition and death against the unfortunate Julian, who was beheaded as a common criminal in a private apartment of the baths of the palace, after an anxious and precarious reign of sixty-six days.

Having settled affairs in Rome upon the new basis, he left the city at the end of thirty days, and led his legions to the slaughter decreed for them and their compatriots under Niger and Albinus, in the second seal—"it was given to him to take the peace from the earth, anti that they should slay one another." In less than four years Severus subdued the legions of the east under Niger and the valour of the west under Albinus. He vanquished these two competitors of reputation and ability, and defeated numerous armies provided with weapons and discipline equal to his own. He was, as a legitimate imperial power, truly a "great machaira;" whose uncommon abilities and fortune had induced an elegant historian of that age to compare him with the first and greatest of the Caesars. He was a man of great craft and dissimulation. He promised only to betray, and flattered only to ruin. By these arts as well as by arms, his rivals fell singly and successively, an easy prey to their subtle foe. The sons of Niger had fallen into his hands at Rome. As long as the power of their father inspired terror, or even respect, they were educated with most tender care with his own children; but they were soon involved in Niger's ruin, and removed—first by exile and afterwards by death—from the eye of public compassion.

As for Albinus, he was induced to accept from Severus the precarious rank of Caesar, as a reward for his neutrality in his conflict with Niger. Till this civil war was decided, he treated Albinus, whom he had doomed to destruction, with every mark of esteem and regard. Even in the letter in which he announced his victory over Niger, he styles Albinus the brother of his soul and empire. The messengers charged with the delivery of this were instructed to accost the Caesar with respect—to desire a private audience, and to plunge their daggers into his heart. The conspiracy was discovered, and the too credulous Albinus crossed over to the continent to meet Severus in arms for the work of mutual slaughter, according to the terms of the second seal. The battle of Lyons in France, where one hundred and fifty thousand Romans were engaged, was fatal to Albinus; and this second civil war was finished by that memorable day, A.D. 197.

Both Niger and Albinus were discovered and put to death in their flight from the field of battle. Severus' unforgiving temper stimulated by avarice, indulged a spirit of revenge, where there was no room for apprehension. The most considerable of the provincials who had obeyed the vanquished governor under whose authority they were accidentally placed, were reddened with their own blood, sent into exile, and lost their estates by confiscation. He sent the head of Albinus, with a threatening letter, to Rome, in which he announced that he was resolved to spare none of the adherents of the Caesar. He condemned forty-one senators to the fiery redness of the seal. Their wives, children, and clients attended them in death; and the noblest provincials of Spain and Gaul were involved in the same fiery red ruin. Such rigid justice—for so he termed it—was, in the opinion of Severus, the only conduct capable of ensuring peace to the people, or stability to the prince; and he condescended slightly to lament, that to be mild it was necessary that he should first be cruel.

Having thus become the “great machaira” of his age, Severus considered the Roman empire as his property, and proceeded to improve and cultivate so valuable an acquisition. In the administration of justice, his judgments were characterized by attention, discernment and impartiality; and whenever he deviated from the strict line of equity, it was generally in favor of the poor and oppressed. The misfortunes of civil discord were obliterated. The wrath of the Lamb was temporarily assuaged; and the judgments of the second seal were complete. The calm of peace and prosperity was once more experienced in the provinces. The fame of the Roman arms was revived by that warlike and successful imperial sword-bearer: and he boasted, with no little pride, that having received the empire oppressed with foreign and domestic wars—“slaying one another”—he left it established in profound, universal and honorable peace.

But, while “the peace” was taken “from the earth,” and the armies of the empire were engaged in “slaying one another,” what was the condition of those anti-pagan professors of christianity who had let go their hold upon the Spirit's name, had denied his faith, and had embraced the dogmas of Nikolaitanism? And amid all the trouble of the times, was the Bowman of the first seal “conquering,” while the Imperial Machaira of the second was blindly executing rigid justice upon the pagan senate and public at large?

In the beginning of the third century, at which we have arrived, we find an unhappy mixture of metaphysical self-righteousness and superstition, now amply developed in “the names and denominations” of blasphemy, overshadowing and darkening the world, and greatly clouding and depraving the pure light of the gospel. This perverting the gospel of Christ, and preaching another gospel than Paul's, had been progressing from his time; but recently it had been greatly promoted by Ammonius, Pantaenus, Clement, Origen, of the Divinity School at Alexandria, the capital of Egypt; who were all eminent in the unhallowed work of making christianity palatable to heathen philosophers and admirers of the world's wisdom—a work that could only be successful by corrupting it. Would the Deity look with complacency upon this? Though they had renounced the gods of Greece and Rome, and contended against their existence and worship, as protestants now protest against the saints of the Romish calendar, and the worshipful honor paid to them, still this was only the negation of a particular superstition. The denial of this was not affirming “the truth as it is in Jesus.” Hence, Alexandrian divinity was no more the doctrine of Christ, by which alone men can be saved, than modern protestantism. It was a protest against vulgar paganism without being also an earnest contest for the faith. It was protestantism, only with a different form of superstition for its adversary. Did the Deity esteem the overthrow of heathenism more highly than holding fast his name and affirming his faith. We know he did not; for he threatened this class of professors that he would “fight with them by the sword of his mouth,” as he now fights against both papists and protestants by setting them to “slay one another” for their blasphemies and abominations. Zeal against an error or superstition does not sanctify the ignorance and unbelief of the zealots. They were vessels to dishonor in the master's house. I say in the master's house, for he had not yet “spued them out of his mouth,” as he did afterwards. They had not yet arrived at “the mystery of iniquity” in its seventh, or Laodicean degree. Christ loved them still, and therefore he chastised them to bring them back “to the faith once delivered to the saints.”

The great imperial machaira was the power employed in inflicting judgment upon “the house of the Deity”—1 Pet. 4:17. In his younger days Severus had been a bitter persecutor of the christians at Lyons, where he afterwards fought his great battle with Albinus. But through the influence and kindness which he had received from Proculus, a christian physician, he became favorably disposed towards them for a time. It was not till about the tenth year of his reign, or A.D. 202, that his native ferocity of temper broke out afresh, and kindled a very severe persecution against them. He may have been provoked to this by some political demonstration against his administration on the part of heretical professors; who, taking advantage of the trouble of the times, may have given aid and comfort to Niger or Albinus, preferring them as rulers rather than Severus. Be this as it may, he visited Alexandria, formerly under Niger, with great severity. From various parts of Egypt professors were brought to that capital to suffer; and they expired in torments. The justice of the Deity was very retributive in that city. It was the Oxford and Cambridge—the Andover and Princeton of spurious christianity; and there, consequently, the providential visitation was the most intense. From all I can see in the history of those times, the executions seem to have been chiefly of professors who coveted martyrdom, which was contrary to the teachings of Christ who told them that “when persecuted in one city they should flee to another.” But, the reverse of this, they rushed into the mouth of the dragon, and provoked him to devour them with his “great iron teeth,” and to rend them with his “brazen claws.” After the death of John this practice soon began to prevail. Multitudes in Asia presented themselves to Arrius Antoninus for execution in Trajan's reign. He ordered a few of them to execution, and said to the rest, “Miserable people, if you choose death, you may find precipices and halters enow.” As time rolled on, this folly increased to mania; and in A.D. 167, we find the ecclesia in Smyrna saying, in its letter about the execution of Polycarp, “we do not approve of those who offer themselves for martyrdom, for we have not so learned Christ.” Among the Alexandrians, several were burned and destroyed in various ways. Of these Heraclides is mentioned, who had not been baptized, and was therefore certainly not a christian. Basilides, a soldier who had assisted at the execution of a professor, was converted by her appearing to him three days after her death; and on declaring that he was christian, he also was put to death. Such spurious conversions as these abounded; and christians (!) of this sort had an idea that “by one hour's torment they redeemed themselves from eternal punishment.” Such “miserable sinners,” styling themselves “christians,” abound in our time; multitudes of whom, tired of the troubles of life, would joyfully suffer death under the delusion that by giving their worthless bodies to be burned, they would by a brief torment acquire posthumous notoriety, and hide a multitude of sins. All this voluntary martyrdom was the result of ignorance and misdirected zeal. It was no proof of the sufferers being Christ's Brethren. We may admit the piety and sincerity of many of them; but Paul has taught us that giving the body to be burned is no equivalent for the want of that "love," which he, after the teaching of the Christ, says is "the fulfilling of the law"—hoping and believing all the things testified in the truth—1 Cor. 13. Martyrdom, then, is no proof of a man's being in Christ; and without being in him, he cannot be a christadelphian. The most it proves is the sincerity and devotion of the martyr to his profession, whatever that may be. Hence, the martyrdom of Huss, Jerome, Cranmer, Servetus, and such like, proved the sincerity of their anti-romish and anti-calvinistic opinions; it did not alter the fact of their being eminently pious members of the Apostasy; the stain of which cannot be obliterated by body-burning, but only by an intelligent belief and obedience of the truth.

There were many such "fellowservants," who were tormented to death by order of Severus—fellowservants with the "brethren" (see the distinction made in the fifth seal), in the sense in which the Spirit spoke to Jeremiah of his "servant Nebuchadnezzar"—fellowservants in the work of "conquering the ruling superstition of their times." Whether any of "the brethren" fell in his exercise of "justice," as he called it, we can only conjecture. It is probable from the wording of the fifth seal that there were some. Ecclesiastical writers, being ignorant of the truth, are unable to discern between the two classes. They have not been able to "come" to the subject, "and to see." Having no scriptural waymarks, they are lost in the sectarian wilderness of the early centuries; and find it, therefore, impossible to enlighten their readers in the premises. They tell us that heretics abounded in these times, all of them claiming the name of christian. Of these they judge them to be heretics, whom they in our times would decree to be such, according to their own creeds and articles: but they are more likely to have been the true brethren of Christ, or Christadelphians, than heretics. Little has been handed down to us that is reliable upon this point. The writers contemporary with the seals were chiefly of the heretical classes. Modern "divines" style them "the Fathers." And so they were. They were the fathers of the Laodicean Apostasy, taught by that woman Jezebel to commit spiritual lewdness; and to speak according, to the depths of the Satan—Apoc. 2:20–24. They denounced all for heretics who rejected their teaching. But the Deity knows his own, if they do not. The real heretics of the leading factions of Satan's synagogue, doubtless, served for an earthwork upon which the dragon power expended much of his rage, before he reached the citadel of the four living ones' encampment. While therefore many fell under the severe justice of this reign, few of the truly faithful may have suffered; for it was not against them, but chiefly against those who repented not, that the Spirit declared he would fight with the sword of his mouth.

Though troubled with fears within, and fightings without, the Archer with his bow, still went on "conquering." Niger and Albinus had been conquered, and their rival parties torn up by the roots. The same imperial conqueror, or "great machaira," had made war upon him. The flood, however, though it dashed against him with roaring impetuosity, had not swept him away. Many had fallen around him, but he had not only not been conquered, but still was "conquering;" and his ranks were swelled with more deserters from the enemy than he had lost by fire and sword.

But, after nine years of sanguinary conflict, "the Lamb" sent relief to his suffering people. After a reign of eighteen years, Septimus Severus died, A.D. 211. From this time, "the brethren and fellowservants" found peace and tranquillity for the space of thirty-eight years. During this long period, a short turbulent interval under Maximin excepted, they enjoyed a continued calm. In this period, their sufferings were those of the third and fourth seals, of which they were partakers with the general public. What these were, we shall "see" in our further exposition of the prophecy.

SECTION 3 THE THYATIRAN STATE

VOL. 1, PP. 428, 439

The Pergamian with all its evils merging into the worse Thyatiran degree of apostasy. Christians so-called, as intensely nominal and worldly as sectarians of the nineteenth century. The prophetess Jezebel, and “the Satan,” their representatives in the third century—Apoc. 2:20, 24.

ACT III.—SEAL-PERIOD THIRD

Apoc. 6:5, 6

The Greco-Latin horse, black with lamentation, mourning and woe.

A.D. 212

“And when he opened the third seal, I heard from the third living one, saying, ‘Come and see.’ And I saw, and behold a Black Horse, and one sitting upon him holding a Balance in his hand. 6. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four living ones, saying, ‘A choinix of wheat a denarius; and three choinices of barley a denarius; but the oil and the wine thou mayest not act unjustly by’.”

1. The Spirit not yet Withdrawn

Such is the expressive heiroglyphic by which the Spirit “signified” to “his servants” the nature of the situation which should succeed the period in which they would “slay one another,” and “a great machaira” would appear to aggravate the strife. The Lamb also opens this third seal. It is an opening, not to give exit to blessedness upon Roman society; for that is not the nature of a seal; but, to loose those evils upon the world, which would be calamitous to pagan, Jew, and Jezebel-professors of christianity, in all the empire. Though the evils would be general, “the Brethren,” or as many as had not the Jezebel doctrine, would, doubtless, not suffer so severely as others; for in the time of the first four seals, it was certainly a ministration of Spirit in which retribution came upon ecclesias “according to their works.” It was, I say, a ministration of Spirit, though not so amply manifested as when Paul wrote 1 Cor. 12, 13 and 14. The presence of the Four Living Ones, and the emanation of voices from them, as a part of the symbolization, proves this. When the fifth seal is opened, there is no invitation from a Living One to “come and see.” Yet the Spirit still lingered among the Lightstands, as may be inferred from the saying, “it was said unto them.”

The third Living One is the symbol of the ecclesia of the Deity in its Pergamo-Thyatiran declension. Its face was that of a man, and “full of eyes before and behind.” The reader will remember, that in the apocalypse these four living ones are related to two states—the state of suffering in the flesh; and the state of glory in the resurrection; and that they are only introduced in the prophetic drama where there is direct and potential ministration and manifestation of Spirit.

2. The Black Horse

While it is true, that black is used in scripture in connection with scarcity and famine; I am satisfied that in this third seal famine is not indicated by the color of the horse. The reader will therefore be so good as to run his pen through the word “famine” in line 16 of our “Chronological Tableau of the Apostasy,” on page 428, Vol. 1. The color indicates mourning, distress, intense depression of mind, from any kind of calamity that may befall. This appears from Job 30:26–31: “When I looked for good then evil came; and when I waited for light, there came darkness. My bowels boiled, and rested not; the days of affliction anticipated me. Mourning (kodair, darkening) I went without the sun.... My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burned with heat. My harp also is turned to mourning, and my organ into the voice of them that weep.” We need not multiply examples. This from Job shows, that the outside blackness is caused by the inner heat of burning, or intense, affliction. So also in the case before us. the severe oppression to which the community represented by the horse, is subjected by them who ride, or rule it, gives it hieroglyphically, a black skin. It is therefore to be viewed as under the operation of great evil in days of affliction, producing lamentation, mourning, and great distress. The horse represents the same community as the white of the first seal, and the fiery red one of the second—the peoples subject to pagan Rome; the different colors signifying their different condition in different periods.

3. The Balance-Holder

The rider of the black horse may be known by his badge. John saw one sitting upon him “holding in his hand a balance.” The other riders of the first and second seals were identified by their badges—the bow and the great dagger; and so must this of the third by the balance, which is his. He represents a class of agents who, in relation to the Roman peoples, held the balance as their badge of office; the duties of which they performed so oppressively that they became a public evil, which like a noxious weed of most luxuriant growth, “darkened the Roman world with its deadly shade.”

Among the Greeks and Latins, as also among the moderns, a balance was the symbol of justice. The scripture also adopts it as such: “Let him weigh me,” says Job, “in the balance of justice”—31:6. In the hand of an official it indicated a judge, or an administrator of justice, or properly, of law; which, in the mouth of a judge, is often times far removed from justice. In this seal, it is the symbol of agents, whose office it was to execute the laws—the imperial functionaries of the empire; both the emperors and their subordinates. There are Roman coins in the cabinets of the collectors of coins and medals, illustrative of this. Mr. Elliott has given copies of some in his work. Among these is an imperial coin of Alexander Severus. On one side is the head of an emperor; and on the other, a diademed figure holding a balance in the right hand and a measure in the other, with the Legend Aequitas Augusti, S.C. It is the symbol of the equity of the emperor by decree of the senate in his levies upon the people in kind; for in imperial times the supreme judicial and financial, as well as supreme military power centred in the emperors. For this reason, the balance of justice is ascribed to them as well as the machaira, which, says Paul, “he beareth not in vain, for he is the minister of the Deity, a revenger to execute wrath upon them that do evil”—Rom. 13:1–4. So Shakespeare combines them in the address of Henry V. to the Lord Chief Justice, as the monarch’s representative; “Hold thou still the balance and the sword.”

4. The Voice

John says, that when he saw this vision of the third seal, he heard “a voice in the midst of the Four Living Ones.” Voice is sometimes used in scripture in the sense of the signification, or the thing signified by a sign; as in Exod. 4:8. Moses was to do certain signs before the people, to convince them that he was sent by Yahweh to deliver them. “If,” said he, “they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, they will believe the voice of the latter sign.” The voices, though not expressed in words, were, that he whose power turned his flesh leprous as snow, and restored it instantly; and changed the water of the Nile into blood, had sent Moses with power to deliver them. The sign was one thing, the voice of the sign another. Voice also is sometimes used for law; as “if thou shalt be obedient to his voice,” i.e. to his law. It is also used for proclamation; as in Ezra 1:1, “Cyrus caused qowl, a voice to pass through all his kingdom;” that is he made a proclamation through all his kingdom.

The Third Seal
—A.D. 212–235:
Famine

The seal describes the rider on a black horse as holding a pair of balances in his hand (Apoc. 6:5). Eureka refers to medallions of Rome that depict this symbol. The above medallion was issued by Septimus Geta. It depicts three Monetae each holding a balance, and personifying the metals of gold, silver and bronze whilst at the feet of each is a pile of coins. Juno Moneto was the name given to Juno the Adviser, in whose temple at Rome money was coined, and by whom its value was guaranteed so as to create public confidence in the monetary system. But it is ironical that the invocation of such began at the very time that inflation and debasement of the coinage was well established. It is remarkable how the coinage and monuments of the Roman Empire illustrate the symbolism of the Apocalypse, and confirm the exposition of Eureka. Caracalla (left) whose reign commenced the epoch of this seal, is remembered chiefly for his treachery and cruelty. He murdered his brother Geta to obtain sole rule, but plunged Rome into greater distress.

This voice that John heard was edicts, decrees, or laws, proclaimed by authority; and to be executed by the class of agents who exercised the power symbolized by the balance—the praetors at Rome, and the governors of the provinces. John heard the voice “in the midst of the four living ones.” These being emblematic of the brethren and their fellow-servants in all the Roman earth, an imperial decree, addressed to the agents symbolized by the rider holding the balance, would be, hieroglyphically speaking, “a voice in the midst of the four living ones.”

The decrees of this voice caused to pass by authority throughout the Roman world were “a choinix of wheat a denarius; and three choinices of barley a denarius; but the oil and the wine thou mayest not act unjustly by.” This was the voice in sign. It was the sign-voice. We are not to expect to find an imperial decree in these words, because the thing signified will be different from the sign. But when we come to understand the character of the sign, if it be an evil sign, we may expect to find the administration of the balance-holder evil; and productive of such results as would blacken the community over which he rules; or cause to it lamentation, mourning, and woe: but if the sign-voice were a good sign, it would have developed a different aspect. The horse would have been white; because the administration of the rider to whom the voice comes, would have been beneficent. The sign voice implies an intensely oppressive administration of public affairs in all the third seal period, with a brief intermission only. This was indicated by the words, “the oil and the wine thou mayest not act unjustly by.” This implies that the edict-making power, or voice of the seal, would not in all its career be devoid of equity. The words me adikesis in the English version are rendered hurt thou not; but, I prefer the above translation as more in accordance with the etymology; for it is a compound of a negative, and dike justice—a denial of justice, which is unjust. There was one of the riders, or ruling class, who was ordered not to act unjustly in relation to “the oil and the wine” “THOU mayest not act unjustly by the oil and the wine.”

This injunction in regard to the oil and the wine, indicates that injustice would be done in the matter of the wheat and the barley. These were taxable articles from which a great revenue was derived for the use of the state. The decrees, or seal-voice of the senate, fixed the tariff, which the emperors and their subordinates carried into effect, justly or otherwise as it pleased them. The grain tax was levied in kind, or an equivalent was paid in money to the farmers of the revenue; who often sent the treasury at Rome what the law required, and retained for themselves the excess they had extorted from the taxpayers they oppressed. Thus, for example, if wheat were assessed by the senate at ten cents a bushel, they might extort thirty; send the treasury its due, and keep the twenty for their own use. According to this principle of robbery in Sicily, when the wheat-procurations were required from the islanders, the market price being not above one denarius the modius, Verres exacted three denarii from some of them as a money equivalent for each modius due. These extortionate proceedings of the farmers of the revenue were a cause of great public distress and irritation. They were appointed for an equitable administration of affairs, and the collection of revenue in kind and money according to the voice of the Senate. But, being pagans without enlightened conscience, they acted under the blind impulse of their natural organization, and plundered the people as far as they could do so with impunity. "Those," says Gibbon, "who had learning enough to read the orations of Cicero against Verres, might instruct themselves in all the various arts of oppression with regard to the weight, the price, the quality, and the carriage; and the avarice of an unlettered governor would supply the ignorance of precept or precedent." The emperor Alexander Severus used to style the revenue-collectors, "the robbers of the provinces;" it was with them as Hosea says of Ephraim, "the balance of deceit is in his hands, he loveth to oppress."

The Choinix

The voice made proclamation of a denarius the choinix of the wheat. There are various opinions concerning the choinix. The English version uses the word in its widest sense for measure of capacity, without defining the capacity. In Ezek. 45:10, the Septuagint translators are thought to have used the word in this generic sense, Zugos dikaios, kai metron dikaiou, kai choinix dikaiou esto humin tou metrou; this is translated to suit the idea, "let there be among you a just balance, and a just measure, and a just choinix." But this is not true to the original; it should be, "a just balance, and a just measure, and let there be to you a just choinix of the measure." Here, the word does not stand for measure in general but for a specific part of measure called choinix. The general opinion of the learned is, that there were three choinixes in use among the Greeks and Latins, of the value of three, four, and eight cotyloe, of three gills each, respectively. The Attic choinix was the most common, and consisted of three cotyloe, or nine gills, or one quart and an eighth, and weighing about two pounds.

"A choinix of wheat a denarius; and three choinixes of barley a denarius." A denarius was a silver coin, worth about fifteen cents, or eight pence sterling. It was a coin of the Roman empire; and thereby indicates in its symbolic use, that the seal prophecy had relation to Greco-Latin affairs. In the English version it is "for a penny," or denarius. In the original, denariou is the genitive of estimation or value; which the English version supposes to be the price of the wheat and barley, and therefore inserts the word "for." I have omitted this word, and in my translation reduced it as near to the original as possible. It may have been the symbolic price of the grain before its assessment, which was to be added; or it may have been the tax assessed independently of the market price. In either view of the case, as emblematic of the financial extortion and all its attendant evils by which the body politic was made black, it was an enormous oppression of the people.

Wheat at fifteen cents, or eight pence, the two pounds, would be four dollars and fifty cents, or about twenty shillings sterling a bushel, estimated at sixty pounds weight. I believe it takes about four bushels to make a barrel of flour, weighing one hundred and ninety-six pounds. Hence, the first cost of the flour would be eighteen dollars, say in Egypt, Roman Africa, or Sicily. To this must be added exporting and importing mercantile profits, and freight to Rome; so that by the time it reached the consumers, it would more than double our New York prices after three years of civil war, in which our social horse has become red. But this would not be all the trouble. To this high price must be added the tax on every bushel, collected by "the robbers of the provinces," before the wheat was converted into flour; so that when the whole should be summed up it would make "a sign" indicative of great distress among the people.

But, if a denarius is to be taken as the price of the grain, three times the quantity of barley could be purchased for that coin—"three choinixes of barley a denarius"—twenty-seven gills, or three quarts and three gills. Hence, then denarii, or about one hundred and fifty cents, would purchase a bushel of untaxed barley. This is high for barley; and indicates some calamitous condition of public affairs, causing the necessities of life to range so high. It would affect all classes, rich and poor, bond and free; none would be exempt. When the tax was paid on the barley, what would be its price then?

But after all, a denarius may not have been the price of the choinixes; but the tax assessed on each respectively—a denarius on a choinix of wheat; and a denarius on three choinixes of barley. This, I am inclined to believe, is the signification of the voice. If so, a bushel of wheat would be assessed at four dollars and fifty cents; and a bushel of barley at one dollar and fifty cents. This superadded to the marketprice would make the cost of the necessities of life enormous; and cause whole tracts of country to be thrown out of cultivation, and so prepare the way for that famine which came upon the people as one of the miseries of their situation during the fourth seal—verse 8. The Emperor Trajan likened the undue enlargement of the taxation, with exacting procurators to collect it, to the morbid enlargement of the spleen, causing atrophy. And, after the failure of Alexander Severus, who responded to the Senate's voice, "not to act unjustly by the oil and the wine," in attempting to ameliorate existing fiscal evils, the history of the sequel illustrates fully the truth of Trajan's comparison. A general internal wasting of the Roman state resulted from it. Speaking of this seal-period, Gibbon remarks, that the form of the state was still the same as under Hadrian, "but the animating health and vigor was fled; the industry of the people was discouraged and exhausted by a long series of oppression;" and again, "that the general famine, which (soon after Philip's death) befell the empire, was the inevitable consequence of the rapine and oppression, which extirpated the produce (the wheat and barley) of the present, and the hope of future harvests." The agriculture of the provinces was insensibly ruined; and thus preparation was made for famine. "The injustice and avarice of the provincial governors," says Mosheim, "together with the rapacity of the publicans, by whom the taxes of the country were farmed, were the source and occasion of innumerable grievances to the people;" and another writer says, "the rapacity of the imperial procurators were among the causes that finally wrought the downfall of the empire."

An edict by Aurelian shows what extortion had effected previous to his reign. It speaks incidentally of the desolation in Italy; and urges agriculturists to plant vines on certain extensive fertile lands of Etruria, that had been deserted. With reference to a later period, Gibbon states that sixty years after the death of Constantine, and before a barbarian invader had been seen in Italy, an exemption from taxes was granted for 300,000 acres in the fertile province of Campania, that is, for one eighth of the whole province, as being by actual survey ascertained to be desert; and he ascribes it to the long impoverishing effects of fiscal oppressions; the chief era of which is the period of this third seal.

Thus, the rapine and oppression symbolized in the sign-voice "in the midst of the four living ones," involved both the depopulation and desolation of regions in themselves fertile. People do not abandon to the wild beasts of the forest such tracts of country, unless they are oppressed by their rulers, or left without protection against the barbarians without. The sign-voice in its operation reduced the inhabitants of the earth to despair, and banished every patriotic sentiment from their minds. Illustrative of the personal and family distress induced by official robbery and oppression which Constantine sought to remedy, Gibbon says: "The horrid practice of exposing and murdering their newborn infants was become every day more frequent in the provinces, and especially in Italy. It was the effect of distress; and the distress was principally occasioned by the intolerable burden of taxes, and by the vexatious as well as cruel prosecutions of the officers of the revenue against their insolvent debtors. The less opulent or the less industrious ... instead of rejoicing in an increase of family, deemed it an act of paternal tenderness to release their children from the impending miseries of a life which they were themselves unable to support. The humanity of Constantine, moved perhaps by some recent and extraordinary instance of despair, engaged him to address an edict to all the cities of Italy, and afterwards of Africa, directing instant relief to those parents who should produce before the magistrates the children whom their own poverty would not allow them to educate.”

The voice, then, of this third seal hieroglyphic, was not the voice of famine, but of an intolerable assessment for state purposes of the abundance already in store, and to be hereafter produced. The era succeeding the seal-period in which they were slaying one another under the generalship of the great machaira, was one of abundance of wheat, barley, oil, and wine. This appears from the testimony of Dion who lived in those times. He says that Septimus Severus celebrated the secular games with extraordinary magnificence, and at his decease, left in the public granaries a provision of grain for seven years, at the rate of 75,000 modii, or pecks, or about 10,000 bushels a day. This was a part of the policy of S. Severus by a constant and liberal distribution of grain and provisions, to captivate the affections of the Roman people. But the policy of his son and successor, the fierce Caracalla, was “to secure the affections of the army, and to esteem the rest of his subjects as of little moment.” The liberality and indulgence to the troops was tempered by the father with firmness, authority, and prudence; but the careless profusion of Caracalla’s reign, the inaugural period of the signvoice of the third seal, was, as Gibbon says, “the inevitable ruin both of the army and of the empire. The excessive increase of their pay and donatives, exhausted the state to enrich the military order, whose modesty in peace, and service in war, are best secured by an honorable poverty.”

I take it, then, that the sign-voice may be expressed thus: “Let a choinix of wheat be assessed a denarius; and three choinixes of barley rated at the same; but the oil and the wine thou mayest not act so unjustly by.” The signification of this, and the causes operating so grinding and blackening a despotism, will appear in the Lamb’s opening of the seal hereafter to be expounded in the following.

6. Fulfilment of the Prophecy

The declining health and last illness of S. Severus, inflamed the wild ambition, and black and blackening passions of Caracalla. He attempted, more than once, to shorten Severus’ life, and with as little success, to excite a mutiny among the troops. Severus deliberated, and threatened, but was too fondly parental to punish his son and colleague in the throne; and this last, and only instance of mercy he was ever guilty of, was more fatal to the empire than a long series of cruelty. At length he expired at York in Britain, A.D. 211, leaving his two mutually detesting and impetuous sons, Caracalla and Geta, the imperial chiefs of the Roman world.

Proclaimed by the army and cheerfully acknowledged by the Senate, the people, and the provinces, the two brothers commenced their reign, with equal and independent power. But they were implacable foes, who neither desired nor could trust a reconciliation. It was visible that only one could reign, and that the other must fall; and each of them judging of his rival’s designs by his own, guarded his life with the most jealous vigilance from the repeated attacks of poison or the sword. They met only in public; and each surrounded by a numerous train of armed followers. Even on these occasions of ceremony, the dissimulation of courts could ill disguise the rancour of their hearts.

This latent civil war already distracted the whole government. To remedy this, it was proposed to divide the empire between them. But this scheme was defeated by the influence of their mother; and Caracalla got rid of Geta by an easier, though more sanguinary process. He artfully listened to his mother’s entreaties and consented to meet his brother Geta in her apartment, on terms of peace and reconciliation. In the midst of their conversation, some centurions, who had contrived to secret themselves, rushed with drawn swords upon him, and laid him lifeless at his mother’s feet. The deed accomplished, Caracalla, rushed with horror on his countenance, to the praetorian camp, where he reported in broken and disordered words, his fortunate escape from attempted assassination. Geta had been the favorite of the soldiers, but complaint was useless, revenge dangerous, and they had still a reverence for the house of their “great machaira,” Severus. Their discontent died away in idle murmurs, and Caracalla soon convinced them of the justice of his cause, by distributing to them in one lavish donation the accumulated treasures of his father’s reign. The real sentiments of the soldiers alone were of importance to his power or safety. Their declaration in his favor commanded the dutiful professions of the Senate, which obsequiously ratified as usual the success of villany the most lawless and abandoned.

The anguish of remorse henceforth seized upon the haunted imagination of Caracalla, which prompted him to remove from the world whatever could remind him of the fratricide, or recall the memory of Geta. Seeing the empress Julia, his mother, in a company of matrons, weeping over his untimely fate, he threatened them with instant death; the sentence was executed against Fadilla, the last remaining daughter of Marcus Antoninus, the imperial stoick, and sanguinary persecutor of the christians, under the first seal. It was computed, that under the vague appellation of the friends of Geta, above twenty thousand persons of both sexes suffered death. His guards and freedmen, the ministers of his serious business, and the companions of his looser hours, those who by his interest had been promoted to any commands in the army or provinces, with the long connected chain of their dependants, were included in the proscription; which endeavored to reach every one who had maintained the smallest correspondence with Geta, who lamented his death, or who even mentioned his name. The particular causes of calumny and suspicion were at length exhausted; and when a senator was accused of being a secret enemy of the government, Caracalla was satisfied with the general proof that he was a man of probity and virtue. From this well-grounded principle he frequently drew the most sanguinary inferences.

Such was the opening of the third seal, A.D. 212. Through the mad ferocity of one of the basest of mankind, retribution fell upon the heads of a people, who in their public pastimes clamored for inoffensive and non-resisting professors of the christian faith, to be brought out of prison to fight with savage beasts in the amphitheatres for their amusement. It is a remarkable fact, and deserves to be noted, that while this monster of wickedness was filling the families of pagans with lamentation, mourning and woe, christians found in him friendship and protection. His father Severus, we have seen, was a cruel persecutor; but in this son of iniquity, arose an avenger, who rendered the heathen public BLACK with mourning and distress. The education of Caracalla is said to account for his favor towards them. He had known Proculus his father’s physician, who was a christian, if not a christadelphian, and maintained in the palace to his death; and he had himself been nursed by a professed christian woman. This gave him an early predilection in favor of the christians, insomuch that when he was seven years old, observing one of his playfellows to be beaten because he followed the christian religion, he could not for some time after behold with patience either his own father, or the father of the boy.

The tyranny of Tiberius, Nero, and Domitian, who resided almost constantly at Rome, or in the adjacent villas, fell principally upon the senatorial and equestrian orders. But Caracalla was the common enemy of his heathen subjects. He left the capital, and never returned to it, A.D. 213. The rest of his reign was spent in the several provinces of the empire, particularly those of the East, and every province was by turns made black by rapine and cruelty. The senators, compelled by fear to attend his capricious motions, were obliged to provide daily entertainments at an immense expense, which he abandoned with contempt to his guards; and to erect in every city, magnificent palaces and theatres, which he either disdained to visit, or ordered to be immediately thrown down. The most wealthy families were ruined by partial fines and confiscations and the great body of his subjects oppressed by ingenious and aggravated taxes. In the midst of peace, and upon the slightest provocation, he issued his commands at Alexandria in Egypt, the seat of paganized christianity, and where in his father’s reign so much blood of professing christians had been shed, for a general massacre. From a secure post in the temple of Serapis, he viewed and directed the slaughter of many thousands of citizens, as well as strangers, without distinguishing either the number or the crime of the sufferers; since, as he coolly informed the Senate, all the Alexandrians, those who had perished, and those who had escaped, were alike guilty—guilty of slaying the disciples of the Lamb; and therefore in opening the third seal, the Lamb retributively gave them blood to drink; and made the survivors, black with lamentation and distress; so fearful a thing is it to tamper with the truth, and to persecute its friends. Sooner or later, terrible vengeance overtakes the guilty, even by the wicked, who are the Deity's sword-bearers against all such evil-doers.

As long as the vices of Caracalla were beneficial to the armies, he was secure from the danger of rebellion. A secret conspiracy, however, provoked by his own jealousy, caused his assassination, and the election of the chief conspirator as his successor. The grateful soldiers forgot his vices, remembered only his liberality to them, and obliged the Senate to stultify itself and their superstition, by decreeing him a place among the gods. While living, Alexander the great was the only hero which this "god" deemed worthy of his admiration; but in no one action of his life did Caracalla express the faintest resemblance to him, except in the murder of a great number of his own and of his father's friends.

His extraordinary gifts to the army amounted annually to about two millions three hundred and fifty thousand pounds, or about 11,750,000 dollars. The prodigality of Caracalla left behind it a long train of ruin and disorder. But the policy of the house of Severus was to increase the dangerous power of the army, and to obliterate the faint image of laws and liberty that was still impressed on the public mind. In pursuing this policy, Severus and his son undermined the foundations of the empire, and hastened its decline. An important edict of Antoninus Caracalla, which communicated to all the inhabitants of the empire the name and privilege of Roman citizens, greatly contributed to this. This edict made the limits of the city Rome, and the limits of the empire, the same. His unbounded liberality, however, flowed not from the sentiments of a generous mind; it was the sordid result of avarice. Inattention, or rather, averse to the welfare of his subjects, he found himself under the necessity of gratifying the insatiate avarice which he had excited in the army. The favour of citizenship was lost in the prodigality of Caracalla, and the reluctant provincials were compelled to assume the vain title, and the real obligations of Roman citizens. Nor was the rapacious Caracalla contented with such a measure of taxation, as had appeared sufficient to his predecessors. Instead of a twentieth, he exacted a tenth, a denariad of all legacies and inheritances; and during his reign he crushed alike every part of the empire under the weight of his iron sceptre. The new citizenship brought with it only an increase of burdens. The old as well as the new taxes were, at the same time, levied in the provinces. This was an intolerable grievance, which found only a temporary remission in the reign of Alexander Severus, who reduced the tributes to a thirtieth part of the sum exacted at the time of his accession. "In the course of this history," says Gibbon, from whose work I have condensed as before, "we shall be too often summoned to explain the land-tax, the capitation, and the heavy contributions of grain, wine, oil, and meat, which were exacted from the provinces for the use of the court, the army, and the capital." Caracalla supplied the necessities of these insatiable consumers without any regard to the blackening effect produced upon the unhappy civilians, from whom the supplies were so oppressively obtained.

Caracalla was assassinated A.D. 217, after a reign of six years; and was succeeded by Macrinus, at whose instigation he was stabbed by a desperado, to whom he had refused the rank of centurion. The reader will, perhaps, now be able to "see" the historical significance of the hieroglyphical "opening" and "voice" of this sealperiod; and how, by the sanguinary and fiscal oppression of the rulers, the horse-people whom they rode, were made black with anguish and despair. The mad career of Caracalla, however, was only the opening sorrows of this third seal. He had sown tares which bore much evil fruit in the reigns of his successors. Macrinus, who had procured his assassination, was proclaimed by the praetorian guards, whom he had bribed by promises of unbounded liberality of indulgence, the head of the empire. Macrinus had now reached a height where it was difficult to stand with firmness, and impossible to fall without instant destruction. The mercenary and fickle loyalty of the soldiery, to whom, from his reforming tendencies, he soon became detestible, was his only support. But the necessity of financial reform was inevitable. The expenses of the government had to be reduced; and he might have succeeded if the numerous army assembled in the East by Caracalla, and which had made him emperor, had been immediately dispersed through the provinces. But they remained concentrated in the luxurious idleness of their quarters; where, from various causes, they soon became ripe for another revolution, by which they might recruit their exhausted treasure. To minds thus disposed, the occasion soon presented itself.

A new candidate for the honor and danger of the imperial balance-holder appeared in a pretended son of Caracalla, the high priest of the sun, at Emesa, in Syria. The soldiers accustomed to attend his ministrations, professed to recognize in his the features of Caracalla, whose memory they now adored. His emissaries distributed large sums among them with a lavish hand, which silenced every objection, and they declared the young pontiff the successor of Caracalla, by hereditary right, and their own good pleasure. Macrinus remained inactive at Antioch. At length he went forth to encounter the forces of the young pretender. But, he was defeated and fled, and a few days after slain by his own guards.

Having been elected by the military, A.D. 218, Elagabalus, the high priest of the sun and the first Asiatic emperor of the Romans, without consulting the Senate, beside the machaira, assumed the balance in assuming the tribunitian and proconsular powers of the State. It was the prerogative of the Senate to confer these by its decree—by “a voice in the midst of the four living ones”—upon the imperial sword-bearers; a right which had hitherto been respected by the turbulent praetorians and the imperial puppets it was their pleasure to set up. “This new and injudicious violation of the constitution,” says Gibbon, “was probably dictated either by the ignorance of his Syrian courtiers or the fierce disdain of his military followers.”

The timid prudence of the obsequious Senate having acquiesced in what it could not remedy, Elagabalus was duly recognized both as bearer of the balance and the sword; and the most potent, grave and reverend senators confessed with a sigh that, after having long experienced the stern tyranny of their own countrymen, Rome was at length humbled beneath the effeminate luxury of oriental despotism.

The installation of the Sun in Rome as chief over all the religions of the earth, was the great object of the zeal and vanity of Elagabalus. The Sun’s marriage with the Moon, and the display of superstitious gratitude to him for his elevation to the throne, were the only serious business of his reign. He called himself Elagabalus (though his real name was Bassianus) after the name of his god, an appellation dearer to him than all the titles of imperial greatness. He was an irrational voluptuary who abandoned himself to the grossest gratification of sense with ungoverned fury, and soon found disgust and satiety in the midst of his enjoyments. Whilst he lavished away the treasures of his people in the wildest extravagance, his own voice and that of his flatterers applauded a spirit and magnificence unknown to the tameness of his predecessors. To sport with the passions and prejudices of his subjects, and to subvert every law of nature and decency, were in the number of his most delicious amusements. No more beastly a sensualist could have been found in Sodom than this high priest of the Sun. The public scenes displayed before the Roman people attest that the inexpressible infamy of his vices and follies surpassed that of any other age or country. The corrupt and opulent nobles of Rome gratified every vice that could be collected from the mighty conflux of nations and manners. Secure of impunity, careless of censure, they lived without restraint in the patient and humble society of their slaves and parasites. Elagabalus, in his turn, viewing every rank of his subjects with the same contemptuous indifference, asserted without control his sovereign privilege of lust and luxury.

But the licentious soldiers who had raised this dissolute pretender to the throne of the balance and the sword, blushed at their ignominious choice, and turned with disgust from the monster to contemplate with pleasure the opening virtues of his cousin, Alexander Severus, whom he had been induced to invest with the title of Caesar, that his own divine occupations might be no longer interrupted by the care of the earth. In the second rank, that amiable prince soon acquired the affections of the public, but not without arousing the tyrant's jealousy, who determined, but without success, to take away the life of his rival. Failing in this, he degraded him from the rank and honors of Caesar. This sentence was received in the Senate with silence, and in the camp of the praetorians with fury. These swore to protect Alexander, and to revenge the dishonored majesty of the throne. Elagabalus trembled, and begged for his life with tears; his prayer was granted, but the folly of the emperor brought on a new crisis, which was instantly fatal to his minions, his mother, and himself. Elagabalus was massacred by the infuriated praetorians, his mutilated corpse dragged through the streets of Rome and thrown into the Tiber. His memory was branded with eternal infamy by a decree of the Senate in the year of his death, A.D. 222, after a reign of three years, nine months, and four days.

With two such tribunes and proconsuls of the Roman Senate, or Balance-Holders, as Caracalla and Elagabalus, what but oppression and injustice could result? The choenix of wheat and the choinices of barley must have been heavily taxed to provide the means of perpetuating for ten years such wild and reckless extravagance as history attributes to their administration. Better to grow no wheat or barley, than, having produced it, to be subject to the visits of the rapacious farmers of the revenue of such monsters. As we have remarked already, they did abandon the labors of the field, and left thousands of fertile acres waste and desert, by which, as one among other causes, preparation was made for the intense famine of the fourth seal. Could any people be white—happy and prosperous—under such riders? Could they be anything else than black—overshadowed by the blackness of darkness that might be felt in all parts of the body politic.

But, for the sake of the four living ones (and concerning them whom they represent, Paul says, "All things are for their sakes" (2 Cor. 4:15) the Lamb, who presided over these seal-judgments, had provided temporary relief in the preparation of a balance-holder, who would "not act unjustly by the oil and the wine"—in other words, whose rigid economy in every branch of the administration would seek to neutralize the injustice under which they had previously groaned. Alexander Severus, aged seventeen, and his mother, Mammaea, were the persons under whom this happy transformation of public affairs was brought about. On the death of Elagabalus, Alexander was raised to the throne by the praetorian guards. His amiable qualities and his danger had already endeared him to the people, and the eager liberality of the Senate decreed to him in one day—the voice in the midst of the four living ones—the various titles and powers of the imperial dignity, all summarily symbolized by the Balance and the Sword or Dagger of the State.

The regency of Mammaea was equally for the benefit of her son and the empire. With the approbation of the Senate, she chose sixteen of the wisest and best disposed senators as a perpetual council of State, before whom every public business of moment was debated and determined. The celebrated Ulpian was at their head, and the prudent firmness of this aristocracy restored order and authority to the government. Learning and the love of justice became the only recommendation for civil offices; valor and the love of discipline the only qualifications for military employments.

The uniform tenor of the emperor's life left not a moment for vice or folly. Since the accession of Commodus, the Roman world had experienced, during a period of forty years, the successive and various vices of four tyrants. From the death of Elagabalus, it enjoyed an auspicious calm of thirteen years. The provinces, relieved from the oppressive taxes invented by Caracalla and his pretended son, flourished in peace and prosperity, under the administration of magistrates who were convinced by experience that to deserve the love of the subjects was their best and only method of obtaining the favor of their sovereign. The price of provisions and the interest on money were reduced by the care of Alexander, whose prudent liberality, without distressing the industrious, supplied the wants and amusements of the populace. The dignity, the freedom, the authority of the Senate were restored, and every well-intentioned senator might approach the person of the emperor without a fear and without a blush.

In the civil or balance-holding administration of Alexander Severus, wisdom was enforced by power, and the people, sensible of the public felicity, repaid their benefactor with their love and gratitude. There still remained a greater, or more necessary, but a more difficult enterprise—the reformation of the military order, whose interest and temper, confirmed by long impunity, rendered them impatient of the restraints of discipline and careless of the blessings of public tranquillity. By the most gentle arts he labored to inspire the fierce multitude with a sense of duty; but his prudence was vain, his courage fatal, and the attempt toward a reformation served only to inflame the ills it was meant to cure.

The administration of Alexander Severus was an unavailing struggle to “act justly by the oil and the wine.” Mutinies of the troops perpetually broke out; his officers were murdered, his authority insulted, and his life at last sacrificed to the fierce discontent of the army. Every cause prepared, and every circumstance hastened a revolution which distracted the Roman empire with a long series of intestine calamities.

Alexander was one of the most moral heathens of the ancient world. His mother, Mammaea, who was cruelly jealous and avaricious, is called by Eusebius, a bishop of the Laodicean Apostasy, “a most godly and religious woman.” There are many such in our day—Gentiles, who are “godly and religious” people, but as ignorant of the first principles of the truth as Mammaea and her son. While residing at Antioch, they invited that celebrated son of Jezebel, Origen, to visit them. They could have sent for one whose christianity would have been less offensive to imperial liberalism. Origen’s christianity and theirs were not very remote, save that Origen did not bow down to imaginary deities. Alexander admitted into his own chapel all the deities of his wide empire. Jesus Christ, Abraham, Orpheus, Apollonius of Tyana, &c., were placed among them. It is almost certain that his mother had biased him in favor of philosophical christianity in which she believed. He had a desire to erect a temple to Christ, and to receive him regularly among the gods! The excellent qualities of this amiable and just ruler were, doubtless, attributable to the divine principles he so imperfectly understood. These caused him to treat professors of christianity with favorable regard. As an instance of this, it is related that the right of possessing a certain piece of ground was claimed by a tavern-keeper. It had been without owner or possessor for a long time, and the christians had occupied it as a place of worship. “It is fitter,” said Alexander, “that God should be served there, in any manner whatever, rather than it should be used for a tavern.” He frequently said, “Do as you would be done by.” He obliged a crier to repeat it when he punished any one, and was so fond of it that he caused it to be written in his palace and in the public buildings. When he was going to appoint balance-holders of provinces, he proposed their names in public, giving the people notice that if they had any crime to accuse them of they should come forward and make it known. “It would be a shame,” said he, “not to do that with respect to governors, who are intrusted with men’s properties and lives, which is done by Jews and christians when they publish the names of those they mean to ordain priests.” His great desire was, not only that he himself should not, but also that the representative officials of the Roman majesty in all parts of the empire, should “not act unjustly by the oil and the wine.”

There was no persecution of the christadelphians, nor of philosophical christians, under the Balance-Holders of this seal—to wit, Caracalla, Macrinus, Elagabalus, and Alexander Severus. The calamities they experienced befell them in common with the general public. Though primitive christianity was losing ground, the Archer with his bow was still “conquering” the popular superstition. An Alexander Severus, on the throne of the world, was evidence that philosophical christianity, the metaphysics of the Alexandrian School of “Divinity,” was supplanting the grosser superstition of the heathen. Though christianity in the purity of its faith and practice, was succumbing to the rising and now rapidly maturing apostasy, there were very many christadelphians or Brethren of Christ, who still contended earnestly for the faith, as “the living ones” of the third Cherub of the seal. These were the salt which preserved the whole professing community from putrefaction. Little, however, is known about them, seeing that the writers of their times were the philosophicals of the Satanic synagogue, of which, by way of derision, the pagans named Alexander the chief.

SECTION 4 THE SARDIAN STATE

VOL. 1., PP. 428,443

Spiritual death overshadowing the ecclesias from long peace and the philosophical “divinity” which had, to a great degree, superseded the gospel. The things that remain not yet dead, “ready to die.” The Thyatiran, or Jezebel-and-Satan, ethics, the seed which ripens into the Sardinian—Apoc. 3:1.

ACT IV.—SEAL-PERIOD FOURTH

Apoc. 6:7, 8

War, famine, pestilence, and barbarian invasion combined, sickly over the Roman Horse with the pale cast of death and corruption.

A.D. 235

“And when he opened the Fourth Seal I heard the voice of the Fourth Living One, saying, ‘Come and see!’ 8. And I saw, and behold a pale horse, and he who sits upon him, the name for him is Death; and Hades follows with him: and there was given to them authority to kill upon the fourth of the earth with sword, and with famine, and with pestilence, and under the beasts of the earth.”

The fourth living one full of eyes is likened in countenance to a flying eagle. The people represented by this were still “a habitation of the Deity through the Spirit,” and witnesses of the judgments to be revealed in this fourth seal. The Spirit of this divinely inhabited community did not invite John to “come and see” till the Lamb had opened the seal; and this series of events did not occur till A.D. 235, when the auspicious calm that had pervaded the Roman world for thirteen years came to an abrupt and sanguinary termination by the assassination of Alexander Severus, and the massacre of his most faithful friends, by the fury of the soldiers.

When the opening was complete, John saw hippos chloros, a pale horse. The word rendered pale indicates green as the basis of the pallor. Pallida mors was proverbial among the Latins. Hippocrates enumerates the color of the facial skin fading into green and black among the symptoms of approaching death. Nothing could be more appropriate than the color which accompanies putrefaction as representative of the Italian body politic at this crisis of its “dreadful and terrible” history. It had suffered severely under the second and third seals; but what were these in comparison of the deathstrokes by sword, famine, pestilence, and beasts, speedily and of long continuance, to fall upon the Pagan Horse! A deadly paleness and livor would come over it—a hue emblematic of approaching dissolution, as most expressively represented by the chloros of the fourth seal.

1. The Rider “Death”

John says that the name of the representative personage he saw sitting above, over, or upon, epano, the pale horse, was “Death.” The form of words in which he tells us this is according to the form of the previous seals. “The rider was not, as before,” says Elliot, “the representative of human functionaries and rulers, whose distinctive emblems, though well understood at the time, might now require investigation to unfold them. It is a symbol of meaning as obvious to the reader now as it could have been then to the seer; for who it meant is expressly told us. It was the personification of Death! To mark that it was the actual King of Terrors—and not as otherwise it might possibly have been construed, the destroyer merely of political existence—his badge, so to express it, is said to have been Hades following him, the recipient, with his opening jaws of the victims slain by Death.” But Mr. Elliott has not attempted to show why death should be personified in the fourth and not in the second seal, where the horse is fiery red, and they are engaged in slaying one another. The truth is the very reverse of Mr. Elliott’s supposition; for the rider, as before, represented, not death in the abstract, but human functionaries and men of power, so victimizing and victimized by assassination and war as to become, as it were, the sons of death, and, therefore, as a class, fitly represented by the symbolical name, “Death.” John does not say that the sitter upon the pale horse was death, but that the name bestowed upon him was death—“the name for him is Death.” Neither did the rider, Death, indicate “the destroyer of mere political existence;” for the agents, as a class, and the state, still survived the fourth seal. No interpretation of a fulfilled prophecy not in harmony with authentic history can be correct; therefore, this last idea of mere political destruction must be rejected. History will show that my interpretation is the only true one, namely, that the name “Death” was bestowed upon the class of agents riding, sitting upon, or affecting the dying horse or heathen people and empire, because few of them died a natural death. In the first fifty years of the period of this seal, there were thirty-nine claiming to be emperors, and all of them died by violence. One of them fell by pestilence, and the form of the death of another is uncertain; but, with these two exceptions, nearly all died by assassination, and two or three by the sword in battle. Let such a class of rulers, then, predetermined to death as sure as they obtained the imperial office, be symbolized in a hieroglyphic, by what could they be so fitly represented as by a man with the name of “Death?” This name was his badge; so that any ruler represented by this class-man entered on the imperial office under the sentence of death, as prefigured by “the name” of this seal.

2. Ho Hades

John says, that he saw ho Hades, following with Death. This word haidēs, or hades, is usually derived from a privative, and idein, to see; others regard it as “most clearly derived from aeides, “invisible.” It therefore means that which is concealed from present vision. This is the most common acceptance of the word—the unseen, whether as to place or state.

The expression oikos Hadou, corresponds both in form and sense, to the Hebrew baith olam, Ecc. 12:5, “man goeth to the House of Olam,” house of the unseen, instead of long home, as in the English Version; that is, the grave. When men are therein deposited they are invisible; hence the grave becomes their house, oikos, in which they are unseen. They are then in hades. Xenophon in his life of Agesilaus, says: “And thus this man spent his life in the service of his country, and having at length died he was carried down into the invisible dwelling”—eis ten aidion oikesin kategageto. So also Diodorus Siculus, in his account of the Egyptians, says: “They call the habitations of the living, inns, because we dwell in them for a short time; but the abodes of the departed they style hidden houses, because in the unseen they remain the unknown cycle”— aidious oikous prosagoreuousin, hos en Haidou diatelouvton ton apeiron aiona—lib. 1.51. The word Haidos, in relation to world, time, place, can only signify boundless, eternal, everlasting, in the sense of heathen boundless inexperience and ignorance of invisible things. The phrase eis Haidou, is elliptical for eis oikon hadou, into the house of the unseen, or the grave; and is supposed to have been derived from the baith Olam of the Hebrews.

The pulai hadou, the Gates of Hades, or the gates of the unseen, is used in Matt. 16:18. To say as there, that they should not prevail against Christ's ecclesia, was to predict the resurrection of his saints; and that they should no more be shut in from the outside world by grave or sepulchre. The dead are truly themselves the unseen, as well as in the unseen. Open the graves of the generation of this seal, as an instance; lay them all into one vast unpartitioned area; let us descend and enter there, and view the mighty hollow, and ask, where are all the dead? They are all invisible. The grave, which is the mouth, or gate, of this vast subterranean hall, has eaten them up, and consumed their form. Ask for them; but you ask in vain; they are all there, but you cannot see them; therefore they are in Hades, or in Sheol.

"Our Saxon word Hell," says Lord King, "in its original signification, exactly answers to the Greek word Hades, and denotes a concealed or unseen place; and this sense of the word is still retained in the eastern, and especially in the western counties of England; to hele over a thing is to cover it." The modern, or Laodicean use of hell is not the scriptural use of hades or sheol; but the old mythology of the heathen—the fabulous theory according to which they fitted up and furnished, the vast subterranean we have supposed, with flames, sulphur, brazen-throated dogs, furies, and such like. Plato, speaking of all this mythological apparatus and the legends appended to it, says, "Which, under the name of Hades and similar titles, men (that is, pagans) greatly fear, and dream about living and dissolved of bodies." This last expression is explained by what he says elsewhere: "For be well assured, O Socrates, that when any one is near that time in which he thinks he is going to die, there enter into him fear and anxiety. For then the old stories about Hades, how that the man who has here been guilty of wrong must there suffer punishments, torture his soul. Wherefore he who in the retrospect of his life, finds many crimes, like frightened children starting from their sleep, is terrified, and lives in evil forebodings." Thus, as Paul says, "through fear of death they were all their lifetime subject to bondage"—afraid, like the heathen of the Laodicean Apostasy, of what awaits them in the unseen. Hence, when they approach dissolution of body, terror seizes them, and they send for the priest of Plato, or some minor god, in ancient and modern times, to calm their panic by the pseudo-consolations of their respective delusions.

Such, then, is Hades abstract from this fourth seal; not "a place of departed spirits;" not a place divided into two grand compartments or chambers; in one of which the spirits of "virtuous heathen," ancient and modern, of "all names and denominations of professors" and christians, are provisionally cribbed, cabined, and confined, in a sort of dreamy blissfulness, awaiting their reunion, at some indefinite epoch, with their old grave-eaten mortalities, as a condition upon which they shall enter upon eternal fulness of felicity and joy, beyond the bounds of Hades, yea, "beyond the bounds of time and space," if any one can tell where that is! Not a place, in the other compartment of which, "the spirits of the damned" are in view of the dreamy blessed, heightening their felicity, with their torment-developed wailings and gnashing of teeth. It is no such pagan, papal, protestant, and sectarian "hell," "purgatory," "heaven," or "intermediate state," as this; but simply, the receptacle into which is carried down all the remains of a man when he is dead, with this single exception—his character. Before he is born he is in a sort of Hades, the womb of his mother; and when he is dead, he is deposited in the womb of his mother earth, a larger excavated Hades, in which, if one of "the faithful in Christ Jesus called saints," he sleeps death's sleep until awaked by the Spirit's power, when "in the beauties of holiness, from the womb of the morning, he has the dew of his birth,"—Psa. 110:3. This is Hades abstract from the seal—Hades in the abstract.

In Isaiah 5:14, the Spirit speaks of Hades, by the name of Sheol, and as a female with a mouth that is insatiable—Sheol is never satisfied (Prov. 30:15, 16). "My people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge; and their honorable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst; therefore Sheol, or Hades, hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it." Though metaphorical, this is very intelligible. It predicted great destruction of all ranks and classes in Israel; and consequently, a great shovelling of them into the never filled receptacle of the dead. This insatiable nature of Sheol, or Hades, is the reason of her being styled “cruel.” Thus, “love is strong as Death; jealousy, cruel as Sheol”—Cant. 8:6.

Again, in the Spirit’s prophetic address to Belshazzar, as the Lucifer of the Babylonish Heavens, he says, “Sheol or Hades, from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee.... who say, Art thou become weak as we? Thy pomp is brought down to Hades ... the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee! Thou art cut down to the ground; thou art brought down to Sheol or Hades, to the sides of the pit. All the kings of the nations lie every one in his own house, but thou art cast out (violently excluded) from thy kever, sepulchre ... as a carcase trodden under feet; thou shalt not be joined with them in burial”—Isa. 14:9–20. Here, this cruel subterranean unseen is personified. She has the dead in custody, all their individual graves and sepulchres being the houses or cells of her vast prison. She is metaphorically supposed to arouse all her prisoners to meet a great destroyer when he is about to be brought by bearers into his sepulchre; and to taunt him with his iniquity perpetrated above ground. She is that vast prison; and all whom she has swallowed, she devours with the worms spread under and over, “which cover,” the weak and helpless, and unconscious, unseen sleepers in their cells.

This Hades is a great and voracious destroyer, the cruel ally of Death. They are companions in nature, as they are made symbolical associates in the fourth seal. It is, however, comforting to know, that, though Death and Hades went forth on such “a dreadful and terrible” mission of destruction by sword, famine, pestilence, and beasts of the earth, in this fourth seal-period of apocalyptic development, yet both of them shall be destroyed when the purpose of the Deity shall have been fully apocalypted. “O Death,” saith the Spirit, “I will be thy plagues; O Sheol or Hades, I will be thy destruction”—Hos. 13:14. And the earnest of this we have in the manifestation of the Deity in our nature, as Jesus Christ; “who has prevailed,” as the Seven-Horned and Seven-Eyed Lamb, “to unroll the scroll, and to unloose the seven seals thereof,” and hath abolished death through death, and brought life and incorruptibility to light through the gospel of the kingdom—Heb. 2:14; 2 Tim. 1:10. Still, we see Death reigning, and Hades following with him, on every side. True; but the Spirit tells us by Paul, that Death is the last enemy, and shall be destroyed; and apocalyptically by John, that “there shall be no more death,” and “no more curse”—ch. 21:4; 22:3. “Death, is,” then, “swallowed up in victory,” which victory is obtained through Jesus Christ. Temporarily, victory is on the side of Death and his companion Hades; but when he and she have come to “the End,” their power and victory over the faithful will prove to have been without permanent results. Then, “O Death, where is thy sting? O Hades, where thy victory?” Both abolished with the abolition of every curse for sin will be served no more on earth; and therefore, “the wages of sin,” which “is death” will no more be earned and paid; so that Hades having no more victims for her devouring maw, is herself destroyed—she dies for the want of sustenance.

What a glorious and blissful consummation is this of human affairs. Instead of generation after generation of our unhappy race, rushing like a torrent into the deep caverns of the unseen never more to see the light of day; instead of sword, famine, pestilence, and all the mishaps of fire, flood and field, sweeping them for seven thousand years into a subterranean prison-house, within whose gates they are barred up for ever; instead of this, the time will have arrived for every individual dweller upon the earth to be, what Jesus Christ is now—incorruptible, deathless, glorious, and powerful; Deity manifested in glorified nature—ho Theos ta panta en pasin, the Deity the all things in all men.

But from the contemplation of this brilliant and eternal future, we must return to the consideration of the fearful and gloomy past, when DEATH sat, as it were, the grim and livid occupant of the imperial throne: and HADES reigned with him, the cruel and voracious goddess of his dominion.

As the rider on the pale horse symbolized a class of ruling agents sold to the work of death, and in the midst of it to a violent death for themselves; so “Hades following with him,” is representative of another class of destroying agencies which cooperate in the destruction of the horse-people, so as to bring their body politic to the verge of dissolution, as indicated by the color of the hieroglyphic.

3. “The Fourth of the Earth”

When John beheld these two symbolical powers, Death and Hades, he saw that “exousia, authority was given to them to kill upon the fourth of the earth, with sword, and with famine, and with pestilence, and under the beasts of the earth.” The phrase, “the fourth of the earth,” implies other three fourths. Did such a division of the empire obtain, as seems to be indicated here? There can, I think, be little doubt of such a division. The whole empire was one Roman Sovereignty or Majesty, but, at a certain epoch of its history, for convenience of administration, there was a practical distribution of the imperial territory into Four Profectures. Gibbon says: “According to the plan of government instituted by Diocletian (A.D. 292), the four princes had each their praetorian praefect; and after the monarchy was once more united in the person of Constantine, he still continued to create the same number of four profects, and trusted to their care the same provinces which they already administered.

1. The Profect of the East stretched his ample jurisdiction into the three parts of the globe which were subject to the Romans, from the cataracts of the Nile to the banks of the Phasis, and from the mountains of Thrace to the frontiers of Persia.

2. The important provinces of Pannonia, Dacia, Macedonia, and Greece, acknowledged the authority of the Profect of Illyricum.

3. The power of the Profect of Italy was not confined to the country whence he derived his title; it extended over the additional territory of Rhaetia as far as the banks of the Danube, over the dependent islands of the Mediterranean, and over that part of the continent of Africa which lies between the confines of Cyrene and those of Tingitania.

4. The Profect of the Gauls comprehended under that plural denomination the kindred provinces of Britain and Spain, and his authority was obeyed “from the wall of Antoninus to the foot of Mount Atlas.”

But previous to Diocletian, and in course partly of the fourth sealperiod, the empire was subjected to four sovereignties; first, Syria and the East under Odenathus and Zenobia; second, Illyricum under Aureolus; third, Gaul, Spain and Britain, under Posthumus and then Tetricus; and fourth, Rome and Italy under Gallienus. The last was constitutionally emperor of the whole; but usurpations which he could not suppress, left the reigning power in actual possession of only the fourth division of the Roman earth, for nearly ten years previous to the death of Gallienus, A.D. 268.

Now, certain writers who have attempted an interpretation of the fourth seal, have doubted the correctness of the reading in the text. Those who perceive the time of the seal to be that interval between the death of Alexander Severus and the death of Gallienus, find the words, “there was given to them authority to kill upon the fourth of the earth,” a difficulty in the way of satisfactory exposition. “The devastations,” say they, “extended over all the Roman earth; how then are the history and the text to be reconciled? And how is the text to be reconciled with itself? For not a fourth part of the horse, but the whole horse was sickly pale.” Not being able to solve this enigma, they have fallen back upon the suggestions that to tetarton tes ges, is a spurious reading; and that the true reading conjectured by Mede is, to tetradion tes ges, the quaternion (or all four parts) of the earth. They strengthen themselves in this conjecture by the reading of the passage in Jerome’s Latin Version, who has it, super quatuor partes terroe, “over the four parts of the earth.” In commenting upon this, Mr. Elliott says: “The genuineness of this, as Jerome's own version, and not any mistake of a later copyist, is indubitable; and since his faithfulness to the Greek text is as unquestioned as his critical judgment in choosing between various readings in it, it follows that he must have had before him some correspondent reading in a Greek manuscript, or manuscripts, of authority, though our extant Greek manuscripts do not exhibit it; and which he deliberately preferred, as of all the best. Admitted, this reading makes the prophecy at once consistent with itself."

What Mr. Elliott says of Jerome is no doubt correct. He saw Greek copies, one or more, with such a reading; yet there is now no such reading extant. This is Greek against Greek; what then shall we do'? I know of only one course—make it harmonize with history as it stands in our Greek text; and if this cannot be done, then adopt Jerome's testimony, and reject it for his emendation. Can this be done? Let us "see."

The prophecy of the fourth seal does not import that the devastations of Death and Hades were to be confined or restricted to the fourth of the earth; on the contrary, as the history shows, they would be coextensive with "the earth." What then the speciality in the premises? Why this; that, whereas in the second and third seals, the judgments peculiar to them did not notably affect "the fourth of the earth," or praefecture of Italy, as defined by our quotation from Gibbon: inasmuch as, that the riders on the red and black horses, had not received authority specially to distress that region; but that, in this fourth seal, the time had come in the wise providence of the Deity, to bring judgment home to the very heart and soul of the Italian body politic. "Authority was," therefore, "given to Death and Hades, to kill upon the territory of the Italian Fourth with sword, with famine, with pestilence, and by beasts of the earth," as well as upon the other three praefectures. But, if the authority had not been given with reference to "the fourth of the earth," the praefecture of Italy would still have remained exempt from the combined operation of the four plagues. Thus, then, there is no need of any learned emendation of the text; for rightly understood, there is no real difference in Jerome's Greek copies and ours. The reading, however, as it stands in our version is preferable to his. In ours we have the enigma, which has so puzzled the learned Laodiceans of "christendom," that they have given it up; but in Jerome's reading the enigma is lost, and the prophecy, consequently, deprived of much of its ingenuity and force. The Fourth Beast empire originated with the city of Romulus and its Italian territory as the brain and heart of the future dominion; in order then to affect the body politic with a mortal languor, as represented by the deadly pallor of the horse ridden by Death, it was necessary morbidly to affect the vital organs of the state located in the original "fourth of the earth," or Italian Praefecture; for so long as this retained its vigor dissolution would be deferred—men do not die till the brain and heart have been stricken fatally by disease. Hence, the reason of the authority given. Death and Hades might have continued their work indefinitely upon the praefectures of the East, Illyricum, and the Gauls, the other threefourths of the earth, and by so doing have invigorated the Italian Fourth, seeing that a cause of the weakness of the Roman Body was its extreme magnitude. But this was not the purpose of the Deity. His purpose was to take political paganism out of the way, that the Man of Sin-Power, which the Lamb and his followers are to have the honor of destroying, might be revealed. The time had come, therefore, after the death of Alexander Severus, to begin the work of exhausting the seat of the pagan power of its vitality, that it might be paralyzed in all its members, and be prepared for the consummating events of the sixth seal, in the development of which it should be dethroned, or "cast out of the heaven." The authority was therefore given to Death and Hades to extend their operations into the "fourth of the earth," and to kill there with all the agencies at work in the other three fourths of the dominion.

4. Fulfilment of the Prophecy

A. Death and Hades kill with Sword

The Sword in the hands of Death and his companion Hades, is not machaira, as the second seal, but rhomphaia. The former was a small sword, or dagger, borne by imperial magistrates; the latter was a different weapon—“a large sword used by the Thracians”—orthas rhomphaias barusiderous, strait swords heavy with iron. A very expressive symbol of what is now to be related of Death and Hades killing upon the fourth of the earth with the Thracian weapon, heavy in its fall upon all it destroyed.

About thirty-two years before the death of Alexander Severus, Septimus Severus, “the great machaira” of the second seal, was in Thrace, celebrating with military games the birthday of his younger son, Geta. Among the spectators was a young barbarian, whose gigantic stature exceeded the measure of eight feet. He earnestly solicited permission to contend for the stephan of wrestling. As the pride of discipline would have been disgraced in the overthrow of a Roman soldier by a Thracian peasant, he was matched with the stoutest followers of the camp, sixteen of whom he successively laid on the ground. Next day, having attracted Severus’ notice, he ran up to his horse, and followed him on foot, without apparent fatigue, in a long and rapid career. “Thracian,” said the astonished emperor, “art thou disposed to wrestle after thy race?” “Most willingly, sir,” replied the youth; and almost in a breath, overthrew seven of the strongest soldiers in the army.

This youth, whose name was Maximin, having been received into the imperial body guard, became in the reign of Alexander Severus, tribune of the fourth legion, which distinguished him as its favorite hero, by the names of Ajax and Hercules. From tribune he was successively promoted to the first military command; and, but for the fierceness of his savage origin which he still retained, he might have become the husband of the emperor’s sister.

But the favors bestowed served only to inflame the ambition of the Thracian, who deemed his fortune unequal to his merit so long as he was constrained to acknowledge a superior. Selfishly cunning, he perceived that his emperor had lost the affection of the army and how their discontent might be turned to his own exaltation. The troops listened with pleasure to his emissaries. It was time, they cried, to cast away that useless phantom of the civil power, and to elect a real soldier, who would assert the glory, and distribute among his companions the treasures of the empire. One day, as he entered the field of exercise, the Army of the Rhine saluted him as emperor, and consummated their rebellion by the murder of Alexander Severus.

Maximin, now become the straight heavy Thracian weapon, or rhomphaia, in the hand of Death and Hades, was cruel as Sheol. His cruelty is said to have been derived from fear of contempt. He was conscious that his mean Thracian origin, his savage appearance, and gross ignorance, formed a very unfavorable contrast with the amiable manners of his unfortunate predecessor. He remembered that he had often waited before the door of the haughty nobles of Rome, and had been denied admittance by the insolence of their slaves. But those who had spurned, and those who had protected the Thracian, were guilty of the same crime—the knowledge of his original obscurity. For this crime many were put to death.

To be distinguished by birth or merit was to become an object of suspicion to his dark and sanguinary soul. Alarmed by the sound of treason, his cruelty was unbounded and unrelenting. Without a witness, without a trial, and without an opportunity of defence, Magnus, a consular senator, with four thousand of his supposed accomplices, were given over to Death and Hades. The Italian fourth, and the whole empire were infested with innumerable spies and informers. On the slightest accusation, the first of the Roman nobles, governors of provinces, and commanders of armies, were chained on the public carriages, and hurried away into his presence. Confiscation, exile, or simple death, were esteemed uncommon instances of his lenity. Some of the unfortunate sufferers he ordered to be sewed up in the hides of slaughtered animals, others to be beaten to death with clubs, and others again, to be exposed to wild beasts, for “under” these the reigning authority was commissioned “to kill.” During the three years of his reign, he disdained to visit either Rome or Italy, but dragged his victims from that “fourth” by his secret police to his camp on the Rhine or Danube, the seat of his stern despotism which trampled upon every principle of human law and justice, and was supported by the avowed power of the sword. As long as the cruelty of Maximin was confined to the illustrious senators, and bold adventurers, who in the court or army expose themselves to the caprice of circumstances, the body of the people viewed their sufferings with indifference, or perhaps with pleasure. But the tyrant’s avarice, stimulated by the insatiate desires of the soldiers, at length attacked the public property. Every city of the empire was possessed of an independent revenue, destined to purchase wheat and barley for the multitude, and so forth. By a single act of authority he acted unjustly by the wheat and barley, like the predecessors of Alexander Severus, and confiscated the whole mass of wealth to the use of the imperial treasury. The temples were stripped of their most valuable offerings of gold and silver, and the statues of gods, heroes, and emperors, were melted down, and coined into money. This retributive indignation of Heaven upon paganism by the blind instrumentality of this Thracian sword, excited tumults and massacres, as in many places the people chose rather to descend into Hades in defence of their superstition, than to behold in the midst of peace their cities exposed to the rapine of cruelty and war. Throughout the Roman world a general cry of indignation was heard, imploring vengeance on the common enemy of mankind; or, in view of the hieroglyphic of the fourth seal, on “Death” who rode them, and in “Hades who followed with him;” for these are “the common enemy of mankind.”

At length a province of “the fourth” praefecture “of the earth,” was driven into rebellion against this Thracian minister of Death and Hades. The procurator of Africa was a servant worthy of such a master, who considered the fines and confiscations of the rich as one of the most fruitful branches of the imperial revenue. The despair of this class roused them to arm their slaves and peasants for their protection, and to destroy the rapacious treasurer. Having assassinated him, they seized on Thysdrus, and there erected in the name of the two Gordians, the standard of rebellion against the Thracian despot. The Senate ratified their election to the imperial office, and thereby involved Rome and Italy in the guilt of treason against him. His hatred against the Senate was declared implacable; the tame submission had not appeased his fury, the most cautious innocence would not remove his suspicions; and even the care of their own safety urged them to share the fortune of an enterprise of which, if unsuccessful, they were sure to be the first victims. They, therefore, boldly prepared for the issue, and without delay proclaimed Maximin, and his adherents, enemies of their country; and offered liberal rewards to whosoever had the courage and good fortune to destroy them.

The result of the secret sitting of the Senate soon manifested itself in the assassination of the praetorian praefect by their quaestor and tribunes, who, on their return from the camp, ran through the streets with their bloody daggers in their hands, proclaiming to the people and the soldiers the news of the happy revolution! The statues of Maximin were thrown down; the authority of the two Gordians and the Senate was acknowledged by the capital; and the example of Rome was followed by the rest of Italy. Thus, the whole “fourth of the earth” was prepared for the invasion of Death and Hades, who were divinely authorized “to kill upon it with sword, famine, pestilence, and beasts of the earth.”

Having assumed the reins of government, the Senate selected twenty of their number to conduct the war against Maximin. To these the defence of “the fourth of the earth” was entrusted. A number of other deputies were sent to the provincial governors of the three other praefectures, earnestly conjuring them to fly to the assistance of Rome and Italy, and reminding the nations of their ancient ties of friendship with the Roman senate and people. The reception of these deputies, and the zeal of Italy and the provinces in favor of the senate, sufficiently prove that the subjects of Maximin were reduced to that uncommon distress, in which the body of the people has more to fear from oppression than from resistance. The consciousness of that melancholy truth, inspires a degree of persevering fury, seldom to be found in those civil wars which are artificially supported for the benefit of a few factious and designing leaders.

But, in a conflict with Maximin's Mauritanian governors, the Gordians, after a reign of thirty-six days, lost both life and throne. The news of this filled Rome with just but unexpected terror. Silent consternation also seized upon the senatorial assembly, till a descendant of Trajan aroused them from their fatal lethargy. He reminded them that Maximin was advancing towards Italy at the head of the military force of the empire; and that their only remaining alternative was to meet him bravely in the field, or tamely expect the tortures and ignominious death reserved for unsuccessful rebellion. He then proposed two successors to the Gordians, named Maximus and Balbinus; one to conduct the war against Maximin; the other to direct the civil government in Rome. This was readily acquiesced in; and to appease the clamours of a seditious multitude, a third Gordian, a boy of thirteen years, was invested with the ornaments and title of Caesar.

While these events were transpiring "upon the fourth of the earth," Maximin was agitated with the most furious passions. He received the news of the rebellion, and the Senate's decree against him, with the rage of a wild beast, which threatened the lives of all that ventured to approach him. Revenge was the only consolation left him, and this could only be obtained by arms. But delays are dangerous to all but omnipotence. It proved so to the redoubtable Thracian, who did not reach the frontiers of "the fourth of the earth" till the ensuing spring, A.D. 238. This delay gave the Senate's lieutenants time for preparation; so that when his army arrived at the foot of the Julian Alps, they were dismayed by the silence and desolation that reigned on the frontiers of Italy. The villages and open towns were abandoned, the cattle driven away, and provisions removed or destroyed, the bridges broken down, nor was anything left which could afford either shelter or subsistence to an invader. Aquileia received, and withstood, the first shock of the invasion. Its citizens were animated by the extreme danger, and their knowledge of the Thracian's unrelenting temper. Their fears for the result were unexpectedly quieted by the appearance of the heads of Maximin, his son, his praefect, and principal ministers of his tyranny, paraded on spears before the walls. They threw open the gates of the city and the whole army fraternizing with the citizens, gave in their adhesion to the Senate and people of Rome, having obeyed its decree in assassinating the tyrant, and thereby entitling itself to the promised liberality and reward.

While the fate of Italy was being contested under the walls of Aquileia, Death and Hades were actively engaged in scenes of blood and intestine discord at Rome. Distrust and jealousy reigned in the senate; and in the temples where they assembled, every senator carried open or concealed arms. In the midst of their deliberations two veterans of the guards having intruded beyond the altar of Victory, two senators, drawing their daggers, laid them dead at the foot of the altar; and then advancing to the door, exhorted the multitude to massacre the praetorians, as the secret adherents of Maximin. Those who escaped the first fury of the tumult took refuge in the camp, which they defended against the attacks of the people, assisted by numerous bands of gladiators, the property of opulent nobles. Death and Hades held high revel here for many days, with infinite loss and confusion to the combatants on both sides. When the supply of water was cut off from the camp, the praetorians were reduced to intolerable distress; but, in their turn they made desperate sallies into the city, set fire to a great number of houses, and filled the streets with the blood of the inhabitants. The Emperor Balbinus attempted to reconcile the factions. But their animosity though smothered for a while, burnt with redoubled violence. The soldiers, detesting the senate and people, despised the weakness of a prince, who wanted either the spirit or the power to command the obedience of his subjects.

But distrust and jealousy reigned in the emperorship as well as in the senate. Maximus and Balbinus despised each other; and they both feared the praetorians as much as these turbulent military profligates hated them and the civil authority in general. The result was, that while Rome was celebrating some heathen games, a troop of desperate assassins invaded the palace, seized both “the Emperors of the Senate,” as they contemptuously styled them, stripped them of their robes, dragged them in insolent triumph through the streets of the city, in which they left their bodies, mangled with a thousand wounds, exposed to the insults or to the pity of the mob.

Thus, in the space of a few months, Death and Hades had killed with the sword, six emperors. The third Gordian, officially styled Caesar, still survived. The praetorians, who asserted the authority of the sword, saluted him Augustus and Emperor, in which election the Senate and people acquiesced, rather than hazard the renewal of war in the capital. In A.D. 242, Gordian, who was only nineteen, marched his forces against the Persians; but while engaged in this war, his praetorian praefect, Philip, an Arab by birth, and a robber by original profession, was made emperor by the soldiers; and the unfortunate Gordian was sent down into Hades by the sword, which had destroyed so many of his more guilty predecessors.

In A.D. 248, Rome had attained the venerable age of one thousand years from its foundation by Romulus. Philip, whom Eusebius styles a christian (!) solemnized with infinite pomp and magnificence, the secular games, which were skilfully adapted to inspire the superstitious mind with deep and solemn reverence. To the undiscerning eye of the vulgar, Philip appeared as powerful a monarch as Hadrian or Augustus. The form of the dominion was still the same, “but the animating health and vigor were fled.” This is Gibbon’s remark without alteration or condensation by me. When the animating health and vigor of bodies have departed, they are pale with the paleness of death, as the horse in this fourth seal. “The industry of the people was discouraged and exhausted by a long series of oppression. The discipline of the legions was corrupted by the ambition of the emperors; the strength of the frontiers was insensibly undermined; and the fairest provinces were left exposed to the rapaciousness or ambition of the barbarians,” or “beasts of the earth,” who, under the inspiration of the opener of the fourth-seal, of “the authority given to Death and Hades to kill,” soon discovered the decline of the pagan empire of Rome.

B. Death and Hades kill with Wild Beasts of the Earth

John informs us, that “authority was given to Death and Hades to kill by wild beasts upon the fourth of the earth.” In commenting upon this, Mr. Elliott says: “There is just one of the destroying agencies mentioned in the vision that is passed over without notice by the historian—that of the wild beasts of the earth.” This idea of Mr. Elliott’s is quite a mistaken one; and he is led into the assumption by supposing that the theria which we agree to render wild beasts, or beasts of prey, are quadrupeds and reptiles. He enters into an argument to show, that these creatures must have been extensively employed in the service of Death and Hades, as one of the plagues with which the land was then afflicted, because one Arnobius about A.D. 296, says: “Men complain, there are now sent us from the gods pestilence, drouths, wars, scarcities, locusts, hail and other things noxious to man; but, was it not so in ancient times also?” Again: “If every species of corn be now devoured by locusts, or if floods destroy the human race, was it not so before? Were there not wars with wild beasts, and battles with lions, and destruction from venomous snakes, before our time?” The christians, who were able to “see” the fourth seal while being fulfilled, were, no doubt, arguing that the calamities of the times were sent upon the pagan world by the displeasure of “the Lamb;” which caused Arnobius to rebut the idea with the above argument, beyond which our contemporaries have not advanced. There may have been trouble with beasts of this kind in parts of the empire. But, I am satisfied that they were wild beasts of a different sort sent “to kill upon a fourth of the earth.”

Paul in Titus 1:12, styles the Cretans kaka theria, evil wild beasts. They had all the characteristics of men without understanding in divine things, who, the Spirit testifies, are “as the beasts that perish.” Apocalyptically, this term is used emblematically for the wild savage men who should invade the empire, and carry death and destruction into the central “fourth of the earth” itself. Instead of Gibbon passing over the plague of wild beasts unnoticed, the tenth chapter of his history is a remarkable illustration of the fulfilment of this specification of the seal. We learn from him, that the “wild beasts of the earth” were the Franks, the Alemanni, the Goths, and the Persians; comprehending adventurers of less considerable tribes, whose obscure and uncouth names would only serve to oppress the memory and perplex the attention of the reader.

Illustrative of this part of the seal, we learn from this historian that from the celebration of the secular games by Philip in A.D. 248, to the death of Gallienus, A.D. 268, there elapsed twenty years of shame and misfortune. During that calamitous period, every instant of time was marked, every province of the Roman earth was afflicted by barbarous invaders and military tyrants, the “wild beasts of the earth;” and the ruined empire seemed to approach the last and fatal moment of its dissolution. Gibbon had no understanding of this seal, and all his sympathies were with the adversaries of the christians. He cannot therefore be suspected of giving a prophetic coloring to the history of these twenty years. He speaks of the empire as ruined, and death-stricken, and of being in the article of death—the last and fatal moment of dissolution. Let the empire, then, be represented by a horse, with what color should we paint him; and what kind of a rider should be placed upon him; and by what name should he be called; in order to represent on canvas the state of the dominion as history reveals it? The only answer is, that no hieroglyphic would be so appropriate as that given to John a hundred and fifty years before in the imagery of the fourth seal.

In the fifth year of his reign, retribution fell upon the head of Philip for the murder of the third Gordian. A senator named Decius, whom he had sent to quell a military insurrection Maesia, was saluted Augustus by the insurgents; upon this he marched them into “the fourth of the earth,” and there met Philip in battle near Verona, under the inspiration of “Death and Hades who followed with him.” Philip went down into Hades there, by sword or dagger; while in Rome his son and associate was hurried after him by the sanguinary praetorians.

The above map, taken from The Penguin Atlas of World History illustrates how heavily the barbarians (the “wild beasts of the earth”—Ch. 6:8) pressed on the borders of the Roman Empire. Ultimately the Empire collapsed under the pressure.

A few months after these events, the Emperor Decius was summoned to the Danubian frontier to repel an invasion of wild beasts, rude and warlike barbarians, known in history as the Goths. This is the first considerable occasion in which history mentions that great people, who afterwards broke the Roman power, sacked the capital, and reigned in Gaul, Spain, and Italy. They migrated from Sweden into Prussia, and thence to the Ukraine. From this region they poured through Dacia, now Hungary, and appeared at length under the walls of Marcianopolis, the capital of the second Maesia, now called Bulgaria. A large sum of money ransomed the city; but they soon returned with increased numbers, and scattered devastation over the country. They took Philippopolis, a city of Thrace, by storm; and 100,000 persons were massacred in the sack of that great city. Thus, Death and Hades killed by wild beasts on this first meeting between the Romans and the Goths. Not long after this slaughter, Decius encountered the barbarians in a terrible battle; it was the conflict of despair against grief and rage. The fortune of the day was adverse to the Romans. Their army was irrecoverably lost, and Decius was slain in the overthrow, A.D. 251. He was succeeded by Gallus, and Hostilianus, his only surviving son.

The policy of Gallus was to get these wild beasts out of “the earth” into their native dens at any sacrifice. He consented to leave in their hands the rich fruits of their invasion, an immense booty, and a great number of prisoners of the highest merit and quality. He plentifully supplied their camp with every convenience that could assuage their angry spirits, or facilitate their departure; and even promised to pay them annually a large sum of gold, on condition that they should never afterwards infest the Roman "earth" with their incursions.

This ignominious treaty, although it gave the Romans peace for a year, did not secure their repose. The dangerous secret of the wealth and weakness of the empire had been revealed to the world. New swarms of "wild beasts," encouraged by the success of their brethren, invaded "the earth," and spread desolation through the Illyrian provinces, and, passing into "the fourth of the earth," carried terror to the gates of Rome. The defence of the monarchy, which seemed abandoned by the emperor, was assumed by Aemilianus, governor of Pannonia and Moesia. He attacked them unexpectedly, chased the "wild beasts" beyond the Danube, and distributed the money for the tribute among the soldiers, who forthwith proclaimed him emperor. Gallus hearing of this, advanced to meet him in battle on the plains of Spoleto, about seventy-five miles from Rome. The assassination here of Gallus and his son interrupted briefly the work of Death and Hades killing on the fourth of the earth with sword; these were, however, hewing down the people with a raging pestilence, according to history and the seal, by which Hostilianus had been swept into Hades. The Senate gave a legal sanction to the triumph of Aemilianus over Gallus, and were blindly assured by the victor that he would, in a short time, deliver the Roman Horse from Death and Hades, who were killing and devastating by the wild beasts of the north and east. Of course, he did not give the assurance in these words; but what he said was in substance the same. "Hercules the Victor, and Mars the Avenger," as he is styled in medals struck in honor of him, did not, however, execute his purpose. Death and Hades did not grant him time to fulfil his splendid promises; for less than four months intervened between his victory and his assassination. Valerian at the head of the legions of Gaul and Germany arrived in "the fourth of the earth," with the resolve to avenge the murder of Gallus, by sending Aemilianus and his adherents down into Hades to be devoured with her myriads of worms. The issue was tried by the sword on the plains of Spoleto, and decided against Aemilianus. The fortune of war had spared him. Death and Hades, however, would not be cheated of their prey; and the usual course of the praetorians added him by the assassin's dagger to the long, but still unfinished, list of victims sacrificed to their avarice and rage.

Valerian was now recognized as emperor; and consulting only his affection or vanity, he immediately associated with him in office his worthless son Gallienus. The whole period of their reigns was one interrupted series of confusion and calamity. This was in strict conformity with the imagery of the seal. The Roman empire was at the same time, and on every side, attacked by the blind fury of foreign invaders, the "wild beasts of the earth," and the wild ambition of domestic usurpers, Death and Hades' "sword." The Franks broke in upon "the earth." Their rapid devastations spread from the Rhine to the foot of the Pyrenees. Spain was unable to resist. During twelve years it was the arena of destructive hostilities. Taragona was sacked and almost destroyed; and as late as the fifth century, wretched cottages, scattered amidst the ruins of magnificent cities, still recorded the ferocity of these wild beasts from what is now Hesse, Brunswick, and Lunenburg. From Spain they transported themselves into the Mauritanian province of "the fourth of the earth." The fury of these "wild beasts of the earth" astonished these Roman Africans, who regarded them, from their name, manners, and complexion, as a destroying storm from a world unknown.

But Death and Hades had work for their wild beasts to do "upon the fourth of the earth" nearer to the seat of empire. The Alemanni burst into Gaul, upon the rich provinces of which they inflicted severe wounds, and afterwards were the first who removed the veil that covered the feeble majesty of Italy. A numerous body of them crossed the Danube, and penetrated through the Rhaetian Alps into the plains of Lombardy, as far as Ravenna, and displayed the victorious banners of barbarians almost in sight of Rome. Valerian being in the East, and Gallienus on the Rhine, the hopes and resources of the Romans were in themselves. In the emergency the Senate became courageous, and prepared to meet the foe, who found it prudent to retire, to save the spoil with which they were incumbered. But, under the reigns of these emperors the frontier of the Danube was perpetually infested by the inroads of German and Sarmatian “wild beasts.” The Goths renewed their incursions, which were diverted into a new channel. They acquired ships, by which they were enabled to ravage the coasts of Asia Minor. They took Trebizond, and put the inhabitants to the sword. The booty they acquired was immense, and the number of captures incredible. The rich spoils of Trebizond filled a large fleet of ships found in that port. The robust youth of the Black Sea-coast they chained to the oar; and satisfied with the success of their first naval expedition, returned to their new establishments in the kingdom of the Bosphorus.

In their second expedition, they captured Chalcedon, well stored with arms and money; and then proceeded to the plunder of the luxurious and wealthy cities of Bithynia, of which they gave Nice, and Nicomedia to the flames.

In their third naval expedition they made their appearance among the numerous island of the Aegean Sea, and at length anchored in the Piraeus, five miles distant from Athens, which they sacked. A general conflagration blazed out at the same time in every district of Greece; and the temple of Diana at Ephesus, was finally burned by the Goths. It would be interesting to us to know something of the affairs of Christ’s ecclesia there while these wild beasts of the fourth seal were doing the work of Death and Hades in their midst. It would give them no pain to see this “wonder of the world” in flames. They might regret its destruction as a work of art; but, as a stronghold of superstition, in which Jupiter’s image that fell from heaven, was enthroned, and revered by all Asia and the world, its destruction would afford them much satisfaction. It had been seven times destroyed before, but from this last catastrophe it never recovered; for he that was destined “to conquer” was still “conquering,” and consummating the work begun by Paul, who persuaded and turned away much people, not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, saying, that they be no gods which are made with hands—Acts 19:26. To them, as to us of the household of faith, the destruction of the temple of Diana, and those other temples of St. Peter’s at Rome, and St. Paul’s at London, not from an architectural, but from a scriptural standpoint, would be a glorious earnest of the approaching downfall of the several superstitions they represent. Ephesus was once famous for the bright lamp burning with oil of the spirit in her midst but Nikolaitanism, as an extinguisher, put out the light, and she became dark as the heathen catholicism, fashionable episcopalianism, gloomy presbyterianism, shallow congregationalism, and fanatical methodism, and so forth, of our day: therefore Death and Hades had authority to kill and destroy with wild beasts of the earth; these began their work with wild devastation, and all that remains of Ephesus in our time is a few families of Turks, and a Mohammedan mosque.

While the wild beasts of the north were slaying and plundering the heathens of the Roman earth, a wild beast of the east, by Daniel styled a Bear with three ribs in its mouth, spread devastation and terror on either side of the Euphrates. The Persians, under Sapor their king, had crossed that river in great force. Valerian marched against them, was defeated, and captured with his whole army. Sapor then moved against Antioch, the metropolis of the Roman East. Its splendid buildings, private as well as public, were pillaged or destroyed; and its numerous inhabitants were put to the sword, or led away into captivity. The conquest of Syria and Cilicia scarcely interrupted the progress of the ravenous bear. Sapor invaded Cappadocia, and besieged Caesarea, a city of four hundred thousand inhabitants; many thousands of whom were massacred, and those made prisoners treated with wanton and unrelenting cruelty. In the conquest of Armenia, a state beyond the Roman earth, Sapor treated the people mildly; but when, as one of the wild beasts of Death and Hades, he ravined in “the Great City,” he displayed only the stern features of a conqueror. He sought only to leave behind him a wasted desert, while he transported into Persia the survivors and the treasures of the provinces.

The captivity of Valerian, A.D. 260, ended only with his death. Being relieved of his paternal colleague's censorial severity, Gallienus reigned for eight years without restraint. When exasperated, Death and Destruction characterized his rule; till, satiated with blood, or fatigued by resistance, he insensibly sunk into the natural mildness and indolence of his character. Owing to the looseness of his government, a crowd of usurpers started up in every province of the empire against him. These had all been born of peasants and served as soldiers in the ranks, except two. They were Valerian's lieutenants, who disdained to serve his unworthy son. Of all these nineteen usurpers of imperial power there was not one who enjoyed a life of peace or a natural death. As soon as they were invested with the bloody ensigns of royalty, Death and Hades marked them as theirs. Encompassed with domestic conspiracy, military sedition, and civil war, they trembled on the edge of precipices, over which, sooner or later, they fell, and were inevitably devoured by the cruel and insatiable Hades. Italy, Rome, and the Senate, constantly adhered to the cause of Gallienus. The transitions during this fourth seal-period from the cottage to the throne, and from the throne to the grave, or Hades, were rapid and perpetual. The election of these precarious emperors, their power and their death, were equally destructive to their subjects and adherents. The price of their fatal elevation was instantly paid to their troops, by an immense donative drawn from the bowels of the exhausted people—the pale horse. When they fell, they involved armies and provinces in their fall. How dreadful and terrible the significance of the saying of this seal, "there was given to Death and Hades authority to kill." Illustrative of this still further, it may be remarked, that there is extant a most savage mandate from Gallienus to one of his ministers after the suppression of Ingenuus, who had assumed the purple in Illyricum. "it is not enough," says he, "that you exterminate such as have appeared in arms: the chance of battle might have served me as effectually. The male sex of every age must be extirpated: provided that, in the execution of the children and old men, you can contrive means to save our reputation. Let every one die who has dropped an expression, who has entertained a thought against me, against me, the son of Valerian, the father and brother of so many princes. Remember that Ingenuus was made emperor: tear, kill, hew in pieces. I write to you with my own hand, and would inspire you with my own feelings."

Such were the "wild beasts" and such the "sword" which, in the period of the fourth seal, dismembered the provinces, and reduced the heathen dominion of Rome to the lowest pitch of disgrace and ruin, from which it seemed impossible that it should ever emerge. There still remain some particular facts which may serve to reflect a strong light on the horrid picture of this seal.

The situation of Sicily preserved it from the "wild beasts of the earth," whose dens were beyond the limit of "the Great City." The sufferings of that once flourishing and still fertile island were inflicted by baser savages within its own limits. A licentious crowd of slaves and peasants reigned for a while over the plundered country and renewed the memory of servile wars of more ancient times. The agriculture of Sicily was ruined; and as the principal estates belonged to the opulent senators of Rome, who often enclosed within a farm the territory of an old republic, this private injury probably affected the capital more deeply than all the conquests of the Goths or the Persians.

After the captivity of Valerian and the insolence of Gallienus had relaxed the authority of the laws, the Alexandrians abandoned themselves to the ungoverned rage of their passions. Philosophical Christianity had done no more for them than it has for Russians or Poles, or for Americans of the North and South. They made their unhappy country the theatre of civil war which continued (with a few short and suspicious truces) above twelve years. This was a commercial city of about six hundred thousand inhabitants on "the fourth of the earth," as well as Sicily. All intercourse between the several quarters of this afflicted city was cut off, every street was polluted with blood, every building of strength was converted into a citadel; nor did the tumult subside till a considerable part of Alexandria was irretrievably ruined, and reduced to a state of dreary solitude.

C. Death and Hades kill with Famine and Pestilence

It was revealed to John that among the agencies cooperating in the development of deadliness in the enemy with which the Bowman of the first seal would have successfully to contend, there would be famine and pestilence—so we render with Mr. Elliott the word, thanatos, on the authority of the Septuagint, in 2 Sam. 24:13, 15—“Or shall it be three days dever, pestilence?” where the LXX, translation is thanatos.

What the Spirit revealed to John, history informs us came to pass with a destructiveness by no means exaggerated in the imagery of the fourth seal. Death and Hades killed the people with famine and pestilence with terrible fatality. Gibbon tells us that there was a long and general famine of a very serious kind, and that it was the inevitable consequence of rapine and oppression, which extirpated the produce of the present and the hope of future harvests. Then, in the order of the seal, which places famine before pestilence, he proceeds to inform us that the famine generated pestilence. Famine, says he, is almost always followed by epidemical diseases, the effect of scanty and unwholesome food. Other causes must, however, have contributed to the furious plague, which, from the year 250 to A.D. 265, raged without interruption in every province, every city, and almost every family of the Roman empire. The fourth of the earth was not exempt. During some time five thousand persons died daily in Rome, and many towns that had escaped the sword and wild beasts of Death and Hades, were entirely depopulated. Above half the people of Alexandria had perished in their calamities; and if the analogy might be extended to other provinces, it might be concluded that war, pestilence and famine had consumed in a few years the half of the human species.

In conclusion of our exposition of this seal, though not the full end of the seal-period itself, which continued yet a few years developing results of Death and Hades' mission similar to those already before the reader, we may record in this place the testimonies of Sismondi, Schlegel, and Niebuhr concerning the deadly paleness of the Roman body politic consequent upon the judgment of this seal. Sismondi says, as quoted by Mr. Elliott: “Diocletian put an end to this long period of anarchy. But such a succession of invasions and civil wars, and so much suffering, disorder, and crime, had brought the empire into a state of mortal languor from which it never recovered.” The apocalypse which enables one to “see” below the surface of events, teaches me that “the Lamb,” not Diocletian, put an end to the long period of anarchy caused by Death and Hades by opening the fifth seal. Diocletian was only the instrument by which He effected it. The mortal languor was represented in the pale color of the horse ridden by Death. Speaking of the state of things after Diocletian's accession, A.D. 285, Niebuhr says: “After the cessation of the plague (‘which began to decrease in the time of Probus,’ between A.D. 276 and A.D. 282) the empire was suffering from general distress; and its condition was very much like that which followed after the cessation of the Black Death in the middle ages.” And Schlegel says: “The division of the empire among several sovereigns appeared then (in the reign of Diocletian) as afterwards, an inevitable and necessary evil. In other words, the several parts and members of the vast body of the Roman empire, which approached nearer and nearer to dissolution began to fall to pieces.” The rest of the events of this seal-period fall under the reigns of Claudius, Aurelian, Tacitus, Probus, Carus and his sons, and the first eighteen years of Diocletian, embracing a period of thirty-five years in which the blood of the people was poured out like water. Thus, the whole period of the fourth seal would be sixty-eight years, the result of which was the establishment of a new system of government, which was afterwards completed by the family of Constantine.

SECTION 5

THE PHILADELPHIAN STATE

VOL. 1., PP. 428, 446

The Sardian state of the Ecclesias, in which things spiritual were “ready to die,” merged into that in which the “few names,” representative of those who were not “dead,” were the “little strength”—the Philadelphian. The philosophical christianity and superstition of Satan’s synagogue everywhere prevalent. The “little strength” the salt that preserves the christian community from utter corruption—Apoc. 3:7.

ACT V.—SEAL-PERIOD FIFTH

Apoc. 6:9, 10, 11.

A period of great resistance unto blood on the part of the arrowless Bowman engaged in the conquest of the paganism of the Fourth Beast.

A.D. 303

“And when He opened the Fifth Seal, I saw underneath the Altar the souls of them who had been slain on account of the word of the Deity, and on account of the testimony which they held. 10. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, ‘Until then, O thou who art the Despot holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood upon them who dwell upon the earth? 11. And to them each were given white robes, and it was answered to them that they should repose yet a short time while both their fellow-servants and their brethren should be filled up, who are about to be killed even as they.’”

1. Why the Four Living Ones do not Appear

This fifth seal comes in between the expired political judgments of the fourth and the renewed judgments of the sixth. While, in the previous four seals, the Roman heathen were the subject acted upon in their visions, in this, the fifth, it is those who profess the faith of Christ who are the object against which the seal-judgment is directed. The horses and their riders have disappeared from view, and, what is more remarkable, the four living ones also. John no more hears a voice from them inviting him to “Come and see.” He is not called upon to “see” or contemplate the judgments of the Lamb upon the heathen people. He had been invited to “see” the fourth seal; and he might still see the result of those calamities working evil upon “that which hindered,” and preparing for it the last struggle which would eventuate in casting it out of “the heaven.” This was an object to be beheld by one of the eyes of the fourth living one—an object external to itself; but, in the fifth seal, those “brethren” and “fellow-servants,” of which he was a representative, were the subject of its judgments, and therefore an object to be beheld, and not spectators of the scene.

As already remarked, it is remarkable that neither of “the Four Living Ones full of eyes” is introduced into the imagery of the fifth and sixth seals. In the first four seals, they occupy a conspicuous place; but in the fifth and sixth they are not found. This peculiarity is certainly not accidental. The omission must be significative of something real in the situation of affairs pertaining to those engaged in “conquering” that which hindered the manifestation of the Man of Sin-power. We know, that the Four Living Ones are symbolical of the Heavenly Encampment, the imperium in imperio, the aggregation of the company separated from among the Gentiles for the Name; as opposed, or in active hostility, to that other encampment, or imperium, represented by the four horses under divers colors. The heavenly camp was the habitation of the Deity by his Spirit; not that his spirit was in all the individuals of the encampment; but that His Imperial Pavilion was in their midst, as the tent of the commanding general was in the midst of the Roman military camp. The Seven Asiatic Ecclesias as representative of all the militant ecclesias in the Greco-Latin Habitable, constituted this Heavenly Camp, with its divinely appointed standards of the Lion, the Ox, the Man, and the Eagle faces; and, I doubt not, that in the whole period of the first four seals, a period of two hundred and five years, “the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus,” understood that their body, nation, community, or militant association, in the general, was “signified” by those four remarkable figures. I am strengthened in this conviction by the following notable passage in a letter from the presbyters of the church, or ecclesia, in Rome to Cyprian and his brethren in Carthage. “Let us pray,” say they, “that those who have fallen (or lapsed from the faith) may become sensible of the greatness of the crime....and that they may not disturb the yet fluctuating state of the Ecclesia—lest they should appear to aggravate our distresses by exciting internally seditious and inflammatory commotions. Let them knock at the doors, but not break them. Let them go to the threshold of the Ecclesia, but not leap over it. Let them watch at the gates of the Heavenly Camp, but with that modesty which becomes those who remember they have been deserters. Let them arm themselves indeed with the weapons of humility, and resume that shield of faith which they dropped through fear of death; but so that they may be armed against the Devil, not against that very Ecclesia, which laments over their fall.” This was written in the middle of the third century, and in the fourth seal-period. The writers regarded the Ecclesia throughout the Roman world as “the Heavenly Camp” with gates. This idea they would derive from Apoc. 21:12, where “the gates” are revealed as twelve in number, and emblematic of the “twelve tribes of the children of Israel.” These gates are grouped in threes, according to the encampment of the tribes, four square, each three symbolized by the standard of Judah, Ephraim, Reuben, and Dan; or, the Lion, the Ox, the Man, and the Eagle, as exhibited in the Four Living Ones full of eyes. They regarded this Ecclesia-Camp as militant, and all its combatants as armed with “the shield of faith,” which those who became apostates, or “deserters,” threw away. But, why is this Heavenly Camp not symbolized in the fifth seal? First, I conceive, because its work was done at the expiration of the fourth seal; secondly, because its unity had been destroyed under that seal; and, thirdly, because in default of that unity, the Deity no longer resided in it by his Spirit.

First, the work of the Spirit through the undivided Christ in convincing pagans of “the truth as it is in Jesus” was finished. The agency employed in separating the heathen from the Roman superstition, consisted of philosophical disquisitions on idolatry, and denunciations of the terrors of the law upon them. They were exhorted to “believe and live;” and at the same time told to “even in the very exit of life pray for remission of sins, and implore the only living and true God with confession and faith: pardon is granted to him who confesses his sin; and saving grace from the divine goodness is conferred on the believer; and thus may a man pass from death to immortality in his very last moments.” This extract is from a letter of Cyprian, a model christian of the fourth seal-period, to Demetrian, a persecuting pagan in the Roman Africa; and given by Milner approvingly, as a specimen of his preaching to men, although profane and unconverted. Such preaching would do very well for the conversion of pagans to the Laodiceanism of the third or nineteenth centuries; but it would be of no use in regard to “the great salvation”—it could put no one in possession of the faith; and through the obedience of faith, of a right to eternal life in the kingdom of God. Such preaching might do for a cathedral, church, or conventicle, pulpit of our times; but not for preaching to be endorsed by the Spirit. The Spirit could not sanction such eloquent trash, and therefore he withdrew from the camp, and left it in the gloom of its own darkness. For this cause, the symbol of the Heavenly Camp is not found in the fifth seal. The Spirit had withdrawn from it as no longer fortified with the truth. The untraditionized word was not taught; and it had become the synagogue of the Satan, “after whose energy, and with all the deceivableness of unrighteousness,” the Lawless One was to be developed. Where the truth is not, there the Spirit is not; for “the Spirit is the truth.” This is the reason why the Spirit is not now with “the names and denominations of Christendom” in whole or part. They are destitute of the truth. It is not preached among them, nor known to them; and therefore not believed and obeyed. Hence, the churches of Christendom could not be represented by the Four Living Ones, as under the four seals. They do not constitute a Heavenly Camp; but “the Great City” to be besieged and taken when the Four Living Ones shall plant their standard-faces against it, in the resurrection and regeneration. They brought the Great City to ruin—to pale-horse distress, in the period of the four seals; and again, under the Seventh Vial, the same “great city” under its papal and ten-horn constitution, will be demolished by them, and finally superseded by their Heavenly Camp, from which there will then be no deserters who have dropped the shield of faith; and none within to be more zealous for traitors, than the truth.

Secondly, the symbol of the Spirit in the midst of the saints does not appear in the imagery of the fifth seal, because the unity of the camp had been broken up in the fourth seal period. In this period there were several severe persecutions of the christians; and also, prosperous intervals in a worldly sense. In peaceful times, multitudes forsook the temples of the gods, and joined the ecclesias under the influence of their families, and of such preaching as Cyprian’s. Some, doubtless, through study of the scriptures, and the aid of faithful men, came to an intelligent faith and obedience. These were the “few names” of the fourth seal period, on account of whom, and with whom, the Spirit still occupied the encampment. They were the salt by which the lump was seasoned; and in whose absence the camp was no longer tenable by the Spirit.

The multitudes who forsook the gods very much resembled the multitudes who forsake the world (!) when, in modern times, they “get religion,” and become papists, protestants, and sectarians. The one and the other forsake not the gods and the world with the intention of enduring torments, or of holding on to their profession at the cost of liberty, chattels, or life: but so long as it is safe and pleasant, or not too inconvenient, they are willing to rejoice in a more reasonable and decent calling, than in a declining and vulgar superstition like the Roman, or in the wickedness of what they call “the world.” The persecutions of Maximin, Gallus, and Valerian, all occurred under the fourth seal. When any of these befell the encampment, multitudes turned traitors and deserted to the enemy. They dropped the shield of faith, and were pierced by the fiery darts of the wicked. The emperors ordered all who had become christians to sacrifice to the gods, and to renounce and curse the Lord Jesus; or to be tormented and put to death, if they refused. This was a trial multitudes were unequal to. The ecclesia in Carthage was numerous. At the beginning of the Decian persecution Cyprian says, “It stands firm in the faith in general;” but when it was over its declension was most deplorable. It had been sifted by the storm so much that the greatest part of its professors had apostatized. The case of Carthage will exemplify that of very many other ecclesias. The apostates were innumerable; they forsook the Heavenly Camp in crowds, and sought safety and protection in the pardon offered by the magistrates to all who should recant.

But, when peace was restored to the Heavenly Camp, multitudes of these deserters besieged its gates for readmittance. Within the camp, there were two classes of professors; one, consisting of “the few names in Sardis which had not defiled their garments;” the other, consisting of all the rest, who “had a name that they were living, but were dead”—Apoc. 3:4, 1. The latter class was favorable to the readmittance of the deserters, or “lapsed;” the minority was determinedly opposed to it. The head of the majority was Cornelius the bishop of the ecclesia in Rome; and the leader of the “few names” in the Sardinian state, was Novatian, who was elected bishop in Rome in opposition to him about A.D. 251. He is acknowledged by his opponents to have been no heretic; and to have excelled in genius, learning, and eloquence. No immoralities have been proved against him, though he did not escape the evil speeches and maledictions of the majority; though it is certain, that while he continued a presbyter of the ecclesia in Rome, his fame was not only without a blot, but very fair in the camp. He was put to death for the faith in the reign of Valerian.

It will be well here to sound in the ears of the reader the voice of history concerning the state of the majority which the Spirit says had a name that it was living, while it was really dead; and the division of which is charged upon Novatius as a crime.

“The most respectable writers of that age,” says Mosheim, “have put it out of the power of an historian to spread a veil over the enormities of ecclesiastical rulers. For, though several yet continued to exhibit to the world illustrious examples of primitive piety and Christian virtue (these were “the few names even in Sardis”), yet many were sunk in luxury and voluptuousness; puffed up with vanity, arrogance, and ambition; possessed with a spirit of contention and discord, and addicted to many other vices that cast an undeserved reproach upon the holy religion of which they were the unworthy professors and ministers. In many places the bishops assumed a princely authority, particularly those who had the greatest number of churches under their inspection, and who presided over the most opulent assemblies. They appropriated to their evangelical functions the splendid ensigns of temporal majesty. A throne, surrounded with ministers, exalted above his equals the servant of the meek and lowly Jesus; and sumptuous garments dazzled the eyes and the minds of the multitude into an ignorant veneration for their arrogated authority. Presbyters followed their example, neglected their duties, and abandoned themselves to the indolence and delicacy of an effeminate and luxurious life. Deacons imitated their superiors, and the effects of a corrupt ambition were spread through every rank of the sacred order.” In support of this statement, we have the testimony of Eusebius, who was contemporary with what he describes. “Through too much liberty,” says he, “the Christians grew negligent and slothful, envying and reproaching one another—waging, as it were, civil wars among themselves, bishops quarrelling with bishops, and the people divided into parties. Hypocrisy and deceit were grown to the highest pitch of wickedness. They were become so insensible, as not to think of appeasing the divine anger, but, like atheists, they thought the world destitute of any providential government or care, thus adding one crime to another. The bishops themselves had cast off almost all concern about religion; they were perpetually contending with one another, and did nothing but quarrel, and threaten, and envy, and hate one another; they were full of ambition and tyrannically used their power.”

Such was the state into which the ecclesias had fallen in the second half of the third century, against which Novatian protested. Many, in all the Roman empire—Christadelphians, in contrast to “Christians,” a name disgraced then as now—united with him in bearing a noble testimony against the prevailing corruption in the camp; and by so doing acquired the name of Novatianists. They were also termed Puritans, or in Greek, Cathari—a name bestowed on them by their adversaries, who reproached them for what they considered their excessive severity of discipline and exclusiveness.

The ecclesiastical historian, Socrates, says that “Novatius separated from the Roman Church because Cornelius the bishop received into communion believers who had sacrificed during the persecution which the emperor Decius had raised against the ecclesia. Having seceded on this account, on being afterwards elevated to the episcopacy by such prelates as entertained similar sentiments, he wrote to all the ecclesias insisting that they should not admit to the sacred mysteries those who had sacrificed; but exhorting them to repentance, leave the pardoning of their offence to God, who has the power to forgive all sin. These letters made different impressions on the parties in the various provinces to whom they were addressed, according to their several dispositions and judgments. The exclusion from participation in the mysteries (Lord’s Supper) of those who after baptism had committed any sin ’unto death,’ appeared to some a cruel and merciless course; but others thought it just and necessary for the maintenance of discipline, and the promotion of greater devotedness of life. In the midst of the agitation of this important question, letters arrived from Cornelius the bishop, promising indulgence to delinquents after baptism. On these two persons writing thus contrary to one another, and each confirming his own procedure by the testimony of the divine word, as it usually happens every one identified himself with that view which favored his previous habits and inclinations. Those who had pleasure in sin, encouraged by the license thus granted, took occasion from it to revel in every species of criminality. The Phrygians, however, appear to be more temperate than other nations, and are seldom guilty of swearing. The Scythians and Thracians are naturally of a very irritable disposition, while the inhabitants of the East are addicted to sensual pleasures. But the Paphlagonians and Phrygians are prone to neither of these vices; nor are the sports of the circus nor theatrical exhibitions in much estimation among them even to the present day (A.D. 445). And this will account, as I conceive, for these people, as well as others of a similar temperament and habit in the West, so readily assenting to the letters written by Novatius. Fornication and adultery are regarded among the Paphlagonians and Phrygians as the grossest enormities; and it is well known that there is no race of men upon the face of the earth who more rigidly govern their passions in this respect.”

This testimony of Socrates shows that morality and virtue were on the side of the Novatians; and even their catholic adversaries did not accuse them of unsoundness in the faith. Cornelius, the bishop of the church in Rome, styles Novatius, “that artful and malicious beast;” and denounces him in his letters for his artifice and duplicity, his perjuries and falsehoods, his dissocial and savage character. But this proves nothing against Novatius or his friends, and is prima facie evidence that the spirit in him, Cornelius, was the spirit of the flesh, which afterwards became so rampant in his successors the Popes. From Eusebius’ account, Novatius and his adherents appear to have been excommunicated by a council assembled in Rome; and the course pursued against him there evinces more of party malignity than of zeal for the truth in faith and discipline. But it did not succeed in suppressing the Novatians, who prospered in Rome considerably. Socrates says, that A.D. 421, Cornelius’ representative was one Celestinus. “This prelate,” says he, “took away the churches from the Novatians at Rome also, and obliged Rusticula their bishop to hold his meetings secretly in private houses. Until this time that sect had flourished exceedingly in the imperial city of the West, possessing many churches there, which were attended by large congregations. But envy attacked them also, as soon as the Roman episcopate, like that of Alexandria, extended itself beyond the limits of the jurisdiction of priesthood, and degenerated into the present state of secular domination. For thenceforth the Roman bishops would not suffer even those who perfectly agreed with them in matters of faith, and whose purity of doctrine they extolled, to enjoy the privilege of assembling in peace, but stripped them of all they possessed. From such tyrannical bigotry the Constantinopolitan prelates kept themselves free, inasmuch as they not only permitted the Novatians to hold their assemblies within the city, but treated them with every mark of Christian regard.”

The position assumed by the Novatians was perfectly scriptural. Sins unto death disqualify for inheritance in the kingdom of the Deity, and therefore for fellowship with those who are “the Heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to them who love him,” or obey him; which is the same thing, for “love is the fulfilling of law.” There can be no sin more deadly than that of a christian sacrificing to other gods, and cursing Christ, for the sake of present ease and comfort. Paul settles this clearly enough to the minds of all who receive the word as the end of all controversy. “If they who were once enlightened,” says he, “shall fall away, it is impossible to renew them again unto a change of mind—eis metanoian, seeing they crucify again for themselves the Son of the Deity, and expose him to public shame.” This is bearing thorns and briars; and such, Paul saith, “is rejected, and nigh to cursing; whose end is to be burned”—Heb. 6:4–8. For an enlightened man to sacrifice to the gods of Greece and Rome, was for him to “sin wilfully”—a sin for which no sacrifice is provided in the system of righteousness devised by the Deity. It is therefore “a sin unto death;” and for that—for pardon of that, John discountenanced all petition: “there is a sin unto death; I say not that ye shall pray for it”—1 John 5:16. Of sins of this sort, Paul says: “If we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised Moses’ law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of the Deity, and hath counted the Blood of the Covenant wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace”—Heb. 10:26. The christian who sacrificed to the gods of the Gentiles, in so doing, “trod under foot the Son of the Deity, and counted the Blood of the Covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing.” The gospel of the kingdom has no good news for such. They have denied Christ; and Paul saith again, “If we deny him, he also will deny us”—2 Tim. 2:12; and Jesus himself says, “Whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father who is in heaven” (Matthew 10:33).

It is clear, then, in relation to “the lapsed,” apostates, or deserters from the Heavenly Camp, the Novatians were in the right, though they were in the minority. Cornelius and his Council who excommunicated them, in so doing, turned the truth into the streets a houseless wanderer. Having ejected Christ, who, when on earth, said, “I am the truth,” the Spirit who spoke to the ecclesias, forsook them, and left them to their own waywardness. Having things now all their own way, they received again into the bosom of what they called “Mother Church,” apostates, adulterers, drunkards, lovers of pleasures, &c., upon profession of sorrow, but without amendment of life. Well might the Spirit say to such “churches:” “Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.” The institutions and worship of such a dead body could be of no worth. The “few names in Sardis,” called Novatians, were satisfied of that, and therefore they rejected the baptism, and ordination of the so-called “Mother.” They repudiated Jezebel and all her ordinances; so that they reimmersed and reordained all who came over to them from the majority, which now began to designate itself the HOLY CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Here then were two leading and rival divisions in antipagan society, both claiming the christian name, with the addition of Catholic and Puritan, as the names distinguishing their several hosts in the long warfare waged between them. These antagonist camps were in active conflict during the fifth seal; how then could the Four Living Ones, who symbolized the undivided heavenly camp, be introduced into the imagery of the fifth seal, inasmuch as in that and the sixth seal period, the original organization of the camp no longer obtained? The time was rapidly advancing after the close of the fourth seal, when the Spirit would fulfil his threat of spuing them out of his mouth; and of organizing a new advocacy of the truth—a protest, not so much against paganism, as against Laodiceanism incorporated in the Synagogue of Satan, styled in the language of the Apostasy, THE HOLY APOSTOLIC CATHOLIC CHURCH—Mother and Mistress of all the churches of Antichristendom.

Thirdly, the unity of the Heavenly Camp having been broken by this great schism, the blame of which before the Lamb would rest on them who sympathized with the deserters who denied him, and who excommunicated the friends of purity and good morals, the Deity could no longer reside in it by his Spirit; the symbol of the four living ones consequently could not be introduced into the imagery of the fifth seal. But though as a community they were dead, yet we learn from the epistle to Sardis, that “even” in that dead community there were a few living ones who had not defiled their garments. These were Christadelphians. The Deity walked in these. His spirit was in them, because Christ was in them by faith. “Know ye not,” saith the apostle, “that Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates,” or without judgment. “I am the truth,” saith Jesus. “Let Christ dwell in your hearts by faith,” saith Paul: from all which it is manifest that every real christian has Christ in him; and that he has Christ in him when he intelligently believes the truth, and by obeying that truth, puts on Christ, and walks in him by walking in the truth. Now, as “the spirit is the truth,” and “my words are spirit and life,” it follows that the spirit of the Deity resides in all in whom the truth and His words influentially resides. In this sense, the spirit may have dwelt in a few among the Sardian dead, who did not actually separate themselves with the Novatians. As the Spirit had not till the sixth seal-period spued the ecclesias out of his mouth, there would till then continue to be some living among the dead; and according to the proportion and quality of these living, would be the spirit-possession of each ecclesia. The Sardian state under the fifth seal merged into the Philadelphian; and the “few names” of the former, became the “little strength” of the latter. This little strength was derived from the truth believed, as before explained. For there to be a little strength in the Philadelphian state was for there to be a little spirit still; for there is no christian, spiritual, or moral strength where there is no spirit or power. The gospel is the power of the Deity for salvation; but it is not power to numb or deaden the pain of torment inflicted upon the bodies of the saints when tortured by the cruel pagans, and afterwards by the more savage Laodiceans. It is probable that with the “little strength” there was also a little physical power still possessed by the subjects of that little strength by which the torture they were called on to endure was deadened. The only evidence of the spirit being possessed in the fifth seal-period in any other than a doctrinal sense as before explained, is the question and answer it contains. Had the four living ones been in the imagery, we should have known that the Spirit, or “the Lamb,” still occupied the camp, plaguing from thence the Roman Horse, and fortifying the bodies of his servants to the patient endurance of the most cruel torments inflicted upon them in the good fight. But they are not there; so that we can only infer that His “grace” was not entirely withdrawn, and was still sufficient for the emergencies of the few, who, in the fifth seal period “kept his word, and denied not his name.”

I may remark here, that in the first four seals, the four living ones were all present in the arrangements of each, though only one is specially indicated by ordinal number. This presence of all the four in each seal is intimated in the first verse, “I heard from one out of the four living ones, saying:” and though only one is named in the second seal, yet in the third a voice is said to be sounded in the midst of the four about the taxation of wheat and barley. They were all four present in reality; and the Lamb, or Spirit, was in the midst of them, attacking the Roman people and empire with sword, taxation, famine, pestilence, and beasts of the earth. And the pagans were not altogether unaware of this, for they charged the miseries of the times upon the christians. And they had unquestionably to do with them as being associated with the Lamb who opened and supervised the seals. Cyprian, in his letter to Demetrian, a heathen, endeavored to persuade him of the unreasonableness of the charge. But there was more reason in it than Cyprian knew; and if he had known, he might have made a powerful argument in favor of christianity, on account of so reasonable a fact.

Treating of the first eighteen years of Diocletian’s reign, and therefore the eighteen concluding years of the fourth seal-period, Milner says, after Eusebius: “During this period he was extremely indulgent to the christians. His wife Prisca and his daughter Valeria. were christians in some sense secretly. The eunuchs of his palace anti his most important officers were christians; and their wives and families openly professed the gospel. Christians held honorable offices in various parts of the empire; innumerable crowds attended christian worship; the old buildings could no longer receive them; and in all cities wide and large edifices were erected.”

The rider of the first seal was still “conquering” paganism; and a state of things had obtained indicating that the time was not far off when the coronal wreath or stephan, would adorn his brow. If the strength and beauty of christianity were to be measured by secular prosperity, here might be fixed the era of its greatness. “But, on the contrary, the era of its actual declension must be dated in the pacific part of Diocletian’s reign. During the whole third century the work of God, in purity and power, had been tending to decay. The connection with philosophers was one of the principal causes. Outward peace, and secular advantage completed the corruption. Ecclesiastical discipline was now relaxed exceedingly. Bishops and people were in a state of malice. Endless quarrels were fomented among contending parties; and ambition and covetousness had in general gained the ascendancy in the christian church. Some there were who mourned in secret, and strove in vain to stop the abounding torrent of the evil.” These were the “little strength,” and “the brethren” of the fifth seal. For the space of thirty years no bishop, or priest, among the catholics appeared eminent for piety, zeal, or labor. Eusebius, indeed, mentions the names and characters of several bishops; but he extols only their learning and philosophy, or their moral qualities. “Notwithstanding this decline, both of zeal and of principle; still christian worship was constantly attended; and the number of nominal converts was increasing after the fashion of our time; but the faith of Christ itself appeared a mere ordinary affair. And “here terminated,” says Milner, “or nearly so, as far as appears, that great first effusion of the Spirit of God which began at the day of Pentecost. Human depravity effected throughout a general decay of godliness; and one generation of men elapsed with very slender proofs of the spiritual presence of Christ with the church.”

2. The Altar

John informs us, that when the Lamb opened the fifth seal he saw THE ALTAR and souls underneath it. There are two apocalyptic altars pertaining to the apocalyptic temple—the thusiasterion of the priest’s court, and of the Holy Place. The one seen by John in this seal was the thusiasterion of the Court of the Priests, where sacrifices were burnt, and the blood thereof poured out at the altar’s base.

A thusiasterion was a structure of earth, unhewn stone, or brass, elevated in an area, upon which the bodies of slain animals were burned. The burned bodies consumed into smoke were whole burnt offerings; and typified, or represented the utter destruction of Sin’s Flesh, which sin had been condemned in the flesh of the victim, by the abstraction therefrom, or the pouring out of the soul of the flesh in the slaughter of the victim. “The soul of the flesh is in the blood.” The blood covers upon the soul, or life; therefore in pouring out the blood, the soul, or life, of the animal was poured out unto death; and the blood being poured at the base of the altar, the soul was there, and the altar was considered as covering it; hence the phrase “underneath the altar the souls of the slain.” The only difference between soul and blood sacrificially, is blood flowing in the veins and arteries; and blood in the sacrificial bowl. In the latter, it is a coagulated mass unfit for the purpose of the body; in the former, it is a fluid maintained in fluidity by the electro-nervous, or vital, energy generated by the processes of digestion and respiration. When the blood is shed it soon loses its fluidity. The electro-nervous energy, soul, or life evaporates, and the blood becomes solid, or concrete. It is physiologically decorous, therefore, in hieroglyphic writing to make a distinction between soul and blood, and to give the intellectuality of the scene to the soul, as in the fifth seal.

In patriarchal and Mosaic times, when things instituted possessed a typical significance, altars were designated by divine and highly expressive titles. In Gen. 33:18–20, we learn that Jacob erected one at Shalem, and called it AIL-ELIHAI-YISRAAIL—the Strength of the Mighty Ones of Power’s Prince. As Jacob did not consider the work of his own hands was this STRONG ONE; in its being testified that he called the altar by this name, we are instructed that the prophet (and Jacob was a prophet as well as Abraham and Isaac) erected it as a type, or symbol, of Him the Strength or Power, who promised him such great things with his Seed—the Mighty Ones of Jacob.

Again, Moses built an altar after the battle with Amalek at Rephidim, and named it, Yahweh-nissi; “and he said, Because his hand is against the throne of Yah, there is war for Yahweh with Amalek from generation to generation”—Exod. 17:15. Here, the altar’s name is He shall be my banner. Who shall be? He who shall be the Deity manifested in flesh, the Mighty One of Jacob. He shall be Israel’s Banner against all the Powers that lift the hand against kais Yah, the throne of Him who shall be; for there shall be war against such till their thrones become the conqueror’s.

But, in the building of altars the will of the Deity was that they should be of earth; or if of stone, that the stone should not be hewn. “An altar of earth thou shalt make unto me, and shalt sacrifice thereon thy burnt offerings ... ; in all places where I record my name I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee. And if thou wilt make me an altar of stone, thou shalt not build it of hewn stone; for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it. Neither shalt thou go up by steps unto mine altar, that thy nakedness be not discovered thereon—Exod. 20:24. The permanent altar was made of wood, overlaid with brass; and when cleansed, anointed, and sanctified, it was Most Holy; and whatsoever touched it was holy. Now, all this was significant of the substance, Christ, who was “the end of the law.” The Holy Spirit signified something that he regarded important in his system of wisdom, in commanding an altar to be made of earth, or of unhewn stone; and in forbidding a tool to be lifted upon it. The things commanded were “a parabola for the time then present”—a riddle, the meaning of which would be found in the realities developed in the Christ. He is declared by Paul to be the christian altar. “We have an altar,” says he in Heb. 12:10, which in being cleansed by the blood of Jesus is made identical with him. He was the altar of earth, or of unhewn stone; and in his making, or generation, he was begotten, “not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of the Deity.” To affirm, that in his generation he was begotten of Joseph, is to “pollute him.” In admitting his altarship, and at the same time affirming his paternity to be of Joseph, and not of the Deity, as related in Luke, is to make Joseph the builder of an altar of hewn stone—a polluted altar, upon which a man’s nakedness had been discovered.

Jesus being set forth by the Deity a propitiatory for the remission of sins that are passed through faith in his blood (Rom. 3:25) exhibits him in relation to the believer of the truth as an Altar—the real Ailelohai-Yisraail and Yahweh-nissi. The Word made Flesh was at once the victim, the altar, and the priest. The Eternal Spirit-Word was the High Priestly Offerer of His own Flesh, whose character was without spot—“holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners;” “who knew no sin;” yet whose nature was in all points like ours—“sin’s flesh,” in which dwells no good thing—Heb. 9:14; 7:26; 2 Cor. 5:21; Rom. 8:3; 7:18; Heb. 2:14–17. The Flesh made by the spirit out of Mary’s substance, and rightly claimed therefore in Psalm 16:8; Acts 2:31, as His flesh, is the Spirit’s Anointed Altar, cleansed by the blood of that flesh when poured out unto death “on the tree.” This flesh was the victim offered—the sacrifice. Suspended on the tree by the voluntary offering of the Spirit-Word (John 10:18), “sin was condemned in the flesh,” when the soul-blood thereof was poured out unto death. The Spirit-Word made his soul thus an offering for sin (Isa. 53:10); and by it sanctified the Altar-Body on the tree. It was now a thusiasterion—an Altar Most Holy; and all that touch it are holy; and without touching it none are holy. This then is the Altar that decorates the Court of the Priests in the temple-system of apocalyptic symbols. It is the mystical Christ-Altar, to the horns of which the sacrifice is bound (Psa. 118:27). The magnitude of this altar is equal to the One Body of which the Lord Jesus is the head; so that all who are “in him” “wait at the altar, and are partakers with the altar,” because they “eat of the sacrifice” (1 Cor. 9:13; 10:17, 18): they “eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, which is meat indeed, and drink indeed.” This eating and drinking is intellectual. What we read, or hear and understand, and believe, we eat, and digest, and assimilate, and grow thereby. “He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood,” saith Jesus, “dwelleth in me, and I in him”—John 6:56. Here is a mutual indwelling between Christ and the believer. When the enlightened believer has got into Christ, he dwelleth in him, and feeds upon his flesh and blood—he is within the Altar, and partaking with it. He has touched the Most Holy, and is therefore holy, or a saint.

But how doth a sinner get into the Altar so as to be within it, and to be a worshipper therein? (Apoc. 11:1). The only way is by his “believing the things concerning the kingdom of the Deity, and of the name of the Anointed Jesus;” and, if he believes these things with a “faith that works by love” and “purifies the heart,” by being immersed into the Name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:12; Matt. 28:19). In passing through this process, the sinner, who is by nature “dead in trespasses and sins,” is quickened by the word understood and believed; word-life, or a new spirit, has entered into him, which is the spirit of a ready and willing obedience to all that is commanded; and the first command for such an enlightened sinner is, “be immersed upon (epi) the name of the Anointed Jesus into (eis) remission of sins.” In doing this, his love-working faith is counted to him for repentance and remission of sins, and he is inducted into the Altar. In passing through the water he passes through the Laver to the Altar; and in the passage, he becomes sprinkled in heart by the blood of sprinkling, which is the blood of the Altar-Covenant, through the faith which he has in the doctrine concerning it (Heb. 10:22; 12:24; 1 Pet. 1:2; 2:24). Such an one is no longer a sinner because he has touched the Altar; and “whatever toucheth it is holy,” or a saint. Now, to saints within the altar the apostle saith, “all sons of Deity are ye in the Anointed Jesus through the faith; for as many as into Christ have been immersed, have put on Christ ... and if ye be Christ’s then ye are Abraham’s Seed, and heirs according to promise (Gal. 3:26–29). They, are in the Altar-Name. There is a remarkable sentence in one of Ignatius’ epistles, indicative of this subject being better understood in the reign of Trajan, A.D. 107, than contemporary with the fifth seal, or now. “Let no one,” says he, “mistake; if any man is not within the Altar, he is deprived of the bread of the Deity;” which is equivalent to saying, if any man be not in Christ—if Christ be not the covering of his nakedness, he cannot obtain eternal life in the kingdom of God. From these premises, then, the reader will easily comprehend the phraseology of the fifth seal concerning “souls underneath the Altar.” When “the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus,” and therefore “within the Altar,” die, and return to their parent earth without violence, they are “underneath the Altar,” sleeping in Jesus,” “dwelling in the dust,” “sleeping in the dust of the earth:” but if they are made to lie “underneath the Altar” by the blood-shedding cruelty of the enemy, their souls are said, as in the language of the fifth seal, to cry with a great or loud voice for judicial vengeance on the murderers, who poured out their soul-blood unto death. Abel’s blood shed by Cain is said to have a voice, and to speak—“the voice of the bloods of thy brother cry to me from the ground” (Gen. 4:10); and the blood of Jesus, shed by his brethren of the flesh, “speaks better things than the blood of Abel” speaks. It speaks according to the teaching of the revealed mystery, pardon to the guilty, and life eternal to the pardoned; but the blood of Abel only speaks of vengeance against Cain, not of pardon even to him. Now, if this about Abel had been hieroglyphically represented as in this seal, “the voice of the bloods” would have been styled “the soul of Abel who had been slain, saying, until when dost thou not judge and avenge my blood upon Cain?” John, with the eyes of his understanding enlightened by the Lamb’s messenger, two hundred and five years before the seal, saw the souls of them that had been slain, lying underneath the Altar, and heard their great voice. This of course, was a shadowy representation of what would be; for multitudes of the souls had no existence when he saw the vision. The voice of their blood was great, for, contrary to Gibbon’s supposition, their number was great, who had “resisted unto blood striving against the sin” of apostasy in sacrificing to the gods and in denying Jesus.

3. “Until When?”

The soul underneath the Altar, though really dead and therefore unconscious (for “the dead know not anything” Ecc. 9:5), are represented as speaking. They are supposed to utter a demand for vengeance upon their enemies, whose death-dealing power had, after a long interval of peace, broken out against the “partakers with the “Altar” afresh. “UNTIL WHEN, O Despot, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood, on them that dwell on the earth?” They desired to know the time when he that went forth conquering with the bow should be stephaned with conquest over the “Great Red Dragon” in the heaven; “red” with the blood of them “slain for the word of the Deity, and for the testimony which they held” against paganism, and the corruptions in the world through lust. The religious war between their Camp and the Dragon had continued over two hundred years since John’s exile; how much longer, they are hieroglyphically supposed to inquire in the interest of their camp, was the sanguinary conflict to endure before “the Dragon and his Angels,” who rent them with his “Iron teeth,” and “Brazen Claws,” should be ejected from “the heaven?”: How long till their travailing community should appear in “the heaven?" to give the stephanizing blow to the blood-stained adversary, that, being bruised, he might no more send souls with cruel violence underneath the Altar? Their inquiry had no reference to the time when the Lord Jesus should destroy the Man of Sin-power with the spirit of his mouth, and with the brightness of his presence; for it was not believed by those living in the first five seal-periods, that the Man of Sin-power had yet been born of the Woman. Their supposed anxiety was about the issue of the conflict, which had placed them "as souls slain" underneath the Altar—the fall of political paganism, and the substitution of a power that would feed and nourish them in civil, ecclesiastical, and social prosperity and peace. They called for divine vengeance "on them who dwelt on the earth," in the period of the fifth seal; not on those who dwelt in Persia, Germany, or in other countries beyond the Euphrates, Rhine, and Danube; for these were beyond the limits of "the earth" at that stage of apocalyptic development. It was the Dragon's earth, or territory, that was pre-eminently the arena of their conquering unto victory; and they sought hieroglyphically to know for the encouragement of the living saints, when that victory would be?

The answer they received was truly encouraging to all at the time, who, in studying the seals, were able to "see," or discern, the signs of the times. The purpose of the Dragon authorities during the fifth seal-period was to extinguish the name of christianity. Indeed, so satisfied were they that they had given it its quietus, that two pillars were erected in Spain, on one of which was the inscription: "Diocletian Jovian, Maximian, Herculaeus, Caesares Augusti, for having extended the Roman empire in the East and West, and for having extinguished the name of Christians, who brought the Republic to ruin." On the other thus: "Diocletian, &c., for having adopted Galerius in the East, for having everywhere abolished the superstition of Christ, for having extended the worship of the gods." The idea of these emperors was, that the terrible calamities that had befallen the Roman people in the years previous to the celebration of their triumph commemorating their success in rescuing the distressed empire from tyrants and barbarian "wild beasts," Nov. 20, A.D. 303, styled by Gibbon "that memorable era,"—they judged, I say, that the pale-horse ruin had been brought upon the State by the christians. And, when we consider into what extreme degeneracy of faith and practice—as appears from the seven epistles descriptive of as many states typified by each ecclesia, and by history already quoted—they had fallen; it is not at all unlikely, that multitudes of them had plunged into the roaring waters of Dragon politics, and by their influence, like the equally demoralized abolitionists of our day, increased the confusion of the times. These emperors regarded them as a sort of copperhead faction among politicians, who only waited a favorable opportunity to seize sovereign power, when they would abolish the worship of the gods, to which they were themselves devoted. This was, no doubt, a correct view of their political relations. They had become like our modern pietists—political pietists. The professors of our day all pretend to be christians, yet they are as intensely devoted to politics as the old heathen. What popish, protestant, and sectarian politicians now are, the professed christians were in the fifth seal-period under these emperors. Of course, we except from this remark, the "Little Strength" that "kept the word, and denied not the name" of the Spirit, who addressed the ecclesias. Of this sort there are none, and from the very constitution of modern names and denominations of pietists, there can be none, among papists, episcopalians, lutherans, presbyterians, methodists, and such like. These are all Sardian and Laodicean. They have a name among themselves that they are living, and are dead; in fact, they never were anything else but dead—"dead in trespasses and sins;" they say, "they are rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing; and know not that they were wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked;" though with hypocritical words in the exercise of their stereotyped formalism, they claim brotherhood with every criminal they inter, and confess that they are "miserable offenders" in whom "there is no health." There is not an atom of life or strength in such "christians" so-called as these. During the fourth and fifth seals professors of this type abounded in the military and civil service of the Dragon; and their presence there was a source of irritation and annoyance to those emperors, who were fanatically devoted to the gods. They persecuted them, and sought to exterminate the hated name they bore; and if we were to believe the Spanish pillar inscriptions, and that of the Diocletian medal “no mine christianorum deleta,” we should conclude, that the judgments of the fifth seal had accomplished the sanguinary work. But, they did succeed in turning multitudes to the gods, and so extending their worship; and, in a like sense to the extinguishing the name of Whig from the executive, legislature, and armies of the North; so the name of christian was extinguished from the court, and military, and civil service of Diocletian, Maximian, and Galerius. Whigs and Democrats became Federals and Abolitionists according to the safety and profitableness of the change; so the servants of these emperors, became Jovians and Herculeans, worshipping the fortunes of their imperial masters, rather than incur the dangerous liabilities that pertained to a loyal and faithful adhesion to the “Despot” who is “holy and true.”

But, the souls underneath the Altar, slain, and reposing in the dust—those of the slain in previous times who were in very deed saints and faithful in the anointed Christ-Altar, and who had been killed by the Dragon authorities—“them dwelling upon the earth;”—are hieroglyphically represented as desiring to know, “until when” the sanguinary conflict was to continue undetermined—that conflict, in which they had been “conquering” though they had fallen in the war, but in which their camp had not yet succeeded “to conquer?” This question is figuratively suggested in fulfilment in the period of the ten day-years tribulation succeeding, A.D. 303—Apoc. 2:10. This has to be remembered that the reply may be appreciated. It was not how long from the time of John’s exile in Patmos; but how long from the termination of the fourth and the opening of the fifth seal to the judicial avengement of their blood upon the Dragon and his angels then in the heaven of Daniel’s Fourth Beast; and making such sanguinary havoc upon those within the Altar, but not then as yet underneath it as to cause three Dragon imperial friends aforesaid, to declare that “the name of the christians was extinguished.” “It was answered to them,” says the Spirit, “that they should repose yet a short time, chronon mikron, while heos hou, both their fellowservants and their brethren should be filled up, who are about to be killed even as they.” This indicates that from the opening of the seal there was to be a period of soul-blood shedding by the Dragon power; and that when this sanguinary work should be over—a work that would be finished in “a short time,” then the judicial vengeance should be manifested. History shows that this “short time,” reached to A.D. 312–13, when this severest of all persecutions of christians by the power of the pagan government of the Fourth Beast, was put an end to, by the deposition and death of Maxentius and Maximin by the victorious Constantine and Licinius.

4. White Robes

“And there were given to them each white robes,” says John, stolai leukai. These were symbolically given to the souls already slain, and reposing underneath the Altar of Sacrifice. They were stoles, or external vestments reaching to the feet, like to that with which the Son of Man was invested, when John saw him in the midst of the Seven Lightstands burning with spirit-oil (Apoc. 1:13; Dan. 7:9); and like to those holy garments worn by the High Priest in which he appeared before the Ark in the Most Holy Place. Kings and priests were arrayed in white robes “for glory and for beauty;” they are therefore symbols of worthiness on the part of those who receive them; of their being exalted to kingly and priestly honors and glory; and consequently, in the case before us, of the deliverance of these symbolical souls from prostration underneath the Altar, by resurrection, and of an incorruptible investiture, when they shall be “clothed upon with their house” or white robe “which is from heaven ... that mortality may be swallowed up of life”—2 Cor. 4:2–4.

This was especially promised to the “few names in Sardis,” because they had “not defiled their garments”—“they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy”—Apoc. 3:4. This shows that the white is symbolical of the worthiness of the clothed. And again, in the same place, “He that overcomes, the same shall be clothed in white raiment”—showing that the white robe is emblematical of victory. Hence, “O Death, where is thy sting? O Hades, where is thy victory? Thanks be to the Deity who giveth us the victory,” or white robe, “through our Lord Jesus Christ” (1 Cor. 15:55, 57). When, therefore, in the Apocalypse, personages are emblematically clothed with white raiment, it signifies that they represent persons who have been raised from among the dead to incorruptibility and life, which have become to them the “spiritual body” of the eternal state. Thus, the twenty-four elders sitting upon their thrones are “clothed in white raiment” (ch. 4:4). These are a symbolical twenty-four; and among those they represent are the souls underneath the Altar to whom the white raiment is promised, and therefore emblematically given. A soul underneath the Altar and a soul sitting upon a throne, though one and the same person, is that soul in two different states and in times far apart. A soul, whose blood is poured out at the bottom of the Christ-Altar of sacrifice in the fifth seal period, to whom a white robe is dramatically given, fifteen or sixteen hundred years after, as we may suppose, is seen by John alive again and reigning with Christ a thousand years (ch. 20:4); and this conjunction of souls with Christ in preparation to assert their rights, and to take possession of their millennial thrones, is symbolized by the twenty-four presbyters in white, in association with the Heavenly Camp, as “signified” by the Four Living Ones full of eyes.

These same souls and elders are represented in Apoc. 7:9, as “a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, standing before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands.” In this scene, the emblematic and acted-promise of the fifth seal is fulfilled. They are actually clothed, and as the “palms” indicate, have gotten the victory over all their enemies. They were in full possession of the great salvation, to which they have attained through great tribulation. Their robes are made white by washing in blood, and that not their own blood, but the blood of the Lamb. In their soul-body existence, or life-time, they believed the promises covenanted to the fathers and “the faith” which came by Jesus—in other words, in “the things concerning the name of Jesus Anointed,” among which, the cleansing from sin by his sprinkled blood, the blood of the Abrahamic covenant, holds an indispensable and prominent position; they believed this gospel, and were immersed in water into Christ, and so put on their holy garments, which are therefore said to be “washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb”—ch. 7:14. “Therefore are they before the throne of the Deity, and serve him day and night in his temple and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat, for the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them to living fountains of waters; and the Deity shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.” Such is the white-robed “holy nation” of the Deity—“the Israel of God,” sealed by his truth to eternal glory.

Concerning this holy and mighty people, Paul says: “All things are for your sakes”—2 Cor. 4:15. “Ye are the holy temple of the Deity ... All things are yours; whether the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come: all are yours; and ye are Christ’s and Christ is the Deity’s”—1 Cor. 3:16–23. This is all said to the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus; and it shows what an important and honorable people they are considered to be by the Deity who are christians of the ancient and original stamp—Christadelphians. There are very few of them to be found in the year of grace 1864—so few that one would be justified in saying almost none; for, certainly, these bloodshedding parsons and their flocks, who are on both sides of the line hounding on chaplained armies of their fraternal potsherds to mutual slaughter and devastation, committing all kinds of depredations and profligate abominations upon the helpless and unoffending victims of their lusts, can have no scriptural claim to the name christian. What are they but heathen of the blindest species! Assuredly they are not the holy temple of the Deity. Though they have got the world—for they are the world—the world is not theirs; nor is any thing that exists for their sake. No; it is for that poor and despised company—that “contemptible few,” who are “rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which the Deity hath promised to them;” it is for the sake of these that all things consist.

This important testimony, that all things are for the sake of the true believers, is presented symbolically throughout the Apocalypse. Because the things represented in the seals were for the sake of believers of the original Abrahamic type, the Lamb and the Four Living Ones are introduced as the ruling spirit of the scenes. The Lamb with Seven Horns and Seven Eyes, all-seeing and all-powerful, was superintending and working together all things for the good of them who love the Deity, and who are the called according to his purpose; so that, suffering with him when that purpose is effected, they may all be glorified together—Rom. 8:28, 17. The Lamb, the Spirit, opened the seals and worked their invisible machinery for the good of these sufferers unto death, if need be, represented by the Eyes of the Four Living Ones. He subverted the pagan constitution of Daniel’s Fourth Beast for their good and his own glory, and made a present of its dominion to those degenerate adherents who had fought against it, who, though they were wretched, miserable, poor, blind, and naked, as modern papists and protestants almost, were an improvement upon the blind and dissolute worshippers of the gods. He gave the beast’s dominion to the self-styled and self-glorifying “catholics,” who said they were “rich, and increased in goods, and had need of nothing;” but to the true and faithful, who doctrinally, and not in mere form or sacrament, kept the word and denied not his name, he gave no part in that dominion, but, emblematically, gave them the glorious and beautiful “white robes” of the Royal Priesthood, which shall inherit “under the whole heaven” a more magnificent dominion, when its holy kings and priests shall have destroyed the Fourth Beast with the burning flame of divine fury, even the dominion of all nations, enlightened, regenerated, and truly civilized, for a thousand years.

Furthermore, as with the seals so with the trumpets. The judgments of these fell not upon the worshippers of the Greco-Latin gods, nor upon “the servants of the Deity, sealed in their foreheads” with the truth, but upon the Laodiceans of “the Holy Catholic Church,” the enemies and persecutors of the faithful and true, since they had succeeded pagans in the sovereignty of the Dragon. The trumpetjudgments were for the sake of the sealed servants of the Deity, the machinery of them was engineered by the Lamb for their good. The prayers of all these saints ascended as a cloud of incense for divine intervention in their behalf. The Deity heard their cry, and answered them by casting fire from the golden altar into the Greco-Latin Catholic earth. The voices, thunderings, lightnings, and earthquake which ensued, and the trumpets which sounded afterwards, in their results, were all for the good and for the sake of the Woman and her seed, who kept the commandments of the deity and had the testimony of Jesus Christ (Apoc. 8:3; 12:17).

And when, again, we descend to later times, the period of the first six vials, the contemporary existence of faithful ones is admitted by the exhortation addressed to them in ch. 16:15. They are represented by the Spirit as watchers with garments well kept—watching the Vial-Signs, and preparing, by trimming their lamps, for the thief-like incoming of the Ancient of Days. “All things” enacted in the vialperiods “are for their sakes.” Not, certainly, for the sakes of papists, Mohammedans, and protestants, upon whom the wrath is poured out, but for the sake of “the saints and prophets,” and of those within the Altar of Sacrifice, alluded to in verses 6 and 7. Devotees of the various “names and denominations” of religiondom—the “names of blasphemy,” of which the scarlet-colored politico-ecclesiastical beast is “full”—these are not within the Altar, neither are they watchers with garments well kept. They are all fast asleep, snoring in midnight darkness. Nothing is being done for their sakes; only for the sake of those who obtain a change of raiment in putting off the filthy rags of their theological factions, coming out from among them, and putting on Christ as their white robe of righteousness, through an intelligent induction by faith and immersion. By doing this they join the Heavenly Camp, and become “eyes” in the Four Living Ones, for whose sake every thing is done. For this cause it is, that, in ch. 15:7, one of the Four Living Ones is represented as giving the seven vials full of the wrath of the Deity to the seven angels. This signifies that the outpouring of the seven vials is for the sake of those represented by the Four Living Ones, some of whom are contemporary with all the vials, and all of whom, to whom “white robes” shall be given will be engaged in the execution of the seventh, which exhausts in their destruction the indignation of the Deity against Babylon the Great Mother, the National Ecclesiastical Harlot, and all the Sectarian Abominations of the Earth, which have directly or indirectly sprung from their adulterous commerce with the world.

For further remarks upon the white robes of the faithful, the reader is referred to Vol. 1, pp. 169, 356, and to what will be said hereafter when treating of the Bride of Apoc. 19.

5. Souls

“When he opened the fifth seal, I saw underneath the Altar the souls of them who had been slain”—tas psuchas ton esphagmenon. Clerical metaphysicians, with rare exceptions, declare these hieroglyphic souls seen by John in vision to be the disembodied immortal spirits of saints with Christ in heaven. The Alexandrian and Origenic philosophy—the exceedingly thin and innutritious fluid supplied them by what they call their Almoë Matres—knows no other souls, and can make no other disposition of them than this. With this heathen theory of souls darkening their understandings, the Apocalypse is for them a sealed book. Their attempted interpretations have all failed because they have sought an exposition in harmony with this dogma, which is the rope of sand by which the whole edifice of their Laodicean superstition is bound together. What they call “religion” is for the conversion, and salvation from eternal torment in flaming brimstone, and from the Devil, of immortal and post-mortem disembodied spirits, by sending them at death on angels’ wings to heavenly kingdoms beyond the realms of time and space! But there is no such soul; and, therefore, the “religion” invented for it by the Laodicean Apostasy is vain—a mere invention for the salvation of a nonentity, or, in the expressive language of Paul, “a lie”—2 Thess. 2:11. But, being divinely and judicially deluded “because they receive not the love of the truth that they might be saved,” they seek support for “the lie” they believe in this fifth seal. They think it is a proof of the existence of a part of man in a conscious state altogether independent of body. That the dead are not dead, but, freed from “mortal coil,” exceedingly elastic and lively; that “the dead” is a phrase only to be applied to body; that, beyond this, there is really no such thing as death; so that “the dead” is only a conventionalism, by which the living freed from mortal coil in the world of spirits is to be understood; and that, though divided from us by the veil of flesh, they are highly intellectual and well informed of all that is transacting among the sons of men; and many more absurdities they teach, styled by the Spirit “the depths of the Satan as they teach,” which are so well known by all who are familiar with pulpit traditions that it is needless to encumber our pages with any more details.

In addition to what we have already said about souls underneath the Altar, we may remark that all the corporeal organizations of the animal world are denominated souls in the scripture. A few references will sufficiently prove this. “And Elohim said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly sheretz nephesh khayyah, ‘swarming soul of life’ ”—Gen. 1:20. In the next verse all fish are termed souls; and, in verse 24, all creatures produced from the earth are styled nephesh khayyah, “soul of life.” In verse 28, the creatures thus called are summed up as kol-khayyah “everything of life;” and, in verse 30, every beast, fowl, and reptile, are said to have “in” them “soul of life.” What the Spirit, who made them all, says of these creatures, he affirms also of man. He, even as they, has in him “breath of lives” and “soul of life,” and is “a soul” or body “of life.” Thus, in Gen. 2:7, it reads, “And Yahweh Elohim formed the man, dust of the ground; and breathed into his nostrils breath of lives; and the man was FOR A BODY OF LIFE”—le nephesh khayyah. If we come to the word with our minds free from tradition, there is no difficulty in understanding this simple statement. The man is put on the same footing with all other creatures. They are bodies or “souls of life,” and so is he; they all have “the breath of the spirit of lives” and so has he; they are all “dust of the ground,” save those from the waters, and so is he; the only difference between him and them is the same thing that constitutes the difference between the dog and the lion, or the elephant and the camel—organization of the dust.

The same “breath of the spirit of lives,” I say, is common to all animals and man. This will be evident to those who can consult the original of Gen. 7:22, 15. They know that in the English Version it is not correctly rendered “breath of life;” the words “the spirit of” have been unfaithfully omitted. In verse 15, the words rendered “breath of life” are not the same as those similarly rendered in Gen. 2:7. In this, it reads nishmath khayyim, “breath of lives;” and in that, “from all the flesh which has in it ruach khayyim, spirit of lives.” So that man is affirmed to have “the breath of lives” in his nostrils, and all other flesh “the spirit of lives” in theirs; hence, as spirit is regarded as of a higher dignity than breath, we might, on such premises, conclude that the “lower” animals are really demiurgically superior to man. And, indeed, when we compare the doings of said animals with the conduct of men, lay and clerical, we might suppose that the stupidity and brutishness of brain-flesh their characteristic, was truly distinguishing and that the so-called “brutes” were essentially their superiors. But said premises are not sound; for the superiority of the one race over the other is not predicated on the matter of which they are made, and by which they are vitalized, but on the organic formation of the same. Hence, there is no natural demiurgic difference between an Archbishop of New York or of Canterbury, or a Bishop of Natal, and the and monkey tribes of the forest; the Spirit, therefore, by Moses (and this perhaps, may be the reason why the Bishop of Natal is so hostile to Moses) has been careful in Gen. 7:22, to give us to understand that the nishmah and ruach, “breath” and “spirit,” are common to all kinds of human brutes, both “lower animals” and men. I say human brutes, for the word human, which one class of brutes has appropriated to itself exclusively, really or demiurgically pertains to all the earthborns or formations from the ground. The text reads, after mentioning all the creatures, “and every man, all which has breath of spirit of lives, kol asher nishmath-ruach khayyim, in their nostrils, out of all which is in the dry land, died.”

We have seen that man and the other creatures are all termed nephesh and are said to have nephesh in them; and in Gen. 9:4, we are informed by the Spirit what nephesh elementally, or in concrete essence, is, in the law given to Noah. “Flesh with its nephesh, or soul, its blood, ye shall not eat.” From these premises, then, we learn, that men and their brethren of the ground are all of them souls—human or ground-souls; that they have all got souls in them; and that these souls are the blood of their flesh. For further remarks upon soul in blood see what we have written concerning the Altar.

Now, by this Mosaic testimony the Eternal Teacher proclaims the doctrine that man, though created in the image and likeness of Elohim, as Seth was in the image and likeness of Adam, hath nevertheless “no preeminence over a beast.” And this testimony is doubtless true, and in perfect harmony with man’s developments when abandoned by his creator to his own instincts and lusts. But, we are not left to inference. The Spirit has endorsed our inferences by positive testimony. In speaking by Solomon of the divrah, or cause for adjudication, termed “estate of the sons of the man,” the old man of the flesh, the king is caused to say, “would that the Elohim would purify them, so that they might see for themselves that they are beasts. For that which befalleth the sons of the man also befalleth the beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as dieth the one, so dieth the other; for there is one spirit for all; so that excellence over the beast the man hath none; for the whole are a vapour (Psa. 78:39). The whole go to one place: the whole was from the dust, and the whole return to the dust. Who knoweth the spirit of the sons of the man that it goeth upwards? Or the spirit of the beast that it goeth downwards to the earth? Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better than that the man rejoice in his works; for that is his portion: for who shall cause him to see what shall be after him?" (Ecc. 3:18).

Leaving the reader, then, to adjudicate the traditions of the Apostasy by this divine teaching, I proceed to remark that the Spirit has favored us with a comment upon his own words in Gen. 2:7, in what he caused Paul to write in 1 Cor. 15:44, 45. "There is a natural body," saith he; a soma psuchikon: and he proceeds to prove the assertion by quoting the words of Moses, saying, "And so it is written. The first man Adam was made into a living soul—eis psuchen zosan. These words are parallel with le-nephesh khayyah, and are explanatory of them. If the Spirit be asked, what is a nephesh khayyah, he answers in Greek, psuche zosa; and if it be further inquired, what is psuche zosa? the English version replies, a living soul, or a natural body; but as khayyah is not an adjective, but a substantive, it should be rendered a body of life.

And what, then? say "the merchants of the earth," who auction off their spiritual merchandize from the pulpits of all lands. Are not "bodies and the souls of men," somata kai psuchai anthropon, the most precious of our wares? But wherein is the preciousness of souls, which we proclaim to be immortal jewels, whose estimation is incalculable, if men have no preeminence over monkeys; and bishops, deans, and ministers, no excellence over the reptiles of the wilderness? The supposition is downright atheism and infidelity! (Apoc. 18:13, 11).

Doubtless, in the opinion of the soul-merchants of the earth the Spirit's teaching is both atheistic and infidel, for it is destructive of their whole system. He has, to speak apocalyptically, "spued them out of his mouth;" how, then, could there be any harmony between his word or teaching and their theologies? They teach that there are in men "immortal souls;" souls which are immaterial, and therefore immortal; and which when their bodies die, exist without bodies: that the value of a single such soul is incalculable; and that it is the possession of this divine incorporeal entity angelized at death, which constitutes the preeminence of men over all other created things. But to such, the Spirit rejoins, "Fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken!"—"Man that is in honour, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish" (Psalm 49:12, 20). One such divine oracle is worth incalculably more than whole shiploads of university logic and collegiate "bodies of divinity."

This, then, is the grand principle upon which the immortality of man is based—a scriptural comprehension of the truth developing a faith that works by love and purifies the heart in the obedience it commands. A man with such an understanding heart is a "spiritual man;" but before he had the understanding of the truth, he was like bishops, deans, ministers, reptiles and monkeys, without preeminence demiurgically on any other speciality than form. The "natural man," the Spirit saith, is a beast; a mere "body of life." He may be decorated with all imaginable titles of honour, and humbly worshipped by his fellows; nevertheless, if he "understandeth not," he is a mere natural still. There is no seed of immortality in him.

Now, the scriptures teach that the seed of immortality in a believing man is Christ; and therefore he is styled by Paul in writing to saints in Colosse, "Christ our life." "I am," said Christ, "the truth and the life." "Let Christ," says Paul, "dwell in your hearts by faith;" hence, "the truth and the life" dwell in the heart by faith, by an intelligent comprehension and conviction of the truth. A man of such an understanding has life in him in this sense; and in the same sense it is, that "he believing into the Son hath everlasting life" (John 3:36); for "my words," saith Christ, "are spirit and life" (John 6:63).

From this testimony, it will be perceived, that the principle of a man's immortality is not physical or material, but doctrinal—the truth revealed and believed. Faith such as Abraham had, gives a believer "a right" to eternal life; and in so doing makes him "an heir of life," and "joint heir with Christ of all things." Hence, it is written, Apoc. 22:14, "Blessed are those who wash their robes that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." So Tregelles' text. It is equivalent to the words in the Common Version; for no believer can “wash his robes white in the blood of the Lamb” unless he “do his commandments,” which say to him who believes the gospel of the kingdom “metanoete, change the mind, and be immersed upon the name of Jesus Christ for or into the remission of sins”—Acts 2:38). To obey these commandments is to wash the robes white in the blood of Christ, and to obtain a right to life when he shall appear in glory (Col. 3:4). By such a washing, he lays hold of the horns of the Altar, and is safe, if he continue within the Altar, otherwise not. But, the right obtained may be forfeited by misconduct. Hence, Paul says to certain who had obtained the right, “If ye walk after the flesh, ye shall die;” that is, if ye obey the instincts and lusts of the natural man ye shall die, or forfeit your right. He therefore exhorted them to keep down these lusts by the power of the truth; and assured them that, if they sought for glory, honor, incorruptibility, and life, by “a patient continuance in well doing,” the Deity would render them eternal life (Rom. 2:7); and thus, the right obtained would merge into actual possession.

Now, when actually possessed the possessor is a “spiritual man” in the highest sense. He becomes such after resurrection from among the dead. Before he died he differed from all natural men and other animals, in that he was “filled with the knowledge of the Deity’s will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col. 1:9); and thus became “a partaker of the divine nature,” in a moral sense: and in this sense also he was a spiritual man. But, though wise and understanding, he was still encumbered with a “vile body.” This needed to be changed, “that it might be fashioned like to the body of Christ’s glory”—like to that which He now has—Phil 3:21. In other words, he needed to be invested with the white robes symbolically given to the souls underneath the Altar; a robe, which clothes one to the feet with the incorruption of the Holy Spirit. Hence, the promise is, “When Christ shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is”—1 John 3:2. The saints shall be like him. “I was dead,” says Christ, “but I am alive for evermore”—Apoc. 1:18. Paul styles him, “the Lord the Spirit,” “a Quickening Spirit,” “the Lord from heaven,” “the Heavenly Man,” “the last Adam.” The wise shall be like what he now is. They will therefore be partakers of the divine nature in a substantial material sense; in other words they will be spirit; “for that which hath been born of spirit is spirit” (John 3:6).

From this condensed view of the subject, it will, then, be perceived, that, according to the scripture teaching, there are in the arrangements of Deity, two bodies of life; that is, two kinds of body through which life is manifested: the one body in its organization is essentially perishable’ the other, essentially imperishable. Each body is formed, or organized, before it is made the medium of the life peculiar to it. At this crisis, they are simply nephesh psuche or soul; but when the mechanism of each body is put into motion, the one becomes nephesh khayyah, psuche tzosa, living soul or natural body; and the other, soma pneumatikon, a spiritual body, “spirit;” pneuma agiosunes, spirit of holiness, or holy spirit nature. But these bodies of life are not absolutely independent of one another. Their relationship is similar to that between the wheat standing in the field in winter time, and the same plant in harvest. The perishable body is projected from the earth in the resurrection period, when it stands a body of life, waiting for the Deity to give it a body according to his own good pleasure (1 Cor. 15:30; John 5:21) to give it a white robe if approved. No body of life is resurrected except such an one, whose organization will give expression to a character extant before death. Such a corporeally expressed character is the restoration of personal identity. The resurrected body of life, thinks, remembers, feels and acts, like Paul, or, it may be, Judas; therefore, it is Paul or Judas to all intents and purposes. But, in this stage of the affair, the resurrected body of life, so named because of identity, is a body capable of perishing again, if left to itself; or, of becoming imperishable eternally if acted upon by the power of Deity. This alternative, then, has to be determined by the Judge. Paul informs the saints of both classes—of that class who have “walked worthy of their high vocation,” and of that, who have “walked after the flesh,” since their immersion—he says to both these “Every one of us shall give account of himself to the Deity;” “for we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive dia tou somatos, through the body the things according to that he hath done, whether good or bad” (Rom. 16:12; 2 Cor. 5:10). Hence, Paul and Judas will both be there to tell the story of their lives in a previous state of existence. While they are giving account of themselves they are both of them bodies of life, like two plants of the same species in the field, the one may perish by frost or other cause; the other may be unaffected by evil, and yield fruit in harvest. The fate of Paul and Judas will depend on the nature of the account given by each. The rule by which the causes will be adjudicated is laid down by Paul in Gal. 6:7, 8—“Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.” A man sows before death; he reaps after rising from death. “He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.” This is the rule, which is also illustrated by Paul himself and Judas. The last “sowed to his flesh;” and in his account he will abundantly show it. The sentence upon him in the resurrection-period will therefore doom him to “reap corruption of the flesh”—to “receive through the body according to what he had done;” and as this was bad, he will, through the body he acquires in the future, receive “bad,” or corruption. The body of life, then, named Judas, as a type of his class, remains perishable, and “when cast into outer darkness,” reaps all the evil of which it is susceptible.

But Paul’s case is differently disposed of. He also may represent a class. In his previous state of being, instead of betraying the truth, or perverting it to his own fleshly purposes, he “sowed to the Spirit.” By reading the New Testament, it is easy to see how he did this. He will give account of himself in accordance with what is written of him; and he had great confidence that it will be accepted. Being accepted, then, he will “of the Spirit reap everlasting life.” A white robe, as it were, will be presented to him. The power of the Deity will change, or transform, the body standing at the tribunal in the twinkling of an eye; even as Paul testifies, the saints living at the advent, who may be approved, shall be changed without tasting of death (1 Cor. 15:51, 52). Thus, the body by this transformation is “clothed upon” with incorruptibility and immortality, by which “mortality is swallowed up of life” (2 Cor. 4:4); and thus will be verified in his own experience, his own testimony, that “this corruptible must put on incorruption; and this mortal must put on immortality,” when “death is swallowed up in victory” (1 Cor. 15:53, 54); and when this process is completed, Paul in victory, is spiritual in the highest sense, a body of life eternal.

The scripture teaching, then, concerning souls and immortality, has no affinity with the teaching of pulpiteers on these subjects. The scripture defines immortality to be life manifested through incorruptible body; and declares, that the only being in the universe that has it underived is the Deity (1 Tim. 6:15, 16). It also declares, that it is a part of the reward promised to the righteous to be given to them exclusively after the advent of Jesus in power, and his resurrection of them from the grave. Men attain to immortality, or deathlessness, in recompense for character, conformed to the moral image of the Deity, as he shines forth in the example of Jesus Christ. Faith and obedience are the basis of this character. Men are alienated from the life of the Deity through the ignorance that is in them (Eph. 4:18). Hence, there is no immortality for those who understand not the gospel; and this can be believed by none who believe the foolish rhapsodies and rhodomontade histrionically dispensed from the pulpits of the world. There is no immortality out of Christ; and they only are in him, who “believe the things concerning the kingdom of the Deity, and of the name of Jesus Christ, and are immersed unto him, both men and women” (Acts 8:12).

John says, in ch. 20:4, “I saw the souls, tas psuchas, of them who had been beheaded on account of the testimony of Jesus, and on account of the word of the Deity ... and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.” As we have remarked before, among these beheaded souls were those of the fifth seal which he saw underneath the Altar, and to whom white robes were given. When he sees them in ch. 20 they were, hieroglyphically, resurrected souls; for he says “they lived.” Those in the fifth seal were, emblematically, in the death state, where nothing is really known, for “the dead know not anything”—“for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, b’sheol (in the land of forgetfulness—Psa. 88:12), whither thou goest” (Ecc. 9:5, 10). But, in the fifth seal symbolization, a white robe is given to each, with an injunction to repose. This repose continues till the Messenger descends from heaven with power. He then awakes them, and they stand again on their feet above ground. This is anastasis. At this crisis they are “souls” or bodies of life, prepared for investiture with the white robe of incorruption. When John saw these beheaded souls alive again he also saw thrones—“I saw thrones,” says he, “and they sat upon them.” But, says Paul, “flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of the Deity; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption” (1 Cor. 15:50). Now, as I have shown, bodies of life projected from the grave, with antecedent personal identity, are perishable. At this stage, therefore, of renewed existence they could not occupy the thrones seen. They must first appear at the tribunal of Christ, the Great White Throne (ch. 20:11), and give account of themselves or report to him. Being deemed “holy, and unblameable, and unreprouable in his sight, having continued in the faith, rooted and settled, and not moved away from the hope of the gospel” (Col. 1:22, 23); Christ transfigures the bodies of their humiliation, that they may become symmorphous or conformable to the body of his glory, through the energy whereby he is able also to subdue to himself all things (Phil. 3:21). Being thus “clothed upon,” they are no longer mere “souls,” which are “naked” and put to shame if not “clothed,” but incorruptible and deathless beings, “the sons of the Deity, being the sons of the resurrection, and equal to the angels” (Luke 20:36). Thus robed in the pure incorruption of the Spirit, Paul’s objection in their case is removed, and they are qualified to possess “the thrones of the House of David;” so that it will be said to them by the King, “Come, ye blessed of my Father, take possession of the kingdom which has been prepared for you from the foundation of the state” (Matt. 25:34).

In dismissing this item of the fifth seal, it may be remarked that its symbolization, with respect to the souls, is the representation in emblem of ideas perfectly familiar to the christian mind of the times antecedent and concurrent with the seal. Believers were exhorted by the apostles to be ready at any time for a sacrifice of themselves. In view of his own execution, Paul says, “If I be poured out upon the sacrifice of your faith, I rejoice;” and again, “I am now ready to be offered,” or poured out at the base of the altar, “and the time of my analysis is at hand.” And, in the century succeeding the apostolic age, Ignatius, who was ordered to execution by Trajan, speaks of his approaching end as his being poured out as a libation to God on his altar. And speaking of Polycarp of Smyrna, who suffered about A.D. 160, his biographer says: “Having his hands tied behind him, and being bound as a ram out of a great flock for an offering, and prepared for a burnt sacrifice, acceptable to the Deity, he looked to heaven and said: ‘O Father, I give thee hearty thanks that thou hast vouchsafed to me that at this day and this hour I should have a part in the number of thy witnesses in the cup of thy Christ, unto the resurrection of eternal life both of soul and body, in the incorruption of the Holy Spirit. Among whom may I be accepted this day before thee as an acceptable sacrifice, as thou hast ordained’.” He regarded his execution as a sacrifice, or outpouring underneath the altar, and met it cheerfully, in hope of the resurrection of his soul as well as his body for investiture with the white robe, which he styles the “incorruption of the Holy Spirit.” In conclusion, I may just inform the reader that the Rev. Mr. Elliott expounds the white robes emblematically given to the souls underneath the altar as symbolical of their justification before the pagan public by the edict of the emperor Galerius, granting toleration to christians, and entreating them to pray to their God for his restoration to health. Thus, he considers their memory was justified. A remarkable robe this, and of pagan manufacture too! A clergyman might rejoice in the honor of such a justification, but certainly not the humblest of the saints.

6. “O Despot, Holy and True!”

Such was the style of address put into the mouths of the souls underneath the altar by the Spirit—ho Despotes ho hagios kai ho alethinos. This is the only place in the Apocalypse where the word Despotes occurs; in the twenty-two other places where the word Lord is found it is kurios, in the original. I conclude, therefore, that there must be some special reason why despotes and not kurios is adopted in the symbology of the fifth seal.

I find that despot is used in nine other places in the New Testament. In four of these it is applied to men, and translated master; in one instance it is so rendered in regard to God; and in the remaining four it is rendered Lord, and affirmed of the Deity. In Acts 4:24, the Holy and True Despot is declared in the address of the disciples after their return from the Chief Priests to their companions, saying to the Deity, “O Despot, thou art the Deity who made the heaven, and the earth, and the sea, and all things in them; and spake by the mouth of David.” And Jude, speaking of certain false professors that had crept into the ecclesias unawares, says, that they “denied the only Despot Deity—ton morion despoten Theon—even the Lord Jesus Anointed.” These were Nikolaitans, who were without judgment in the “great mystery of Deity manifested in Flesh”—“the fathers” of that great apostasy which afterwards developed itself into that enormous imposture, THE KINGDOM OF THE CLERGY, which darkens and demoralizes the peoples of the earth.

The Deity, then, symbolized by “the Lamb as it had been slain, having Seven Horns and Seven Eyes,” is the only Holy and True Despot Deity of the Universe. This, however, in the period of the fifth seal, was disputed by another, who denied the existence of the Holy and True One, and claimed that he was the only Despot of the habitable, whom men ought to honor and obey. He styled himself Diocletianus Jupiter or Jove, while Maximian, whom he associated with himself in the imperial offices, assumed the title of Hercules.

Now, it is a remarkable historic fact that, at the epoch of the opening of the fifth seal, a New Despotism was set up by Diocletian Jupiter, totally different from that to which the Roman peoples had been subject from the days of Augustus hitherto. Gibbon says, “Diocletian may be considered as the founder of a new empire.” This arduous work, he says, he completely achieved by A.D. 303, which was the twentieth of his reign, when he celebrated that memorable era, by a Roman triumph. “He framed a new system of imperial government, which was afterwards completed by the family of Constantine.” Eight years before his elevation, the Roman Senate had aspired to the restoration of republicanism. This was an offence in his sight, and he assigned to Hercules the work of reducing it to sheer abjection, while the dignity of Rome was impaired by the studied absence of Jupiter and Hercules, who made Milan and Nicomedia their palatial residences. By this policy, “the Senate of Rome, losing all connection with the imperial court and the actual constitution, was left a venerable but useless monument of antiquity on the Capitoline Hill.”

The ancient modest titles of civil magistracy were laid aside, and, if these deities still distinguished their high station by the appellation of emperor, or imperator, that word was understood in a new and more dignified sense, and no longer denoted the general of the Roman armies, but the Sovereign of the Roman World. The title emperor was associated with another of a more servile kind. Dominus, or master, owner, supreme lord, was expressive of the despotic power of a master over his domestic slaves. Viewing it in this odious light, it had been rejected with abhorrence by the first Caesars. “Pliny,” says Gibbon, “speaks of Dominus with execration, as synonymous with tyrant and opposite to prince.” But, notwithstanding this repugnance, the name in time lost its odiousness, till at length the style of “Our Despot and Emperor”—Dominus et Imperator noster—was not only bestowed by flattery, but was regularly admitted into the laws and public monuments. The whole magnificence and ceremony of Asiatic state and servility was introduced under Diocletian and Maximian, who usurped the attributes of Divinity, and transmitted the titles expressive thereof to a succession of Catholic emperors. The Diocletian Jupiter ventured to assume the diadem, an ornament detested by the Romans as the odious ensign of royalty, and the use of which had been considered as the most desperate act of the madness of Caligula. It was no more than a broad white fillet set with pearls, which encircled the emperor's head. Thus, the Sixth Head of the Dragon was diademed, whereby also, as all the five previous forms of government were all subordinately merged in the emperorship, they were diademed as well. The progress of despotism was rapid and irresistible. When a subject was admitted to the divine presence of the imperial Jupiter, he was obliged, whatever might be his rank, to fall prostrate on the ground, and to adore, according to the eastern fashion, the divinity of his Lord and Despot. The state maintained by Diocletian was theatrical, the object of which was to display the unbounded power which the emperors possessed over the Roman world.

Diocletian's Reign (Period of the 5th Seal—Apoc. 6:9–11)

These Roman coins illustrate the exposition of p. 255 onwards. The concord with which Diocletian and Maximian governed the Empire was illustrated on such. Both are shown carrying globes and sceptres and as jointly crowned by Victory. However, supreme rule was in the hands of Diocletian. The comment is made that “a New Despotism was set up by Diocletian Jupiter, totally different from that to which the Roman peoples had been subject from the days of Augustus hitherto.” Under this new form of rule he assumed the authority of a Despot, and this was shown by him wearing a diadem instead of a laureate (stephanos). Eureka comments: “The Diocletian Jupiter ventured to assume the diadem, an ornament detested by the Romans as the odious ensign of royalty.” The coins below depict Diocletian as wearing a diadem instead of the laureate (left), whilst the reverse side depicts Jupiter (representing Diocletian, who claimed identity with that god) receiving the dominion of the world from Victory. He holds thunderbolt and sceptre, and places his right foot on the neck of a bound and seated captive.

Now, it cannot be supposed that this novel despotism should develop itself and be established without exciting great attention and discussion among the people. The immense number of professors of christianity in the empire would reject the pretensions of Diocletian to be the only true and holy despot of the world. They would affirm the claims of the Deity whom they worshipped; and would refuse to prostrate themselves in his imperial presence in recognition of his divinity and lordship upon earth. This was, doubtless, the reason why a great number of “christians” were dismissed from their official employments in the imperial household and other departments of the state. An issue was joined upon the question of—Who is the Holy and True Despot of the world, Jupiter or the Lamb? This was the great question of the day, which, until the Lamb's party gained the victory, absorbed all others. It was a question which, in its discussion, shook the empire to its foundation, and brought great calamity upon those who repudiated the high pretensions of “the Father of the gods and men.” Like the question that abolished the constitution of the Union and brought ruin upon the republic, it had its period of discussion and its period of war. The first eighteen years of the reign of Diocletian afforded scope for “the word of the Deity and the testimony held” against his usurpation of divine attributes. Policy, however, inclined him to toleration, until, by the importunity of his associate, Galerius, who entertained the most implacable aversion for the name and religion of Christ, he was induced to proclaim war against the adherents of the Lamb. This edict inaugurated the fifth seal, of which the great and absorbing subjects of debate were the antagonistic claims of Jupiter and the Lamb to the Despot-Sovereignty of the world. This, then, is the reason why the Spirit puts this remarkable style of address into the mouths of the souls underneath the altar. By so doing, he pronounces through them sentence in the great controversy being so sanguinarily discussed during the period of the fifth seal. In effect, he proclaims, “I, even I the Lamb, am the Despot, holy and true; the claims of the pretended Jupiter shall not stand; for the great day of my wrath is near, when I will judge and avenge the blood of my servants, and expel from the heaven their persecutor and cast him to the earth” (ch. 6:17; 12:8). The introduction of the word Despot in this the only place of the Apocalypse, is a sort of chronological indication that the fifth seal belongs to the period to which it is herein assigned.

7. Their Fellowservants and Brethren

In the answer given by the Spirit to the emblematic souls underneath the altar, the professors of christianity still alive and contemporary with the fifth seal period, are divided into two classes—the one the fellowservants, and the other the brethren, of the deceased souls. The brethren are fellowservants, but all the fellowservants were not brethren—even as christadelphians are christians, but all christians so-called are not christadelphians. The brethren of the souls were all fellowservants of the Lamb’s household in the service of “conquering” the idolatry enthroned in the Dragon empire. The Nikolaitanes, the spurious Jews of Satan’s synagogue, the Balaamites, Jezebel’s children, the dead Sardians who had only a name to live, the feeble Philadelphians, and the lukewarm Laodiceans, were all fellowservants in this crusade against that which hindered the manifestation of the Man of Sin. They all belonged to the ecclesiastical community called “Christian” by the idolators, and were exposed in common to all the persecutions raised against it by the priests and rulers of the Roman Habitable. Multitudes of them were killed in this long and sanguinary religious war. But, though they thus became what ecclesiastics call “martyrs,” they “remembered not from whence they had fallen, to repent and do the first works;” they repented not of the blasphemy of styling themselves Jews when they were only of the Satan’s synagogue; they still taught that believers might eat things sacrificed to idols, and themselves sacrifice as an expedient to save their lives in times of persecution, and, though thus “lapsed,” on the restoration of peace, be received again among “the brethren;” they still adhered to “the depths of the Satan as they teach;” they kept not the word, and denied the Spirit-Name; they repented of none of these things, but still styling themselves “Jews inwardly,” or christians, they waxed worse and worse to the times of the Sixth Seal, saying, at the crisis of the war against the Dragon, “We are rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing;” but they knew not that they were “wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked.”

Many of them “gave their bodies to be burned” in this great antipagan war; but, not possessing the agape, or love which comprehends the one faith and the one hope, believing and hoping all the things, and rejoicing in the truth, and styled in the Common Version, most incorrectly, “charity,” they were sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. Paul had prevision of these “fellowservants” in the war, who, indeed, brought much trouble upon him in his day. In reference to them, he warned the Ephesian Brethren that from among their own Elders men would arise “speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them;” and, in writing to the saints at Corinth, says of their class in 1 Cor. 13:2: “Though I have prophecy, and understand all the mysteries, and all the knowledge; and though I have all the faith, so that I could remove mountains; and though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor (charity); and though I give my body to be burned, and have not agape, or love, (as he defines it), it profiteth me nothing.” Hence, the “martyrdom” of the many of these fellowservants of the souls underneath the altar, so glorified by their class in then present and aftertimes, was of no profit to them; it served for a testimony against paganism and judgment upon themselves for their apostasy.

About fifty years previous to the opening of the fifth seal, a broad line of demarcation began to be drawn ecclesiastically between these “fellowservants” and “the brethren.” As we have already seen in our account of the Novatians, these fellowservants, who called themselves “Catholics,” because the majority, and holding chiefly the offices of the Ecclesias, expelled “the brethren” from their pale. Cyprian, whom modern Episcopalians regard as the great “father” who championed the things which they approve, was a notable chief of the fellowservants in the Roman Africa. He was a notable specimen of a pious, eloquent, and charitable ecclesiastic; he would have made a first-rate archbishop of Cambray, or Canterbury; or a zealous minister of any other denomination. No one can doubt his sincerity; for he suffered death for the testimony he held against paganism. But he was not of “the brethren.” We refer the reader to Vol. 1, p. 444, for reference to him more in detail than is necessary here. He may also turn to p. 296 of that volume, for things taught and believed by “the fellowservants.” None who rejoice in such traditions can be brethren to “souls slain for the word of the Deity.” This does not teach the inherent and hereditary immortality of ground-souls; it does not teach, the salvation from, or damnation in, flaming sulphur, of infant immortal souls; it does not teach sacramentalism; or the impartation of converting and regenerating spirit, technically styled “grace” by Laodiceans, through unenlightened formalism; or the subjection of an infant, or ignorant faithless adult, to the ceremonial use of water, bread, and wine, in any form; it does not teach, either baptism or rantism—immersion or sprinkling—for the remission of original sin; nor does it teach, that baptism came in the room of circumcision. The word of the Deity, on account of which the souls underneath the altar were slain, teaches none of these “depths of the Satan;” therefore they were not slain on account of them; and the living styled “their brethren,” could not have believed them.

The Brethren in the period of the fifth seal had become what would now be styled “a contemptible few.” They were, however the “little strength” of the dilapidated and demoralized christian body. The true scriptural understanding of the word was with them. They were the salt, without which the whole community of professors would have been currently putrescent. The Lamb, for their sakes, still delayed to “spue them out of his mouth;” but, when the number of the Brethren that should be killed by the pagan power should be filled up, there would no longer be any reason why the spuing should be deferred.

During the period of the first Six Seals the number of “the Brethren” or christadelphians, continually decreased, while that of “the fellowservants” as persistently and rapidly increased. This will appear, not only from history, but from the general tenor of the epistles to the seven Asiatic ecclesias. In Ephesus, contemporary with the giving of the apocalypse, the Brethren of Christ were in the majority, as they were also in all other parts of Asia Minor. The Spirit commends their works, and labor, and patience; though indeed, they were not up to that standard of excellence that prevailed in the time of Paul. They had “fellowservants” among them when John wrote; but being in the official, as well as the popular majority, they were able to try and convict pretenders to apostleship; and to denounce their Nikolaitanism as a hateful and detested imposition. But, in two hundred years after, a great revolution in affairs had been effected; and the relative position of parties altogether reversed. The Brethren had entered the Sardian state. They had dwindled down to “a few names,” and to but a “little strength;” while the Fellowservants had gained official and numerical ascendancy; they “had a name that they were living;” that they were vigorous, and strong. They now formed a distinct and independent republic, in the midst of the empire, governed by its own laws and magistrates, possessed of a public treasury, and intimately connected in all its parts, by the frequent assemblies of its bishops, to whose decrees their numerous and opulent congregations yielded an implicit obedience. Thus ecclesiastically organized, the Fellowservants considered that “they were rich and had need of nothing,” but a military leader, (for they already swarmed in the armies of the state) to place the sovereign power in their hands. But against all this “the Brethren” protested as indicative of spiritual death; that those who approved it were “dead;” and that the system itself, as a divine institution for the separation of a people from among the Gentiles for the Spirit-Name, was “ready to die.” But the protest of the Brethren was unheeded by their Fellowservants, or the “Catholics” so-called. The events of the Sixth Seal furnished these with the desired Military Chieftain in one of the six emperors of the Roman world. Thus led, they became victorious over Jupiter and Hercules; and in their prosperity, ignored all connection with “the Brethren;” who, having been mostly killed in the period of the fifth seal, were added to the souls underneath the altar; so that the “little strength” of the Philadelphian state being reduced to lukewarmness among the Fellowservants, these under the sixth seal entered the Laodicean, in which they shone forth “clothed with the sun, and the moon under their feet, and upon their head a stephan, or coronal wreath, of twelve stars” (ch. 12:1). Politically, they had “conquered” the Pagan, whose philosophy spiritually had vanquished them.

In conclusion, it may be remarked under this head, that the term “fellowservants” is as appropriate for “the Catholics” of the latter part of the third century and the early part of the fourth (but not “catholics” of succeeding times) as the term “sanctified ones” was to the pagan Medes and Persians in Isa. 13:3. These were the Spirit’s sanctified ones in the sense of their being separated by him for the work of overthrowing the Babylonish Lion. The primitive catholics were separated, or sanctified, to the service of “casting the great red Dragon and his angels out of the heaven” (ch. 12:7–10); because he was the prosecutor of “their brethren.” The Brethren themselves, who were not allowed the use of carnal weapons, could not have effected this expulsion; it was therefore reserved for the time when the Brethren would be inappreciably few, and in effect superseded by mere nominal professors of christianity calling themselves Catholics, to expel by these the Accuser from the heaven. These christians in name, having become in the sight of Deity “wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked”—only a slight spiritual improvement, if any, upon the vicious and bloodstained idolators—he assigned to them the service of dethroning Jupiter by the sword; for “the wicked are His sword.” They were sanctified to this work; or, in modern phraseology, this was their mission. The doctrinal defeat of paganism, in the conversion of the worshippers of the gods to “the faith once delivered to the saints,” was due to “the Brethren” who faithfully adhered to “the word of the Deity;” but the political and military overthrow of the common enemy, to “the Fellowservants” or catholics under the Sixth Seal, who were prepared like the troops of Cyrus, to combat on the principles of the flesh, for dominion and the glory of the world. Victory gave them these, and they have retained them to this day. The use they have made of them has been worse than pagan. Having become putrid, the Spirit ejected them with disgust and loathing; and as “the thinking of the flesh” now obtained full sway, they were inimical to the Deity and “the word of his grace,” and became the violent and bitter persecutors of “the Brethren,”—“the remnant, who keep the commandments of the Deity, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ” (ch. 12:17).

In conclusion lastly, the reader may now “see” the reason why the symbolization of the first seal was white indicative of peace and prosperity within the limits of the Roman Habitable; and of the succeeding seals, red, black, livid pale, and the sun of the heavens black as sackcloth of hair, indicative of war, distress, famine, pestilence, and total obliteration. The reason may be found in this. Christ said to his disciples, “ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt has lost its savor, wherewith shall it (the earth) be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out, and trodden under foot of men.” During the first seal-period, the Body of Christ had not lost its savor; it salted Roman Society, “the earth,” with divine wisdom; and society had peace and prospered. Life and property were secure; government was fairly administered; and the people were successful in trade and commerce. But, in the second seal-period, the savor of the salt had much deteriorated—civil war took the peace away from the earth in retribution; in the third seal-period, the savour had still more diminished, and there were superadded greater public calamities: in the fourth seal-period, it was hardly possible to discover any salt in the so-called Body of Christ at all; and the consequence was that famine, pestilence, and sword, brought the state to the verge of dissolution, and reduced the population of the world to half: in the sixth seal-period, the salt had become tasteless; in the mouth of the Spirit, it was utterly insipid, and “good for nothing but to be cast out;" and therefore, as he threatened to do if they repented not, he spued the self styled "catholics" out of his mouth—He repudiated them with all their speculations about immortal souls, eternal torture with and by the devil in flaming brimstone, going to heaven at death, infant damnation and salvation, baby and adult sprinkling, baptism in the room of circumcision, salvation of apostates, the saving efficacy of martyrdom, salvation by sacraments without faith, the apostolic successorship of ecclesiastics, and many other vain traditions too numerous to mention here—He spued them all out of his mouth as the loathsome and nauseous putrid sloughs of a carcase he pronounced "dead," and dissolving in corruption. Such was the end of primitive christianity in the times parallel with paganism in power. It went forth "conquering" and it "conquered." It gained the stephan in the games; but in its victory became a wreck.

8. Historical Illustration of the Fifth Seal

At the commencement of this period, A.D. 303, the Roman people were under the dominion of two emperors of the first rank styled Augusti; and two of an inferior grade, styled Caesars. Of these four, the two former were Diocletian, who surnamed himself Jupiter; and Maximian, surnamed Hercules; and the two others, Galeflus, the Caesar and son-in-law to Jupiter; and Constantius Chlorus, Caesar and son-in-law to Hercules. Diocletian the parent of the fortunes of the other three, was a man of profound dissimulation, vigorous mind, steady in the pursuit of his ends, ambitious, superstitious, but not naturally cruel. For about eighteen of the earliest years of his reign, he protected the Catholics; and but for the savage fierceness of Maximian, and his son-in-law Galerius, who influenced him against them, he would probably not have figured among the persecutors of the faith. Constantius, the father of "Constantine the Great," was a person of probity and humanity. Of the other three, the ferocity of Galerius was the most remarkable; So that it may be truly said, that the inauguration of the slaughter of the fifth seal was referable to him.

preparation for the Sixth Seal

The sixth seal opened to provide a picture of the political and religious revolution that followed the ascension of Constantine to solerule over the world. As Eureka reckords (see opposite), in his governmental reforms, Diocletian in 286 made the Empire into a Tetrarchy (four-man rule), led by two Augusti: himself in the East and Maximian in the West, and two Caesars: slightly younger men who would later succeed the Augusti (whereupon two new Caesars would be appointed, and so on). The Tetrarchy is shown in the carving left dating about A.D. 300. Diocletian and Maximian, the Augusti, at right; the two Caesars, at left, Galerius and Constantius, the father of Constantine. On his elevation to power in the West, and drive for power with the aid of "Christians" Constantine destroyed the Tetrarchy and assumed sole rule>

The third century concluded with some symptoms of a storm ready to burst upon "the fellowservants and brethren," who had long been in a state of ease and worldly prosperity and as we have seen, deeply declined from the purity and simplicity of the gospel. In Eusebius is found the following observation in reference to the times: "The heavy hand of the Deity's judgments," says he, "began softly, by little and little, to visit us after his wonted manner. The persecution that was raised against us, took place first amongst the christians (the Fellowservants) who were in military service; but we were not at all moved with his hand, nor took any pains to return to God. We heaped sin upon sin, judging, like careless Epicureans, that the Deity cared not for our sins, nor would ever visit us on account of them. And our pretended shepherds ("the clergy") laying aside the rule of godliness, practised among themselves contention and division." Then speaking of the persecution of the fifth seal, he says: "The dreadful persecution of Diocletian was then inflicted on the Ecclesia, as a just punishment and as the most proper chastisement for their iniquities."

Toward the end of the third century, while Diocletian was practising the superstitious rites of divination, he became persuaded that the ill success of his attempts to pry into futurity, were owing to the presence of a catholic servant, who had made on his forehead the sign of the cross: and he immediately in great anger, ordered not only those who were present, but all in his palace, to sacrifice to the gods, or, in case of refusal, to be scourged with whips. He commanded also the officers of his armies to constrain all the soldiers to do the same, or to discharge the disobedient from the service. Many of the catholics (for it was only these bearing the name of christian that enlisted in the armies of Jupiter) chose rather to resign their commissions. A very few were put to death on this account. Marcellus a centurion was one of these. His story is, briefly, that A.D. 298, at Tangier in Mauritania, while every one was employed in feasting and sacrifices, he took off his belt, threw down his vine branch and his arms, and added, "I will not fight any longer under the banner of your emperor, or serve your gods of wood and stone. If the condition of a soldier be such that he is obliged to sacrifice to gods and emperors, I abandon the vine branch and the belt, and quit the service." He was ordered to be beheaded; and Cassianus, the register, whose business it was to record the sentence, cried out that he was shocked at its injustice. He was put to death a month afterwards.

But the general persecution which destroyed such numbers, was withheld for some time. In the prelude already mentioned, and of which we have only a dark and imperfect account, something of Diocletian's policy seems conspicuous. He probably feared the catholic element of his armies, thinking it might subvert the order of things he had established, and set up Catholicism in its place. By purging the army he might prevent this, and perpetuate the reign of Jupiter without a rival, as the Despot of the Roman world. Be this as it might, it is evident that after he had long favored the Catholics, from some cause or other, he had now contracted a prejudice against them, though at first he made use of artifice rather than violence.

At first the Roman Empire was ruled as one vast state, but as its borders were extended further assistance was required. Accordingly, Diocletian divided control with Maximian, and incorporated two lesser Caesars to assist. Hence there began to emerge a quadrupartite division of the Empire. When Constantine came to power, he found Rome inconvenient as a centre of rule, and established the civil and military power in Constantinople. This prepared the way for the division of the Empire into East and West, answering to the legs of the Image of Daniel 2. The above sketch-map is from The Apocalypse and History.

But, as we have said, Jupiter's son-in-law Galerius was a most ferocious monster of superstition. Hating the catholics intensely, he determined to gratify his malignity by stirring up Diocletian, if possible, to agree to their extermination by fire, axe, and torture of every kind. He accordingly visited the Court at Nicomedia in the nineteenth of his reign, A.D. 302, and there, during the whole winter, devoted himself to the obtaining of the imperial sanction to this iniquity. He proposed a general persecution; but Diocletian Jupiter remonstrated against, the impolicy of such sanguinary measures, and was for limiting the persecution to the officers of the court and the soldiers. Finding himself unable to stem the fury of Galerius, he called a council of a few judges and officers. Some gave it as their opinion, that the christians should in general be put to death; and others, induced by fear or flattery, assented. Still D. Jupiter was averse, and through policy, or superstition, determined to consult the oracle of Apollo at Miletus. Apollo's priests in charge of the oracle, answered, as might have been expected, in a manner friendly to the views of Galerius. Staggered by repeated importunities, the old emperor still hesitated, and could not be persuaded to attempt the annihilation of christianity by bloodshed; whereas Galerius, strengthened in his murderous intent by the equal hatred of his extremely bigoted mother, desired to burn alive all who refused to sacrifice to the gods of Greece and Rome.

The pleasure of the imperial hierarchy of paganism was at length signified to the fellowservants and the brethren of the souls already underneath the altar, who, during the course of this gloomy winter had expected, with anxiety, the result of so many secret consultations. The 23rd Feb. A.D., 303, which coincided with the Latin festival of the Terminalia, was appointed to set bounds to the further progress of christianity. At the earliest dawn, the praetorian praefect, accompanied by several generals, tribunes, and officers of the revenue, repaired to the principal catholic edifice of Nicomedia, which was situated on an eminence in the most populous and beautiful part of the city. The doors were instantly broken, and they rushed in, searching in vain for some visible object of worship (evinced so far a diversity between ancient catholicism and modern popery), they were obliged to content themselves with committing to the flames—not a mass book, or episcopal liturgy, for this trumpery even in those degenerate times had not then been invented—but the volumes of holy scripture. These imperial ministers of destruction were followed by a numerous body of guards and pioneers, who marched in order of battle, and were provided with all the instruments used in the destruction of fortified cities. By their incessant labor, an ecclesiastical edifice, which towered above the imperial palace, and had long excited the indignation and envy of the idolators, was in a few hours levelled with the ground.

The next day the general edict of persecution was published. It was enacted that the ecclesiastical edifices, styled by the Apostasy “churches,” in all the provinces of the empire, should be demolished to their foundations; and the punishment of death was pronounced against all who should presume to hold any secret assemblies for the purpose of religious worship. And as it was understood, that the doctrines of the faith of Christ were all contained in the writings of the prophets and apostles, it was ordered that the bishops and presbyters should deliver all the sacred books into the hands of the magistrates; who were commanded, under the severest penalties, to burn them in a public and solemn manner. By the same edict, all ecclesiastical property was at once confiscated; and the several parts of which it might consist, were either sold to the highest bidder, united to Jupiter’s imperial domain, bestowed on the cities and corporations, or granted to the solicitations of rapacious courtiers. After taking such effectual measures to abolish the worship, and to dissolve the government of the Catholic Church, it was thought necessary to subject to the most intolerable hardships the condition of those perverse individuals, “the Brethren,” who should still reject the religion of nature, of Rome, and of their ancestors. Persons of liberal birth were declared incapable of holding any honors or employments; slaves were for ever deprived of the hopes of freedom, and the whole body of the people were put out of the protection of the law. The judges were authorized to hear and to determine every action that was brought, against a christian. But the fellowservants, and the brethren of the slain, were not permitted to complain of any injury they themselves had suffered; and thus these unfortunates were exposed to the severity, while they were excluded from the benefits, of public justice.

This edict was scarcely exhibited to public view, in the most conspicuous place of Nicomedia, before it was torn down by a “fellowservant,” who expressed at the same time, by the bitterest invectives, his contempt as well as abhorrence for such impious and tyrannical despots. His offence amounted to treason, and was punishable with death. He was roasted over a slow fire; and every refinement of cruelty was exhausted, but without effect, to subdue his patience, or to alter the steady and insulting smile which in his dying agonies he still preserved in his countenance. The catholics, though they confessed that he had been imprudent, admired the divine fervor of his zeal; and the excessive commendations which they lavished on the memory of the victim, contributed to fix a deep impression of terror and hatred in the mind of the reigning Jupiter.

His fears were soon alarmed by a danger, from which he narrowly escaped. Within fifteen days, the palace of Nicomedia, and even the bedchamber of Diocletianus Jupiter, were twice in flames. Suspicion of this incendiarism naturally fell upon the catholics; and it was suggested that, provoked by their present sufferings, and apprehensive of impending calamities, they had entered into a conspiracy with the eunuchs of the palace, against the lives of two emperors, whom they detested as the irreconcilable enemies of their church. Jealousy and resentment prevailed in the breasts of their enemies, especially in that of Diocletian. A great number of distinguished catholics were thrown into prison. Every mode of torture was put in practice, and the court, as well as the city, was polluted with many bloody executions. No discovery, however, was extorted. A few days afterwards, Galerius hastily withdrew himself from Nicomedia, declaring that if he delayed his departure from that devoted palace, he should fall a sacrifice to the rage of the christians. Eusebius confesses his ignorance of the cause of the fire; while others attribute it to the malice of Galerius himself.

This “declaration of war,” as Gibbon styles the edict, was published fifty days afterwards in Syria, and four months from date in the Roman Africa. At first, the magistrates were restrained from the effusion of blood; but the use of every other severity was commended to their zeal. The fellowservants and the brethren, who cheerfully submitted to the stripping of their edifices, resolved not to interrupt their religious assemblies, nor to deliver their sacred books to the flames. It was not long before this resolution brought upon them the punishment of death. Many were added to the souls underneath the altar; but there were likewise multitudes who saved their worthless lives by discovering and betraying the Holy Scriptures into the enemy’s hand. A great number of catholic bishops and presbyters acquired, by this criminal compliance, the opprobrious epithet of Traditors; and their offence was productive of much present scandal, and of much future discord among the professors in the Roman Africa. The copies as well as the versions, of scripture, were already so multiplied in the empire that the most severe inquisition could no longer be attended with any fatal consequence; and even the sacrifice of those volumes, which, in every congregation, were preserved for public use, required the consent of some treacherous and unworthy professors. It was preeminently a war upon “the word of the Deity,” which “he has magnified above all his name.” Treachery to this was therefore the high crime against him. If all had been Traditors, Jupiter and Hercules would have triumphed; and in these times we should have been groping in the darkness of heathenism and in the shadow of death. But thanks be to the Deity and the faithful “Brethren,” who by their “little strength” were enabled to circumvent “the Devil and Satan.” These preserved the Holy Scriptures of the apostles, transmitting them to us through “the Remnant” which succeeded them. This remnant performed against the papists, who in after ages tried to exclude men from the word, the same service as the Brethren against the pagans; so that we have received “the Revelation of the Mystery,” not by the favor of catholics, but in spite of traditors and heathen who were reckless of its fate.

The ruin of the ecclesiastical edifices was easily effected by the authority of the government, and by the labor of the pagans. In some provinces, however, the magistrates contented themselves with shutting up the places of religious worship. In others, they more literally complied with the terms of the edict; and after taking away the doors, the benches, and the pulpit, which they burnt as it were in a funeral pile, they completely demolished the remainder of the edifice. In carrying out these measures, some terrible scenes were enacted. In a small town in Phrygia, the magistrates and the body of the people had become catholic; and as some resistance was apprehended to the execution of the edict, the governor of the province was supported by a numerous detachment of legionaries. On their approach, the citizens assembled in their meeting house, with the resolution either of defending it by arms, or of perishing in its ruins. They indignantly rejected the notice and permission given them to retire, till the soldiers, provoked by their obstinate refusal, set fire to the building on all sides, and consumed a great number of Phrygian fellowservants, with their wives and children.

About this time a series of cruel edicts were issued by Diocletian which were “written,” says Guizot, “if I may use the expression, with the point of a dagger.” He declared his intention of destroying the christian name. By the first of these, the provincial governors were directed to apprehend all persons of the ecclesiastical order; and the prisons destined for the vilest criminals, were soon filled with a multitude of bishops, presbyters, deacons, readers, and exorcists. By a second edict, the magistrates were commanded to employ every method of severity which might reclaim them to the national superstition. This rigorous order was extended by a subsequent edict, to the whole body of fellowservants and brethren, who were exposed to a violent and general persecution. It became the duty as well as the interest of the imperial officers, to discover, to pursue, and to torment, the most obnoxious among the faithful. Heavy penalties were denounced against all who should presume to save the proscribed from the just indignation of the gods, and of the emperors.

Diocletian had no sooner published his edict against the christians, than, as if desirous of committing to other hands the bloody work, he divested himself of the imperial office. Maximian soon followed his example. These abdications elevated to the first rank Galerius and Constantius. The latter reigned over Britain, Gaul, and Spain. His mild and humane temper was averse to oppression. The principal offices of his palace were exercised by catholics. He loved their persons, esteemed their fidelity, and though a pagan, entertained no dislike to their religious principles, which, however, speaks little in their behalf. But so long as he filled the subordinate station of Caesar, it was not in his power openly to reject the edicts of Diocletian, or to disobey the commands of Maximian. His authority, however, contributed to alleviate the sufferings which he pitied and abhorred. He consented, with reluctance, to the ruin of the ecclesiastical edifices; but he ventured to protect the catholics themselves from the fury of the populace, and from the rigor of the laws. The elevation of Constantius to the supreme and independent dignity of Augustus, gave free scope to the exercise of his good qualities, and the shortness of his reign did not prevent him from establishing a system of toleration, of which he left the precept and the example to his son Constantine. His fortunate son, from the first moment of his accession, declaring himself PROTECTOR OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH, at length deserved the appellation of the first emperor who publicly professed and established the Catholic Religion. The progress of this revolution, which, under his powerful influence, rendered catholicism the reigning religion of the Roman empire, forms the very interesting and important subject of the Sixth Seal. At present, it may suffice to observe that every victory of Constantine was productive of some relief, or benefit to the Catholic Church.

The provinces of Italy and Africa, “the fourth of the earth,” experienced a “short” but violent persecution. The rigorous edicts of Diocletian were strictly and cheerfully executed by his associate Maximian, who had long hated the catholics, and delighted in acts of blood and violence. After his abdication they were exposed to the implacable resentment of Galerius. But the revolt of Maxentius, son of Maximian, brought them relief; and the same tyrant who oppressed every other class of his subjects, showed himself just, humane, and even partial towards the afflicted catholics. But according to Eusebius, this was mere hypocrisy. “Maxentius,” says he, “who possessed himself of the entire power in Italy, at first reigned himself a christian in order to gain the favor of the people of Rome. He commanded his ministers to stop the persecution of christians, affecting a hypocritical piety for the sake of appearing more mild than his predecessors, but his actions proved at last that he was altogether different from what at first he was expected to be.” Whatever the motives of Maxentius might be, the catholics of Rome seem to have been little deserving the favor of heaven. Marcellus, the bishop of the catholics in Rome, had thrown the capital into confusion by the severe penance he imposed on a great number of “fellowservants,” who during the persecution under Maximian had renounced, or dissembled their religion. The rage of faction broke out in frequent and violent seditions; the blood of the fellowservants was shed by each others’ hands; and the exile of Marcellus was found to be the only measure capable of restoring peace to the distracted church in Rome. Truly might the Spirit say to such “christians,” “Ye know not that ye are wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked.” This is what they had come to two hundred and eight years after the apocalypse was given to John—mere Antipagans, called “christian” by the heathen, and “catholics” by themselves. They are the ecclesiastical ancestry of modern professors of religion, who shed each others’ blood in international and civil wars, with as much zest as their antipagan brethren under Marcellus. Such is clerical religion, whether of the third, of the nineteenth, or of all intervening, centuries—the Mystery of Iniquity in Laodicean manifestation; the Apostasy, that Paul predicted would be, and shall utterly be destroyed by Christ in the days of his power.

The frequent disappointment of his ambitious views, and the experience of six years of persecution, suggested to Galerius, who was now suffering a lingering and painful distemper, that the most violent efforts of despotism are insufficient to extirpate a whole people, or to subdue their religious convictions. Desirous of repairing somewhat the mischief he had originated, he published in his own name, and in those of Licinius and Constantine, a general edict, as follows:

“Among the important cares which have occupied our minds for the utility and preservation of the empire, it was our intention to correct and reestablish all things according to the ancient laws and public discipline of the Romans. We were particularly desirous of reclaiming into the way of reason and nature, the deluded christians who had renounced the religion and ceremonies instituted by their fathers; and presumptuously despising the practice of antiquity, had invented extravagant laws and opinions according to the dictates of their fancy, and had collected a various society from the different provinces of our empire. The edicts which we have published to enforce the worship of the gods having exposed many of the christians to danger and distress, many having suffered death, and many more, who still persist in their impious folly, being left destitute of any public exercise of religion, we are disposed to extend to those unhappy men, the effects of our wonted clemency. We permit them, therefore freely to profess their private opinions, and to assemble in their conventicles without fear or molestation, provided always that they preserve a due respect to the established laws and government. By another rescript we shall signify our intentions to the judges and magistrates; and we hope that our indulgence will engage the christians to offer up their prayers to the deity whom they adore, for our safety and prosperity, for their own, and for that of the republic.”

When Galerius subscribed this edict of toleration, A.D. 311, he was well assured that Licinius and Constantine would approve it. But, he could not venture to insert the name of his nephew, Maximin, in the preamble, whose consent was of the greatest importance. In the first six months, however, of his reign over Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, Maximin affected to adopt the prudent counsels of his associates. His praetorian praefect, Sabinus, by his order, addressed a circular letter to all the prominent governors and magistrates, expatiating on the imperial clemency, acknowledging the invincible obstinacy of the christians, and directing the officers of justice to cease their ineffectual prosecutions, and to connive at their secret assemblies. In consequence of these orders great numbers were released from prison and the mines. The confessors singing hymns of triumph, returned into their own countries; and those who had yielded to the violence of the tempest, “the lapsed” who had returned to paganism, solicited readmission, as so many repentant Esaus, into the bosom of the Catholic Church; I say catholic church for the Novatian Ecclesias in which “the Brethren were found,” readmitted no apostates under any circumstances.

But this was only a treacherous calm of short duration. Maximin was cruel and superstitious, and altogether unworthy of confidence. He was devoted to the study of magic, the worship of the gods, and to the belief of oracles. His prophets were the philosophers, whom he revered as the favorites of heaven. He frequently raised them to the government of provinces, and admitted them to his most secret councils. They easily convinced him that the christians had been indebted for their victories to their regular discipline, and that the weakness of polytheism had principally flowed from a want of union and subordination among the ministers of religion. A system of government was therefore instituted, which was evidently copied from the policy of the Catholic Church. In all the great cities of the empire, the temples were repaired and beautified by the order of Maximin; and the officiating priests of the various deities were subjected to the authority of a superior pontiff, destined to oppose the bishop and to promote the cause of paganism. These pontiffs acknowledged in their turn the supreme jurisdiction of the metropolitans or high priests of the province, who acted as the immediate vicegerents of the emperor himself. We have here “the Dragon and his Angels,” in their ecclesiastical organization, preparing for the approaching final conflict with “Michael and his Angels,” or the Lamb’s party, which was to result in the ejection of the Dragon and his Angels from the heaven. A white robe was the ensign of their dignity. In the language of the fifth seal, but with a different signification, “white robes were given to every one of them; and it was said to those who received them that they should be priests of the gods, and reign with the emperor.” But how much nobler the dignity of the souls slain, whose robes are the emblems of incorruption, in a royal priesthood, and reign with Christ a thousand years. These new prelates of the Dragon were carefully selected from the most noble and opulent families. By the influence of the prelate and secular authorities, dutiful addresses were got up, artfully representing the well-known intentions of the court as the general sense of the people, and soliciting Maximin to consult the laws of justice rather than the dictates of his clemency. They expressed their abhorrence of the christians, and humbly prayed that these impious sectaries might at least be excluded from the limits of their respective territories. The answer of Maximin to the address he obtained from Tyre is still extant. He praises their zeal and devotion in terms of the highest satisfaction, descants on the obstinate impiety of the christians, and betrays, by the readiness with which he consents to their banishment, that he considered himself as receiving rather than as conferring an obligation. The priests, as well as the magistrates, were empowered to enforce the execution of his edicts, which were engraved on tables of brass; and though it was recommended to them to avoid the effusion of blood, the most cruel and ignominious punishments were inflicted upon the refractory “fellowservants and brethren.”

The Asiatics had everything to dread from the severity of a bigoted monarch, who prepared his measures of violence with such deliberate policy. But, a few months had scarcely elapsed, before the edicts published by Constantine and Licinius, the emperors of the West, obliged Maximin to suspend the prosecution of his designs; the civil war which he so rashly undertook against Licinius employed all his attention; and the defeat and death of Maximin soon delivered the fellowservants and brethren from the last and most implacable of their pagan enemies. Struck with rage at his disappointments, in the sad reverse of his affairs, he slew many priests and prophets of his gods, by whose enchantments he had been seduced by false hopes of universal empire in the East. So amazingly were affairs now changed, that contending emperors courted the favor of the persecuted. After his edict in their favor, he was struck with a sudden plague over his whole body, pined away with hunger, fell down from his bed, his flesh being so wasted away by a secret fire, that it consumed and dropped off from his bones; his eyes started out of their sockets; and in his distress he began to see that the true Deity was executing judgment upon him. Frantic in his agonies he cried out, “It was not I, but others who did it!” At length, by the increasing force of torment, he owned his guilt, and every now and then implored Christ, that he would compassionate his misery. He confessed himself vanquished and expired.

Thus closed the most memorable and most violent of all the sanguinary endeavours of “that Old Serpent, the Devil and Satan,” to extinguish christianity from the Roman Habitable. Authors are not agreed as to the numbers who fell in the conflict; but from the testimony of the enemies themselves, the numbers were great, and the cruelties intense. The fierceness of paganism exhausted itself in this last effort, and the triumph of the Lamb was near.

SECTION 6 THE LAODICEAN STATE

VOL. 1. PP. 428, 449

The “Little Strength” of the Philadelphian State exhausted, and Laodiceanism fully established. Persecution having ceased, and “the Catholics,” as nominal christians were now called, being in high favor with the authorities, they say, “We are rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing”—Apoc. 3:17. Being “lukewarm,” the Spirit “spues them out of his mouth.”

ACT VI.—SEAL-PERIOD SIXTH

Apoc. 6:12–17

A great earthquake inaugurates this judicial period. War in the heaven, resulting in an eclipse of the sun, in the moon becoming blood, in stars of the heaven—the stars drawn by the Tail of the Dragon—falling to the earth, and in the casting out thereinto of the Great Red Dragon. The heaven of the Dragon-polity departs as a scroll rolled up; and every mountain and island change their places. The Angels of the Dragon are cast out with him. No place found for them any more in the heaven from which they are ejected, having been effectually conquered by the Archer of the First Seal in his Fifth Seal manifestation—conquering him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony, on account of which the fellowservants and brethren were slain, not loving their lives unto death. Great rejoicings in the heavens by them who succeed the ejected Dragon and his officials, who rage with great fury in the earth and sea of their late dominion. The great day of wrath upon Paganism. The woman Jezebel, who calls herself a prophetess, the Laodicean Apostasy, imperialized, and the man of Sin Power revealed.

A.D. 311

12. “And I saw when he opened the Sixth Seal; and behold a great earthquake occurred, and the Sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the Moon became as blood. 13. And the Stars of the Heaven fell into the earth as a figtree casts its unripe figs, being shaken by a mighty wind. 14. And the heaven departed as a scroll rolled up; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. 15. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich, and the military chieftains, and the mighty ones, and every bondman and every freeman, concealed themselves in the caverns and among the rocks of the mountains: 16. And they say to the mountains and to the rocks, ‘Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him who sits upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb for that great day of his wrath has come, and who could have been caused to stand?’”

1. Preliminary Remarks

The Lion of the Tribe of Judah and Root of David, who prevailed to unroll the apocalyptic scroll, and to loose the previous seals opened this, the Sixth also. He had executed judgment on his own “Holy Nation” (1 Pet. 2:9) for its iniquities; and in this, he was about to bring to an end the power of the idolators; of “the world rulers of the darkness of the Aion;” of “the spirituals of the wickedness in the HEAVENLIES” who had oppressed them—Eph. 6:12: and if “judgment begin at the House of the Deity, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of the Deity? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?”—1 Pet. 4:17. The sixth seal will answer these questions as it regards the disobedient ungodly and sinners of the pagan Roman Habitable, who had warred against the Lamb till A.D. 311.

The remarkable symbolization of this seal represents a universe convulsed by earthquake, blood shedding, and tempest, indicative of the wrath of the Deity in a great day of wrath, upon the panic-stricken enemies of the Lamb. It does not represent the Universe; because symbols do not represent themselves: on the supposition that they do, we should be making them both sign and thing signified, which would be absurd. The nature of symbolic writing requires that the signs and the things signified be analogous, but different. But the Apocalypse is not a revelation of natural appearances, or extraordinary phenomena, in earth, sea, and sky; but a sign-representation of things extant in John's day; and of things which should be after his time, in relation to the Holy Nation of the Deity planted in the territory of Daniel's Fourth Beast, until the coming of the Ancient of Days. The apocalyptic symbolization is illustrative to them who can "see" of the conflict of the saints with pagan Rome until they "conquered" it; with Catholic, and afterwards, with Papal, Rome, until it conquered them; and hereafter, with all "the powers that be," until they in turn conquer and abolish them for a thousand years. This being the nature of the Apocalypse, we must not look to the natural, but to the POLITICAL UNIVERSE for the interpretation of its signs.

And here we find it necessary to remark in this so-called enlightened century, that "the signs of the times" vouchsafed by the Deity for the use of his genuine servants in their several generations, are not in the sky. He has not placed them there. No intelligent believer of the gospel looks overhead for a darkening of the solar system, and the falling of stars, as a sign of the great day of the Lamb's wrath being near. The alleged darkening in New England, A.D. 1780, and falling of stars, A.D. 1833, were phenomena that none but Laodicean Heathen would regard as signs of the times. The Deity's revealed signs are not manifested in America. We may feel the working of them; but they are not in these heavens, natural nor political. A wicked and adulterous generation seeks signs in the sky like the signs of the weather with which they are familiar; but no sign shall be given it. Let the reader, then, not "learn the way of the Heathen; and be not dismayed at the signs of the heaven; for the Heathen are dismayed at them: for the customs of the people are vain" (Jer. 10:2). Neither John nor Peter represented or taught the dissolving of the physical universe, and the "burning up of the earth." "The earth is Yahweh's," for he made it; it is temporarily "given into the hand of the wicked," till the King shall come to possess it with his Saints to the uttermost parts thereof. "He hath established it for ever." No interpretation of scripture that would falsify these statements can be true. All theories of the kind must therefore be rejected as mere idle tales in which only the children of the Apostasy can take delight. No, the Deity's signs are in the political universe. This, in a sense analogous to the material, hath its earth, sea, and firmament or aerial expanse; in which are set its greater and lesser lights, and constellations—its Sun, Moon, and Stars. It hath its hurricanes, shakings, eclipses, hailstorms, and so forth, which affect injuriously those who belong to the Body Politic, whether they be rulers or the common people.

The territory of Daniel's Fourth Beast, styled by John, "the Great Red Dragon," was the arena of a political system "diverse from all the beasts that were before it." The whole extent of this wide domain was decreed to be "the Great Roman City." The dominion of this power centred in Rome, covered the whole territory as a sheet of parchment covers a surface equal to itself. This parchment lifted up over that surface, would symbolize the aerial expanse, firmament, or constitution of the State, or kosmos; and would divide "the waters," or "peoples" of the system, from the waters; the waters under the aerial, would be "the earth," "sea," "rivers and fountains," "mountains and islands;" and the waters above, the ruling classes, "thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers," or sun, moon, stars, and constellations. Such was the Roman Universe in its apocalyptic symbolization. In the creation, "Elohim called the firmament Heaven," and so in the political system, the Spirit styles the aerial, "heaven;" and all who live under the dominion are said to be, "under the whole heaven."

There have been several political universes in the past; as, the Babylonian, Idumaeon, Egyptian, Israelitish, and so forth. When the Eternal Spirit decreed their overthrow, the epoch of judgment upon each, was styled “the Day of Yahweh.” There have been as many such days as there have been powers destroyed. There was a day of Yahweh on Babylon predicted in as highly metaphorical a style as the Day of the Lamb’s wrath in this Seal. In Isa. 13, the conquest by the Medes and Persians is styled, “the Day of Yahweh coming as a destruction from Shaddai, to lay the land (of Chaldea) desolate; for the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light; the sun shall be darkened in his going forth; and the moon shall not cause her light to shine.” Then follows in the next verse the interpretation, to wit, “and I will punish the world (of Babylon) for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible.” And to show how intense the judgment was intended by the metaphors, it is added, “I will make a man more precious than fine gold ... Therefore I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of Yahweh Tz’vaoth, and in the day of his fierce anger.” All of which was accomplished by Cyrus, as Yahweh’s Anointed commander and leader of his sanctified ones the Medes and Persians.

The prediction in Isa. 34 of a similar day on Idumaea is expressed in the same grand and magnificent style: “The indignation of Yahweh is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies, he utterly destroys them, he delivers them to the slaughter. Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stench shall come up out of their carcases, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood.” Then follows the same prediction exhibited in hieroglyphics strikingly similar to the Sixth Seal, to wit: “And all the hosts of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heaven shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the figtree. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven.” Then the less figurative style is resumed, and is made expletive of the metaphorical, saying, “Behold it (the sword) shall come down upon Idumaea, and upon the people of my curse to judgment. The sword of Yahweh is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams; for Yahweh had a sacrifice in Botzrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumaea.”

Christ Jesus and Peter adopted the same metaphorical style in predicting the Day of the Lord upon the Commonwealth of Judah. The former blended the literal and the figurative after the manner in Isaiah; but the one, so easily distinguishable from the other, that no confusion need result in the comprehension of the discourse.

Now, the Deity in the Sixth Seal decreed the fate of the Roman Universe, as constituted under Jupiter, in a style identical with the formula he pronounced against Babylon under Bel, and Idumaea under Chemosh. He declared that “the Heaven” should “depart as a scroll rolled up.” Illustrative of this, the reader may imagine our symbolical parchment rolling up like a scroll. As it curled up, the surface beneath would be proportionately uncovered, until the rolling up should be completed, when the whole subjacent superficies would be exposed. The heathen firmament, or aerial expanse, of the Roman Universe having thus “departed,” room would be provided for a New Heaven to expand itself over the same geographical limits of earth and sea. Thus, one heaven would be exchanged for another, in which the sun, moon, and stars would shine forth again with a light in harmony with the new parchment, or aerial constitution of the Body Politic.

But, the firmaments, or heavens, of orbs political, do not pass away, or suffer radical change, without violence. Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, are all evidential of the truth of this. The violence may proceed directly from the oppressed peoples, or the earth and sea; or from a conflict generated in the rivalries of the powers in the heaven; or from both causes in cooperation. When the convulsion begins under the heaven, it ascends, if successful, as clouds of smoke darkening the sun and air (ch. 9:1, 2); or, the earth may be shaken, which, when the shaking is great, more or less agitates the aerial. But, sometimes the electricity from the earth accumulating in the firmament, the heavenly region itself becomes inflamed, and the elements thereof commingle in the thunders and lightnings of war. It may, then, be said, “there was war in heaven” (ch. 12:7). But when the heaven is concussed with elemental war, no dew or gentle rain descends upon “the earth” or peoples. These, in the political universe, are influences which cause the peoples to flourish and rejoice. The electrical condition of “the earth,” or people, may shut up the heaven against the descent of dew and rain, which must of necessity parch up all beneath it (ch. 11:6). The heaven, however, intensely excited, becomes exceedingly dangerous to all beneath it. It may pour down a great storm of hail upon men, every stone being of a talent weight (ch. 16:21); or as in the sixth seal, it may overspread its sun with blackness the most intense, redden its moon with blood, and with its electric hurricane, project its stars into the earth.

When “the heaven departed as a scroll rolled up,” another heaven took its place. This was “the Holy Catholic” Heaven, with sun, moon, and stars, to suit. The commencement of this heaven was characterized by “silence in it about the space of half an hour” (ch. 8:1). Jupiter’s heaven was subdivided by four; while the Catholic came transiently to be distributed into thirds. Upon this heavenly organization came the judgments of the Trumpets and the Vials. The threefold division obtains at the end as well as in its earlier times; for under the Seventh Vial, which is concurrent with the resurrection-period, “the Great City,” is said to be “divided into three parts” (ch. 16:19). And, when the Seven Thunders shall have uttered their voices; and the judgments of the last vial shall have had their full effect upon “the air,” firmament, aerial expanse, or constitution of things in the Gentile world, then, the Apostate Laodicean “earth and heaven flee away; and no place is found for them” (ch. 20:11). They are abolished in a time of trouble, far exceeding in the intensity of its distress the terrors of the sixth Seal; for it will be “a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time (Dan. 12: 1). When this old Romish Heaven and Earth shall have fled before the face of the Lamb and his Associates, “a New Heavens and a New Earth in which dwells righteousness” (2 Pet. 3:13) will take their place; when “Jerusalem shall be a rejoicing, and her people a joy” (Isa. 65:18). These Heavens and Earth ”shall remain before me, saith Yahweh,” even saith the Spirit by John, “a thousand years;” at the end whereof, they will “pass away” to make room for a new and improved constitution of things upon earth, when there shall be no more sin or evil—when death shall be abolished, and every curse shall cease (ch. 21:1, 3, 4; 22:3).

The above drawing is taken from The Apocalypse And History. It depicts a three-fold division of the Roman Empire into cultural and religious groups. After Constantine, however, the Empire was divided into two parts: the Western and Eastern Empires. The Western Empire fell in A.D. 476 when Romulus Augustulus was deposed; the Eastern Empire fell in 1453 when Constantinople fell to the Mohammedans, and the headquarters of the Greek Catholic Church was removed to Moscow. The year 800 saw the uprise of the Holy Roman Empire in the West, leaving the area Still divided into two parts.

2. Earthquakes of the Apocalypse

The earthquakes of the Apocalypse are not concussions of the ground from the subterranean, but popular convulsions. In ch. 12:16, we are told that “the earth helped the Woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the Dragon cast out of his mouth.” As we shall hereafter

“see,” the earth here is the symbol of the people under the dominion of the Dragon. The worldrulers are placed metaphorically in “the heaven,” and therefore according to symbolic fitness, the world ruled by them, the undistinguished and various multitude, is aggregated together as “the earth,” or “small dust of the balance.” Hence, Moses addresses the people and their rulers as “the heavens” and “the earth,” saying in Deut. 32:1, “Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth. My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass: because I will publish the name of Yahweh: ascribe ye greatness unto our Elohim.” Then, again, in Gen. 6:11, 12, “The earth was corrupt before the Elohim, and the earth was filled with violence. And Elohim looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted HIS WAY upon the earth.” In this text, the literal and figurative use of “the earth” is blended; but it is easy to see when it signifies “all flesh,” and the place of its habitation. The figurative use of the phrase is transferred to the Book of Symbols, where it stands for “the peoples,” though not always, but when the context and subject will decide.

When, then, “the earth,” in this sense, is seized with shaking fits, its agitation is metaphorically an earthquake. If the paroxysms are violent, upheaving, and overturning, it is styled, as in the Sixth Seal, “a great earthquake.” The people are shaken; and when, with their upheavings, the luminaries of their political system no longer shine in the possession of the “spoils of office,” and the constitution is destroyed; then the sun, moon, and stars, are darkened and fall, and the heaven departs as a scroll rolling up. Thus, the earthquake operates as the proximate cause of the disturbance in the heavenlies.

“A great earthquake” is foretold in three places of the apocalypse also, “an earthquake” twice without the addition of “great.” The first “great earthquake” is predicted in this seal; the second, in ch. 11:13; and the third, in ch. 16:18. The first revolutionized the whole Greco-Latin Habitable, dethroned Jupiter, cast all his official adherents out of their places, and installed the “Holy Catholic Church” and her Laodiceans in the government of the Roman world. The effects of this “great earthquake” are felt in every part of the globe to this day.

The second “great earthquake” overthrew “the tenth of the city;” destroyed all titles; and developed the Reign of Terror, and all its consequents. This popular upheaving brought up from the symbolical abyss, one of the spirits of that “vasty deep” ever ready for any work that will afford scope for self-glorification; and threw him on to the surface as the Napoleonic Scourge of the enemies of God. This “Man of Destiny” left a mark upon society which will not be obliterated till the coming of the Ancient of Days.

The third great apocalyptic earthquake is yet in the future. It is styled “a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great.” The effect of this is the threefold subdivision of the Great City; the fall of the kingdoms of the nations; the judgment of Babylon; the disappearance of the political islands and mountains; and all consequences flowing from these events. Daniel’s “time of trouble” pertains to this earthquake; also Jeremiah’s “Jacob’s trouble,” “Alas!” saith he, “for that day is great, so that none is like it; it is even the time of Jacob’s trouble; but he shall be saved out of it. For it shall come to pass in that day, saith Yahweh Tz’vaoth, I will break his (Esau’s) yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him (Jacob): but they shall serve Yahweh their Elohim, and David their King, whom I will raise up unto them” (ch. 30:7). The earthquake of Apoc. 11:19, is the same as this greatest of all earthquakes, being associated with the “great hail.”

The earthquake of ch. 8:5, is not termed “great.” It occurred before the sounding of the first trumpet. It was an upheaving of the pagans for the recovery of lost privileges and power; but it did not result in the permanent overthrow of the New Order in the State; and therefore it was simply “an earthquake,” or shaking from below without any permanent eclipse of the heavens.

In dismissing the subject of the symbolic earthquakes in general it may be remarked that, though the apocalypse does not predict the occurrence of physical earthquakes, we are not to conclude that there will be none such in the “time of trouble.” Ezekiel and Zechariah predict a very formidable one, which in Palestine will be attended with great and important, as well as interesting changes. The Mount of Olives will be divided, a valley opened with a flowing river, and there will be a great shaking in the land, and a casting out of the dead from the graves of earth. The prophets treated of the literal and material in which a mystery was involved. This, Peter says, they did not see into; and until the Lamb prevailed to unfold it, “no one in the heaven, nor upon the earth, nor underneath the earth was able to open the scroll, nor to see it.” In the prediction of an earthquake that shall divide Olivet, and cause the outflow of a river from the altar base, they did not “see” the mystery of a mighty earthquake that should also contemporarily divide Babylon, and cause an issuing forth of rivers of living waters from the Christ-Altar, that should heal the nations. The apocalypse brings out the mystery of the Deity as he revealed it to the Prophet; it is with the mystery symbolically revealed we have here to do; not with the purely literal and material (Apoc. 10:7).

3. The Sun and Moon of the Heaven

“The SUN became black as sackcloth of hair.” As the sun is the great source of the electrical glory and power of the solar system, it is said in scripture, to “rule the day.” The moon and the stars become visible to us by the reflection of his beams. Their light or glory is borrowed; and when he is darkened, they also are in eclipse. The sun is therefore a very appropriate symbol of the supreme or sovereign power of a political universe. In Joseph’s dream, predictive of his exaltation, and of the homage that would be paid to him by his kindred, his father is represented by the sun, as the ruling authority of the circle; his mother by the moon; and his brethren by eleven stars (Gen. 37). They all “made obeisance to me,” said Joseph; and though highly figurative, Jacob readily perceived its signification, saying, “Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth?” This use of the sun, moon, and stars as representative of persons constituting a domestic circle, and differing from each other in social position, came afterwards to symbolize gradations of powers in the same circle, when it had become sufficiently enlarged to enclose a nation of twelve tribes. Hence, the Spirit in addressing the Zion of the Holy One of Israel now in the days of her mourning, saith in Isa. 60:20, “Thy Sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw herself.” Here the sun and moon represent the civil and ecclesiastical authority in Zion before they were abolished. And speaking of her destruction by the Chaldeans, the Spirit in Jer. 15:9, says, “Her sun is gone down while it is yet day.” Her royalty was suppressed; yet her moon and stars continued to shine under the Persian administration. But, a greater calamity was predicted in Joel 2:10, when the earth should quake, and the heavens tremble; in other words, when “the sun and the moon should be dark, and the stars withdraw their shining.” This would be a total eclipse of Israel’s Commonwealth by “the host given to the Little Horn of the Goat;” as foretold in Dan. 8:9–12: “It waxed great to the host of heaven; and it cast down of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them;” which in the interpretation given in verse 24, is explained to signify, “He shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practice, and shall destroy great ones (the stars) and the people of the Holy Ones”—or the host. Powers on earth do not literally pluck the stars from their spheres and stamp upon them; but they sometimes make sad havoc among the sun, moon, and stars of a political organization. The Lord Jesus reproduced Daniel’s prophecy in his discourse on the destruction of the city that killed the prophets, in saying: “Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heaven (symbolized by these orbs) shall be shaken” (Matt. 24:29). These were the lights in which there were to be “great signs and fearful sights,” indicative of the parousia, or presence, though invisible, of the Son of Man when the Greco-Roman army should be sent by him to destroy the city of his murderers (Matt. 22:7). In the same style, Peter speaks of the rapidly approaching fulfilment of the prediction, when the heavens being on fire should be dissolved and should pass away with a great noise, and their elements melt with fervent heat (2 Peter 3).

But Israel's was not the only political universe on earth. Their sun has been turned into darkness and their moon into blood; but "the great and notable day of the Lord" has not yet quite come. When it arrives, there will be a sun, moon, and stars shining in all their glory; and, concerning them, the Spirit says: "The Moon shall be confounded and the Sun ashamed, when Yahweh Tz'vaoth shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously" (Isa. 24:23). These are the sun and moon of the Gentile Heavens; the same sun upon which the fourth angel poured out his vial (Apoc. 16:8)—the sun which shines in the firmament, or aerial expanse, through which flash the lightnings and roll the thunders in that tempestuous time when men are plagued with a storm of hail "exceeding great," in the outpouring of the seventh—verses 17–21. These are the sun and the moon which shall stand still in their habitation, when Yahweh, the Commander like to Joshua, "shall march through the land in indignation, and thresh the nations in anger" (Hab. 3:11, 12). Then, also, in retribution for what the Gentiles have done to Israel in putting out the lights of their heaven, shall "the sun and the moon be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. Yahweh also," as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, "shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but Yahweh will be the harbor of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel" (Joel 3:15). The sun, moon, and stars, to be extinguished in "the great and notable day of Yahweh," from before whose face the heaven in which they shine and the earth over which they shed their rays will flee away, are the luminaries of the Greco-Latin political universe. This political universe is that which is vulgarly styled "Christendom," or properly the domain of Antichrist, but apocalyptically, "Babylon the Great City." The sun by which this is enlightened is the Imperial Civil Power; the moon, the Imperial Ecclesiastical; and the stars, the subordinate powers created by the constitution and reflecting the Imperial Glory. They have not always shone with persistent and undimmed brilliancy; for, when the Star fell from the heaven and opened the abyss, the smoke that issued thence darkened the sun and the firmament, or heaven, in which he shone (Apoc. 9:1, 2); and also, previously to that, which came to pass in the seventh century, "the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars, so as the third part of them was darkened;" and as, according to the decorum of the symbols, this could not occur in nature without affecting the day and the night, it is added, by way of instructing us in the duration of this ternary eclipse, "and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise" (ch. 8:12).

In the Sixth Seal symbolization, "the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, the moon became as blood, and the stars of the heaven fell into the earth," that is, "a third part of them" (ch. 12:4). This indicates great wrath upon the orders of the state entering into the composition of the symbols, and a great change in the manifestation of their heavens. The sun might recover its brightness, and the moon her silvery hue. Should this be the case, it would indicate that there was "silence in the heaven," and that war caused blood there no more to redden "the spirituals of the wickedness in the heavenlies" (ch. 8:1; 12:8). And such we really find to be the situation. For when "the great day of the Lamb's wrath" upon "the Dragon and his angels" had been assuaged in the casting them out of the heaven—in other words, when the pagan power that hindered the revelation of the Man of Sin had been punished and removed out of the way—the sun, moon, and stars again shone forth from a newly constituted firmament, aerial, or heaven, from the midst of which they diffused their rays over the Roman Habitable as before. But, in order to indicate the effect of the recent revolution and the new character of the heavens, a woman is placed in the sun. She is "clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a

